> "It is a rule of law in this and other jurisdictions that the statute of limitations does not begin to run in favor of a defendant chargeable as the trustee of an express trust during the life of the trust. In order to set the statute in motion it is necessary that such a trustee, by some act or declaration, positively and unequivocally repudiate the trust, and that notice of such repudiation be brought home to the beneficiary. This rule is so well settled and so generally recognized that no argument is necessary to support its reiteration."

The court then cites a number of cases supporting the rule. The same rule is set forth in the case of Taylor v. Morris, 163 Cal. 718, 127 P. 66. In the case of Elizalde v. Murphy, 163 Cal. 681, 126 P. 978, the court had before it the consideration of a plea of the statute of limitations against requiring the representative of a deceased person to account for funds belonging to the estate, and held as follows:

> "The action was simply an action for an accounting—an action to compel the personal representative of a trustee after his death, and the sureties upon his bond as such trustee, to give an account of the property held by the trustee, and of his administration of the trust, to have that account audited and settled by the court, and a balance struck,"—citing Osment v. McElrath, 68 Cal. 466, 9 P. 731, 58 Am. Rep. 17. "The duty of the administrator to account is a continuing duty, and does not become barred. Estate of Sanderson, 74 Cal. 199, 15 P. 753; Cook v. Ceas, 147 Cal. 614, 82 P. 370."

It was held in that case that an accounting does not depend upon any questions of fraud or malversation. It was simply a duty of the administrator or executor, while alive, to account for the trust funds in his hands, and, upon his death, the duty of the personal representative so to do.

In behalf of their plea, appellants cite the case of Minifie v. Rowley, 187 Cal. 481, 202 P. 673, and refer to the following language contained in the opinion:

> " 'The naming of a person as executor does not thereby discharge him from any just claim which the testator has against him, but the claim must be included in the inventory, and the executor is liable for the same, as for so much money in his hands, when the debt or demand becomes due.' Code Civ. Proc. § 1447. As a necessary consequence, if defendant Forrest S. Rowley owed the $10,000 here in controversy on June 3, 1915, when he became executor, he became chargeable with that sum as for so much money in his hands and continued liable therefor, irrespective of the running of the period of the statute of limitations against the debt itself, by reason of the change in the character of his obligation due to his intervening fiduciary capacity."

[6-8] From this it is argued that the statute of limitations has run against the note involved in this action and therefore that an accounting cannot be had. The language quoted, however, holds exactly the contrary. As we read it, it means that, irrespective of the lapse of time which would ordinarily bar an action upon the note, the executor, by reason of his fiduciary capacity, becoming chargeable with the note in his hands as so much money, is in that capacity, precluded from pleading the bar of the statute, and therefore, so long as the trust relation continues, the statute does not run. The duty to account is a continuing one, as stated in Elizalde v. Murphy, and devolved upon Charles M. Clary until the date of his death and immediately devolved upon his personal representative, and, applying the reasoning of the court in the case of Minifie v. Rowley, the fiduciary relationship of the parties stops the running of the statute and precludes reliance upon such plea, irrespective of whether the statute might or might not have been pleaded as against an action on the note itself.

[9, 10] Likewise, the facts in the case of Schaeffer, 53 Cal. App. 493, 200 P. 508, render it readily distinguishable from the case at bar. In the Schaeffer Case the note against which the right of retainer or set-off was claimed was barred by the statute of limitations before the death of the testator, and hence there was neither right nor remedy existing at the time of the appointment of an executor or administrator. Furthermore, in the Schaeffer Case, no relationship of trust or confidence had been created prior or subsequent to the running of the statute. In the case at bar there was a subsisting and enforceable obligation, both at the date of the death of the testator and upon the qualification of Charles M. Clary as an executor, nor does the question of retainer or set-off strictly arise in this case as against the heirs of Charles M. Clary, deceased. Under our procedure and the law of this state, whatever portion of the estate of Abraham E. Clary, deceased, should or may finally reach the possession of the heirs of Charles M. Clary, deceased, does not affect the rule applicable here, as distribution of the estate of Abraham E. Clary, of the portion, if any, distributable to Charles M. Clary, deceased, would not and could not be made to his heirs, but only to his estate, to be taken possession of by his personal representative, administered upon, and then distributed. Under the rule announced in Estate of Pina, 112 Cal. 14, 44 P. 332, followed in Estate of Strong, 119 Cal. 663, 51 P. 1078, and, also, the case of Galvin v. Mutual Savings Bank, 6 Cal. App. 402, 92 P. 322, the heirs of Charles M. Clary, deceased, would take the residue of his estate only after administration had thereon, payment of debts, etc., and the ascertainment of who the heirs of Charles M. Clary are. The right of retainer or set-off is recognized as applicable upon distribution in this state. Estate of Gamble, 166 Cal. 254, 135 P. 970; Estate of Angle, 148 Cal. 102, 82 P. 668. In states where the law and procedure concerning the devolution, administration, and distribution of estates are different from that which prevails in California, and the remote heirs take directly and not from their immediate ancestor, it is held that children stand in the same position as the father when the question of the right of retainer or set-off of a debt due by the father to the estate of the grandfather of the children is involved. Adams v. Yancey, 105 Miss. 233, 62 So. 229, 47 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1026; note to Stenson v. H. S. Halvorson Co., Ann. Cas. 1916D, 1294; Wilson v. Channel, 102 Kan. 793, 175 P. 95, 1 A. L. R. 987, and extended note beginning on page 991. See, also, Woods et al. v. Knotts et al., 196 Iowa, 544, 194 N. W. 953, 30 A. L. R. 768, and annotations thereto beginning on page 775. In many of the cases cited in the annotations to the cases referred to, debts barred at the time of the death of the testator are allowed to be set off. It may be stated that there are some decisions cited in the notes holding that the right of retainer or set-off does not exist as to remote heirs, who succeed directly, and not from the immediate ancestor, but the great weight of authority is to the contrary, and the cases which hold that the right of retainer or set-off cannot be exercised as against remote heirs have no application in this state, for the reasons which we have stated, that they are only entitled to the residue of the estate coming to the immediate ancestor after payment of his debts, as ascertained upon administration of the immediate ancestor's estate.

[11] Appellants further object that no claim was ever filed by the surviving executor of the estate of Abraham E. Clary, deceased, against the estate of Charles M. Clary, deceased, citing the case of In re Smith, 108 Cal. 115, 40 P. 1037. This case, however, has been overruled and the procedure adopted by the surviving executor which we have been considering, is held to be the proper procedure. In re Philbrook, 47 Cal. App. 683, 191 P. 77; Estate of Randall, 188 Cal. 339, 205 P. 118, hold that the filing of a claim is not prerequisite to instituting proceedings for an accounting under section 1639 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[12] Under the various provisions of article 2 of chapter 10 of title 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is the duty of an executor and coexecutor to account for all moneys coming into their hands and for all moneys and properties with which they are chargeable, and this duty was incumbent upon Charles M. Clary, deceased, irrespective of a like obligation which rested upon his coexecutor, F. E. Clary.

The proceeding before us is one for an accounting, and is not one involving collection of assets upon distribution, as was the case upon the prior appeal in the Estate of Clary, 71 Cal. App. 22, 234 P. 851, and, as we have said, the cases there relied upon and necessitating a reversal are not applicable here, save and except in so far as they hold that the proceeding now before us is the one that should have been taken in the first instance.

Some minor objections have been urged upon this appeal, but, as they do not affect the substantial rights of the parties, are not set forth in this opinion.

The correctness of the accounting and the indebtedness ascertained by the probate court not being questioned, it follows from what has been said that the order and decree of the trial court should be, and the same are hereby, affirmed.

SCHAINMAN v. SOMMER et al. (Civ. 5554.)

1. Partnership ⚷17—Any uncertainty whether agreement was partnership held eliminated by practical construction of parties.

Any uncertainty as to whether agreement for carrying on contracting business, not specifically designated as partnership agreement, created a partnership was rendered certain by subsequent agreement entitled, "Agreement for dissolution of partnership," and pleadings in suit to dissolve partnership and for accounting, which throughout referred to arrangement between parties as copartnership.

2. Partnership ⚷303—Court properly divided losses of partnership, as provided in partnership agreement, and balance in proportion provided for division of profits, where division, as agreed, would have left half of losses unpaid (Civ. Code, § 2404).

Where division of losses in accordance with stipulation in partnership agreement would have left about one-half of losses unpaid, court properly followed agreement so far as parties had expressly stipulated and apportioned balance of losses in same proportion in which partners had agreed to share profits, in view of Civ. Code, § 2404.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter Perry Johnson, Judge.

Action by Paul Schainman against I. M. Sommer and another for dissolution of partnership and for an accounting. Judgment for defendant named, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Hilton & Christensen, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Nat. Schmulowitz and Peter S. Sommer, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

KOFORD, P. J. This is an appeal by plaintiff in an action of partnership dissolution and accounting, resulting in a judgment in favor of defendant Sommer and against plaintiff for $4,651.45. In this opinion we will use the word defendant as referring to defendant Sommer alone. The record on appeal is the judgment roll alone. The parties entered into a written agreement November 5, 1920, which is the agreement found to be the partnership agreement. Another agreement was entered into by the parties dated February 1, 1923, called by the parties, "Agreement to dissolve copartnership." These two agreements are shown in the judgment roll as exhibits to plaintiff's complaint. The court took and settled the account between the two parties and gave its findings and judgment as stated above.

Appellant claims that the court erred in so finding and deciding. He claims the agreements show that the parties were not copartners. He further claims upon this appeal that, under said agreements, he was not liable for losses beyond the amount of his investment, to wit, $15,000.

The agreement of November 5th does not use the word copartnership, but it provides for the carrying on of a general contracting business by the defendant under the "fictitious firm name and style of I. M. Sommer & Co." It provides that plaintiff's name shall not be used in the business transactions; that he shall put up $15,000 to be used in said business; that profits shall be divided one-third to plaintiff, and two-thirds to defendant; that profits shall accumulate until defendant's share thereof shall equal plaintiff's $15,000. Paragraph 4, sec. [d]. It also provides in paragraph 5 that losses resulting from said business shall be borne by the parties in the following manner, to wit:

> "(a) The party of the second part is to bear all losses up to the amount of his invested capital, to wit, $15,000, plus the amount of any profits that said party of the second part may have drawn, or to which he may be entitled at the time of said losses. (b) The party of the first part is to bear all losses up to the amount of his invested capital, plus the amount of any profits said party of the first part may have drawn or to which he may be entitled at the time of said losses. (c) The above division of losses is to be in effect only so long as the party of the first part has not $15,000 invested in the business, as set forth in paragraph 4, section (d). After said party of the first part has a credit of $15,000 invested in the business, as set forth in paragraph 4, section (d), then the share of losses arising in said general contracting business shall be borne equally by the parties hereto."

[1] The evidence which may have shown how the parties acted under this agreement is not before us as it was before the trial court, but the agreement of February 3d, made and signed by the parties, shows how they regarded the first agreement. It is headed and named "Agreement to dissolve partnership," and reads "Whereas, the parties above named have been conducting a general contracting business as copartners, under the fictitious name and style of I. M. Sommer & Co.," etc., and "Whereas, said copartnership arrangements were set forth in that certain agreement dated the 5th day of November, 1920," and throughout the entire agreement the business arrangement is referred to as a copartnership. If there was any uncertainty about the first agreement constituting a copartnership, that uncertainty has been made certain by the construction placed upon it by the parties. Kennedy v. Lee, 147 Cal. 596, 82 P. 257; Mitau v. Roddan, 149 Cal. 1, 84 P. 145, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 275; Kales v. Houghton, 190 Cal. 294, 212 P. 21.

⚷For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

Furthermore, plaintiff's complaint alleges and repeats the allegation in many paragraphs that the arrangement was a copartnership. His prayer is, among other things, "that the copartnership be dissolved and an accounting be made, and," etc. The partnership is admitted by the defendant's answer and it is impossible to see how the court could have made any different finding than the one made. It was not an issue in the case under the pleadings.

[2] Plaintiff also complains that by this judgment he was made to pay for losses in excess of what he agreed to in paragraph 5, subdivision (a), quoted above. The method of arriving at this judgment is shown in exhibit No. 1, attached to the court's findings. The $15,000 having been exhausted in paying losses, defendant advanced some $17,000 in payment of further losses. The court made defendant responsible for about $5,000 of this on account of inventory, assets on hand, and profits withdrawn. The balance was charged two-thirds to defendant and one-third to plaintiff, making the amount of the judgment given. It is true that in this way plaintiff paid more than specified in paragraph 5 (a), above quoted. Plaintiff wholly overlooks that he also promised and agreed with defendant that defendant's contribution to losses should be as stated in paragraph 5 (b). But all the debts had to be paid, despite the fact that the parties expressly provided for the payment of less than one-half of what proved to be the actual losses. Section 2404 of the Civil Code reads as follows:

> "An agreement to divide the profits of a business implies an agreement for a corresponding division of its losses, unless it is otherwise expressly stipulated."

Plaintiff claims the implied agreement is not available because the parties had "otherwise expressly stipulated," but the stipulation did not cover all the losses. In making the division of losses here, the court followed the agreement of the parties so far as they had expressly stipulated, and thereafter and to the extent they had not stipulated the court apportioned the losses in the same proportion as the parties had agreed to divide profits. In so doing it correctly followed the implied agreement declared in Civil Code, section 2404.

The judgment appealed from and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

CURTIS, J. [1] Petition for writ of habeas corpus. The petitioner is in the custody of the constable of Sausalito township, county of Marin, under a warrant of arrest issued out of the justices' court of said township, upon a complaint charging that on or about the 12th day of March, 1926, he unlawfully transported and carried crabs from fish and game district No. 1½ into the county of Marin, state of California.

Under the authority conferred upon the Legislature by section 25½ of article 4 of the Constitution, the state has been divided into some sixty-seven fish and game districts. By section 628 of the Penal Code, as amended by St. 1925, p. 455, it is provided:

> "(c) Every person who ships or offers for shipment or who transports or carries any species of crab from fish and game districts one and one-half, five, six, seven, seven A, eight and nine, either to a point outside of the state or into any part of the state other than in districts one and one-half, five, six, seven, seven A, eight and nine, or who holds any crabs in live cars within said fish and game districts, is guilty of a misdemeanor.
> "For the purposes of this act a live car shall be any box, crate or pen in which live crabs are kept."

[2] The seven districts mentioned in said subdivision (c) are situated in the northwestern part of the state, and they form one compact and contiguous body of land and water. No part of the county of Marin is in any of said districts. It is apparent, therefore, that the complaint against petitioner charges a violation of this subdivision (c) of section 628 of the Penal Code, as amended. It is the contention of petitioner that this section of the Penal Code, in so far as it attempts to prohibit the transportation or shipment of crabs from the fish and game districts therein enumerated into any other part of the state other than into said seven districts named in said section is unconstitutional and void. His contention is based upon the fact that a number of fish and game districts are grouped together in said section, and a general prohibition as to shipment of crabs therefrom is made or attempted to be made applicable to the territory composed of all of said districts, with the result that crabs from any one of said districts may be shipped into any or all of the other districts of said group, but cannot be shipped into any other part of the state. Petitioner admits that it is perfectly legal for the Legislature to provide that crabs shall not be shipped from one fish and game district into any other part of the state, but contends that the Legislature is without power, by grouping a number of districts together or in any other manner, to provide that crabs or any other kind of fish or game may be shipped from one district into another district or into a group of districts and prohibit their shipment into the remaining districts of the state. By section 25½ of article 4 of the Constitution, "the Legislature may provide for the division of the state into fish and game districts, and may enact such laws for the protection of fish and game therein as it may deem appropriate to the respective districts." This section was incorporated into the Constitution by an amendment adopted by the people in 1902, and—

> "the obvious purpose of this amendment was to remove the former restriction of article 4, § 25, subd. 33, which prohibited the enactment of a local law 'where a general law can be made applicable,' and in no wise limits the sovereign power of the state over fish and game, or of the Legislature to legislate concerning the same. On the contrary, it increases the legislative discretion by authorizing local laws on the subject." Paladini v. Superior Court, 178 Cal. 369, 372, 173 P. 588, 590; In re Marincovich, 48 Cal. App. 474, 483, 192 P. 156.

Petitioner asserts that by this amendment to the Constitution the Legislature is given authority to divide the state into fish and game districts and make any other legislation applicable to any one of said districts, but that it has no power to make regulations applicable to two or more of said districts without making the same apply to the state generally. We find nothing in the language of this constitutional provision that would indicate that it should be given such a narrow construction. Neither is petitioner's contention supported by any of the authorities cited in the argument of counsel or in the briefs filed herein. The cases relied upon by petitioner for this purpose, in so far as this state is concerned, are Paladini v. Superior Court, 178 Cal. 369, 173 P. 588; In re Cencinino, 31 Cal. App. 241, 160 P. 167; In re Marincovich, 48 Cal. App. 474, 192 P. 156; and In re Mascolo, 25 Cal. App. 92, 142 P. 903. The Paladini Case, as we have before noted, decided, among other things, that the obvious purpose of section 25½ of article 4 "was to remove the former restriction of article 4, § 25, subd. 33, which prohibited the enactment of a local law 'where a general law can be made applicable,' and in no wise limits the sovereign power of the state over fish and game, or of the Legislature to legislate concerning the same. On the contrary, it increases the legislative discretion by authorizing local laws on the subject." In the Cencinino Case the court held that by this constitutional amendment the power theretofore exercised by counties and other local authorities to regulate fish and game had been transferred from such authorities to the Legislature, and the sole power to protect the fish and game of the state was now conferred upon the Legislature. In Re Marincovich, supra, it was contended that section 636 of the Penal Code, which sought to prohibit the use of a certain kind of a fishing net in fish and game district No. 20 was unconstitutional as special and local legislation. It was held that section 25½ of article 4 of the Constitution, citing the Paladini Case as authority, had removed certain restrictions against special and local legislation by specially authorizing local legislation for the protection of fish and game. In the Mascolo Case the petitioner was charged with a violation of the penal statute prohibiting the use of a trawl net for fishing in fish and game district No. 6. This statute made it unlawful to use such a net in district No. 6, and in the waters of Monterey Bay. It was claimed that the statute was illegal, for the reason that it included, not only district No. 6, but the waters of Monterey Bay, which were included in and formed a part of district No. 5. The court held that, even conceding that that part of the statute referring to Monterey Bay was beyond the powers of the Legislature to enact, as it was an attempt to legislate as to a part only of an established fish and game district, its illegality would not affect the provisions of the statute referring to district No. 6, of which the petitioner was charged with a violation. Petitioner also relies upon a number of authorities of other jurisdictions, particularly the cases of Jonesboro, etc., v. Adams, 117 Ark. 54, 174 S. W. 527, and State v. Higgins, 51 S. C. 51, 28 S. E. 15, 38 L. R. A. 561. The former of these cases was decided by the Supreme Court of Arkansas and the latter by the Supreme Court of South Carolina. These authorities are of little assistance to us, for the reason that in neither of these states is there a constitutional provision similar to section 25½ of article 4 of our Constitution.

[3-5] This section of the Constitution is remedial in character, and should be given a liberal construction.

> "It is well settled that a remedial statute must be liberally construed, so as to effectuate its object and purpose. Although due regard will be given the language used, such an act will be construed, when its meaning is doubtful, so as to suppress the mischief at which it is directed, and to advance or extend the remedy provided, and bring within the scope of the law every case which comes clearly within its spirit and policy. Clearly, the remedial effect of provisions should not be impaired by construction. * * *" 23 Cal. Jur. 801.

In construing this section of the Constitution, the court should consider the subject-matter with which it deals in its endeavor to ascertain the true meaning of the language used. As we have already seen, it was the purpose of this amendment to the Constitution to take from local authorities the right to regulate the fish and game of the state and to invest such power exclusively in the Legislature. In so doing, the powers of the Legislature to protect the fish and game of the state were increased over those previously intrusted to that body. As we read the section, we think it most apparent that its purpose was to clothe the Legislature with ample power to adequately protect the fish and game of the state. This was to be accomplished by authorizing the Legislature to divide the state into fish and game districts and to enact such laws for the protection of the fish and game as the Legislature might deem appropriate for the respective districts. The fish and game of the state are made up of various kinds and species, differing from each other in so many respects that it would be difficult, if not impossible, to enumerate such differences. On account of this great variety of kind and species, it was necessary that the regulations adopted by the Legislature for the protection of the fish and game be in some measure commensurate with the various kinds and species of fish and game existing in the different parts of the state. Very often in a given territory there may exist a number of different varieties of fish and game, each requiring special legislation in order that they may be properly protected. It may be necessary, on account of the peculiar and varied conditions under which the deer in this district are found, to divide the area into a number of different game districts in order to properly protect the deer found therein. On the other hand, the conditions under which the quail in this territory are found appear to be the same in the several parts of this territory. It is necessary, however, on account of the deer therein, to divide this territory into a number of districts. Such a regulation would not be necessary when it comes to the protection of quail, but, after the territory has been divided into the several districts for the protection of the deer, there is nothing in this constitutional provision which prevents the Legislature from enacting one general regulation as to quail throughout said territory, and make it applicable to all the districts therein. In our opinion a reasonable construction of section 25½ of article 4 clearly implies that the power to pass such an enactment has been left to the discretion of the Legislature.

There are also other considerations which might determine the Legislature in the enactment of laws, the purpose of which is to protect the fish and game of the state. One of such considerations is the desire on the part of the Legislature to permit the largest use of fish and game compatible with the reasonable protection thereof. The Legislature undoubtedly found it necessary to divide the territory comprising the seven districts enumerated in subdivision (c) of section 628 of the Penal Code into seven districts in order to adequately protect all the fish and game found therein. It further found that to permit the crabs taken from the waters within such territory to be shipped into and used in the several districts comprising the same would not endanger the permanent supply of crabs produced in said waters, but to permit the crabs of said territory to be shipped generally throughout all parts of the state would result in their depletion and possibly in their final destruction. Under such conditions it was undoubtedly within the power of the Legislature to enact such legislation as would protect the crabs of said district and at the same time to permit the use of the crabs produced therein by the largest possible number of people of the state. It is conceded by petitioner that it would have been perfectly legal for the Legislature to have provided that crabs caught in any one of said districts should not be shipped or transported out of the district in which they were caught. Under such a regulation petitioner would have had no right to transport crabs from said district No. 1½, or from any of the other districts into the county of Marin. How is he damaged or injured by the present law which permits the crabs from district No. 1½ to be used in the other districts of said territory as well as in district No. 1½? Petitioner claims that he is discriminated against by being denied the right to ship crabs out of said district No. 1½, while the people in the other districts are given this right. He would be discriminated against to the same extent by a statute prohibiting the shipment of crabs out of district No. 1½. He concedes that this would be legal because the Legislature has the right to pass such legislation. As we have already shown, the Legislature also has the right to prohibit the shipment of crabs from the territory comprising said seven districts. It follows, therefore, that such discrimination, if it can be called such, is not illegal.

[6] It is well established in this state that the Legislature has most extensive powers over the fish and game within its jurisdiction. As was said by this court in Ex parte Maier, 103 Cal. 476, 483, 37 P. 402, 404 (42 Am. St. Rep. 129):

> "The wild game within a state belongs to the people in their collective, sovereign capacity; it is not the subject of private ownership, except in so far as the people may elect to make it so; and they may, if they see fit, absolutely prohibit the taking of it, or any traffic or commerce in it, if deemed necessary for its protection or preservation, or the public good. To this extent it is conceded that the state may go. But it is contended that to go further, and prohibit the sale of game lawfully killed elsewhere and brought here as private property, is in effect to destroy private property, and that this is going beyond a proper exertion of the police power. While it is true that the power to regulate is not the power to destroy, in its absolute sense, it is, nevertheless, true that the right to regulate frequently and as a necessary sequence carries with it the right to so control and limit the use or enjoyment of private property as to amount to its destruction."

This language has been frequently referred to with approval. People v. Haagen, 139 Cal. 115, 72 P. 836; Ex parte Kenneke, 136 Cal. 527, 69 P. 261, 89 Am. St. Rep. 177; In re Phoedovius, 177 Cal. 238, 241, 170 P. 412; Geer v. State of Connecticut, 161 U. S. 519, 527, 16 S. Ct. 600, 40 L. Ed. 793. In view of these considerations, we are firmly of the opinion that the regulation enacted by subdivision (c) of section 628 of the Penal Code does not contravene any provision of the Constitution, and that it is a legal and valid enactment of the Legislature. It follows, therefore, that petitioner's imprisonment is legal and the writ should be discharged.

It is therefore ordered that the petitioner be remanded, and the writ discharged.

GRACEY v. GRACEY et al.

1. Wills 🔑70—Validity of holographic codicil, probated in California, held governed by law thereof, so as not to require witnesses (Civ. Code, § 1376).

Validity of holographic codicil, offered for probate in California, held governed by Civ. Code, § 1376, and hence sufficiently proved, though not attested by witnesses as required by law of state of testator's domicile.

2. Conversion 🔑15(1)—Will authorizing sale of realty held not to work conversion into personalty on testatrix's death (Civ. Code, § 1338).

Holographic will, authorizing executor "to sell all or any of my real estate or personal property," did not work equitable conversion of realty in California into personalty, under Civ. Code, § 1338, on death of testatrix.

3. Conversion 🔑15(1)—Statute as to effect of will directing conversion of realty into money held merely declaratory of common-law doctrine of equitable conversion (Civ. Code, § 1338).

Civil Code, § 1338, providing that when will directs conversion of real property into money such property and all its proceeds must be deemed personalty from time of testator's death, is simply declaratory of common law, and doctrine rests on principle that equity considers as done what ought to have been done.

4. Conversion 🔑16(1)—Executor's mere discretionary power to sell realty does not work equitable conversion into personalty.

Mere discretionary power of executor to sell realty does not work equitable conversion thereof into personalty on testator's death.

5. Conversion 🔑15(1)—Will, giving named person property remaining after paying bequests, vested title to realty in him on testatrix's death, and surplus proceeds thereof remained realty for distributive purposes (Civ. Code, § 1341).

Will, giving named person any money or property remaining after payment of funeral expenses and bequests, vested title to real property in him at moment of testatrix's death, under Civ. Code, § 1341, and when whole of realty was sold by executor to pay specific bequests surplus retained its character as realty for purposes of distribution.

6. Conversion 🔑1—Equitable conversion is device to bring about equitable results, accomplish testator's intent, and benefit beneficiaries.

The doctrine of equitable conversion is a device employed in equity to bring about equitable results, and is invoked to accomplish testator's intent and for benefit of beneficiaries.

7. Conversion 🔑15(1)—Codicil bequeathing California realty to charitable and public institutions held to negative intent to work equitable conversion into personalty on testator's death.

Holographic codicil, bequeathing all moneys derived from sale of California realty coming to testator from estate of prior decedent to a public library, college, and church board, held to negative intent to work equitable conversion of such realty into personalty on testator's death, as he must be held to have known that benefactions would fail unless codicil were probated in California without such conversion, instead of Pennsylvania in which he resided.

8. Wills 🔑566—Will, bequeathing proceeds of realty received from another estate, held not to blend personalty and realty in manner showing intent to create fund and dispose of it in money.

Will, bequeathing moneys derived from sale of real estate coming to testator from estate of prior decedent to certain eleemosynary institutions, held not to work such a blending of personalty and real estate as to show intent to create a fund and make testamentary disposition thereof in money.

9. Wills 🔑466—"Bequeath" in holographic codicil held applicable to both realty and personalty, so as to avoid intestacy as to realty (Civ. Code, § 1327).

Word "bequeath" in holographic codicil, bequeathing half of net amount coming to testator from another estate to public library, etc., held used not in its technical sense, but as applying to both real and personal property, so as to avoid intestacy as to realty, in view of Civ. Code, § 1327.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Bequeath.]

10. Appeal and error 🔑907(3)—On judgment roll appeal all intendments favor trial court's determinations.

On appeal on the judgment roll alone, all intendments are in favor of trial court's determinations.

11. Wills 🔑439, 448—Will should be interpreted, if reasonably possible, to effectuate intent and avoid intestacy.

Will should be so interpreted as to render it operative, if reasonably susceptible of such interpretation, to end that testator's intention be given effect and intestacy avoided.

12. Appeal and error 🔑907(3)—On judgment roll appeal it must be assumed that evidence warranted finding, implied from apportionment of statutory share of entire estate to charitable beneficiaries under will, that no further costs would accrue in foreign administration (Civ. Code § 1313).

On appeal on judgment roll alone, it must be assumed, in absence of contrary showing, that sufficient evidence was before trial court to warrant finding, implied from apportionment of third of total net value of testator's estate in California and elsewhere to charitable and public beneficiaries, under Civ. Code, § 1313, that administration of estate in another state had progressed to point where no further costs would accrue; burden being on appellants to show insufficiency of evidence to support such finding or some abuse of discretion by trial court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Proceeding to settle the final account of James Shields Gracey, as executor of the will of Robert Gracey, deceased, and for distribution of the California estate, in which the executor petitioned the court to turn over the entire California estate to him as executor under the laws of Pennsylvania, and the City of Merced filed objections to the final account and a cross-petition. From a decree of final distribution, the executor and others appeal. Affirmed.

Devlin & Devlin and M. S. Zarick, all of Sacramento, for appellants.

F. W. Henderson, of Merced, for respondent City of Merced.

SHENK, J. Robert Gracey died testate on the 25th day of September, 1913, in the state of Pennsylvania. At the time of his death he was and for many years prior thereto had been a resident of that state and left real and personal property therein. He also left property in California, consisting of money in bank and other personal property and an interest in the estate of Sarah Jane Thursby, then in course of probate in Merced county. Sarah Jane Thursby died testate in Merced county on the 3d day of February, 1913, leaving an estate in said county, consisting of real and personal property. Her will, holographic in form, was admitted to probate in that county. After making provision for the payment of debts, expenses of last illness, and certain legacies, her will set forth the following residuary clause:

> "11th. After the funeral expenses and bequests are paid, should there still remain any money or property of whatsoever nature I die possessed of, I give to Robert Gracey of Pennsylvania."

The will next contained the following provision:

> "12th. I appoint John Olcese of Merced, California, my executor, to carry out the provisions of this last will, and also give him power to sell all or any of my real estate or personal property without any order from court. * * *"

At the time of the death of Sarah Jane Thursby her estate consisted largely of real property, all situated in the state of California. During the course of the administration of her estate in Merced county it was determined that the personal estate, after payment of debts, funeral expenses, costs, and expenses of administration, was insufficient to pay the bequests mentioned in her will, and it was found necessary to sell a portion of the real estate in order to discharge said bequests. Instead of selling a portion of said real property for said purpose, it was deemed for the best interests of the estate to sell the whole of said real property. After such sale a considerable sum of money, being the proceeds of the sale of said real property, remained for the benefit of the residuary legatee and devisee. The proper distribution to be made of this residuum forms the basis of this controversy.

On February 12, 1913, or 9 days after the death of Sarah Jane Thursby, Robert Gracey, the said residuary legatee and devisee, while domiciled in the state of Pennsylvania, appended to his existing holographic will the following codicil, holographic in form:

> "Of all money or money[s] derived from sale of real estate to come to me from the estate of Sarah J. Thursby, decd. of Merced, California, that is of all the net amount that may come to me from said estate, I bequeath one-half thereof to the public library of Merced City, California, and the remaining one-half to be equally divided and distributed to Westminster College, mentioned in sec. 6 above, and the boards of Home and Foreign Missions of the United Presbyterian [Church of North America] mentioned in secs. 2 and 5 above."

The effect to be given to this codicil is the principal subject for determination on this appeal. Upon the death of Robert Gracey his last will was admitted to probate in the state of Pennsylvania, and subsequently said will and codicil were admitted to probate in Merced county. James Shields Gracey was named executor in both jurisdictions. On proceedings to settle the final account and for distribution of the Gracey estate in Merced county the executor petitioned the court to turn over the entire California estate to the executor acting under the Pennsylvania administration. The city of Merced filed objections to said final account and also a cross-petition, in which it prayed that one-half of the amount of the estate in the hands of the California executor be paid to the city of Merced for and on behalf of its public library, pursuant to the provisions of said codicil. After a hearing the court made an order in which the final account was settled and approved. The court found that the moneys on hand in the possession of the California executor were derived from the sale of the real estate in California devised to Robert Gracey, deceased, by the terms of the residuary clause contained in the will of Sarah Jane Thursby, deceased, and that the said moneys must be distributed as real estate in California according to the laws of California, and not as personal property under the laws of Pennsylvania, the domicile of Robert Gracey, deceased. It was further found that the total net value of the estate of Robert Gracey, deceased, in California and elsewhere amounts to the sum of $65,509.59, and that, under and pursuant to section 1313 of the Civil Code, the sum of $21,836.53 is the total aggregate sum that can be bequeathed or devised to the said city of Merced, Westminster College and the Boards of Home and Foreign Missions of the United Presbyterian Church. The court further found that the remainder of said property, to wit, the sum of $16,714.66 and certain other personal property not reduced to cash, should be distributed to the executor under the Pennsylvania administration. The decree of final distribution was duly made and entered pursuant to the foregoing findings and determinations. From this decree the executor under the Pennsylvania administration and the heirs of Robert Gracey, deceased, or their representatives, prosecute this appeal from that portion of the decree which orders distributed to the city of Merced, in trust, for the use and benefit of the public library of said city, the sum of $10,918.27, to Westminster College the sum of $5,459.13, and to the Boards of Home and Foreign Missions of the United Presbyterian Church the sum of $5,459.13. The appeal is presented on the judgment roll alone.

Two notices of appeal were filed, one on behalf of the executor under the Pennsylvania administration, and the other on behalf of the heirs at law of Robert Gracey, deceased. By stipulation one record is presented, and both appeals may be determined by one order. Rights of creditors are not here involved and all taxes and expenses of administration have been paid or provided for.

[1] It is the contention of appellants that the court erred in holding that the assets which were on hand, under the California administration, were, in legal, effect, real estate in the state of California at the time of the death of Robert Gracey, deceased, and in holding that the law of California was applicable to the distribution of the estate. It is their claim that the proceeds distributable under the California administration constituted personal property at the time of the death of Robert Gracey, deceased, by reason of an alleged equitable conversion of realty into personalty in both the wills of Sarah Jane Thursby and Robert Gracey, and that the law of Pennsylvania should be applied to the distribution thereof. The appellants alleged and proved the law of Pennsylvania to the effect that any holographic will or codicil, devising or bequeathing property to charitable or public uses, must be attested by at least two witnesses. The codicil here in question was not so attested and it is not questioned that, tested by the law of Pennsylvania, the said codicil would be invalid. But when the same was offered for probate in California its sufficiency as a valid codicil was governed by the law of this state. Civ. Code, § 1376. When so tested it was sufficiently proved, for in this state witnesses to a holographic will or codicil are unnecessary.

[2-5] The primary question for determination is whether an equitable conversion of the real estate in Merced county to personal property took place upon the death of either Sarah Jane Thursby or of Robert Gracey. It is conceded by the respondents that if it be held, contrary to the determination of the trial court, that the California estate of which Robert Gracey died seized was, in contemplation of law, personal property at the time of his death it would follow that all of said California estate should be delivered to the Pennsylvania executor to be distributed in accordance with the laws of Pennsylvania, with the inevitable declaration there that the said codicil is void. On the other hand, if it be determined that there was no such equitable conversion in either estate it would seem to follow that distribution should be made as ordered by the trial court. It is the claim of the appellants that the will of Sarah Jane Thursby created an equitable conversion of all of her real property into personalty as of the date of her death, pursuant to the provisions of section 1338 of the Civil Code, which provides that:

> "When a will directs the conversion of real property into money, such property and all its proceeds must be deemed personal property from the time of the testator's death."

It is conceded by the appellants that there is no express direction to the executor of the Thursby will to convert the real property into money, but it is insisted that from the whole scheme of the will it was the intention of the testatrix that the executor should do so. We do not so conclude. As necessarily conceded, there was no such express direction, and we find nothing on the face of the will that imports an intention on the part of the testatrix that such conversion take place. It does not appear therefrom that such conversion was necessary in order that the intentions of the testatrix be carried out. Section 1338 of the Civil Code is simply declaratory of the common law (Estep v. Armstrong, 91 Cal. 659, 27 P. 1091), and the doctrine rests on the principle that equity considers that as done which ought to have been done. In Estate of Pforr, 144 Cal. 121, it was said at page 128 (77 P. 827):

> "Whether such conversion is effected depends upon the intention of the testator as gathered from the entire provisions of his will. If it is apparent from its terms that it was his will that the estate be sold and the proceeds given to his beneficiaries, an equitable conversion results, even if the direction for the sale is not imperative. Dodge v. Pond, 23 N. Y. 69. 'The question of conversion is a question of intention, and the real question is, Did the testator intend his land should be converted into money at all events before distribution?' Wurts v. Page, 19 N. J. Eq. 375. Mr. Pomeroy (Equity Jurisprudence, § 1161) says: 'In fact the whole result depends upon the intention. If by express language, or by a reasonable construction of all its terms, the instrument shows an intention that the original form of the property shall be changed, then a conversion necessarily takes place.'"

The doctrine of equitable conversion was invoked in the case of Janes v. Throckmorton, 57 Cal. 368, 382, and it was there said:

> "But the doctrine of equitable conversion is invoked by the defendant; and, it is said, that as to the beneficiaries, the land, under the agreement, became personal estate, and their interest personal property. Dodge v. Pond, 23 N. Y. 69, Lynn v. Gephart, 27 Md. 547, and 2 Story's Eq. Juris. § 1214, are cited by defendant's counsel in support of this position. In Lynn v. Gephart, the court cites the section from Story, which reads thus: 'The inclination of courts of equity upon this branch of jurisprudence is not generally to change the quality of the property, unless there is some clear intention or act by which a definite character, either as money or as land, has been unequivocally fixed upon it throughout'; and adds, that 'if this intention do not clearly appear, the property retains its original character.'"

The citation of authorities to the same effect could be prolonged. From their consideration it cannot be said that, under the Thursby will, such conversion took place either by direction of the testatrix or by necessary or fair implication from the language used. The mere discretionary power to sell does not produce such result. White v. Howard, 46 N. Y. 162. The language of the residuary clause in the Thursby will unquestionably had the effect of vesting the title to the real property in Robert Gracey at the moment of the death of Mrs. Thursby. Civ. Code, § 1341; Estate of Patterson, 155 Cal. 626, 102 P. 941, 261 L. R. A. (N. S.) 654, 132 Am. St. Rep. 116, 18 Ann. Cas. 625; Estate of Benvenuto, 183 Cal. 382, 191 P. 678.

When it became necessary to sell a portion of said real property to pay specific bequests, and when the whole of said real property was sold, the surplus beyond the amount required for the purposes mentioned retained its character as real estate for purposes of distribution. 2 Woerner on Administration, § 481; 24 C. J. 706.

[6-8] Nor do we think that any equitable conversion took place upon the death of Robert Gracey. As above indicated, the doctrine of equitable conversion is a device employed in equity to bring about equitable results. It is invoked to accomplish the intention of the testator and for the benefit of beneficiaries. 6 Cal. Jur. 525, 526. There is no wording in the codicil appended to the Gracey will expressly directing the executor to convert said real estate into money, and we fail to discover from the language used by the testator any intent on his part by necessary or reasonable implication from the language used to require such conversion. Indeed, the plain intention is to the contrary, for if such conversion were intended and should be effectuated the entire California estate would be transmitted to the executor in the Pennsylvania administration and the benefactions under the codicil would be entirely defeated. We cannot ascribe such an intention to the testator. He must be held to have known that Mrs. Thursby had died before he executed the codicil, and that the title to the real estate in California, or at least so much thereof as was not necessary to pay the funeral expenses and the bequests under the will of Mrs. Thursby, had vested in him, and that the only way in which the beneficiaries under the codicil could receive their bounties would be by the probate of his will, including said codicil, in California, without an equitable conversion thereof into personalty. Otherwise his benefactions under the codicil would fail. Nor do we agree, as contended by appellants, that there was such a blending of personal and real estate by the testator as to show that he intended to create a fund and to make a testamentary disposition thereof in money. We conclude that the trial court did not err in refusing to apply the doctrine of equitable conversion to either the Thursby will or to the codicil of the Gracey will.

[9-11] It is next insisted by the appellants that if there was no equitable conversion under either will and if it be held, as we do hold, that the property in California was and is real estate for purposes of distribution, then Robert Gracey died intestate as to such real estate. The contention is predicated upon the fact that in the codicil the word "devise" is not used, and that the testator used the words, "I bequeath" one-half "of all the net amount that may come to me from said estate" to the "public library of the city of Merced," etc. It is argued that the use of the word "bequeath" was ineffectual to pass the title of said property as real estate. The contention appears to be that, in order to effectuate the passing of title to real estate, the word "devise" or other appropriate term applicable to real estate must be used. Section 1327 of the Civil Code provides:

> "Technical words in a will are to be taken in their technical sense, unless the context clearly indicates a contrary intention, or unless it satisfactorily appears that the will was drawn solely by the testator, and that he was unacquainted with such technical sense."

In the application of the foregoing section of the Civil Code, this court had under consideration, in Estate of Henderson, 161 Cal. 353, 119 P. 496, a question very similar to the one now presented with reference to the effect of the use of the terms "bequest," "legacies," "legatees," and "residuary legatees" in an holographic will as bearing upon the disposition of real property of the estate, and where it appeared that the terms "devise" and "devisees" were not used. In that case it was said:

> "The primary purpose of all interpretation of wills is, of course, to ascertain the testator's intent, as disclosed by the language he has used. Civ. Code, § 1317. Of this class of questions it may be said, with more truth, perhaps, than of any other, that each case depends upon its own peculiar facts, and that precedents have comparatively small value. 'Except for the establishment of general principles, very little aid can be procured from adjudged cases in the construction of wills. It seldom happens that two cases can be found precisely alike [citing cases]'. * * * The appellant argues, further, that, inasmuch as the estate (and the residue) included both real and personal property, such real property as was contained in the residue could not be covered by a gift over of 'legacies' given to 'legatees.' But, while technical words in a will are ordinarily to be taken in their technical sense, they will not be so taken when it appears that they were used in another sense by a testator who drew his will without an acquaintance with the technical sense. Civ. Code, § 1327; Estate of Peabody, 154 Cal. 173 (97 P. 184). The will before us was, as we have said, holographic, and it is perfectly clear from its provisions that the testator was unfamiliar with the distinctions between terms appropriate to testamentary gifts of personal and those of real estate. Although the estate comprised realty, the will does not contain the word 'devise' or 'devisee.' The testator makes gifts of his interest in real estate, and then speaks of the residue, after paying all the 'bequests herein provided for.' He makes provision for 'residuary legatees,' but says nothing of 'residuary devisees.' It is plain, therefore, that the testator used the terms 'bequests,' 'legacy,' 'legatees,' and 'residuary legatees' loosely, and without regard to their exact technical meaning. In order to give full effect to these expressions they must be read as referring to gifts and takers of realty, as well as of personal property." Estate of Henderson, supra, pages 357, 358 (119 P. 498); Estate of Budd, 166 Cal. 286, 135 P. 1131.

So in the case at bar it appears that the codicil was holographic in form. As the appeal is on the judgment roll alone, the evidence is not before us. All intendments are in favor of the determinations of the trial court, and, in the absence of a contrary showing on this appeal, it must be assumed that it appeared that the codicil was drawn solely by the testator and that he was unacquainted with the technical meaning of the term "bequeath" and intended by its use that it should apply to the takers of real property as well as personal property. A will should be so interpreted as to render it operative, if it be reasonably susceptible of such interpretation, to the end that the intention of the testator be given effect and that intestacy be avoided. Civ. Code, § 1317; Estate of Phelps, 182 Cal. 752, 190 P. 17; Estate of Wilson, 184 Cal. 63, 193 P. 581; Estate of Franck, 190 Cal. 28, 210 P. 417; Estate of McCurdy, 197 Cal. 276, 240 P. 498; 26 Cal. Jur. 899. On the record before us it must therefore be concluded that the word "bequeath" was used by the testator not in its technical sense, but as applying to both real and personal property. Such interpretation is reasonable and intestacy is thereby avoided.

[12] In determining the amount of the Gracey estate which it was competent for the testator to leave to the respondents for charitable and benevolent uses, under section 1313 of the Civil Code, the trial court fixed the net value of the estate in California and elsewhere and apportioned one-third of the total to the beneficiaries under the codicil. In this respect the appellants concede that the court followed the rule laid down in Estate of Dwyer, 159 Cal. 687, 115 P. 242, where it was held that in fixing the amount of the one-third of the estate which might be distributed to charitable uses, under said section 1313, the aggregate estate, wherever situated, is to be taken into consideration. But it is insisted that the court erred in so fixing the aggregate of such estate for the reason that it appears that the administration of the estate of Gracey in Pennsylvania has not been closed and that additional costs of administration in that state may accrue. Here, again, the evidence is not before us, and in the absence of a showing to the contrary it must be assumed that sufficient competent evidence was before the trial court upon which to base its implied finding to the effect that the administration of the Pennsylvania estate had progressed to a point where no further costs would accrue. The burden was upon the appellants to show the insufficiency of the evidence to support the finding of the aggregate amount of said estate or to show some abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court, and such showing has not been made.

We have examined the cases relied upon by the appellants, and we find therein nothing inconsistent with the conclusions herein expressed as applied to the particular facts in this case.

The decree is affirmed.

Alaska Packers' Association petitions this court to review and annul an award of the respondent Industrial Accident Commission made against it, as self-insurer, and in favor of respondent John Peterson, who was injured while in Alaska. Peterson entered the employ of the petitioner under contract, shipping from San Francisco as a seaman and fisherman. During the voyage to Alaska, he acted as a member of the crew of the bark Star of Iceland, performing the regular duties of a seaman. On arrival in Alaska, he was taken with the rest of the crew to one of petitioner's canneries, and put to work repairing nets and overhauling the fishing boats on the dock, where they had been stored for the winter. When that work was completed, Peterson and another employee were assigned to one of the fishing boats, which they operated for a period of about five weeks. The fishing season at the cannery closed, and the men were directed to bring their boats to the dock, to be hoisted up by a winch and placed in the warehouse for the following winter. Peterson anchored his boat near the beach, with the intention of later taking it to the dock. When he returned for that purpose, the boat, because of low tide, was stranded on the sand and mud of the beach, all but a few feet near the stern, however, being in the water. Standing on the beach, Peterson attempted, with the assistance of others, to lift the boat to float it, and in so doing strained his back and left hip, causing a fracture of the vertebra. He returned to San Francisco on the Star of Iceland as a seaman, and, on arrival, received his discharge. As the contract of employment was made in the state of California, the employer and employee were subject to the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Law (St. 1917, p. 831). Peterson, therefore, filed an application with the Industrial Accident Commission for an adjustment of claim for compensation for the injury suffered. The commission found that the applicant sustained injury occurring in the course of and arising out of his employment, and made an award in his favor and against the employer, as self-insurer. Application for a rehearing before the commission was denied, and the employer now petitions this court to review and to set aside the award. Its main contention is that the commission was without jurisdiction over this cause, for the reason that the contract of hire was wholly maritime in character, and therefore under the exclusive admiralty jurisdiction of the courts of the United States.

[1, 2] Peterson's contract with the petitioner was undoubtedly maritime in its nature. Domenico v. Alaska Packers Assn. (D. C.) 112 F. 554, 556; North Alaska Salmon Co. v. Larsen (C. C. A.) 220 F. 93, 95; Heino v. Libby, McNeill & Libby, 116 Wash. 148, 157, 205 P. 854. We do not regard the fact that the employee worked at mending nets, performed services in loading and unloading lighters carrying the cargo to the ship, and, part of the time, while the vessel was in Alaska, slept on shore, as qualifying in any way the nature of his contract, or rendering it severable. Generally speaking, parties entering into maritime contracts contemplate the system of maritime law, and its well-known rules control their rights and liabilities, to the exclusion of state statutes. Union Fish Co. v. Erickson, 248 U. S. 308, 39 S. Ct. 112, 63 L. Ed. 261. But, as to certain local matters, regulation of which will work no material prejudice to the general maritime law, or interfere with the proper harmony or uniformity of that law in its international or interstate relations, the rules of the maritime law may be modified or supplemented by state regulation. Western Fuel Co. v. Garcia, 257 U. S. 233, 242, 42 S. Ct. 89, 66 L. Ed. 210; Grant, Smith-Porter Ship Co. v. Rohde, 257 U. S. 469, 478, 42 S. Ct. 157, 68 L. Ed. 321, 25 A. L. R. 1008; Industrial Comm. of New York v. Nordenholt Corpn., 259 U. S. 263, 274, 275, 42 S. Ct. 473, 66 L. Ed. 933, 25 A. L. R. 1013.

[3] When a compensation act supersedes other state laws touching a liability for damages which depended upon the common law and state statutes, it does not come into conflict with any superior maritime law. And this is true whether the award under the act is made as upon an implied agreement or otherwise. Industrial Comm. v. Nordenholt Corpn., supra, pages 275, 276. In that case a stevedore, engaged in unloading a vessel lying in navigable waters, slipped and fell on the dock. He was awarded compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Law of New York, and the United States Supreme Court held that application of the local law would not work material prejudice to any characteristic feature of the general maritime law. In Grant, Smith-Porter Ship Co. v. Rohde, supra, the court held that, while the general admiralty jurisdiction extends to a proceeding to recover damages resulting from a tort committed on a vessel in process of construction when lying in navigable waters, under the "circumstances stated, the exclusive features of the Oregon Workmen's Compensation Act * * * would apply and abrogate the right to recover damages in an admiralty court which otherwise would exist." In a still more recent case, in which the record disclosed facts said by the court to be sufficient to show a maritime tort, to which the general admiralty jurisdiction would extend, the court sustained an award made under the Texas State Compensation Act (Vernon's Ann. Civ. St. Supp. 1918, arts. 5246—1 to 5246—91), saying:

> "The matter is of mere local concern and its regulation by the state will work no material prejudice to any characteristic feature of the general maritime law." Miller's Indemnity Underwriters v. Braud, 270 U. S. 59, 46 S. Ct. 194, 70 L. Ed. 470.

To the same effect is the decision of this court in City of Oakland v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 198 Cal. 273, 244 P. 353.

[4] The California Workmen's Compensation Act provides the only means by which an injured employee can recover compensation from his employer for injuries received in the course of and arising out of his employment, and it abrogates the common-law liability of the master for such injuries in the cases to which it is applicable. Netherlands American Steam Nav. Co. v. Gallagher (C. C. A.) 282 F. 171, 183. The obvious intent of the act was to substitute its procedure for the former method of settling disputes arising between those occupying the strict relationship of master and servant, or employer and employee, by means of actions for damages. Cooper v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 177 Cal. 685, 687, 171 P. 684. It substitutes a new system of rights and obligations for the common-law rules governing the liability of employers for injuries to their employees. Western Indemnity Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 686, 692, 151 P. 398. When the specified conditions exist, the remedy provided by the act is exclusive of all other statutory or common-law remedies. De Carli v. Associated Oil Co., 57 Cal. App. 310, 207 P. 282.

[5] Peterson was injured while standing on the beach, pushing and lifting on a fishing boat in an endeavor to launch it. The work he was performing at the time of his injury had no more direct relation to navigation or commerce or to his duties either as a seaman or as a fisherman than would the work of a longshoreman loading or unloading a ship. It was essentially "land labor," nonmaritime in its nature. These circumstances serve to bring the case within the category of those relating to dock and port employees working under maritime contracts, but who sustain injuries on land. In such a case the local law may apply.

> "When an employee, working on board a vessel in navigable waters [italics ours], sustains personal injuries there, and seeks damages from the employer, the applicable legal principles are very different from those which would control if he had been injured on land while unloading the vessel. In the former situation the liability of employer must be determined under the maritime law; in the latter, no general maritime rule prescribes the liability, and the local law has always been applied. The liability of the employer for damages on account of injuries received on shipboard by an employee under a maritime contract is matter within the admiralty jurisdiction; but not so when the accident occurs on land." State Industrial Comm. v. Nordenholt, supra; Netherlands American Steam Nav. Co. v. Gallagher, supra.

[6] The action here is not one to recover on a contract, maritime or otherwise. The liability of the employer to pay compensation to the injured employee arises from the Workmen's Compensation Act, to which Peterson and the petitioner were subject, rather than from any agreement of the parties. The law operates on the status of the parties, and affixes certain rights and obligations to that status. North Alaska Salmon Co. v. Pillsbury, 174 Cal. 1, 2, 162 P. 93, L. R. A. 1917E, 642. Under the circumstances here shown to exist, application of the California Workmen's Compensation Act will not work any material prejudice to any characteristic feature of the general maritime law. Grant, Smith-Porter Ship Co. v. Rohde, supra; Industrial Comm. v. Nordenholt, supra; City of Oakland v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra.

[7] Petitioner makes some objection to the references to Peterson as an "employee," and states: "We know of no cases involving seamen where they are termed employees." "Employee" is defined in Bouvier's Law Dictionary as "a term of rather broad significance for one who is employed; * * *" and "employed" is "the act of doing a thing and the being under contract or orders to do it." United States v. Morris, 39 U. S. (14 Pet.) 464, 475, 10 L. Ed. 543. While seamen and fishermen may not usually be referred to as "employees," there can be no question but that they come within the broad meaning of this word, as used in section 8 of the Workmen's Compensation Act.

The award is affirmed.

VAUGHAN v. CALDWELL et al. (Sac. 3775.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 28, 1927.)

1. Appeal and error 🔑907(2)—All presumptions favor referee's findings, where evidence on which based is not in transcript.

Where evidence before referee, on which his findings were based, is not before Supreme Court in transcript of appeal, all presumptions are in favor of such findings.

2. Partnership 🔑327(1)—Complaint, alleging violation of partnership agreement but not dissolution, held to justify accounting.

Complaint, alleging violation of partnership agreement by defendant, held to justify accounting and dissolution as against contention that cause of action for accounting was not stated because dissolution was not alleged.

3. Partnership 🔑328(3) — Evidence held to warrant finding that partner was entitled to salary during time that partnership was not actively engaged in construction work.

Evidence held to show that member of partnership doing general highway and street construction work was entitled to salary between certain dates, though partnership was not actively engaged in construction work for several months of such period.

4. Partnership 🔑328(3) — Evidence held to sustain finding of agreement by two partners to repay two-thirds of advances of third partner.

Evidence held to sustain finding that two of three partners agreed to repay to the other two-thirds of his advances for partnership business, in view of agreement to split profits and losses three ways, one-third each.

5. Partnership 🔑74 — Agreement to share profits and losses equally implies contract to repay proportionately advances by one partner.

Where partners agreed to share losses and divide profits equally, and one partner advanced more money than the others, there was implied contract that the others would repay their proportion of money advanced.

6. Partnership 🔑328(3) — Evidence held to warrant finding of agreement by two partners to pay interest on advances by another partner.

Evidence held sufficient to support finding that two of three partners agreed to pay interest to the other on moneys advanced by him for partnership business.

7. Partnership 🔑75—Interest on partner's advances held allowable to date of findings and judgment, rather than date partnership ceased to do business.

Interest on advances of one partner held allowable to date of findings and judgment in action for accounting and money due, which was date of dissolution of partnership under findings, rather than date when partnership ceased to do business.

8. Partnership 🔑75—Interest on partner's advances did not cease when partnership ceased to do business, where interest was to run on advances "until paid."

Interest on advances of one partner held not to cease when partnership ceased to do business, in view of agreement to pay interest on advances "until paid."

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; M. L. Short, Judge.

Action by A. H. Vaughan against J. S. Caldwell and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and the defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

Frank Lamberson, of Visalia, and John G. Covert, of Hanford, for appellant.

J. L. C. Irwin, of Hanford, for respondent.

LANGDON, J. Plaintiff brought this action as a member of a partnership against the other two members of such partnership. It was alleged that the partnership was formed in February, 1918, for the purpose of doing general highway and street construction work, and that it continued to transact business as such partnership until March 1, 1921; that the parties to said partnership were to share the losses and divide the profits of the business equally between them; that it was mutually agreed that defendant Caldwell should devote all his time and attention to the partnership business and that the plaintiff and the defendant Applegarth were to devote all the time and attention that was necessary to the transaction of said partnership business, and that the plaintiff and each of the defendants were to receive a specified monthly salary for such time as was devoted by each of said partners to the partnership business; that the plaintiff gave his entire time and attention to said partnership business from on or about May 1, 1918, to March 1, 1921, and that plaintiff received no salary for said services, although each of the defendants were paid the full amount due them for their services rendered said partnership; that plaintiff has paid out and expended for and on account of said partnership business large sums of money, to wit, $35,372, in excess of the money paid and expended by defendants, and that said defendants promised and agreed to repay two-thirds of said sum of $35,372, to wit, the sum of $23,581.33 on demand, together with interest thereon at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum until paid, and that no part of said sum has ever been paid.

There are further allegations to the effect that defendant Caldwell violated the terms of the partnership agreement by failing to devote all his time and attention to said partnership business and by securing contracts for work in his own name, and specific instances of such failure are set forth.

The prayer was that an account be taken of all the partnership dealings and transactions from the time of the commencement thereof to the date of the action; that the property of said partnership be sold and the partnership debts and liabilities be paid and any surplus divided among the plaintiff and the defendants according to their respective interests and that plaintiff have judgment against defendants for the sum of $23,581.33, together with interest thereon at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum until paid, and for the sum of $4,450 salary, and for general relief.

Defendant Applegarth failed to answer, and his default was entered. Defendant Caldwell answered, admitting the formation of a partnership, but denying that this partnership continued as such later than about February 20, 1921. The answer also alleged that the partnership was wholly and completely dissolved by mutual consent and agreement of plaintiff and defendants on or about February 19, 1921. Denial is made of plaintiff's allegations that he had devoted his entire time to the partnership business between the dates named and of other matters in the complaint relating to advancement of moneys by plaintiff. It is alleged that at the time of the alleged dissolution of said partnership, all the property of said partnership was delivered by defendants to plaintiff in complete settlement, satisfaction, discharge, and adjustment of all the business and accounts of said partnership, and said property was so received by plaintiff; that the partnership has no further property or assets, but that all its property and assets remained in the possession of plaintiff from the time of the dissolution of the partnership until it was disposed of by said plaintiff for his own use and benefit.

[1] When the case came on for trial, the plaintiff asked for the appointment of a referee to take an accounting, which application was opposed by defendant and appellant upon the ground that a complete dissolution, accounting, and settlement had been had on or about February 20, 1921. Testimony was offered on behalf of the parties upon this issue, and the trial court held that no accounting had been had and that an accounting was necessary. A referee was appointed to try the issues in the accounting of the business operations and to report his findings to the court. After taking testimony for weeks, and examining books and accounts, the referee reported his findings to the court. The evidence before the referee upon which his findings are based is not before this court in the transcript of appeal. All presumptions, therefore, are in favor of the findings. The defendant excepted to the findings of the referee, and the court proceeded to take testimony upon the disputed items. Thereafter the trial court modified one paragraph of the findings of the referee so as to include an obligation upon the part of defendants to pay interest to plaintiff at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum on all sums of money advanced by plaintiff to said partnership from the date of advancement, which interest was estimated in the findings at $17,787.13.

[2] It is first contended by the appellant that the complaint does not state a cause of action for an accounting, and that the demurrer thereto should have been sustained. We think this objection is without merit. The particular attack made upon the complaint is that it does not allege a dissolution of the partnership. There were allegations of violations of the partnership agreement by defendant Caldwell, and such an allegation was held, in Bremner v. Leavitt, 109 Cal. 130, 41 P. 859, to justify an accounting and dissolution. In this case it was said:

> "It was, therefore, proper for plaintiff to allege the violation by defendants of their obligation in this regard as one of the grounds of his action, and upon which he desired an accounting; and the fact that the breach of this obligation by the defendants resulted in damage to the plaintiff does not constitute it a separate cause of action at law for damages, as contended by respondents. Such damages are but an incident of the general cause of action assigned. Partners cannot sue one another at law for any breach of the duties or obligations arising from that relation. This can only be done in chancery by asking a dissolution and accounting, and, if damages accrue from any cause in such proceeding, they must be adjusted by some appropriate method in that tribunal."

In the case of Brandt v. Salomonson, 17 Cal. App. 395, 119 P. 946, the action was brought for a dissolution and an accounting.

[3] Appellant objects to the finding of the court that the plaintiff gave his entire time and attention to the partnership business from about May 1, 1918, to March 1, 1921, and has received no salary from said partnership for such services except the sum of $1,200, and that there is now due plaintiff the sum of $4,725, and that each of said defendants is indebted to plaintiff for one-third thereof. It was found—and this finding is not attacked—that the said plaintiff and each of the defendants were to receive a salary of $150 per month for such time as was devoted by each of said copartners to said copartnership business, and that thereafter, on or about the 15th day of November, 1918, it was mutually agreed between the said partners, that each of said copartners should receive for his services the sum of $200 per month thereafter, from said copartnership business.

There is ample testimony in the record to sustain the finding of the referee and of the court that plaintiff was entitled to salary between the dates named. It is true that there was a period of several months when the partnership was not actively engaged in construction work because it had completed all its contracts. During that period plaintiff and defendant Caldwell traveled around, attempting to secure new contracts, and, while the work at that time was perhaps not as regular and constant as at other periods, nevertheless Caldwell drew his full salary for that period, and it does not appear that plaintiff neglected any work which there was for him to do in connection with said business. There appears no reason, therefore, why he should not be remunerated upon the same basis as the other two partners during the interim when the partnership was searching for new work.

[4, 5] It is objected that there is no evidence to sustain the finding that the defendants agreed to repay to plaintiff two-thirds of his advances for the partnership business. It is admitted by the answer that the plaintiff and defendants were to share the losses and divide the profits of the partnership equally between them. Therefore it follows as a matter of course that, since they were to share the losses and divide the profits equally, if the plaintiff advanced more money than the defendants, there was an implied contract that the defendants would repay their proportion of the money advanced. Furthermore, the finding under consideration is sustained by the testimony of defendant Applegarth that the plaintiff and defendants entered into a partnership to build roads, streets, etc., and that they were to "split" the profits or losses three ways, one-third each.

[6] It is contended that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding of the court that the defendants agreed to pay interest to the plaintiff upon moneys advanced by him. There is considerable testimony in the record on this question. It is not all direct and conclusive testimony, but, taken together, we think it amply supports the finding. Plaintiff testified about the meeting between the partners when the terms and conditions of the partnership were discussed, and he stated that the defendants had promised to pay him 8 per cent. on the money he advanced. There was other testimony by this same witness, and also by the defendant Applegarth, to the effect that plaintiff stated he would have to borrow money at 8 per cent. interest, and would have to receive that much upon it, and that this was acquiesced in by the defendants.

[7, 8] Appellant contends that interest upon the advances made by plaintiff should have ceased on February 20, 1921, when the partnership ceased to do any business. Authorities are cited to the effect that, where there is an agreement to pay interest upon capital contributed by one of the partners, such interest ceases with the dissolution of the firm. There are two sufficient answers to the contention made: First, the trial court adopted the finding of the referee that "it is not true that said copartnership was by mutual consent and agreement of the plaintiff and the defendants, on or about the 20th day of February, 1921, at the city of Coalinga, county of Fresno, state of California, wholly and completely or at all dissolved." It was also found that the plaintiff was entitled to a dissolution of the partnership as of the date of the findings. It would appear, therefore, that, by applying the rule relied upon by appellant, interest should be allowed to date of the findings and judgment, the date of the dissolution of the partnership.

The second answer to appellant's contention is that the reasoning of the authorities upon which he relies, and which allow no interest upon advances after dissolution, is based upon the theory that the agreement between the parties was to pay interest during the time when the advances were earning money in the business. This reasoning can have no place where there is an express agreement of the parties to pay interest to a different date, and, in the instant case it was found by the trial court that the defendants promised and agreed to repay to plaintiff two-thirds of the advances which he made for the business, "together with interest on all sums of money advanced from the date of advancement at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum until paid." In the face of this express agreement, no general rules governing implied agreements have any application.

The other findings of the trial court respecting the property and assets of the partnership find support in the record, and it is unnecessary to set forth herein the evidence appearing in the transcript.

The judgment is affirmed.

DWYER v. CITY COUNCIL OF BERKELEY et al. (S. F. 12160.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 23, 1927.)

1. Municipal corporations 🔑108—Only ordinances involving exercise of legislative prerogative are subject to initiative and referendum.

Only municipal ordinances which involve an exercise of the legislative prerogative are subject to the initiative and referendum.

2. Municipal corporations 🔑601—Zoning ordinances are within police power (Const. art. 11, § 11; St. 1917, p. 1419).

Zoning ordinances are police power enactments, designed for promotion and perpetuation of people's moral and material welfare, which cities are authorized to enact by Const. art. 11, § 11, and St. 1917, p. 1419.

3. Municipal corporations 🔑108—All municipal legislation, not excluded expressly or by necessary implication, held subject to referendum under charter (Berkeley City Charter, art. 13, § 92; art. 14, § 93, as amended by St. 1923, p. 1548; Const. art. 11, § 8).

Under Berkeley City Charter (St. 1909, p. 1208 [adopted pursuant to Const. art. 11, § 8]) art. 13, § 92, and article 14, § 93, as amended by St. 1923, p. 1548, legislation on every municipal subject is subject to reference to people for approval or rejection, unless excluded expressly or by clear and necessary implication.

4. Municipal corporations 🔑108—Initiative and referendum laws merely reserve to people right to exercise inherent legislative power.

Legislative power of municipality resides in people thereof, who simply withdraw from legislative body, and reserve to themselves right to exercise part of their inherent legislative power by enactment of initiative and referendum laws.

5. Municipal corporations 🔑108—Local character of zoning ordinance does not preclude application of referendum (Const. art. 11, § 11; St. 1917, p. 1419; Berkeley City Charter, art. 14, § 93, as amended by St. 1923, p. 1548).

As city council, representing electorate of entire city, had authority, under Const. art. 11, § 11, and St. 1917, p. 1419, to pass zoning ordinance, local character thereof is insufficient to preclude application of referendum under Berkeley City Charter (St. 1909, p. 1208) art. 14, § 93, as amended by St. 1923, p. 1548.

6. Municipal corporations 🔑108—Initiative and referendum held not inapplicable to rezoning ordinance because of more immediate interest of residents of particular locality (Berkeley City Charter, art. 13, § 92; art. 14, § 93, as amended by St. 1923, p. 1548).

That residents of particular locality rezoned are more immediately and apparently affected than residents of other portions of city does not render broad initiative and referendum provisions of Berkeley City Charter (St. 1909, p. 1208) art. 13, § 92, and article 14, § 93, as amended by St. 1923, p. 1548, inapplicable to such amendment of general zoning ordinance, in view of substantial interest of electors of entire municipality.

7. Municipal corporations 🔑108—Initiative and referendum held not inapplicable to rezoning ordinance as depriving residents of opportunity to present arguments under general zoning ordinance (Berkeley City Charter, art. 13, § 92; art. 14, § 93, as amended by St. 1923, p. 1548).

Initiative and referendum provisions of Berkeley City Charter (St. 1909, p. 1208), art. 13, § 92, and article 14, § 93, as amended by St. 1923, p. 1548, held not inapplicable to ordinance amending general zoning ordinance by reclassifying certain territory, as depriving residents thereof of opportunity to present arguments in manner provided by amended ordinance.

8. Municipal corporations 🔑108—Constitutional right to submit legislative questions to direct vote cannot be abridged by procedural requirements of superseded municipal ordinance (Const. art. 4, § 1).

Constitutional right, reserved by people, to submit legislative questions to direct vote (Const. art. 4, § 1), cannot be abridged by any procedural requirements of a superseded municipal ordinance dealing with same subject of legislation.

9. Municipal corporations 🔑108—Ordinance requiring two-thirds vote of city council to rezone territory held inapplicable to initiative and referendum legislation (Berkeley City Charter, art. 13, § 92; art. 14, § 93, as amended by St. 1923, p. 1548).

Ordinance requiring two-thirds vote of city council to rezone certain territory, over protest of owners of 20 per cent. of area included, etc., held inapplicable to direct legislation under initiative and referendum provisions of Berkeley City Charter (St. 1909, p. 1208) art. 13, § 92, and article 14, § 93, as amended by St. 1923, p. 1548.

10. Constitutional law 🔑70(3)—Wisdom of initiative and referendum in zoning matters, more acutely affecting given district than entire community, is question of political policy for people, not courts (Berkeley City Charter, art. 13, § 92; art. 14, § 93, as amended by St. 1923, p. 1548).

Wisdom of giving general public right to invoke initiative and referendum in zoning matters under Berkeley City Charter (St. 1909, p. 1208) art. 13, § 92, and article 14, § 93, as amended by St. 1923, p. 1548, when effect may be more acutely felt in given district than by community at large, is question of political policy, to be determined by people, not courts.

11. Municipal corporations ⚷108—Doubt as to application of initiative and referendum to rezoning ordinance must be resolved in favor of constitutional prerogative (Berkeley City Charter, art. 13, § 92; art. 14, § 93, as amended by St. 1923, p. 1548; Const. art. 4, § 1).

Any doubt as to whether people intended to apply initiative and referendum provisions of Berkeley City Charter (St. 1909, p. 1208), art. 13, § 92, and article 14, § 93, as amended by St. 1923, p. 1548, to amendment of general zoning ordinance reclassifying certain territory, must be resolved in favor of giving effect to constitutional prerogative (Const. art. 4, § 1).

Petition by Anthony A. Dwyer for a writ of mandate to the City Council of the City of Berkeley and others. Writ granted.

J. E. Pemberton, of San Francisco, and Albert M. Hardie, of Oakland, for petitioner.

Earl Sinclair, City Atty., of Berkeley, and Calkins, Hagar, Hall & Linforth, of San Francisco, for respondents.

SEAWELL, J. Petition for writ of mandate to compel the city council of the city of Berkeley to either repeal or submit to a referendum vote of the people an ordinance passed by said city council, reclassifying as a business and public use district of class 4 certain property designated in the comprehensive zoning ordinance of said city as a residence district of class 1, wherein only dwellings, flats, clubs, churches, railroad shelter stations, apartment houses without stores, and hotels without stores are permitted. It appears from a stipulation as to facts entered into by the parties, and from the petition for the writ and return to the alternative writ, that petitioner is a resident, taxpayer, and elector of the city of Berkeley, who owns and resides upon property in the vicinity of the property described in the ordinance of reclassification, and who is also one of the signers of the petition by which the referendum is sought to be invoked. The city council of Berkeley, the mayor, the respective members of said council, and the city clerk are named as respondents. The area reclassified comprises approximately a $\frac{1}{550}$ part of the city, and is owned by the University of California, which, it is alleged, desires and intends to conduct a poultry farm and experiment station on said land, which project contemplates the raising of chickens on a large scale in connection with its courses in poultry husbandry. The intention of raising chickens on a large scale on said lands is denied, but it is admitted that it is the purpose of said university to use a portion of said land as "an experiment station in connection with instruction in poultry husbandry." It is alleged in the return to the alternative writ that the property is bounded on the west by a district classified in the general zoning law as an industrial district of class 6, in which factories not obnoxious, warehouses, including any business use, stables, feed and fuel yards, aviation fields, and residences of any kind included in class 1 are permitted; on the north by a district of class 4, in which schools, public, and semipublic buildings, playgrounds, greenhouses, nurseries, and residences of any kind included in class 1 may locate, and on the east and south by a district classified as a residence district of class 1.

The general comprehensive zoning ordinance of the city of Berkeley was adopted by city council on June 1, 1920, and is designated Ordinance No. 666, N. S. Ordinance No. 1190, N. S., which is under consideration in the instant case, was passed by said city council on May 25, 1926, as an amendment to the general zoning ordinance, after proceedings for amendment had been duly and regularly taken in accordance with the provisions of Ordinance No. 1130, N. S., which is also an amendment to Ordinance No. 666, N. S., and provides the procedure to be followed in reclassifying property pursuant to Ordinance No. 666, N. S. Within 30 days after the passage of said Ordinance No. 1190, N. S., Albert M. Hardie, one of the attorneys for petitioner, pursuant to the referendum provisions of the Berkeley charter, appeared at the office of the city clerk for the purpose of filing a referendum petition, and requested said city clerk to compare, examine, and verify the signatures, and certify to the sufficiency of the petition. The city clerk refused to accept, receive, or file the same. Thereafter said Hardie appeared before the council in regular session assembled as the representative of petitioner and others. A resolution was passed at said meeting, wherein it was recited that the council refused to accept the petition, for the reason that it had been advised by its legal adviser, the city attorney, that said Ordinance No. 1190, N. S., was not a proper subject for referendum. The point that the petition was not duly presented will be considered hereafter.

It is the contention of respondents that an ordinance such as No. 1190, N. S., which amended the general zoning law, is neither within the initiative and referendum provisions of the state Constitution nor the statutes of the state, nor the provisions of the charter of the city of Berkeley.

The city of Berkeley operates under a free holder's charter, which went into effect July 1, 1909 (Stats. 1909, p. 1208), and was adopted in pursuance of the provisions of article 11, § 8, of the state Constitution. The provisions of said charter relating to the initiative and referendum are articles 13 and 14. Section 92 (article 13) pertaining to the initiative power, is as follows:

> "Direct legislation.
> "Sec. 92. (1) Any proposed ordinance may be submitted to the council by a petition signed by registered electors of the city equal in number to the percentage hereinafter required." (Italics supplied.)

The subsequent sections provide that, if the petition accompanying the proposed ordinance is signed by electors equal in number to 15 per centum of the entire vote cast for all candidates for mayor at the last preceding general municipal election at which a mayor was elected, the council shall pass the ordinance without alteration within 20 days after the attachment of the clerk's certificate of sufficiency to the petition, or call a special initiative election within 25 days. If electors equal in number to at least 5 per centum, but less than 15 per centum. have signed the petition, the ordinance is to be passed by the council, or submitted to a vote of the people at the next general election, rather than at a special election. The referendum provision (article 14, § 93), as amended in 1923 (Stats. 1923, p. 1548), is as follows:

> "Mode of protesting against ordinances.
> "Sec. 93. No ordinance passed by the council shall go into effect before thirty days from the time of its final passage except when otherwise required by the general laws of the state or by the provisions of this charter respecting street improvements, and except the ordinance making the annual tax levy, and except an ordinance for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health or safety, which contains a statement of its urgency, and is passed by a seven-ninths vote of the council. * * * If during said thirty days a petition signed by qualified electors of the city equal in number to at least ten per centum of the entire vote cast for all candidates for mayor at the last preceding general municipal election at which a mayor was elected, protesting against the passage of such ordinance, be presented to the council, the same shall thereupon be suspended from going into operation and it shall be the duty of the council to reconsider such ordinance, and if the same be not entirely repealed, the council shall submit the ordinance, as is provided in article 13 of this charter, to the vote of the electors of the city, either at the next general municipal election or at a special election to be called for that purpose, and such ordinance shall not go into effect or become operative unless a majority of the qualified electors voting on the same shall vote in favor thereof. * * *" (Italics supplied.)

It is to be observed that these provisions were embodied in the city charter of Berkeley before the electors of the state had, by constitutional amendment (article, 4, § 1), reserved to themselves "the power to propose laws and amendments to the Constitution, and to adopt or reject the same, at the polls independent of the Legislature," and also "the power, at their own option, to so adopt or reject any act, or section or part of any act, passed by the Legislature," and prior to the day they provided for the reservation of the initiative and referendum to the electors of each county, city and county, city and town of the state by the following provision:

> "The initiative and referendum powers of the people are hereby further reserved to the electors of each county, city and county, city and town of the state, to be exercised under such procedure as may be provided by law. * * * Nothing contained in this section shall be construed as affecting or limiting the present or future powers of cities or cities and counties having charters adopted under the provisions of section eight of article 11 of this Constitution. In the submission to the electors of any measure under this section, all officers shall be guided by the general laws of this state, except as is herein otherwise provided. This section is self-executing, but legislation may be enacted to facilitate its operation, but in no way limiting or restricting either the provisions of this section or the powers herein reserved." Article 4, § 1, amendment adopted October 10, 1911.

Pursuant to said amendment, the Legislature enacted measures providing for direct legislation in cities other than those having a freeholder's charter containing provisions for direct legislation. Stats. Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 131; amended Stats. 1915, p. 319; amended Stats. 1917, p. 655. These measures prescribe a procedure similar to that outlined by the city of Berkeley charter.

The constitutionality and validity of charter provisions resembling those contained in the Berkeley charter were upheld in the case of In re Pfahler, 150 Cal. 71, 88 P. 270, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1092, 11 Ann. Cas. 911, in which amendments to the Los Angeles city charter providing for the initiative and referendum were under review. In earlier cases, passing upon the application of the initiative and referendum to other types of municipal legislation, it has been said that, if the right of referendum can be invoked, the corollary right to initiate legislation must be conceded to exist. Chase v. Kalber, 28 Cal. App. 561, 153 P. 397; Starbuck v. City of Fullerton, 34 Cal. App. 683, 168 P. 583.

[1, 2] It is plain that only ordinances of a municipality which involve an exercise of the legislative prerogative are subject to the initiative and referendum. Hopping v. Council of the City of Richmond, 170 Cal. 605, 150 P. 977. Zoning ordinances are police power enactments, designed for the promotion and perpetuation of the moral and material welfare of the people. Miller v. Board of Public Works, 195 Cal. 477, 234 P. 381, 38 A. L. R. 1479, and cases therein cited. The power to enact police regulations is conferred upon cities by section 11 of article 11 of the Constitution, and municipalities are expressly authorized to establish districts or zones within which the use of property may be regulated by an act of the Legislature passed in 1917. Stats. 1917, p. 1419.

[3] Not only have the citizens of Berkeley in their charter failed to expressly exclude from the operation of the initiative and referendum ordinances of the kind in question, but they have phrased the sections pertaining to these powers in such broad, general, and unambiguous language as to impel the conclusion that it was intended that legislation on every municipal subject should, unless expressly or by clear and necessary implication excluded, be subject to a reference to the people for approval or rejection. In the charter provisions concerning the initiative, the people reserved to themselves the right to enact any proposed ordinance by initiative proceedings (article 13, § 92), while the corresponding sections authorizing the use of the referendum as a mode of protest against legislative action provide that no ordinance, with certain exceptions expressly excluded and not applying in the instant case, shall go into effect for 30 days after its passage, and that during such time referendum proceedings may be instituted. Article 14, § 93.

[4, 5] Respondents contend that, although a zoning ordinance passed as an amendment to a general and comprehensive zoning law is not expressly excluded from the referendum provisions of the charter, it is by necessary implication so excluded. They argue that such an ordinance is local in nature, and directly affects only those within the district rezoned, and, perhaps, in addition, those within the "area of protest," as defined in the zoning ordinance, and, further, that to subject such an ordinance to the referendum would be to render nugatory certain provisions of the zoning law protecting those who own and control property within the district to be reclassified and within the area of protest. From these premises they draw the conclusion that it cannot be presumed that the people intended, in the absence of a clear declaration to that effect, that zoning ordinances of the kind in question should be subject to the referendum. With this argument we cannot agree. To do so would be to disregard the fundamental nature of the initiative and referendum powers, and to ignore the theory underlying the enactment of zoning laws.

If it be conceded that the ordinance in question is local in character, and directly affects only a small proportion of the population, there is nothing theoretically inconsistent in permitting the electorate of the entire city to pass upon it by a referendum election or to enact it by initiative proceedings. It is a fundamental tenet of the American system of representative government that the legislative power of a municipality resides in the people thereof, and that the right to exercise it has been conferred by them upon their duly chosen representatives. By the enactment of initiative and referendum laws the people have simply withdrawn from the legislative body, and reserved to themselves the right to exercise a part of their inherent legislative power. Since the legislative body exercises power derived from the people, and since the city council, the legislative body of Berkeley, representing the electorate of the entire city, admittedly had authority to pass the ordinance in question, no violence is done to principles of statutory construction in holding that the local character of the ordinance, if it be of such character, is not of itself sufficient to preclude an application of the referendum. Ex parte Ellsworth, 165 Cal. 677, 133 P. 272; Crippen v. Farrier, 166 Cal. 69, 134 P. 1139. There may be reasons or considerations of policy why the people might not wish to reserve for themselves powers of direct legislation in regard to certain ordinances affecting one portion of the city more directly than other portions, but that is not a consideration of sufficient moment to overthrow an important legislative prerogative. It is a characteristic of much legislation, especially in this age of intense specialization of occupations and interests, that it operates, to a greater or less degree, more directly upon one group or section of the population than upon another, and the distinction between zoning legislation and many other types of legislation lies, not so much in the fact that a certain proportion of the population which will be less directly affected may be permitted by the operation of the initiative and referendum to establish the rule to be applied to those more vitally and immediately affected, but, rather, that this result becomes more apparent in the case of zoning legislation reclassifying a district, for the reason that the section of the population most directly affected may more easily be segregated, by virtue of ownership or control of land within a certain geographical area, than in the case of other types of legislation.

[6] If the comprehensive zoning law districting all portions of the city were before us, it could not be successfully contended that the ordinance would not be subject to the referendum, for the reason that residents of the city might be more vitally concerned in and affected by the particular regulations relating to the district in which they owned property or resided than in the restrictions applying to other districts. The vice of respondents' argument consists in placing undue stress upon the sectional interest which residents of a particular district may be expected to have in restrictions more immediately affecting their district, and in underemphasizing the interest of the community as a whole in the existence of a comprehensive zoning plan. It must be presumed that the electorate will act in the interests of the entire city, and of the part to be affected by the proposed legislation. If the law operates more directly upon only a part of the citizens, evil intent or design cannot be presumed. It is important to those who own property or reside within a certain district, not only that the use to which property may be put in such district be controlled and regulated, but that zoning restrictions embracing the entire city and embodying a well-defined plan be adopted. This proposition is aptly stated in Zahn v. Board of Public Works, 195 Cal. 497, 513, 234 P. 388, 395, in which it is said:

> "The power of the city council to zone is not limited in our opinion to the protection of established districts. To so hold would be to defeat in a large measure the very purpose of zoning which is to control future development in the best interest of the city. Zoning in its best sense looks not only backward to protect districts already established but forward to aid in the development of new districts according to a comprehensive plan having as its basis the welfare of the city as a whole." (Italics supplied.)

The restrictions relating to any portion of the city are an integral part of an entire scheme, and should be the expression of a definite policy. The people in each zone are interested, not only in having a comprehensive zoning law, but in what that law shall be. A zoning ordinance as amended becomes in effect a different ordinance. Even if it be granted that a reclassification of an area as small as that involved in the instant case cannot be said to effect a new scheme, the same rule must necessarily be followed as would be applied if a larger area had been reclassified, and it may be observed that a piecemeal rezoning of small areas may result in a plan differing in vital particulars from that originally contemplated. In view of the substantial interest which the electors of the entire municipality have in its zoning scheme, it cannot be held that, because residents of the particular locality rezoned may be more immediately and apparently affected than are residents of other portions of the city, the broad initiative and referendum provisions of the charter and Constitution do not apply to an amendment to the general zoning law which reclassifies a portion of the city's territory.

[7, 8] It is next contended that an application of the initiative and referendum provisions to a zoning ordinance such as here involved will deprive the residents of the reclassified district and of the area of protest of rights accorded them by the zoning law. Proceedings for the reclassification of property described in the general zoning law may be commenced by written petition of a citizen, by the city planning commission, or by resolution of the city council. Before final action may be taken by the council, two hearings are held, the first before the city planning commission, and the final hearing before the council. Notices of both hearings are posted within the district affected and the area of protest, and those within such districts may file written protests. The area of protest includes the property which is sought to be reclassified, and all frontages within 200 feet of any part of the frontage of the property proposed to be reclassified, or within 300 feet, if the property sought to be reclassified consists of two or more blocks of land. At the hearing before the city planning commission, both petitioners and protestants must be given full opportunity to present their views and to be heard. At the hearing before the council, the written report of the city planning commission, based on the hearing before it and upon its investigations is read, and each side is allowed 15 minutes to present arguments. The council may then proceed to vote upon the matter in the same manner and with the same effect as in the case of other ordinances, except that a two-thirds vote is required in the event that a protest has been filed representing 20 per cent. or more of the area of the property included in the proposed reclassification, or 20 per cent. or more of the frontage of property other than that proposed to be reclassified, but within the area of protest. Section 12, Ordinance 1130, N. S., city of Berkeley.

Complaint is made that, if the referendum be applied to the proposed amendatory zoning ordinance, the persons most directly affected thereby shall have lost the opportunity to present their arguments for and against the proposed measure to the electorate in the manner provided by the ordinance. The answer to this contention is that all persons interested in the measure had to the moment of its adoption an opportunity to appear and oppose or advocate the passage of the proposed ordinance. So far as the adoption of the ordinance was concerned, no right was denied them. By the petition for a referendum the matter has been removed from the forum of the council to the forum of the electorate. The proponents and opponents are given all the privileges and rights to express themselves in an open election that a democracy or republican form of government can afford to its citizens upon any municipal or public affair. The ordinance procedure served its purpose, and, if there had been no referendum, the adoption of the ordinance would have been complete. It is clear that the constitutional right reserved by the people to submit legislative questions to a direct vote cannot be abridged by any procedural requirements of a superseded municipal ordinance dealing with the same subject of legislation.

[9] No weight can be given to respondents' cause by reason of the provisions of section 12, Ordinance No. 1130, N. S., which provide that under ordinary conditions a majority vote of the council is sufficient to effect a reclassification, but which further provide that, in the event of protest filed representing 20 per cent. or more of the area of the property included in the proposed reclassification, or 20 per cent. or more of the frontage of property other than that proposed to be reclassified, but within the area of protest, a reclassification may only be effected by a two-thirds vote of the council. Said provisions affect only legislation by ordinance, and have not the slighest bearing or influence upon direct legislation.

[10] Doubtless amendments to the zoning ordinance will continue to be made by action of the council without the intervention of the initiative or referendum, and we do not hold here that the ordinance may not be amended in the manner proposed by the city council. The policy of giving to the public generally the right to invoke the initiative and referendum in matters of zoning when the effect may be more acutely felt in a given district than by the community at large may be questioned as the wisest exercise of power in such cases. But this is a question of political policy to be determined by the people. We see no dangers sufficiently imminent to warrant this court in holding that it was the intention of the framers of the law to exclude the ordinance in question from the operation of the initiative and referendum.

We have been cited by respondents to three cases upon which they chiefly rely as authorities sustaining their contention. We refer to them in the order in which they were filed: Hopping v. Council of the City of Richmond, 170 Cal. 605, 150 P. 977; Chase v. Kalber, 28 Cal. App. 561, 153 P. 397; Starbuck v. City of Fullerton, 34 Cal. App. 683, 168 P. 583. The opinion in the first case above cited was written by former Justice Shaw. The question before the court in that case was whether a certain resolution adopted by the council of the city of Richmond accepting a proposition of the Harbor Center Land Company offering to donate the sum of $4,000 toward the cost of erection of a new city hall on a block of land given by said company to the city of Richmond, on condition that the city appropriate at least an equal amount for the construction of said city hall on said lot, and that, when completed, it should be occupied and used by the city as such hall, provided the deed was approved by the city attorney, was subject to referendum proceedings. The council held that it was not. The question was tested by the issuance of a writ of mandate. The court held that the resolution was a proper question to be submitted to the voters of the city. In his observations on the power of the referendum, Mr. Justice Shaw, in very guarded language, which is admittedly dicta, said:

> "There may be grounds for excluding from the operation of these powers legislative acts which are special and local in their nature and in which the entire body of citizens who shall exercise the power of referendum and initiative is not interested, such as resolutions to make local improvements and the like. This question is not before us, for the matters determined by the resolution are not local to any particular part of Richmond but apply generally to, and interest all in the entire city. * * * Inasmuch as the question will doubtless be brought before us in the future we desire to state here that we express no opinion on the subject and that what we have said must not be understood as having any bearing thereon."

There is nothing of an authoritative character in the case which aids respondents in the instant case.

[11] The other two cases cited are street improvement cases, which were local in character, and did not arise in cities governed by freeholders' charters. Street improvement laws must from the nature of the results to be attained operate upon districts or fractional parts of cities, and it was not within the contemplation or intention of the framers of the law that they should be treated as general comprehensive schemes. In none of the street improvement cases cited was the question of an amendment affecting an ordinance that operated upon all portions of the municipality and had been adopted in its entirety touched upon. In the instant case the zoning law from the first was treated by the council as a general, comprehensive plan, molded, fashioned, and balanced with reference to the city as a whole. In Chase v. Kalber, supra, Mr. Justice Hart, in a very learned and analytical discussion, points out the impracticable results that would follow if the street improvement acts were made subject to the operation of the initiative and referendum provisions of the law, and the serious hampering of the orderly administration of the public business that would follow. He arrives at the conclusion that, by reason of the chaos and disorder that would follow, it could not have been the intention of the people to apply the referendum and initiative to a law that was essentially local in character. No such argument can be applied to the situation confronting us. If the question was a doubtful one, we would be required by the rules of statutory construction to resolve the doubt in favor of giving effect to the constitutional prerogative. It is interesting to here note that the charter provisions of the city of Berkeley (article 14, § 93) impliedly exempt street improvement ordinances from the operation of the referendum.

There is no merit in the claim that the petition by which the referendum was sought to be invoked was not presented to the clerk and council in the time and manner provided by law. We have examined the stipulation of counsel, which sets forth all that was done by the representative of the petitioners in presenting the referendum petition, and are fully satisfied that respondents have no legal grounds upon which to base the claim that the petition was not properly and legally presented and offered for filing.

A peremptory writ of mandate will issue directing the city clerk of the city of Berkeley to indorse the date upon which the petition was presented to her, and to examine the same to ascertain whether it conforms with the requirements of the charter of the city of Berkeley, and, if found to conform to the provisions of said charter in such cases made and provided, and particularly to the provisions of article 14, § 93, and section 94, and the provisions of article 3 which affect the question, to file the same; and, further, directing the mayor and council of said city, if said petition shall be found to be legal and sufficient in all respects, to either repeal said Ordinance No. 1190, N. S., or submit the same to the vote of the electors of the city of Berkeley, as in section 93, article 14 provided, and to perform all other acts that may be meet and proper in the premises.

It is so ordered.

81 Cal. App. 381

PEOPLE v. BARGALA. (Cr. 961.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 17, 1927.)

1. Larceny 🔑68(1)—Question of guilt of grand larceny for stealing and carrying away telephone toll cable held for jury.

In prosecution for larceny of telephone toll cable, alleged to have been sold to junk dealer by defendant and another, question of defendant's guilt held for jury.

2. Criminal law 🔑1159(2)—Law of reasonable doubt does not apply to consideration of evidence on appeal.

Rule that evidence in criminal case must be such as to show guilt beyond reasonable doubt does not apply to consideration of case by appellate court after verdict of guilty.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yolo County; W. A. Anderson, Judge.

Harry Bargala was convicted of grand larceny, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Emanuel Hendricksen, of Sacramento, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. The defendant was convicted in the superior court of Yolo county, upon an information charging him with the crime of grand larceny, and he appeals to this court from the judgment of conviction and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The only point upon which the defendant relies for a reversal is that the evidence does not support the verdict.

[1] The information states that, on or about the 26th day of August, 1926, in the county of Yolo, the defendant stole and carried away certain personal property, to wit, 150 feet of "telephone toll cable, then and there of the value of $210, * * * and then and there the property of the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Company." A prior conviction of burglary of the second degree, a felony, in the superior court of Amador county, is also charged in the information. On his arraignment, the accused admitted the prior conviction charged in the information, and pleaded not guilty to the crime likewise charged against him.

As to the facts there is no dispute. It was shown that, in the month of August, 1926, the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Company, a corporation, was engaged in erecting or installing, as a part of its telegraph and telephone line between the cities of Sacramento and San Francisco, a telegraph and telephone cable at a point known as Mikon Tower, situated in Yolo county, a short distance from the city of Sacramento, and along and near the tracks of the Sacramento Northern Railroad Company. The cable is composed of a large number of wires, and is inclosed in a leather casing. On the 25th day of August, 1926, the cable at the point mentioned above had been put in place on the poles, and in the evening of that day was observed by one of the employees of the company, who was then passing that point on a train of the Sacramento Northern Railroad, to be in place. On the following morning (August 26th), about 9 o'clock, it was discovered by the employees of the telephone company engaged in constructing the cable that approximately 150 feet of the cable at the point above indicated had been removed from the poles and taken away. An investigation followed, with the result that the material composing that part of the cable which had been removed was found at the Acme Junk Company's establishment, at 1916 Twentieth street, Sacramento. The material consisted of 431 pounds of copper wire and 750 pounds of lead. M. Franzoni, buyer for said junk company, testified that, between the hours of 3 and 4 o'clock of the 26th day of August, 1926, the defendant and one Lon Yarnell appeared at the junk shop mentioned in a passenger or touring car; that, while the defendant remained in the car, Yarnell got out of the car, went to where the witness was then standing, and proposed to the latter the sale "of some copper wire and lead." Yarnell asked Franzoni what prices he was paying for such material, and the latter gave the former the prices he was paying. Yarnell agreed to the prices, and the copper wire and lead were then removed from the touring car in which Yarnell and defendant went to the junk shop, and was weighed. It had been cut into small pieces. Yarnell, defendant, and a man employed at the junk shop removed the copper wire and lead from the car. After the material was weighed and so found to weigh something over 1,100 pounds, Franzoni delivered to Yarnell a "ticket" entitling him to be paid at the office of the junk company the aggregate sum of $92.05. Franzoni testified that he had known defendant for some time prior to the date of the transaction in question by the name of Moore. As above intimated, the copper wire and the lead sold by Yarnell to the Acme Junk Company was identified by employees of the telephone company as the wire and the lead taken from the cable above mentioned.

It appears that Yarnell had not been apprehended down to the time of the trial of Bargala.

The defendant did not testify at the trial. After his arrest, however, he was interviewed relative to the larceny by one Lydon, a special agent of the Public Utilities Protective Bureau, whose business is that of investigating crimes committed against the properties of certain public utilities in this state, and in that interview, which was conducted by said agent in the presence of a detective of the Sacramento police department and a constable of Yolo county, the defendant made a statement as to the part he took in the transaction. Lydon testified that Bargala denied having been a party to the asportation of the cable, but admitted that he had been employed by one Jess Golightly on August 26, 1926, to haul, by means of his automobile, the material from a certain point on what is known as the Elkhorn road, in Yolo county, to the place of business of the Acme Junk Company, in Sacramento; that he was to receive from Golightly $25 for the service so performed; that, on the afternoon of the day named, accompanied by Golightly, he did haul the wire and lead from the Elkhorn road to said junk company's establishment in his passenger car; that, arriving at the junk house, Golightly negotiated the sale of the material to said company through Franzoni; that Golightly received from Franzoni a "ticket" for the total proceeds of the sale ($92.05), and that he (Golightly) handed the ticket to defendant, who thereupon went to the cashier's office of the junk company and presented it to the cashier, who delivered to him (defendant) the amount the ticket called for; that he (defendant) thereupon delivered to Golightly all the money but the sum of $25, which the latter agreed to pay defendant for his services in conveying the material to the junk company's place of business. Bargala stated to Lydon that he became acquainted with Golightly, who, it is practically admitted, is none other than the man known to Franzoni as Lon Yarnell, in the "can," meaning a county jail, wherein both were at the same time confined. He further likewise stated that, after the sale of the wire, etc., he went to the town of Broderick, Yolo county, from which place he immediately went to Stockton, where he took a room at the Elmhurst Rooming House. Lydon testified that on August 31, 1926, he went to Stockton and called at the Elmhurst Rooming House and that the register of said house contained the names of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Bargala and J. B. Yarnell, they having registered at the rooming house on August 27, 1926. Bargala and his wife were assigned on the register to Room No. 6 and Yarnell to Room No. 2.

The foregoing involves a synoptical statement of all the testimony received in the case. It is clear from the circumstances, as the evidence revealed them, that we cannot say, as a matter of law, that the verdict is not sufficiently supported. The situation, briefly recapitulated, is this: That the defendant and Yarnell or Golightly, as the defendent referred to him, were prior to the time that the property was stolen, personal acquaintances, they having first met each other when both were at the same time confined in a county jail; that defendant, as the jury were warranted in inferring from the fact that he did not use a truck for the purpose, was not in the trucking business, but, for the purpose of conveying the stolen property to the junk company's place of business, used a passenger or touring car; that to Yarnell was personally delivered the voucher or ticket authorizing the cashier of the junk company to pay the amount for which the property was sold, but, for some reason unaccounted for, he gave the voucher or ticket to defendant to present to the cashier and receive the money thereon, and that defendant did personally receive the cash called for by the voucher; that defendant, according to his own admission, on the day following that of the completion of the transaction, went to the city of Stockton and there took a room at a rooming house; that Yarnell registered at the same rooming house at the same time, from which the jury could well have inferred, and it may be assumed did conclude, that the two men went to Stockton together. All these were significant circumstances, and, unexplained, as they were not so explained, upon some satisfactory hypothesis consistent with the innocence of the accused, may justly be regarded, as probably the jury so regarded them, as of sufficient incriminatory force to persuade to the conviction, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant was a party to the asportation of the property. The jury were not required to accept as verity that part of the defendant's statement to Lydon that he received but $25 of the total sum for which the property was sold. That part of the statement would, of course, be consistent with the defendant's claim that he had nothing to do with and had no knowledge of the act or fact that the property was stolen and that the extent of his connection with the transaction was the fact that he was merely employed to haul the property to the junk house. Naturally (the jury could have reasoned) the defendant, to support his defense, would, even though it were not true, fix the amount received by him at much less than one-half the total amount for which the property was sold, and, from the circumstances showing his acts and conduct with respect to the transaction, the jury could have reached the conclusion, and, without relying upon their imagination or upon suspicion, that the defendant received a greater sum than $25 from the proceeds of the sale. This circumstance we have particularly noticed, because the counsel for the defendant, in his brief as well as in his oral argument, gives and gave it special emphasis as in the establishment of the proposition that the defendant would have received a much larger sum than $25 out of the proceeds of the sale of the property had he really been a particeps criminis in the larceny.

[2] Counsel cites several cases in which the salutary and time-honored rule is repeated that, to justify the conviction of a party charged with the commission of a public offense, the evidence must be such as to show his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. That rule of law, however, is one which must be addressed to and applied by the jury trying the accused in their consideration of the evidence, and is not pertinent in the consideration of the case by the courts of appeal. The latter courts never apply the rule of reasonable doubt in their consideration of the evidentiary phases of criminal cases on appeal, although they are legally at liberty to hold, where the record justifies or requires it, that, as a matter of law, the evidence in a given case is insufficient to uphold the verdict. As we have declared, we do not feel that we are justified in holding, as a matter of law, that the evidence is insufficient to uphold the verdict in the instant case.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. COSTA. (Cr. 1329.)

1. Criminal law ⚷1036(1)—Admissibility of confession cannot first be raised on appeal.

Where no objection is made to introduction of confession, nor motion to strike it out, question of its admissibility cannot be raised on appeal.

2. Assault and battery ⚷92—Evidence held to sustain conviction of assault with deadly weapon.

Conviction of assault with a deadly weapon held sustained by evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Lincoln S. Church, Judge.

Annibal Costa was convicted of assault with a deadly weapon, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Ernest S. Leslie and Frank W. Creeley, both of Oakland, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Wm. F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

KNIGHT, J. The defendant, Annibal Costa, and one Jack Sanders, were charged jointly with the crime of an assault with a deadly weapon, alleged to have been committed upon the person of James M. Page. Sanders entered a plea of guilty, but Costa stood trial, was found guilty as charged, and has appealed from the judgment of conviction and the order denying his motion for new trial.

Appellant's conviction was based upon evidence showing that he had aided and abetted in the commission of the crime. Part of such evidence consisted of incriminating admissions, amounting to a confession of guilt, made by him to Thomas F. Gallagher, a police inspector, the day following the assault, and related to the jury by Gallagher, after preliminary proof had been adduced to the effect that the same were made freely and voluntarily, without previous inducement, promise of leniency, and not by reason of duress, intimidation, or threats. As grounds for reversal, appellant contends that, despite the preliminary proof mentioned, other evidence was adduced showing that said admissions were obtained from him while he was suffering from the effects of corporal punishment inflicted upon him the day before by J. G. Garbutt, the assistant superintendent of the institution wherein the assault occurred, and that therefore said admissions were not freely and voluntarily made, and should have been excluded.

The crime was committed in the Alameda County Detention Home, appellant and Sanders, with other juvenile offenders, being at the time confined therein. Page was superintendent of the home, and was assaulted when he entered the corridor of the institution preparatory to giving the inmates thereof their noonday meal, being severely beaten on the head and hands by Sanders with an iron strap hinge which had been wrenched from a bunk in appellant's cell. Before entering the corridor, Page requested the inmates to go to their cells, which adjoined the corridor. Believing they had done so, he sought to lock the cells from without by working a lever, and thereupon entered the corridor. As he passed through the entrance gate, Sanders, who was concealed near by, struck Page repeatedly with said iron strap hinge, exclaiming, "Lay down, or I will murder you." Although bleeding profusely, Page called for help, and Garbutt came to his rescue. Sanders at that time was working the lever to open the cells, and appellant was just coming out of his cell, but was ordered back by Garbutt.

Thereupon Garbutt, after removing the iron strap hinge with which the assault was made from Sanders' hip pocket, assisted Page into the visitors' room, where first aid was rendered. Shortly afterwards Page and Garbutt returned to the corridor for the purpose, apparently, of locking Sanders in his cell and of searching the place for dangerous weapons. Garbutt testified that, while the search was being made, violence was used on both Sanders and appellant; but he further testified, in justification of the use of such violence on appellant (and his testimony in this regard was not disputed by appellant), that appellant was at the time attempting to injure himself by slashing his wrist with a piece of broken glass; that after calling upon him to desist, which he refused to do, and having attempted unsuccessfully to restrain him physically from carrying out his purpose, he struck appellant on the chin with his fist, rendering him unconscious, and thereupon took the piece of glass away from him.

The next day, the evidence shows, appellant, in the presence of Sanders, Page, and one Flynn, admitted to Inspector Gallagher, in answer to questions propounded by the latter, that he had planned the assault with Sanders the day before it was executed, after having heard some of the other boys discuss a plan to escape; that in pursuance of said plan they forced the two iron bars from the bunk in his cell, and it was agreed that the next day Sanders should strike Page with one of said bars, and that, if Page fell near appellant's cell, appellant would strike him with the other bar; but that appellant was unable to carry out his part of the plan, because Page did not fall when struck by Sanders, and Sanders was unable to get the keys to release appellant.

Further evidence was offered to the effect that Sanders, while being placed in his cell after the assault, and within the hearing of appellant, exclaimed, "If it hadn't been for Costa, this never would have happened; he egged me on to it;" also, "He is the cause of getting me into all this trouble;" and at said interview with Inspector Gallagher the day following, and in the presence of appellant, Sanders substantiated most of appellant's inculpatory statements, and in addition declared that while, concealed over the door leading into the corridor, waiting for Page to enter, he said to appellant that he (Sanders) did not have the nerve to hit Page, and that appellant replied, "Go ahead and bean him;" at the same time urging Sanders to strike Page with one of the larger iron hinges, which had a bolt in it; but Sanders feared that by doing so he might kill Page. Appellant made no reply to any of these accusatory statements at the time the same were made.

Appellant, testifying in his own behalf, denied having planned with Sanders the attempted escape, but admitted having made most of the incriminating statements attributed to him by Inspector Gallagher, claiming, however, that he merely answered Gallagher's questions with a convenient "yes" or "no," because, as he explained it, he was afraid of being beaten up more.

[1] Even assuming that it could be held as a matter of law that, despite the undisputed testimony of Garbutt as to his justification for striking appellant, the incriminating admissions mentioned were made under circumstances indicating intimidation, the record discloses that appellant made no objections whatever to the introduction of any part of the testimony now complained of, nor was any motion made in his behalf to strike it out. It must therefore be held, in accordance with the well-established rule, that in the absence of such objection the trial court was not called upon to rule upon the admissibility of said admissions, and the same having been received without objection, the admissibility thereof cannot now be questioned. People v. Matthew, 194 Cal. 273, 228 P. 424; People v. Haines, 64 Cal. App. 628, 222 P. 183; People v. Brown, 71 Cal. App. 181, 235 P. 72; People v. Baird, 105 Cal. 126, 38 P. 633. The cases cited by appellant in support of his contention are not in point, for the reason that in each of them objections were made to the introduction of the evidence sought to be excluded.

[2] The foregoing evidence being sufficient in our opinion to support the verdict, and finding no error in the record, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

3. Mortgages 🔑605—Payment of redemption money to county clerk instead of purchaser or elisor held ineffective under statute (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 702, 704; Civ. Code, § 1489).

Payment of redemption money to county clerk in lieu of payment to purchaser at foreclosure sale or elisor who made sale pursuant to direction of court held ineffective under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 702, 704, particularly where there was no finding that any effort was made to find either purchaser or elisor; Civ. Code, § 1489, being inapplicable.

4. Quieting title 🔑43—Where plaintiff relied on ineffective redemption from foreclosure sale, evidence showing tender of redemption money to attorney for purchaser held unavailing, in absence of allegation or finding of such tender.

Where plaintiff, in suit to quiet title to land, relied on redemption of property from mortgage foreclosure sale, which was ineffectual for want of proper payment of redemption money to purchaser or elisor, held evidence tending to show a tender to attorney in fact for purchaser could not avail plaintiff, in absence of any allegation or finding that such tender was made.

In action to quiet title, wherein plaintiff relied on redemption from mortgage foreclosure sale, which was ineffective for want of proper payment to purchaser or elisor, allegation and finding to effect that plaintiff did not know who was elisor held wholly immaterial, where it was a matter of record in foreclosure proceedings.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Wm. D. Dehy, Judge.

Action to quiet title by Kathryn W. Hutton against William Chapman and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

See, also, 197 Cal. 288, 240 P. 764.

Chas. Lantz, W. P. Hyatt, and F. C. Huber, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Chas. S. Conner, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The plaintiff brought this action to quiet her title to certain real estate. The complaint contains the usual allegations in such an action, and the answer denies the same. The court found such allegations to be true. The complaint further alleges that the property in dispute was sold under a decree foreclosing a mortgage thereon given by plaintiff's grantor, the judgment debtor in the foreclosure suit, and that, during the period allowed by law for the redemption of the property, "the plaintiff herein became seized and possessed of the title to said real estate." The remaining parts of the complaint material to the questions presented by this appeal, also denied by the answer, are substantially in the language of the following findings made by the court:

"The court finds that it is true that, prior to the expiration of the time for redemption, the plaintiff herein became seized and possessed of the title to said real estate, and was desirous of redeeming said real estate from the lien of said mortgage and the said judgment and decree and the said sale. That she was ignorant of, and not informed of, the appointment of said Garroway as elisor, and did not know that a sale had been made by him as elisor, and did, on the 25th day of November, 1922, apply to Messrs. Charles Lantz, W. P. Hyatt, and F. C. Huber, attorneys for said William Chapman, at their office at 314 Wilcox building, city of Los Angeles, to make the said redemption. That for the purpose of such redemption, and that the plaintiff herein might receive a certificate of redemption, it was agreed by and between Charles S. Conner, attorney for the plaintiff herein, and the attorneys for said William Chapman, aforesaid, at their office aforesaid, that the attorney for the plaintiff, Kathryn W. Hutton, and the defendant William Chapman should meet on the 27th day of November, 1922, at the office of the sheriff of said Los Angeles county in the city of Los Angeles, and perfect said redemption, and the plaintiff, by and through her said attorney, Charles S. Conner, at the time agreed upon, and at the office of said sheriff, as agreed upon, appeared for the purpose of said redemption, but the attorney for the said defendant William Chapman did not appear as agreed or at all, and the plaintiff, acting by and through her attorney, duly authorized thereunto the said Charles S. Conner, and being ignorant as to the whereabouts of the said Garroway, applied to this honorable court, to wit, Frank R. Willis, judge thereof, as to how and in what manner such redemption might be made, and the said court, on the 27th day of November, 1922, made and entered its order of redemption in said cause No. B44611 in the words and figures, following, to wit:

" 'Good cause being shown, it is ordered that the entered amount of money in the case necessary for the redemption be paid by Kathryn W. Hutton as successor in interest to certain defendants herein, and be paid to the county clerk of this county in lieu of the payment to the purchaser or the elisor who made the said sale.

"'[Signed] Frank R. Willis, Judge.'

"That, pursuant to the said order and the provisions thereof, the plaintiff herein did deposit and paid to the clerk of said court the sum of $2,000 for the use and benefit of said William Chapman in the redemption of said real estate and the whole thereof sold as aforesaid. That the sum of $2,000 was sufficient and more than sufficient, to redeem the said property from said sale, and that, by reason of such payment, the plaintiff herein claims the right to have the title of said real estate and the whole thereof quieted in her favor and against the defendants."

[1] The 27th day of November, 1922, was the last day of the period allowed for redemption. The deposit with the clerk was made in the early afternoon of that day. The court found that it is by reason of the payment to the clerk that "the plaintiff herein claims the right to have the title of said real estate and the whole thereof quieted in her favor." It follows that, unless such payment constituted a redemption of the property the judgment cannot be affirmed. The finding to the effect that the plaintiff was the owner of the property at the time the action was commenced is controlled and qualified by the specific findings setting forth her source and chain of title. Robinson v. City of Glendale, 182 Cal. 211, 214, 187 P. 741; Kidwell v. Ketler, 146 Cal. 12, 17, 79 P. 514; Gruwell v. Seybolt, 82 Cal. 7, 9, 22 P. 938; Turner v. White, 73 Cal. 299, 300, 14 P. 794.

[2, 3] The right and the procedure to redeem property sold under execution are statutory. Bangham v. Michael, 179 Cal. 390, 177 P. 161. Section 702 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that a judgment debtor may redeem property sold under execution at any time within twelve months after the sale "on paying the purchaser the amount of his purchase," with interest, etc. Section 704 provides:

> "The payments mentioned in the last two sections may be made to the purchaser or redemptioner, or for him, to the officer who made the sale. * * * A tender of the money is equivalent to payment."

[4, 5] There is evidence tending to show that a tender of the amount due was made to the attorney in fact of the purchaser, but the complaint does not allege, and the court did not find, that such a tender was made, and the evidence bearing upon the question is sharply conflicting. No consideration, therefore, can be given to such evidence on this appeal. There was neither allegation nor proof of fraud, mistake, or other circumstance of equitable cognizance. The allegation and the finding to the effect that the plaintiff did not know of the appointment of Garroway as elisor is wholly immaterial, because it was readily ascertainable, being a matter of record in the foreclosure proceedings, as was also the fact that the property had been sold. The evidence shows without conflict that plaintiff's attorney knew that the property had been sold. This is shown by the finding that plaintiff applied to the purchaser's attorneys on the 25th of November, 1922, "to make the said redemption." The court did not find that any tender of payment or offer to redeem was made to such attorneys. There is no finding that the plaintiff made any effort to find either the purchaser or the elisor in order to redeem the property. Of course, circumstances may be such in a given case as to permit the redemption of property by tendering or making payment in a manner other than that provided by section 704. Bunting v. Haskell, 152 Cal. 426, 430, 93 P. 110. Under proper circumstances the rule prescribed by section 1489 of the Civil Code may be controlling. That section provides:

> "In the absence of an express provision to the contrary, an offer of performance may be made, at the option of the debtor: 1. At any place appointed by the creditor; or, 2. Wherever the person to whom the offer ought to be made can be found; or, 3. If such person cannot, with reasonable diligence, be found within this state, and within a reasonable distance from his residence or place of business, or if he evades the debtor, then at his residence or place of business, if the same can, with reasonable diligence, be found within the state; or, 4. If this cannot be done, then at any place within this state."

It is clear, however, that the facts alleged and found by the court do not bring this case under such rule.

The judgment is reversed.

OLYMPIC AUDITORIUM, Inc., et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (Civ. 5499.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Feb. 10, 1927.)

1. Landlord and tenant 🔑108(1)—Court has discretion to grant or deny relief against forfeiture of lease (Code Civ. Proc. § 1179).

Granting of application, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1179, for relief against forfeiture of lease is discretionary with court.

2. Landlord and tenant 🔑108(1)—Finding that forfeiture of lease would cause hardship does not necessarily require granting of relief (Code Civ. Proc. § 1179).

In application, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1179, for relief against forfeiture of lease, finding that forfeiture would result in hardship does not necessarily require granting of relief within court's discretion.

3. Prohibition 🔑10(2)—Court, erroneously imposing improper conditions in granting relief against forfeiture of lease, does not exceed jurisdiction so as to warrant interference by prohibition (Code Civ. Proc. § 1179).

Court, in exercising discretion, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1179, and imposing conditions in granting relief against forfeiture of lease, may measure equities of parties and erroneous listing by chancellor of equities determining exercise of his discretion is mere error, not exercise of forbidden jurisdiction, to control which writ of prohibition will not issue.

4. Prohibition 🔑3(3)—Propriety of court's exercise of discretion in granting relief against forfeiture of lease on conditions may be reviewed on appeal, not by prohibition (Code Civ. Proc. § 1179).

Where application, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1179, for relief against forfeiture of lease was granted on conditions which were improper, question may be reviewed on appeal, and not by prohibition.

5. Landlord and tenant 🔑108(1)—Performance of obligations mentioned in statute must be required for granting relief against forfeiture of lease, but relief is not limited to such conditions (Code Civ. Proc. § 1179).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1179, authorizing relief against forfeiture of lease, chancellor may impose such conditions as he deems proper in exercising discretion, but may never grant relief without requiring performance of obligations enumerated in statute as payment of rent and performance of covenants, as far as practical.

6. Prohibition 🔑10(1), 11—Writ of prohibition issues only to halt proceedings in excess of jurisdiction, not to correct error.

Writ of prohibition will not issue to correct error, but only to halt proceedings involved in excessive exercise of jurisdiction.

Application by the Olympic Auditorium, Inc., and another for a writ of prohibition to be directed against the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Hon. Hartley Shaw, Judge thereof, and others. Writ denied.

Montgomery, Stick, Moerdyke & Gibson, of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

Hunsaker, Britt & Cosgrove and Robert B. Murphey, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WORKS, P. J. Olympic Auditorium, a corporation, was defendant in an action of unlawful detainer, the relief demanded by the plaintiff therein being based solely upon the failure of the defendant to pay installments of rent. Judgment went for plaintiffs, whereupon the defendant, acting under the terms of section 1179 of the Code of Civil Procedure, instituted a proceeding for relief from the forfeiture of lease declared in the judgment. Such steps were taken in the proceeding that respondent court made its order granting the application upon the performance of certain conditions by the applicant. The order recited that if the conditions were not performed within a certain time a further order of the court would deny the application. The conditions imposed were many. Specifically, they were not limited to requirements that the applicant should pay the installments of rent due upon the property involved in the application and that it should perform other covenants or conditions named in the lease. The applicant and its receiver, deeming the imposition of the conditions to be beyond the jurisdiction of respondent court, applied to this court for the writ of prohibition, praying that respondent court be prevented from making its further order as threatened, and we issued the alternative writ. The return of respondents is by general demurrer to the petition for the writ.

Section 1179 of the Code of Civil Procedure, after providing for the relief contemplated thereby "in case of hardship," and after prescribing the procedure to be followed whenever the relief is asked for, reads:

> "In no case shall the application be granted except on condition that full payment of rent due, or full performance of conditions or covenants stipulated, so far as the same is practicable, be made."

[1, 2] Undoubtedly, the granting of relief, under section 1179, is discretionary in the court to which an application for the relief is made (Matthews v. Digges, 45 Cal. App. 561, 188 P. 283), and, of course, the court has discretion either to grant or to deny. This is necessarily so upon the very assertion that the court possesses a discretion under the section. It seems manifest, too, that the power of a court to exercise its discretion, either in favor of the applicant or against him, cannot terminate with a finding that in a given instance there is presented "a case of hardship" as to the applicant. After it has been determined that a forfeiture would operate as a hardship upon an applicant—and such a finding naturally will be made in a large percentage of cases—there would seem in the very nature of things to remain in many instances a variety of reasons why the relief should not be granted in the exercise of a sound discretion. To say that the relief must be granted upon a finding that there is a "case of hardship" as to the applicant would seem, upon just principles to strangle the discretionary power at the very inception of its exercise. The cases, in effect, so decide. See Lundin v. Schoeffel, 167 Mass. 465, 45 N. E. 933. The doctrine of this case is approved, practically, in Knight v. Black, 19 Cal. App. 518, 126 P. 512, an adjudication which, it is true did not spring from an application for relief, under section 1179, but which goes upon the theory that the action of unlawful detainer, involving the possible declaration of a forfeiture, as it does, is to proceed and is to be determined upon equitable considerations. This theory is established by many cases, only one more of which (Schubert v. Lowe, 193 Cal. 291, 223 P. 550) need be cited.

[3] It is manifest, then, that a court to which application is made for relief, under section 1179, may measure equity against equity—may, for example, consider, even if a forfeiture will work a hardship upon the applicant for relief, whether a refusal to permit the declaration of forfeiture to stand will not operate as a greater hardship upon the opposing party. And upon these warring considerations the court will exercise its discretion and will either grant or refuse the application, as a just balancing of the opposing equities may seem to require. If the chancellor shall go wrong in listing the equities which he deems to be proper aids to the final exercise of his discretion to grant or refuse, what is the nature of his misdeed? Does he commit mere error, or does he exercise a forbidden jurisdiction? It must be the former. He exercises jurisdiction in granting or refusing relief. In taking into consideration the various equities which are to impel him to grant or refuse, he proceeds with the same effect as the trier of fact who rules out or rules in evidence offered for the purpose of aiding him to arrive at judgment or decree. The judge who excludes proper evidence or admits improper evidence is in a sea of error, but he is guilty of no excess of jurisdiction.

[4] Doubtless, in the present instance, the respondent judge might have refused the application for relief, under section 1179, in the light of the very considerations upon which he determined to grant it upon condition—this with complete immunity from the charge that he had exceeded his jurisdiction in measuring the equities between the parties or in resolving upon them to decree a refusal. If he had refused the application he might possibly have abused his discretion—might, in effect, have committed what would be the equivalent of reversible error—but nothing more. Can the situation be different because he saw fit to resolve his discretion toward a grant of the application, but upon condition? It is obvious to us that it cannot. If he has imposed conditions which are improper, has considered equities which were not a proper aid to the exercise of the discretion reposed in him, these matters may be dealt with upon appeal and the propriety or impropriety of his exercise of discretion be determined accordingly.

[5] It is contended by petitioners that the only conditions which respondent court could impose in granting their application for relief are those mentioned in section 1179. Upon what we have said above, in truth, from the language of the section itself, we are bound to remark that the enactment does not operate to limit the conditions which may be imposed in granting relief under it. The chancellor may impose such conditions as in equity are proper aids to the exercise of his discretion, but he may never grant relief without requiring the performance of the obligations mentioned in the section. We need not pause to inquire whether a failure to impose these specified conditions would be mere error or whether it would be an excess of jurisdiction.

[6] It is too well settled to require a citation of authority for the statement that the writ of prohibition will not issue to correct error, but only to halt proceedings involved in the excessive exercise of jurisdiction.

Demurrer sustained. The alternative writ of prohibition is vacated and a peremptory writ is refused.

Action by Hannah T. Sherman against George W. Sherman. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Duke Stone, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

C. N. Carns, of Lankershim, and Turnbull, Heffron & Kelley and Rupert B. Turnbull, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment in favor of plaintiff in a suit for a divorce. Two grounds for divorce were alleged in the complaint against defendant—one for the willful desertion of plaintiff by defendant, and the other for his willful neglect of plaintiff.

[1, 2] It is contended by appellant that the trial court erred in admitting a judgment roll in a former suit for maintenance between the same parties by which the original desertion by defendant of plaintiff was fixed as of date June 14, 1922, and in holding "that said judgment roll was res adjudicata on the question of defendant's alleged desertion."

No argument is presented, nor are authorities cited by appellant to sustain his position in respect to such question raised by him; consequently it may be assumed that the point is abandoned. However, the maintenance action was between the same parties as were litigants in the instant case; was apparently before a court of competent jurisdiction, and which court decided a matter or point which was directly in controversy in the divorce suit, and which facts, prima facie at least, are sufficient to bring the matter within the rule as to the conclusiveness of the judgment in the maintenance action as affecting the identical issue in the divorce suit. In addition thereto, the record shows that the only point decided by the trial court in the divorce suit, with reference to the maintenance action, was that the desertion by defendant of plaintiff was established as beginning on the same date as theretofore had been determined by the court and set forth in the judgment in the maintenance action.

[3] Appellant also complains that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the finding that the desertion of plaintiff by defendant was continuous for one year next after the date of the original desertion as determined by the judgment in the maintenance action. Although the evidence was conflicting, it sufficiently established the facts that on a stated date defendant left the home occupied by the parties, at which time he said that he was "done with the whole family"; that thereupon he remained away from his home and plaintiff for a period of at least a week, during which time plaintiff, who was a woman of upwards of 71 years of age and in ill health, had to eat only that which was supplied by her son; that the home of the parties was on a chicken ranch, and plaintiff was unable to care either for herself, her home, or the chickens; that in such circumstances she sold the chickens and went to live with her daughter, with whom she resided continuously for more than one year next ensuing and thereafter and until the date of the trial, without in the meantime ever having heard from defendant; that, from the time plaintiff left the home theretofore occupied by herself and defendant until the date of the trial, no offer in good faith on the part of defendant was ever made by him, or by any one in his behalf, to provide for plaintiff a home of any kind or description. If, as must be assumed from the judgment rendered in the maintenance action, the desertion of plaintiff by defendant was established as of a certain date, the additional facts heretofore stated, taken in connection with the original desertion, would, we think, constitute sufficient grounds for the conclusion of law that the desertion of plaintiff by defendant was complete within the terms of the statute and warranted the judgment by the trial court from which the appeal is taken.

[4] Prejudicial error is also specified by appellant in that he contends that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the finding by the trial court that defendant had willfully neglected to provide for plaintiff the common necessities of life for one year prior to the filing of her action. But, in view of the conclusion by this court that the judgment should be affirmed on the ground of the willful desertion of plaintiff by defendant, it becomes unnecessary to devote attention to the count on willful neglect.

[5] Appellant presents the further points that defendant should have been granted a decree of divorce on his cross-complaint, or at any rate that the evidence "shows recrimi-

With reference to such matters, it need only be said that the entire evidence in this action was before the judge of the trial court, and that it was his exclusive province to determine where lay the truth. His findings of fact on the evidence were entirely against the contention of defendant. They are conclusive on this court.

EMIGH v. WOOD. (Civ. 5590.)

1. Appeal and error 🔑1050(2)—Admission of correspondence wholly irrelevant to issues held harmless.

Admission, in action for car which plaintiff had left with defendant for repairs, of correspondence which had passed between officers in locating car after it had been stolen from defendant's garage, if error, held without prejudice, subject-matter of correspondence being so irrelevant to issues tried that it could not have affected rights of parties.

2. Trial 🔑397(3)—Findings which would have been outside the issues held properly not made.

Where the pleadings, in action of claim and delivery for a car left by plaintiff with defendant for repairs and stolen from his garage, contained no allegations on the subjects of repossession of the car by plaintiff and the terms of the bailment, held that findings thereon, which, if made, would have been outside the issues, were properly not made.

3. Appeal and error 🔑1011(1) — Finding on conflicting evidence is conclusive on appeal.

Trial court's finding, being on conflicting evidence, cannot be disturbed on appeal.

4. Appeal and error 🔑1071(6)—Omission to find one demand was immaterial, where another, all that was necessary, was found.

Omission to find a demand by plaintiff on a certain day was immaterial, a demand by him on the next day, all that was necessary, being found.

5. Bailment 🔑14(1) — Bailee of automobile for repairs was not liable, where stolen without negligence on his part (Civ. Code, § 1852).

That an automobile, which was left by plaintiff with defendant for repairs, was stolen from defendant's possession without any negligence on his part is complete defense to action for its recovery in view of Civ. Code, § 1852.

6. Bailment 🔑23—In absence of special contract, bailee of automobile for repairs need not redeliver, when located, after being stolen without negligence.

Unless there be special contract for redelivery, one with whom automobile was left for repairs is under no duty to send for it or otherwise bring it to owner's possession, where it is located after being stolen from bailee's possession without negligence on his part.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

Action by Harry A. Emigh against Vincent E. Wood, doing business under name of the Cadillac Motor Sales Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Coleman E. Stewart, of Santa Barbara, for appellant.

Griffith & Thornburgh and Wm. G. Griffith, all of Santa Barbara, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action in claim and delivery against the defendant. The defendant answered, and a trial was had before the court sitting without a jury. The trial court made findings in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiff has appealed under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

On the morning of the 10th day of August, 1923, the plaintiff took his automobile to the defendant's garage and left it there for the purpose of having some minor repairs made. He testified that during the afternoon of that day he called for his car and was told that the work was not completed. During the night intervening between August 10th and August 11th the garage was burglarized and the car was stolen. On the 11th day of August the plaintiff was promptly informed that the car had been stolen and the circumstances surrounding the theft. The other facts will appear as we proceed.

[1] The trial court, over the objection of the appellant, received in evidence the correspondence that had passed between the peace officers in locating the automobile after it had been stolen. The appellant earnestly contends that the ruling was error. Conceding that it was, the error was without prejudice as the subject-matter of the correspondence was so irrelevant to the issues being tried that it could not in any way have affected the rights of the parties.

[2] The appellant contends that the trial court erred in failing to make a finding on the subject of the repossession of said automobile by the plaintiff, and that it failed to make a finding regarding the terms of the bailment between the plaintiff and the defendant. The pleadings contained no allegations on those subjects, and, if such findings had been made, they would have been outside of the issues.

supported his allegation by his own testimony. In the face of that conflict, this court has no power to disturb the finding which the trial court made. Furthermore, the point is immaterial when considered in connection with other facts. The plaintiff testified that he made another demand on August 11, 1923. The trial court found that fact in favor of the plaintiff. That finding was sufficient for all of the purposes of the case. The plaintiff was not bound to make two demands.

[5] Finally, the appellant contends that the trial court erred in making any findings respecting the negligence of the defendant. The point is without merit. We appreciate that, according to the appellant's theory of the case, the point is of the utmost importance, but we are unable to adopt that theory. To justify his failure to deliver, the defendant in his answer pleaded facts showing that the automobile had been stolen from his possession, and that it was so stolen without any negligence on his part. If true, such facts constituted a complete defense. Civ. Code, § 1852; 4 Cal. Jur. 24, § 14; Elliott on Bailments, §§ 40 and 80; Tatro v. Baker-Fisk-Hugill Co., 215 Mich. 623, 184 N. W. 449; Galowitz v. Magner, 208 App. Div. 6, 203 N. Y. S. 421. Furthermore, the contention which appellant now makes was never presented to the trial court. The plaintiff did not file any demurrer to or make any motion to strike out any parts of the defendant's answer. On the trial of the case all of the evidence regarding the care exercised by the defendant came in, without any objection being interposed thereto. In passing, it should be stated that the appellant in his opening brief and in his closing brief states that he is not attacking the finding as being unsupported by the evidence, but that he is contending that the subject-matter of the finding is irrelevant and immaterial.

[6] The appellant's theory was to the effect that the defendant was, in all events, bound to redeliver the car. In this behalf the appellant relies on the statement:

> "Where the manner of redelivery or delivery over is specified, the bailee must comply strictly therewith or be liable in the event of any loss." (Italics ours.) 6 C. J. 1142, note 59.

The vice of appellant's position is in the assumption that in this case there was any special contract between the parties regarding the redelivery. The record is wholly silent. It is not to be controverted but what the defendant could have made a contract in which he would have been responsible in all events. 4 Cal. Jur. 24, § 14. But the record does not disclose that he did so, and his liability therefore is the liability imposed by law—no less and no more. When it transpired that the car had been stolen, it remained to be ascertained whether it was stolen through the negligence of the defendant. If, under the facts as pleaded, he had exercised ordinary care, he was not liable. When thereafter the car was located, no new liability arose which imposed on the defendant the duty of sending for the car or otherwise bringing it to the possession of the appellant.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

1. Infants 🔑68—Superior court must suspend criminal proceeding against minor on being notified he is under 18 and certify minor to juvenile court (Juvenile Court Act, §§ 4[d], 6).

Under Juvenile Court Act (St. 1915, pp. 1228, 1229), §§ 4(d), 6, where age of minor defendant is raised for first time in superior court, court is required to suspend proceeding and certify minor who is under 18 years to juvenile court; statute not being limited to any particular court, and therefore including superior as well as other courts.

2. Habeas corpus 🔑92(1)—Question in habeas corpus is whether court exceeded jurisdiction in rendering judgment under which petitioner is detained.

In hearing on writ of habeas corpus, court of appeals considers whether petitioner is illegally detained, and, where held under judgment of superior court, question is whether court exceeded jurisdiction in giving judgment.

3. Criminal law 🔑1144(5)—Proceedings in superior court are presumed regular and within court's jurisdiction unless record affirmatively shows contrary.

Proceedings in superior court, which is court of general jurisdiction, are presumed to have been regular and within court's jurisdiction unless record affirmatively shows that proceedings were not regular.

4. Courts 🔑39—Court may determine existence of jurisdictional facts, though ousting itself from further jurisdiction, and determination for jurisdiction, though erroneous, is binding against collateral attack.

Where jurisdiction of court depends on existence of certain facts, court has jurisdiction to determine those facts, though it may oust itself of further jurisdiction to proceed in case, and, where facts are determined in favor of existence of jurisdiction, determination, though erroneous, is binding against collateral attack.

5. Infants 🔑68—Statutory right of minor under 18 to have prosecution first submitted to juvenile court relates to jurisdiction of person and may be waived (Juvenile Court Act, §§ 4[d], 6).

Right of minor under 18 years to have prosecution first submitted to juvenile court, as provided by Juvenile Court Act (St. 1915, pp. 1228, 1229), §§ 4(d), 6, relates to jurisdiction of person and not subject-matter and may be waived.

6. Habeas corpus ⚷27—Infants ⚷68—Failure of superior court, knowing defendant was under 18, to submit case to juvenile court held jurisdictional defect, entitling minor to discharge on habeas corpus (Juvenile Court Act, §§ 4[d], 6).

Where defendant under 18 years, prosecuted in superior court, asserted right to have case first submitted to juvenile court by suggestion to superior court as to his age, violation of Juvenile Court Act (St. 1915, pp. 1228, 1229), §§ 4(d), 6, by conviction, without first determining whether case should be sent to juvenile court, was jurisdictional error and entitled minor to writ of habeas corpus discharging him from custody of prison warden.

Habeas corpus by Joseph Tassey, alias James Troutman, against the Warden of San Quentin Prison. Writ granted.

Valla E. Parkinson, of Sacramento, for petitioner.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Wm. F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

KOFORD, P. J. Petitioner was sentenced to confinement in the state prison at San Quentin upon plea of guilty to the crime of robbery committed October 11, 1926. Petitioner is a minor of the age of 15 years and under 16 years. At the time he appeared before the superior court he made known to the court his age, but the court nevertheless proceeded with the case as though he were an adult, without determining the defendant's age and without the defendant's offense having been previously submitted to the juvenile court.

[1] Apparently the petitioner passed through the justice's court without the provisions of section 6 of the Juvenile Court Law (St. 1915, p. 1229) being invoked. This section would require the magistrate to suspend the proceedings and certify the minor, being under 18 years, to the juvenile court. There is no similar section of the act prescribing what the procedure shall be in case the question of age is first raised in the superior court instead of the justice's court, but in such case it would seem to us proper that the superior court follow substantially the same procedure as provided for justices' courts in section 6. It is provided in section 4(d) of this act as follows:

> "No person under the age of eighteen years * * * shall be prosecuted for crime until the matter has first been submitted to the juvenile court by petition as hereinbefore provided, or by certificate of the lower court as hereinafter provided."

This section is not limited to a prosecution for crime in any particular court, and therefore includes the superior court as well as other courts.

[2, 3] The conviction in this case is therefore in violation of the provisions of section 4(d). The defendant did not appeal, however, from the judgment and sentence. The matter is brought to our attention only on a writ of habeas corpus. Upon this hearing the court considers whether the petitioner is illegally detained, and it appearing that he is held under a judgment of the superior court, the question is substantially whether the court exceeded its jurisdiction in giving that judgment. The superior court being a court of general jurisdiction, the presumption is that the proceedings had before that court were regular and that the court acted within its jurisdiction. This presumption, however, is available only where the record is silent upon the question. In re Eichhoff, 101 Cal. 600, 603, 36 P. 11. Where it affirmatively appears in the record that the proceedings were not regular, the presumption will not be indulged in. Ex parte Bull, 42 Cal. 196.

[4] There is some confusion in discussing jurisdiction on account of the fact that there are cases in which the jurisdiction of the court depends upon the existence of certain facts. In that case the court has jurisdiction to determine those facts, even though the determination of those facts in a certain manner ousts it of further jurisdiction to proceed in the case. Where the court has determined those facts in favor of the existence of jurisdiction, its determination, even though erroneous, is binding against a collateral attack. Ex parte Spencer, 83 Cal. 460, 23 P. 395, 17 Am. St. Rep. 266; Ex parte Williams, 87 Cal. 78, 24 P. 602, 25 P. 248; Matter of Maginnis, 162 Cal. 200, 121 P. 723.

Respondent claims that the violation of section 4(d) was not jurisdictional, and relies upon People v. Oxnam, 170 Cal. 211, 149 P. 165. In that case one of the grounds urged for a reversal was that the defendant was under 18 years. The point was raised for the first time on appeal. The court, in connection with this point, considered a part of section 19 of the Juvenile Court Act as it then existed (Stats. 1913, p. 1285), which part was substantially the same as section 4(d) of the present act, and also considered provisions corresponding to section 6 of the present act. In stating the the opinion of the court expressions are used to the effect that these provisions are not jurisdictional. These expressions are to be taken in the light of the whole decision, which is to the effect that the mere fact the defendant happens to be, or afterwards turns out to be, under 18 years, does not mean that the court did not have jurisdiction. In one place, for example, it is said:

> "There is nothing in the language used in this section to suggest the idea that in the absence of any suggestion, inquiry, and determination by such judge, there is any want of jurisdiction to proceed under the general law relating to crimes, simply because it may subsequently be developed that the delinquent was in fact under 18 years of age. In fact, the language expressly requires the judge himself to be satisfied on the question of age before he certifies the matter to the juvenile court at all, and unquestionably it was contemplated that in the absence of any such determination by such judge and any proceeding in the juvenile court, the case should proceed in the ordinary way and that the order or judgment of the judge should be valid and immune from any collateral attack based on the Juvenile Court Act."

In another place following one of these expressions, it is said:

> "It is certainly clear that no claim based on this provision of the act can be maintained in an appellate court after conviction and judgment under the general law, where no claim under the act was made prior to the appeal, and there has never been any investigation and determination as to the age of the offender. Such is the situation here, according to the record, if we assume in accord with defendant's theory that his case was never presented to the juvenile court. The age of defendant was not an issue tried and determined in the superior court by either the judge presiding or by the jury, was not even suggested to the trial judge for trial and determination, and we have no finding thereon. In other words, we have no judicial determination at all that the defendant was, in fact, under 18 years of age, and the proceedings in the superior court did not call for any determination on that question. In the absence of such a trial and determination on the question of age we have no warrant for dealing with this case as subject to the provisions of the Juvenile Court Act upon the assumption that defendant was in fact under 18 years of age, however much evidence as to that matter elicited on the trial from defendant's witnesses may indicate such to be the situation."

In another place, at page 218 (149 P. 168), it is stated:

> "Apparently no suggestion of the age of appellant as a basis for arresting the prosecution was ever made in the superior court, the evidence on that subject being elicited in the ordinary course of the trial as evidence bearing on the issues being tried by the jury."

In other words, the case proceeded like any other trial where the defendant is of adult age. The expressions in the decision concerning jurisdiction, so far as they may be said to refer to jurisdiction of the person, are to be limited to a case where no suggestion is made to the court for the purpose of arresting the prosecution of the minor and asserting the minor's right to be tried in the juvenile court.

The reasoning of that decision suggests to us an analogy between the right of a minor under 18 years to have his case submitted to the juvenile court first under section 4 (d), and the right of an adult defendant to have certain actions tried in the court of the county of his residence, under Code of Civil Procedure, section 395. It is uniformly held that when the defendant demands this right the court has no power to hear and determine any issue in the case until it has first determined the residence of defendant and his claimed right to a certain place of trial. If the right is not demanded, however, or the facts adversely determined, then the court has full jurisdiction. It is true that such waiver is provided for by Code of Civil Procedure, section 396, but such an objection to jurisdiction may be waived without statutory authority, it going to the jurisdiction of the person rather than to the jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the suit. Childs v. Lanterman, 103 Cal. 387, 392, 37 P. 382, 42 Am. St. Rep. 121.

Another case relied on by respondent is In re Northon, 35 Cal. App. 369, 169 P. 1051. The court there holds it error for the justice of the peace to refuse to hear testimony of the age of the defendant. The reference in this case to jurisdiction is based, first, upon the proposition that the justice's court had jurisdiction to determine the question of age of defendant and must be satisfied on that point before certifying to the juvenile court; and, secondly, that the superior court is not prohibited at all events from proceeding with the prosecution of a defendant under 18 years because he may have been certified back from the juvenile court. The decision is also made that the petitioner, being then before the superior court, could avail himself of all his legal rights there, as shown in People v. Oxnam, supra.

In re Wolff, 183 Cal. 602, 192 P. 33. Here the case was certified to the juvenile court by the justice of the peace and by the juvenile court sent back for prosecution under the general law. This is all a defendant under 18 years is entitled to; i. e., that the matter be first submitted to the juvenile court.

[5, 6] We conclude that, while it is true that the superior court has full jurisdiction to try any minor, it having full jurisdiction of the subject-matter, nevertheless, a defendant under 18 years has a statutory right that he shall not be prosecuted for crime until the matter has first been submitted to the juvenile court. So far as this relates to the jurisdiction of the court, it relates to jurisdiction of the person and not of the subject-matter, and may be therefore waived. But where the defendant asserts his right by suggestion to the court, the court's first duty is then to hear and determine in what court the defendant is entitled to be tried.

The judgment, under which petitioner is held, having been given in violation of defendant's asserted rights, under section 4 (d) of the Juvenile Court Act, it is ordered that said defendant be discharged from the custody of the warden at San Quentin prison, and that said minor be delivered into the custody of the sheriff of the county of Sacramento, and that he be there dealt with as provided by law.

Infants 🔑68—Conviction of accused, not disclosing age as under 18, but representing himself as 20, was valid without submitting case to juvenile court (Juvenile Court Act, 1915, § 4[d]; Juvenile Court Act 1913, § 19).

Conviction of grand larceny of accused, who did not disclose that he was under 18 years at hearing in justice court or in superior court, but represented himself as 20 years old to judge of superior court, is valid, though case was not referred to juvenile court, under Juvenile Court Act (St. 1915, p. 1228), § 4(d), and St. 1913, p. 1298, § 19, and accused is not entitled to discharge on habeas corpus.

Habeas corpus by Gino Bastiani against the warden of San Quentin Prison. Writ denied.

Geo. F. Owens, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Wm. F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

KOFORD, P. J. The petitioner pleaded guilty to the charge of grand larceny and was sentenced to imprisonment at San Quentin. He offered proof upon this proceeding showing his age to have been under 18 years at the time of the crime and sentence. The petitioner made no claim nor disclosure concerning this fact at the time of his hearing either in the justice's court or in the superior court. The judge of the superior court asked the petitioner his age before sentencing him, and the petitioner replied that he was 20 years old. Nothing else was said upon the subject, but the court proceeded as though the defendant was over the age of 18 years.

Upon the authority of People v. Oxnam, 170 Cal. 211, 149 P. 165, the judgment is valid, and the writ should be discharged. Petitioner calls attention to the fact that at the time the cited case was decided section 4 (d) of the Juvenile Court Law (St. 1915, p. 1228), had not been enacted. This is true, but nevertheless practically the same provision then existed as a part of section 19 of the Juvenile Court Act (Stats. 1913, p. 1285), and was expressly referred to and considered in that case at page 217.

We have fully considered People v. Oxnam in the opinion in Ex parte Tassey, 253 P. 948, this day decided, but we are unable to see any distinction between the case of petitioner here and the case of the defendant in People v. Oxnam.

The writ is discharged and petitioner is remanded to the warden of the state prison at San Quentin.

MAZURAN et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (Civ. 5468.)

1. Courts 🔑190(6)—Appellant may review decision of municipal court on demurrer on transmitting pleadings without statement (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 975–977, 983, 984, added by St. 1925, p. 942).

On appeal from municipal court to superior court, appealing party was entitled to have questions of law raised by demurrer passed on by superior court on transmitting pleadings, though no statement was served or filed, as required by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 975, 976, providing for statement on appeal on questions of law alone; questions of law only being appealable, under sections 983, 984, added by St. 1925, p. 942, as section 977 allows appeals from municipal court on questions of law and fact on transmitting docket, notices, motions, pleadings, and other papers.

2. Courts 🔑190(6)—On appeal from municipal court on questions of law and fact, either pleadings or judgment roll should be transmitted (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 975, 977).

On appeal from municipal court to superior court, stated by notice to be on questions of fact and law, either pleadings or judgment roll should be transmitted, under Code Civ. Proc. § 975, requiring filing of statement on appeal on questions of law alone, and section 977, requiring certified copy of docket, pleadings, notices, motions, and other papers; statutes being liberally construed to provide record on appeal, and judgment roll being nearest equivalent in municipal court to docket provided for.

Application by Marion J. Mazuran and another for a writ of certiorari to be directed to the Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County and C. W. Miller, Judge, to review an order of the court dismissing an appeal from municipal court, in an action in which petitioners were defendants. Order annulled.

D. A. Knapp, of San Francisco, for petitioners.

Robert E. Austin and John N. Helmick, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

THOMPSON, J. By this application it is sought to annul an order dismissing an appeal from the municipal court of Los Angeles. An action was commenced in the justices' court of Los Angeles township, but before trial the justices' court had been superseded by the municipal court and the trial was had in the last-named court. Also, it appears from the return to the writ that a demurrer to the complaint was heard in the municipal court. Two of the defendants in the action (the petitioners here), being dissatisfied with the judgment, filed their notice of appeal on June 1, 1926, and within the time allowed by law. The notice of appeal states that:

> "The appeal is taken on questions of both law and fact."

By the provisions of section 976 of the Code of Civil Procedure no statement of the case is necessary, in appeals from the justices' court, on questions of both law and fact. Under the provisions of section 975 of the same Code, however, when the appeal is taken on questions of law alone, it is necessary to prepare, serve, and file a statement of the case, which shall "contain the grounds upon which the party intends to rely upon the appeal and so much of the evidence, as may be necessary to explain the grounds and no more." By section 984 of the Code of Civil Procedure section 975 is made applicable to appeals from the municipal court, while section 976 of the Code of Civil Procedure is not, the Legislature having also provided by section 983 of the same Code that appeals from the municipal court shall be on questions of law alone. The petitioners here did not prepare a statement of the case, and on August 16, 1926, the plaintiff in the action made a motion to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the statement had not been served and filed. The respondent court made its order dismissing the appeal.

In brief, the petitioners' contention is that a statement of the case is not essential to the appeal and that, if a statement be necessary, the requirement is unconstitutional because it is discriminatory, special, and does not have a uniform operation. The foundation of their argument that it is unconstitutional is that appeals are allowed to the superior court from the justices' court on questions of fact with a trial de novo in the superior court, in which case no statement of the case is required.

Sections 983 and 984 of the Code of Civil Procedure were adopted in 1925 (St. 1925, p. 942) as a part of the legislation designed to govern the practice in and appeals from the municipal court. As stated above, section 983 provides for appeals on questions of law only, which provision is supplemented by a sentence found in another new section (section 985, Code Civ. Proc.) as follows:

> "If there be a new trial, it must be in the municipal court."

Section 984 of the Code of Civil Procedure makes applicable to such appeals, however, sections 975 and 977 of the Code of Civil Procedure. These are sections which originally applied to appeals from the justices' court, the first providing for a statement of the case in appeals on questions of law, as heretofore pointed out, the second providing for the transmission of the papers to the superior court, including the "statement, if any." The petitioners argue that the words "if any" indicate that a statement may not be essential. In this connection it should also be observed that section 975 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in addition to prescribing the method of preparing a statement, says:

> "The statement thus adopted, or as settled by the justice or judge, with a copy of the docket of the justice or judge, and all motions filed with him by the parties during the trial and the notice of appeal may be used on the hearing of the appeal before the superior court."

The question may well be asked, in view of the authorized use on appeal of the docket and motions and the language indicating that no more of the evidence shall be incorporated in the statement than is necessary to explain the grounds, What necessitates a statement, if the error complained of is manifest without the statement? It is not the policy of the law nor can we say that the Legislature intended to require a useless act. A similar question relating to appeals of criminal causes was considered by this court in the case of Garrett v. Superior Court, 249 P. 871, and there it was determined that, although the literal effect of section 1468 of the Penal Code is to require a statement, nevertheless if the error complained of may be determined from an inspection of the other papers transmitted, the statement is not essential. See, also, Maxson v. Superior Court, 124 Cal. 468, 471, 57 P. 379.

[1] We then have to inquire whether the respondent court could, in this action, have determined the appeal from the papers which should have been transmitted. From the sections of the Code of Civil Procedure heretofore cited it is apparent that the Legislature intended to give to litigants in the municipal court the right of appeal on questions of law alone. The notice of appeal here states that the appeal is on questions of both law and fact. A portion of section 977 of the Code of Civil Procedure made applicable to appeals from the municipal court says:

> "If the appeal be on questions of fact, or both law and fact, a certified copy of his docket, the pleadings, all notices, motions, and all other papers filed in the cause,"

—shall be transmitted to the superior court. Under the notice here in question, was it necessary that "the pleadings" or the equivalent of the judgment roll be transmitted? This question is not free of difficulty. If we adhere to the rule announced in Maxson v. Superior Court, supra, so far as appeals from the municipal court are concerned, we are bound to say that the language last quoted from section 977 of the Code of Civil Procedure has no application to appeals from the municipal court, and that the only method of preparing a record of the pleadings in appeals from the municipal court is by the preparation of a statement. It is there said:

> "Moreover, upon an appeal on questions of law alone the justice is not required to send to the appellate court anything more than 'a certified copy of his docket, the statement as admitted or as settled, the notice of appeal, and the undertaking filed.' There is no provision for sending to the appellate court the pleadings or other papers in the case. * * *"

Unless we can say that stating in the notice that the appeal is on questions of fact and law is equivalent to a notice requiring the transmission of the pleadings, it can make no difference how desirable it may be that litigants should have the right to appeal on the judgment roll alone. In this connection it must be remembered that the docket of the justices' court and the contents thereof, as provided by section 911 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is essentially different from the docket of the municipal court, which is the same as the superior court, and the contents thereof provided for by section 672 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The justices' docket is a synopsis of the action. The docket of the municipal court is a judgment docket and does not include proceedings prior to the judgment so that the transmission by the municipal court to the superior court of the docket and motions made would be of little, if any, value to the appellate court. In practice, the docket of the justices' court is the nearest possible equivalent to the judgment roll of the superior court, or, as now constituted, the municipal court.

[2] Inasmuch, therefore, as the term "docket" cannot be applied literally to appeals from the municipal court, it would seem to us that, in order to make sections 975 and 977 of the Code of Civil Procedure applicable at all to appeals from the municipal court, it is necessary to adopt a liberal construction, consonant we think with the manifest intent of the Legislature to provide a record on appeal in such cases. To do this we should say that, at least where, as here, the notice states that it is on questions of fact and law, it is necessary that the pleadings or the judgment roll be transmitted to the appellate court. If we adopt a literal construction, the quoted language of section 977 has no meaning, and no practical provision is made for a record on appeal. From the return which is before us it appears that a demurrer was interposed to the complaint, and with the pleadings before the superior court the petitioners were entitled to have the questions of law raised by that demurrer passed upon by the superior court.

It cannot be seriously contended that the order here made was made on the ground of an unreasonable delay in prosecuting the appeal, first, because the notice of the motion to dismiss was not based on that ground, and, second, because there was no apparent delay.

Having arrived at the conclusion that the order sought to be reviewed in this proceeding is void, it would serve no useful purpose and would be premature for us to enter upon a discussion of the constitutional question raised by the petitioner.

It may not be amiss, however, to quote the language in Cohen v. City of Alameda, 168 Cal. 267, 142 P. 886, that:

> "The legislative discretion as to the different modes of procedure or rules of practice to be prescribed for the numerous and various actions and proceedings allowed in courts of justice is very wide, and that its judgment on the question whether or not a particular provision shall be made for any class of cases, and as to the classification thereof, is not to be interfered with except for very grave causes and where it is clear beyond reasonable doubt that no sound reason for the legislative classification, and for the different provisions regarding the same, exists."

The order is annulled.

Ex parte HARRIS. (Cr. 1458.)

Divorce 🔑269(9)—Husband could not be committed for contempt in failing to pay temporary alimony, where unable to make payments.

Court could not order commitment of husband for contempt in failing to pay temporary alimony under uncontradicted evidence showing husband was unable to make payments.

Application by Jay Butler Harris for writ of habeas corpus, to be directed to the Sheriff of Los Angeles County, to secure petitioner's release from custody for a commitment for contempt for failure to pay temporary alimony. Petitioner discharged.

Haas & Dunnigan and Harold C. Johnston, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

WORKS, P. J. Petitioner was a party to a divorce suit. He was ordered by the court in which the action was pending to pay to his wife, monthly, a certain sum of money as temporary alimony. Having failed to make some of the required payments when they were due, he was cited for contempt of court because of his dereliction, was adjudged guilty, and was sent to jail as a punishment for his alleged offense. He then petitioned this court for the writ of habeas corpus, and the writ issued.

On the hearing in the contempt proceeding it was not shown that petitioner had the ability to make the defaulted payments. In fact, the evidence showed without contradiction that he was unable to pay. The order adjudging petitioner in contempt of court was without evidence to support it.

Petitioner is discharged from custody.

CHAPLIN v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al.

1. Divorce 🔑201—Order that defendant, who was not served in divorce suit, pay counsel fees and alimony, pending outcome of suit, held void (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 416, 1917).

Where service was not obtained on defendant in divorce suit, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 416, order that he pay stipulated sums for support and maintenance of wife and minor children, pending final determination of suit, and for attorney's fees, costs, and expenses to enable wife to prosecute suit is void, in view of section 1917.

2. Appearance 🔑8(1)—Presence of attorney as spectator or to represent another defendant, when orders were made affecting defendant not served, does not constitute "appearance" (Code Civ. Proc. § 1014).

Presence of attorney representing defendant, who was not served in divorce suit, in trial court when order was made for payment of counsel fees and alimony, pending outcome of suit, does not constitute "appearance" of defendant, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1014, where such attorney was there merely as spectator or to appear for another defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Appearance.]

3. Process 🔑77—Publicity as to divorce suit through press, radio, and private correspondence does not constitute "service" on defendant outside state (Code Civ. Proc. § 412).

Publicity as to divorce suit through medium of press, radio, and probability of receipt by defendant of private letters and telegrams concerning pendency of suit does not constitute "service" on defendant, who had left state, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 412.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Service (In Practice).]

4. Equity 🔑65(1)—Defendant, not served in divorce suit, is not precluded from seeking relief by prohibition from orders entered therein on theory that he comes with unclean hands.

Defendant, who was not served in divorce suit, made no appearance, and ignored orders of court, is not precluded from seeking relief from such orders by prohibition on theory that he comes with unclean hands, since from legal standpoint he had no notice of pendency of action.

5. Prohibition 🔑3(5)—Prohibition will issue, notwithstanding remedy by appeal, where latter will not afford relief to which petitioner is entitled (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1102, 1103).

Where circumstances of given case show that remedy by appeal will not properly subserve ends of justice by affording relief to which petitioner may be entitled, fact that, ordinarily speaking, such remedy is "plain, speedy, and adequate" will not prevent issuance of writ of prohibition, notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1102, 1103.

6. Prohibition 🔑3(5)—Relief from appealable orders may be had by prohibition, based on lack of jurisdiction over defendant, since appeal operates as general appearance.

Defendant, who was not served in divorce suit, made no appearance, and ignored orders of court therein, may seek relief from appealable orders by prohibition on ground of court's lack of jurisdiction, in view of rule that appeal operates as general appearance.

7. Prohibition 🔑17—Defendant, who was not served and did not appear, may bring prohibition to obtain relief from court's order without making objection in lower court.

Defendant, who was not served and did not appear in divorce suit, may bring prohibition to obtain relief from order for payment of counsel fees and alimony, pending outcome, without making objection in court issuing order, since no preliminary objection is necessary where want of jurisdiction is apparent on face of proceeding.

8. Prohibition 🔑17—Defendant may bring original prohibition in appellate court, without objection in trial court, where it conclusively appears that application there would be denied.

Defendant in divorce suit may bring original prohibition in appellate court to obtain relief from order for payment of counsel fees and alimony, pending outcome, without making objection in court issuing order, where it conclusively appears that any application made to such court to vacate orders would have been denied.

Original application by Charles Spencer Chaplin for a writ of prohibition, prayed to be directed to the Superior Court in and for the County of Los Angeles, Walter Guerin, Judge, and others. Writ granted.

Gavin McNab, of San Francisco, Lloyd Wright, of Los Angeles, Nat Schmulowitz, of San Francisco, and Charles E. Millikan, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Edwin T. McMurray, of San Francisco, and Young & Young, Milton K. Young, Lyndol L. Young, William K. Young, and L. R. Brigham, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

HOUSER, J. Petitioner prays for an order of this court, directing and commanding each of the respondents herein to desist and refrain from further proceedings under three several orders, as set forth in the petition and heretofore issued out of the superior court in and for the county of Los Angeles, in a suit for divorce then pending therein between Lillita Louise Chaplin and Charles Spencer Chaplin, wherein and whereby, in effect, W. I. Gilbert and Herman Spitzel, as receivers theretofore appointed in said action, and Charles Spencer Chaplin, the defendant therein, were ordered to pay for the support and maintenance of Lillita Louise Chaplin (the wife of said Charles Spencer Chaplin) and the two minor children of said parties the sum of $8,000 forthwith, the further sum of $4,000 on the 17th day of February, 1927, and a like sum of money on the 15th day of each and every month thereafter, pending the final determination of said suit for divorce; and in addition thereto, that said Charles Spencer Chaplin pay forthwith to said Lillita Louise Chaplin the sum of $6,400 on account of attorney's fees, costs, and expenses to enable said Lillita Louise Chaplin to prosecute such divorce suit.

It is the contention of petitioner that neither prior to the issuance of either or any of said orders, nor since said time or times, had the trial court jurisdiction of the person of the defendant in said suit for divorce, and consequently that each of said orders is void.

Section 1917 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that:

> "The jurisdiction sufficient to sustain a record is jurisdiction over the cause, over the parties, and over the thing, when a specific thing is the subject of the judgment."

No question is here raised regarding the jurisdiction of the superior court, excepting as to the jurisdiction over the person of the defendant in the suit for divorce between the parties thereto.

Generally speaking, as provided by statute, the writ of prohibition will lie for the purpose of arresting the proceedings of any tribunal exercising judicial functions when such proceedings are without or in excess of the jurisdiction of such tribunal, where no plain, speedy and adequate remedy exists in the ordinary course of law. Sections 1102, 1103, Code Civ. Proc.

The first question, then, to be here considered is whether the superior court was acting without or in excess of its jurisdiction in making each of the several orders to which reference has been had.

By section 416 of the Code of Civil Procedure it is provided that:

> "From the time of the service of the summons and of a copy of the complaint in a civil action, where service of a copy of the complaint is required, or of the completion of the publication when service by publication is ordered, the court is deemed to have acquired jurisdiction of the parties, and to have control of all the subsequent proceedings. * * *"

And:

> "A defendant appears in an action when he answers, demurs, or gives the plaintiff written notice of his appearance, or when an attorney gives notice of appearance for him. * * *" Section 1014, Code Civ. Proc.

[1] So far as any of the statutory requirements for obtaining jurisdiction over the person of the defendant in the suit for divorce are concerned, it is admitted by respondents that none of them was complied with in either form or substance. In the absence of obtaining service upon the defendant in any or either of the modes prescribed by statute, the ordinary rule appears to be that an order, made by the court, of the nature of those here under consideration is unauthorized and void. Baker v. Baker, 136 Cal. 302, 68 P. 971; Reed v. Reed, 40 Cal. App. 102, 180 P. 43; De la Montanya v. De la Montanya, 112 Cal. 101, 117, 44 P. 345, 32 L. R. A. 82, 53 Am. St. Rep. 165; Williams v. Williams, 60 Cal. App. 675, 213 P. 508; Matthews v. Matthews, 240 N. Y. 28, 147 N. E. 237, 28 A. L. R. 1079.

[2] But it is urged by respondents upon facts which appear by affidavit, as well as by the return to the writ herein, that because one of the attorneys now representing petitioner herein was present in the trial court at the time such orders, or some of them, were made, such appearance by said attorney constituted an appearance for and in behalf of said defendant. The facts, however, in connection with the presence in court of said attorney at said time are that he was there merely as a spectator, and that he took no part whatsoever in the proceedings before the trial court; or, at most, that, at the time when one of such orders was made, he appeared only for a defendant in the action other than Charles Spencer Chaplin, the petitioner herein. No record is shown of any appearance having been made by any attorney in behalf of defendant; in fact, each of such orders recites, in effect, that the defendant was not represented at either of such hearings.

Respondents further contend, on alleged facts likewise appearing, that said defendant, Chaplin, left the state of California for the express purpose of avoiding service upon him of the summons and a copy of the complaint in said action, and that because of said fact, together with the further alleged fact that there have been various communications to defendant (including letters, telegrams, newspaper articles, and the radio), defendant has been, and at the time of the making of each of said orders was, as fully notified of the pendency of said action as though he had been personally served with the summons and a copy of the complaint therein.

With reference to the proposition advanced by respondents, in effect, that because of the mere presence of one of defendant's attorneys in the trial court, whether as a spectator or as representing some other party defendant, at the time one of the orders under consideration was made, the appearance of defendant in the action was thereby legally indicated, the authorities are not in exact harmony. The cases of Roth v. Superior Court, 147 Cal. 604, 82 P. 246, Cooper v. Gordon, 125 Cal. 296, 57 P. 1006, and California Pine Box & Lumber Co. v. Superior Court, 13 Cal. App. 65, 108 P. 882, are examples of conditions other than those specified in section 1014 of the Code of Civil Procedure, under which a defendant was held to have appeared in an action. The attendant circumstances in each of such cases were as follows: In the Roth Case, on the day following service of summons on the defendant, a stipulation was entered into between opposing counsel extending the defendant's time to plead. In Cooper v. Gordon, in consideration of a stay of execution granted to defendant, the plaintiff was given the right to enter judgment in his favor. In California Pine Box & Lumber Co. v. Superior Court, a stipulation was entered into extending time to answer, following a written request therefor by defendant's attorneys, in order to avoid the filing of a demurrer, and thereafter on application to the court, based on an affidavit showing good cause therefor, the defendant was granted a further extension of time to file his answer in the action.

While from the several rulings made in such cases it is apparent that the means for adjudging the appearance of a defendant in an action, as specified in section 1014 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is not exclusive, it is equally plain that none of such cases is authority for holding that the appearance of a defendant is shown by the mere fact that, on the hearing of a motion in which several defendants are interested, an attorney thereafter representing the defendant was present in court, either as a spectator or as representing one of such defendants other than the defendant whose appearance is in question. On the other hand, authorities are not lacking in this state which indicate that such conditions are insufficient.

In the case of Vrooman v. Li Po Tai, 113 Cal. 302, 45 P. 470, it was held, apparently contrary to the rulings in the foregoing authorities, that in consideration of certain payments to be made by the defendant, the taking and filing of a stipulation extending his time to answer, and by his acting upon such agreement, did not constitute an appearance. The court said:

> "But it is contended by respondent that by taking and filing the stipulation extending the time to answer, and by accepting and acting upon the agreement to grant successive extensions in consideration of certain payments made, defendant appeared in the action. Section 1014 of the Code of Civil Procedure defines what shall constitute an appearance. A defendant appears in an action when he answers, demurs, or gives written notice of his appearance, or when an attorney gives notices of an appearance for him, and he can appear in no other way. This statute was intended to settle all disputes upon the subject. There can be no chance for argument about equivocal acts. State v. McCullough, 3 Nev. 202, seems to be the other way, but the reasoning is far from satisfactory. There was no need of a statute to tell us that the acts specified would constitute appearance. The occasion for a rule was to dispose of questions upon which there might be dispute. There was no such appearance in this case.
> "The defendant entered into no stipulation in regard to the case. Plaintiff granted him certain privileges, reserving the right to enter default and judgment in case defendant failed to comply with the conditions."

The case of Davenport v. Superior Court, 183 Cal. 506, 191 P. 911, goes still further in holding that the securing of an order from the judge of the trial court extending the time within which the defendants might plead to the complaint in the action was not a general appearance of such defendants. The court reviews many of the authorities and criticizes as "too broad" the statement appearing in the Vrooman Case that a defendant "can appear in no other way," than as is prescribed by section 1014 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and then declares that:

> "An act of a defendant by which he intentionally submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court in that action for the purpose of obtaining any ruling or order of the court going to the merits of the case, as, for example, a motion to strike out part of the complaint, or the making of stipulations, as in the cases above mentioned which may reasonably be construed to imply that the court has, in that action, acquired jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, will be equivalent to an appearance, although not strictly in accordance with the terms of section 1014. But the securing of the order extending time to plead was not an act of that character, and the rule of section 1014 should be applied to this case."

See, also, Steinbach v. Leese, 27 Cal. 299; Powers v. Braly, 75 Cal. 238, 17 P. 197;

Anderson v. Nawa, 25 Cal. App. 153, 143 P. 555.

If, according to the latest expression on the subject by the court of last resort of this state, the obtaining by a defendant of an order from the judge of the trial court, extending the time within which he might plead to the action, did not amount to an appearance by such defendant, it should follow that the mere presence in court of an attorney (who afterward represented the defendant), either as a spectator or in the capacity as counsel for other defendants in the action, would not constitute an appearance. The decision in any case should depend upon the solution of the question of what was the legal intention of the defendant in the premises, and the answer to which can be determined only from the circumstances surrounding each given case. It is clear enough that if a defendant "intentionally submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court * * * for the purpose of obtaining any ruling or order of the court going to the merits of the case," he has made an appearance in the action. Surely the presence in court of an attorney, who at that time was acting only for another party to the litigation, under a most strained construction, could not be taken as an act "going to the merits of the action" so far as any other defendant was concerned, or one by which the defendant intentionally submitted himself to the jurisdiction of the court; much less could the fact that such attorney was but a curious spectator of the proceedings in any manner affect the merits of the controversy so as to amount to such intentional submission to jurisdiction.

The case of Honeycutt v. Nyquist, Peterson & Co., 12 Wyo. 183, 74 P. 90, 109 Am. St. Rep. 975, was an action to recover a money judgment on an account stated and for goods sold and delivered, in which a writ of attachment was issued and levied. No service of process was had on the defendant. Thereafter a notice of motion for an order to sell the attached property was served on an attorney, who accepted service thereof for the defendant. In connection with the point that such circumstances amounted to an appearance for the defendant, the court said, in part:

> "We are not inclined to regard the acceptance of service of the motion to sell the attached property as in itself amounting to a general appearance in the action. * * * But the paper referred to was not the summons nor petition. It ought not to be held, we think, that a mere acknowledgment of service upon the defendant of such a motion operates as a submission of his person to the jurisdiction of the court for all purposes of the case. It cannot be said that the fact that a defendant has engaged an attorney to look after his interests either generally or in a particular cause amounts to a voluntary general appearance, for it may occur that the attorney shall conclude that his client's interests will be better subserved by not appearing, or he may be engaged merely to enter a special appearance and contest the question of jurisdiction. The same reasoning might apply in respect to the mere presence of the defendant and his attorney in court at the time fixed for the hearing of the motion, although it is unnecessary to decide that question. Certainly they would have had a right to be in court as spectators, without submitting the person of the defendant to the jurisdiction of the court in a particular case pending therein, if they did not participate in any of the proceedings in the case. * * *"

In Fulton v. Ramsey, 67 W. Va. 321, 68 S. E. 381, 140 Am. St. Rep. 969, the rule is laid down (syllabus) that:

> "A general appearance must be express or arise by implication from the defendant's seeking, taking or agreeing to some step or proceeding in the cause, beneficial to himself or detrimental to the plaintiff, other than one contesting the jurisdiction only."

[3] The second suggestion of respondents, that is to say, that because of the alleged evasion of service of process upon him and the publicity through the medium of the press and the radio, and the probability of the receipt by defendant of private letters and telegrams concerning the pendency of the action against him, he must have had notice of the pendency of the action, would seem equally unavailing to establish either the equivalent of service of process on the defendant or his voluntary appearance in the action. In support of such contention the attention of this court has been directed to the case of Foley v. Foley, 120 Cal. 33, 52 P. 122, 65 Am. St. Rep. 147, in which it appears that, in a contempt proceeding arising out of the failure of the defendant to obey an order of the court in that regard, it was shown that the respondent therein had concealed himself to avoid a compliance with such order and the service of process. In such circumstances it was held that the order of the court, which directed that the order to show cause be served upon the attorneys of record of the defendant, was authorized and constituted a valid service on the defendant. However, in answer to the order to show cause, the defendant appeared by his counsel and, without interposing any objection to the want of personal service on the defendant, submitted evidence upon the merits of the matter then before the court. In the earlier cases of Golden Gate, etc., Co. v. Superior Court, 65 Cal. 187, 3 P. 628, and Eureka Lake, etc., Co. v. Superior Court, 66 Cal. 311, 5 P. 490, each of which likewise involved a contempt proceeding, the same principle was invoked as in the Foley Case. It will be noted that the only parallel in the facts of the Foley Case with those in the instant case is that in each of them the probable concealment of the defendant to avoid service of process inferentially appeared; and, contrary to the facts in the instant case, that in each of the cases to which reference has been had, prior to the institution of the contempt proceeding, the defendant had appeared generally in the action.

Section 412 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides for the manner of procuring service of summons in an action—

> "where the person on whom service is to be made * * * has departed from the state; * * * or conceals himself to avoid the service of summons. * * *"

No authority is suggested by respondents which, in its effect or in principle, would authorize this court to decide that any method of obtaining service of summons other than that prescribed by statute would be sufficient.

With reference to the necessity of actual service or the constructive service in proper cases, the Supreme Court, through Mr. Justice Field, in Peabody v. Phelps, 9 Cal. 213, 226, said, in part:

> "Of the action the defendant received no legal notice, and the judgment cannot, therefore, be evidence against him of a paramount title in Larkin. Mere cognizance of the existence of the action is not notice in the legal sense. To be available, the notice must apprise the party whose rights are to be affected, of what is required of him, and the consequences which may follow if he neglect to defend the action. Miner v. Clark, 15 Wend. [N. Y.] 425; Clark v. Baird, 7 Barb. [N. Y.] 65."

In Matthews v. Matthews, 240 N. Y. 28, 147 N. E. 237, 38 A. L. R. 1079, which affected a matter similar in many respects to the instant case, it is said:

> "It must be conceded that no judgment could be obtained for the disposition of the sequestered property without personal or constructive service upon the defendant. We have no such thing in our practice; in fact, there is no such thing in existence in the law as a personal judgment without service or notice of some kind, and the only kind of notice that we recognize in this state for the obtaining of a judgment is personal service, substituted service, or the service by publication of the summons in the action. It necessarily follows that when the word 'order' is thus linked up to the word 'judgment,' so that the disposition of the sequestered property is to be 'by order or judgment,' the order also to be legal and effective must be on notice to the defendant, either given personally or in some form recognized by our practice [citing cases].
> "An abandoned wife where, as in this case, her husband is a nonresident, may sequester his property; but the service of the summons by publication must be commenced as herein stated. After he has been served by publication and is in default of appearance or pleading, the court can enter judgment and dispose of the sequestered property as it deems best for the interest of the wife and children. If the defendant appears, of course there is no difficulty."

This court is disinclined to accept a construction which, in its nature, would have the effect of so broadening the apparent intent of the language of the present statute as to make it of no consequence as a legal requirement before service of process may be obtained. The natural expansion of the principle suggested by respondents would include hearsay and rumor of every description and practically prevent or forbid at his peril any person who had been sued in an action from reading a newspaper or holding any communication whatsoever with his fellow man. The results of such a rule would be far reaching, and if not disastrous, would at least be intolerable.

Other objections interposed by respondents to the issuance of the writ are that petitioner comes into this court with unclean hands; and, in any event, that each of the several orders, which together constitute the subject-matter here under consideration, is appealable; also, that the forum within which the remedy to which defendant was entitled, if any, should be administered, was that in which the objectionable orders were issued; for all of which reasons it is contended by respondents that the writ of prohibition should not issue.

[4] With reference to the alleged "unclean hands" of the petitioner, it is urged that because the suit for divorce is equitable in its nature, and because the court in which such action is pending has made the several orders here in question—all of which the defendant therein has seen fit to ignore—he should not now be heard in this court in a prayer for relief therefrom. But at least one of the difficulties with the position thus assumed by respondents is that it fails to take cognizance of the foundational fact that the defendant has never been served with summons, nor has he made an appearance in the action in the lower court, and consequently, that from a legal standpoint, he has never had notice of the pendency of the action. If the order issued by the superior court was in excess of the jurisdiction of such court, it is plain that the defendant was under no compulsion to obey it (Maier v. Luce, 61 Cal. App. 552, 558, 215 P. 399), or that no restriction or limitation existed on his conduct with reference to taking legal steps necessary to have its invalidity judicially declared.

[5] Regarding the remedy open to defendant by appeal from the several orders, as suggested by respondents, it is a general rule that prohibition will not lie where the petitioner has a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law. Section 1103, Code Civ. Proc. The exception to the rule also is well established that, although the order or the judgment to which exception is taken by the person, upon whom it operates, may be appealable and thus come within the general rule which forbids the issuance of a writ of prohibition, nevertheless, if in the circumstances of a given case it may be clearly discernible that such a remedy will not properly subserve the ends of justice by affording the relief to which the petitioner may be entitled, the fact that, ordinarily speaking, the remedy is "plain, speedy, and adequate" will present no obstacle to the issuance of the writ. Lieberman v. Superior Court, 72 Cal. App. 18, 236 P. 570; Consolidated, etc., Co. v. Superior Court, 189 Cal. 92, 207 P. 552; Hammons v. Superior Court, 63 Cal. App. 700, 219 P. 1037; Quatman v. Superior Court, 64 Cal. App. 203, 221 P. 666; Elliott v. Superior Court, 168 Cal. 727, 734, 145 P. 101; Koerber v. Superior Court, 57 Cal. App. 31, 206 P. 496; Northcutt v. Superior Court, 66 Cal. App. 350, 356, 226 P. 25; Davis v. Superior Court, 184 Cal. 691, 195 P. 390; A. G. Col Co. v. Superior Court, 196 Cal. 604, 238 P. 926; Dept. of Public Works v. Superior Court, 197 Cal. 215, 224, 239 P. 1076. The cases of Simpson v. Police Court of Riverside, 160 Cal. 530, 117 P. 553, and Gardner v. Superior Court, 19 Cal. App. 548, 126 P. 501, are to the effect that, even if the question be one of jurisdiction in the court making the order, the writ of prohibition will not lie, provided that the petitioner have a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law. However, as is pointed out in the dissenting opinion in the Simpson Case, whether the writ shall issue is largely a question of discretion in the court to which the application is made. It should also be noted that in both the Simpson Case and in the Gardner Case no question of the jurisdiction of the party defendant was involved, and that the question of jurisdiction was confined to the subject-matter of the action.

[6] As is stated in volume 2 of Ruling Case Law, § 14, p. 333:

> "It is a well-settled general rule that an appeal from or a writ of error to judgment of a court of general jurisdiction operates as a general appearance in the case."

It is therefore apparent that, if by appealing from all or any of the several orders under consideration a general appearance of the defendant in the instant case would result, the appeal would be useless, and effective relief from the several orders made without or in excess of the jurisdiction of the trial court would be entirely denied to the defendant.

[7] Assuming, without deciding, that the filing of a notice of motion to vacate the orders in question would likewise constitute a general appearance by the defendant (Grinbaum v. Superior Court, 192 Cal. 528, 556, 221 P. 635; Shriver v. Superior Court, 48 Cal. App. 576, 192 P. 124), it is manifest that by such act he would destroy the very purpose of his motion. On the question of the necessity on the part of an aggrieved party to make application before the court making such order for relief by way of a motion to vacate, the language used by Mr. Justice Richards in the case of Grinbaum v. Superior Court, 192 Cal. 528, 556, 221 P. 635, 647, is appropriate. In part, he said:

> "As to the petitioner's second suggested remedy, viz., that of a motion to set aside such void order in the court making the same; in response to this suggestion it may be stated that it has never been the practice to require a party injuriously affected by a judgment or order of a court, which court had never acquired jurisdiction over either his person or property to make the same, to first apply to the court making said order to have the same vacated; nor should it be so in reason, since to apply such a rule would be to require such a party to submit himself to the jurisdiction of the court making such void order and thus commit himself thenceforward to the tender mercy of the court making the same. We are cited to no authority which goes so far as to hold that a person having a clear right to make a direct attack by certiorari upon a judgment or order of a judicial tribunal upon the ground of lack of jurisdiction must first seek relief from such judgment or order in the court which was without jurisdiction to make or enter the same. * * * On the other hand, in the case of Havemeyer v. Superior Court, 84 Cal. 327, 24 P. 121, 10 L. R. A. 627, 18 Am. St. Rep. 192, which arose on application for a writ of prohibition, this court, after an exhaustive consideration of the subject, said (page 405 [24 P. 141]): 'If a want of jurisdiction is apparent on the face of the proceeding in the lower court, no plea or preliminary objection is necessary before suing out the writ of prohibition.' This we think to be the true and reasonable rule applicable to cases of this character."

[8] The return to the writ herein shows conclusively that any application which might be made to the superior court to vacate all or any of the orders made by it would be denied.

In the case of Keeley v. Superior Court, 26 Cal. App. 213, 146 P. 526, the rule is laid down that an application for the writ of prohibition will be granted in a proper case where from the return of the respondent it appears that the trial judge does not agree with the petitioner and that an application to him for an order vacating the order to which exception was taken would be unavailing. To the same effect are Nissen v. Elliott, 145 Ark. 540, 224 S. W. 958; City of Charleston v. Littlepage, 73 W. Va. 156, 80 S. E. 131, 51 L. R. A. (N. S.) 353; State v. Kelley, 32 S. D. 526, 143 N. W. 953; State v. Williams, 221 Mo. 227, 120 S. W. 740; Foley v. Ham, 102 Kan. 66, 169 P. 183, L. R. A. 1918C, 204.

As a conclusion from the foregoing, it will appear that in the absence of service of process on the defendant, or of his legal appearance in the action, each of the orders to which reference has been had was void, and that for the reasons heretofore expressed herein the defendant is entitled to the writ directing and commanding the respondents, and each of them, to desist and refrain from further proceedings under the orders, and each of them, referred to in the petition herein. It is so ordered.

In action to recover commission for sale of real property, where evidence was conflicting as to whether ready, able, and willing purchaser was procured and defendant notified thereof, trial court's finding thereon was conclusive.

2. Appeal and error ⚷987(1)—Appellate court has jurisdiction to consider evidence only where it does not sustain finding or is insufficient, as matter of law.

It is only where there is no evidence to sustain finding, or where, as matter of law, evidence is insufficient to sustain it, that appellate court has jurisdiction to consider evidence.

3. Appeal and error ⚷994(3), 1011(1)—Trial court determines credibility of witnesses and disputed facts.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by M. Stransky against M. C. Callan to recover a broker's commission. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Hugh K. McKevitt, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Franklin Swart, of Redwood City, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. Action to recover a broker's commissions for the sale of real property. The complaint alleges, in substance, that on the 14th day of October, 1924, defendant entered into a contract in writing with plaintiff's assignor, one James W. Doherty, by the terms of which Doherty was given an exclusive contract for a period of three months to sell and enter into and sign a written contract in defendant's name for the sale and conveyance of certain real property, owned by defendant, which is situated partly in San Francisco and partly in San Mateo county. The price at which the property was to be sold was the sum of $14,000, and defendant, under the terms of the agreement, agreed to pay as a commission for such sale a sum equal to 5 per cent. on the first $5,000 and 2½ per cent. on the balance of such sum.

Thereafter, on the 10th day of January, 1925, and while said authorization was in full force and effect, so it is alleged, Doherty found a purchaser ready, able, and willing to purchase such property at the price fixed, and such purchaser and Doherty, on behalf of defendant, made and executed an agreement, in writing, by the terms of which said purchaser agreed to purchase and Doherty, on behalf of defendant, agreed to sell the property for the sum named; that thereafter defendant refused to comply with his agreement, by reason of which refusal defendant became indebted to Doherty for the agreed commissions, amounting to the sum of $475, for which amount judgment was prayed. Defendant by answer admitted entering into an agreement to sell the property, but denied on information and belief that by said agreement he ever authorized Doherty to enter into or sign a contract in his name for such sale. He also denied that Doherty at any time found a purchaser ready, willing, and able to purchase the property, or that Doherty had ever entered into any agreement with any person or purchaser, as alleged in the complaint. At the trial, plaintiff presented evidence to show that he had obtained a purchaser who was ready, able, and willing to make the purchase, if the title to the property to which objection had been made could be perfected. No claim was made that the purchaser was ever personally presented to defendant, but evidence was introduced by plaintiff to show that a letter had been written by Doherty and mailed by him advising defendant of the sale. Defendant, on the other hand, testified positively that he never had received any notice or any communication from Doherty concerning the matter, and that no claim for any commission was made upon him until the filing of the suit.

[1] The trial court found, in substance, that Doherty did not, within the life of the contract or at any time thereafter, procure a purchaser ready, able, and willing to make the purchase under the terms of the authorization, and that no purchaser had been presented by Doherty to defendant. It further found that Doherty did not, within the life of the contract or at any time, notify defendant that he had entered into a contract of sale concerning the property and that no such agreement was ever brought to the attention of defendant. The case is one which presents a conflict in the evidence. The finding of the trial court is, therefore, conclusive here.

[2] It is only in cases where there is no evidence to sustain a finding, or where it can be said, as a matter of law, that the evidence is insufficient to sustain it, that this court has jurisdiction to consider the evidence.

[3] It is the exclusive province of the trial court to determine the credibility of the witnesses, and from the conflicting evidence determine the disputed fact. Those principles have been so often reiterated that they have become trite.

PEOPLE v. MAY. (Cr. 954.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 19, 1927.)

Criminal law 🔑1071—Statutory provision for dismissal of appeal for failure to file application for transcript within required time is mandatory (Pen. Code, § 1247).

Provision of Pen. Code, § 1247, for dismissal of appeal, if application for transcript of reporter's notes is not filed within five days after notice of appeal, is mandatory, and failure to comply therewith is fatal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Aldus May was convicted of second degree robbery, and he appeals. Appeal dismissed.

Frank A. Duryea, of Marysville, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

FINCH, P. J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of robbery of the second degree. He moved for a new trial, which was denied. He was thereupon sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison. He duly gave notice of appeal, but failed, within five days thereafter, or at any time, to file with the clerk or present to the court an application for a transcript of the phonographic reporter's notes of the trial, as required by the provisions of section 1247 of the Penal Code. One of the provisions of that section reads as follows:

> "If such application is not filed within said time, the appeal is wholly ineffectual and shall be deemed dismissed and the judgment or order may be enforced as if no appeal had been taken."

That provision is mandatory, and failure to comply therewith is fatal. People v. Hill (Cal. App.) 248 P. 714, and cases there cited.

It may be stated further that the facts set forth in appellant's opening brief as constituting the defendant's testimony given at the trial conclusively show that he is guilty of the crime of which he was convicted.

The appeal is dismissed.

GIBBON v. JUSTICES' COURT OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (Civ. 5704.)

Justices of the peace 🔑106—Defendant is not entitled to dismissal, where issue of law was tried, though not decided, in justices' court within two years (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 588, 890a).

Where issue of law, presented by demurrer, was tried in justices' court within two years after demurrer was filed, defendant is not entitled to dismissal under Code Civ. Proc. § 890a, providing for dismissal where plaintiff fails to bring action to trial within two years after case is brought to issue of law or fact, notwithstanding that such issue was not decided till after expiration of two-year period, in view of section 588.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Petition in superior court by F. B. Gibbon for a writ of mandate to the Justices' Court of the City and County of Francisco and Thomas F. Prendergast, Justice, directing dismissal of an action therein pending. From a judgment denying the petition, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Matthew A. McCullough, of San Francisco, for appellant.

McKinstry, Haber & Firebaugh and Peirce Coombes, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

CASHIN, J. Appeal from a judgment denying a petition for a writ of mandate, directing the dismissal of an action pending in justices' court of the city and county of San Francisco.

It was sought by the action mentioned to recover from appellant as a stockholder a proportionate part of a debt of a corporation. The action was filed in the justices' court, and summons issued on July 28, 1921. Appellant appeared therein on April 2, 1923, by filing a written demurrer to the complaint, which was submitted for decision on the issue of law presented on February 19, 1924. When this issue was decided does not appear from the record, but it is stated in appellant's brief that an order overruling the demurrer was made on April 8, 1926, notice of which was given appellant on the same day. A motion was then made by appellant to dismiss the action under the provisions of section 890a of the Code of Civil Procedure, which motion was denied.

It is contended that, it appearing that the action was not brought to trial on issues of fact within two years after the finding of the demurrer, it was the duty of the court under the provisions of the section to dismiss. The material part of this section provides as follows:

> "Judgment of dismissal must be entered whenever the plaintiff fails to bring the action to trial within two years after the case is brought to an issue of law or fact, except where the parties have stipulated in writing that the time may be extended. * * *"

As provided by section 588, Code of Civil Procedure, issues arise upon pleadings when a fact or a conclusion of law is maintained by the one party and is controverted by the other. They are of two kinds, (1) of law, and (2) of fact; and it has been held that a trial is the examination before a competent tribunal of the facts or law put in issue in a cause for the purpose of determining such issue; and, when a court hears or determines any issue of fact or law for the purpose of determining the rights of the parties, it may be considered a trial. Goldtree v. Spreckels, 135 Cal. 666, 67 P. 1091; Tregambo v. Comanche Milling & Mining Co., 57 Cal. 501; 24 Cal. Jur. "Trial," p. 716.

It is clear from the language of section 890a of the Code of Civil Procedure that it was the legislative intention to provide for dismissals when the plaintiff has failed after issues of law or fact have been tendered by proper pleadings to bring the action to trial upon the issue presented, and where it appears, as here, that no issues of fact were presented, but that the issue of law was tried, although not decided, within the two-year period the requirements of the section were met, and the motion was properly denied.

The judgment is affirmed.

FIFIELD v. BULLWINKEL. (Civ. 4862.)

Executors and administrators ⚷437(4)—3-months period for bringing action against executor on rejected claim runs from time written notice of rejection is given (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1490, 1491a, 1492, 1498).

Period of 3 months within which claimant must bring action against executor on rejected claim under Code of Civ. Proc. § 1498, begins to run when executor first gives claimant written notice of rejection, without regard to time of publication of notice to creditors under sections 1490, 1491a, and 1492, since claimant is entitled to anticipate publication of notice and present claim prior thereto.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Action by Annie Fifield against William H. Bullwinkel as executor of the estate of Henry William Hedemann, deceased. From judgment dismissing the action, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

R. A. McKay and Allen Brant, both of San Diego, for appellant.

Richardson & Johnson, of San Diego, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. The action is brought by plaintiff against the executor of the last will and testament of Henry William Hedemann, deceased, to recover the amount of a claim on a debt owing by decedent to claimant, which was rejected and disallowed by the executor. The original complaint in the action was filed on the 8th day of September, 1923. The case came on for trial upon the issues presented by the amended complaint and the answer thereto. Upon the facts established by the evidence produced at that time, the court dismissed the action upon the ground that the action was barred by the provisions of section 1498 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Sections 1490, 1491a, and 1492 of the Code of Civil Procedure are likewise pertinent to the discussion of the stated grounds of the present appeal. It is required (section 1490) that the executor publish a notice to creditors requiring presentation of their claims. This publication must be made not less than once a week for four weeks. Section 1491a reads as follows:

> "Within thirty days after the first publication of notice to creditors, the executor or administrator must file or cause to be filed in the court a printed copy of said notice to creditors accompanied by a statement setting forth the date of the first publication thereof and the name of the newspaper in which the same is printed."

It is further required (section 1492) that, after the notice is given, a copy thereof, with the affidavit of due publication, be filed; and that upon such affidavit or other testimony an order be made showing that due notice to creditors has been given, and directing that such order be entered in the minutes. After some further regulations concerning the presentation of claims and the allowance or rejection thereof, the Code, at section 1498, provides that, when a claim is rejected by an executor or administrator, or by the judge, "written notice of such rejection shall be given by the executor or administrator to the holder of such claim or to the person filing or presenting the same, and the holder must bring suit in the proper court against the executor or administrator within three months after the date of service of such notice if the claim be then due, * * * otherwise the claim shall be forever barred."

Counsel for appellant state that the only question involved on this appeal is whether this action, commenced on September 8, 1923, was barred by said provisions of section 1498. The record shows that the executor, having been duly appointed and qualified, published a notice to creditors beginning on April 16, 1923, but failed to file any copy of such notice and a statement of publication thereof, within 30 days after April 16th. On April 26th, the plaintiff presented her claim, which was rejected on May 4th, and notice of rejection was served on the plaintiff May 5, 1923. Thereafter the executor caused a second notice to creditors to be published, and the first publication of said notice was on June 9, 1923. Thereafter, and within 30 days, the executor caused a copy of said notice, and a statement of publication, to be filed as required by section 1491a of the Code of Civil Procedure. On June 27, 1923, the plaintiff again presented her claim, which was rejected in like manner as before. Notice of this rejection was given to the holder on July 10, 1923. Thereafter, on July 13, 1923, a decree establishing notice to creditors was duly entered.

If the 3 months time allowed plaintiff for bringing her action as provided by section 1498 of the Code of Civil Procedure began to run on May 5, 1923, the action came too late. But if, as she contends, such time did not begin to run until July 10, 1923, her right of action was not barred at the time when the action was commenced. The merits of the appeal depend upon the answer to the question thus presented.

It has been held that the provisions of section 1491a of the Code of Civil Procedure, requiring that a copy of the notice to creditors, together with a statement of the date of first publication thereof, be filed within 30 days after such first publication, is mandatory, and not merely directory. Hawkins v. Superior Court, 165 Cal. 743, 134 P. 327. From this is may be argued that, when said requirement has not been fulfilled, the publication of notice is wholly ineffectual, and that a subsequent publication must be made, and that such subsequent publication must be deemed the original publication of notice to creditors in such estate. We are not aware of any decisions directly to this point. But the question becomes immaterial, if the claimant is entitled to anticipate publication of notice to creditors and present his claim prior thereto. And it appears that this may be done. McCann v. Pennie, 100 Cal. 547, 552, 35 P. 158. This being so, it follows that, without regard to the time of publication of notice to creditors, the period of 3 months, as limited by section 1498 of the Code of Civil Procedure, within which the claimant must bring his action upon a rejected claim, begins to run on the date when the executor first gives to the claimant written notice of such rejection.

The judgment is affirmed.

LANCEL v. JOHN L. BENWELL, Inc., et al.

1. Venue 🔑52(4)—Where pleadings presented hardly single issue, motion to change place of trial to promote convenience of witnesses and ends of justice was properly denied (Code Civ. Proc. § 397, subd. 3).

Where nearly every allegation in plaintiff's complaint was admitted because defendants had failed to interpose proper denials, and there was hardly a single issue presented, motion to change place of trial to promote convenience of witnesses and ends of justice, under Code Civ. Proc. § 397, subd. 3, was properly denied.

2. Venue 🔑52(4)—Motion to change place of trial for convenience of witnesses who were unnecessary was properly denied (Code Civ. Proc. § 397, subd. 3).

Where it appeared that many of witnesses designated were cumulative and not necessary, motion to change place of trial to promote convenience of witnesses and ends of justice, under Code Civ. Proc. § 397, subd. 3, was properly denied.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Action by E. P. Lancel against John L. Benwell, Incorporated, and others. From an order denying defendants' motion to change place of trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Dunn, White & Aiken, of Oakland, for appellants.

O. G. Foelker and E. C. Miles, both of Oakland, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. This is an appeal from an order refusing to change the place of trial. The defendants made two motions. The first motion was made under section 395 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That motion was denied, the defendants answered, and thereafter the defendants made a motion to change the place of trial from Alameda county to Los Angeles county to promote the convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice. Code Civ. Proc. § 397, subd. 3. That motion was also denied, and from that order the defendants have appealed under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[1] In passing on such a motion it is of primary importance to ascertain what the issues are, and, having done so, it will then readily appear what witnesses will be necessary for the parties to present their respective cases. An examination of the pleadings discloses that there was hardly a single issue presented. Nearly every allegation in the plaintiff's amended complaint was admitted because the defendants had failed to interpose any proper denials. Fogarty v. Fogarty, 129 Cal. 46, 50, 61 P. 570; Nolan v. Hentig, 138 Cal. 281, 283, 71 P. 440; Scott v. Superior Sunset Oil Co., 144 Cal. 140, 142, 77 P. 817. If the trial judge made no further examination of the record and for the above reasons denied the motion, his ruling would not have been erroneous.

[2] When we go further into the record we find additional support for the ruling made by the trial court. The appellants produced as a part of their showing on the motion the affidavit of John L. Benwell. He enumerates a large number of witnesses, perhaps 100, whom the defendants intend to call. He then proceeds to segregate of that number 30 or thereabouts by whom the defendants expect to prove that the "John L. Benwell No. 3 oil well was owned in fee simple by the John L. Benwell, Inc., a corporation; that more than $50,000 was expended by the defendants in drilling said well; that all of the money received from the sale of certificates for royalty assignments, together with approximately $40,000 additional, was expended on said well in the development thereof; and that all of said witnesses are familiar with the actual working conditions, work performed, and money expended on said property." In another place in the affidavit it is averred that all title papers are of record in the recorder's office in Los Angeles and said records will be introduced in evidence. In another place it is averred that H. E. Foster had complete charge of the drilling operations and of the amount of money expended in drilling. If such latter statements are true, it is patent that the 40 witnesses designated were cumulative and not necessary.

The defendants designate about 30 witnesses by whom they intend to prove that such witnesses "are fully acquainted with the title to said property and the situation of the same with reference to a producing well; that all of said witnesses can testify to the statements made to them at the time certain certificates for royalty assignments were made and offered for sale; that a majority of said witnesses above named are holders of certificates for royalty assignments issued by the defendant corporation." A comparison will disclose that this latter group of witnesses are in part cumulative of the first group on the subject of title, and that the best evidence on that subject was the records of Los Angeles county, copies of which the defendants alleged they intended to produce. It will further appear from such examination that the additional facts to which the latter group will testify are facts that were utterly immaterial to the case on trial.

It will serve no purpose to further extend this opinion in showing the defects in the showing made by the appellants.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. BLACKWELL. (Cr. 947.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 19, 1927.)

1. Witnesses ⚿363(1)—Evidence that criminal charge against state's witness was pending in same court held admissible to show witness' desire to gain district attorney's favor.

In prosecution for unlawfully selling intoxicating liquor, evidence that charge of sale of liquor was pending against state's witness in same court held admissible, not to show truth thereof, but to show that witness was influenced by desire to gain the favor of the district attorney.

2. Criminal law ⚿865(1)—Court's statement that he thought jury should agree held error, as intimating that jury should convict.

Where jury reported that nine jurors were for conviction and three for acquittal, the difference of opinion being due to fact that certain jurors gave credit to witnesses for one side and rest to witnesses for other, held that court's statement, "I think the jury ought to agree on a verdict," was prejudicial error, as plain intimation that court thought that jury should return verdict of guilty.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Charles O. Busick, Judge.

L. T. Blackwell was convicted of unlawfully selling intoxicating liquor, and he appeals. Reversed.

George E. Foote, of Sacramento, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

FINCH, P. J. The defendant Blackwell and one E. N. Weed, were jointly charged with the offense of unlawfully selling intoxicating liquor. Blackwell was tried separately and convicted. He has appealed from the judgment and the order denying a new trial.

The defendant was the proprietor of a drug store at the time of the alleged offense, and Weed was one of the employees in the same store. He became one of the principal witnesses for the prosecution under a promise made by the district attorney to dismiss the case against him if he "would testify against Mr. Blackwell." Weed testified that Mr. and Mrs. Pierce, two informers of the district attorney's office, entered the store, and asked for wine, and that the witness spoke to the defendant about the matter and, "I told him they were in there and asked for it, and he asked me if I knew them, and I told him that they were—must be friends of his brother, and he said it was all right"; that thereafter the witness sold Mr. and Mrs. Pierce a gallon of wine for $6, and immediately informed the defendant of the sale, and that the defendant said, "All right." Mrs. Pierce testified that, subsequent to the time at which she and her husband had first sought to purchase wine from Weed—

> "We went in there; we asked if Mr. Weed was in, and he (defendant) said, 'No, Mr. Weed wasn't there, he was out to supper.' I said, 'He promised to get us some wine.' * * * He said, 'You will get it, all right.' I said, 'How much for the fees?' He said, '$6. Come around tomorrow night, and you will get it.' And we called him up, and the next night Mr. Weed spoke to us, and he told us to come in the following night, and Mr. Blackwell was there again, and Mr. Weed was out to supper again. And so finally we went back the next night and got the liquor for $6, which we gave to Mr. Weed."

Mr. Pierce's testimony is substantially the same as that of his wife. The defendant contradicted the foregoing testimony, and testified that he did not know of the sale or have any part therein.

[1] On cross-examination of Mrs. Pierce the following occurred:

> "Q. Isn't it a fact, Mrs. Pierce, that your arrangement with the district attorney of Sacramento County in reference to securing liquor in Wright Act cases was a certain salary, and the further fact that you, yourself, would not be prosecuted for a sale of intoxicating liquor, a charge that is now pending against you in department No. 4 of the superior court of Sacramento County? * * *
> "Mr. Green (deputy district attorney): I object on the * * * ground it is incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, has no bearing on the case; I object on the further ground it is prejudicial to the witness' character, and Mr. Foote knows he can't do that.
> "The Court: The objection will be overruled. * * * It is admissible to show motive or interest of the witness. * * * A. Why, not that I know of. I went to work for a salary, as far as I know.
> "Q. That was after you had been indicted, though, for the sale of intoxicating liquor, was it not?
> "Mr. Green: Just a minute. Mr. Foote knows he can't prove it, and he is dragging it in by the ears. * * *
> "The Court: The objection will be sustained. * * * The jury will be instructed to disregard the question."

The ruling was erroneous. The fact that a criminal charge against the witness was then pending in the same court was competent evidence, not of the truth thereof, but as tending to show that the testimony of the witness was influenced by a desire to gain the favor of the district attorney by aiding in the conviction of the defendant, and thereby escaping prosecution in her own case. People v. Dillwood, 4 Cal. Unrep. 973, 975, 39 P. 438; People v. Hoffman, 195 Cal. 295, 309, 232 P. 974; People v. Bennett (Cal. App.) 249 P. 20, 27. The cross-examination proceeded further as follows:

> "Q. You yourself have been indicted, have you not, Mrs. Pierce, for a sale of intoxicating liquor in Sacramento county?
> "Mr. Green: I object to it on the ground it is not the best evidence; on the further ground it is incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial; and on the further ground it tends to prejudice the witness.
> "The Court: The objection will be sustained, and the court will admonish counsel to refrain from asking similar questions when the court has already sustained objections to a question, and will admonish you not to ask it. You know, of course, that question is not admissible."

The court's reference to having already sustained an objection (which was not made upon the ground that the best evidence was not offered) to a similar question, and the admonition to refrain from asking similar questions, may well have convinced counsel for defendant that no proof of a pending charge against the witness would be permitted. However, under similar circumstances it has been said:

> "These charges should * * * be proved by the record if objection is made to oral evidence of them." People v. Dillwood, supra.

[2] The record contains the following:

> "The jury retired at 3:45 o'clock p. m., to deliberate upon their verdict, and at 6:30 o'clock p. m. returned into the courtroom, whereupon the following proceedings were had: * * *
> "Foreman H. K. Olmstead: Your honor, after taking three ballots, with the result nine for conviction and three for acquittal, we feel that there is no chance for a settlement or agreement.
> "The Court: What seems to be the difficulty. * * * Any difference about the evidence? * * *
> "Foreman Olmstead: No, the principal difficulty seems to be * * * in the way that the testimony of the different witnesses is believed by the different ones of the jurors. Certain of the jurors give credit to the witnesses for one side, and the rest give credit to the witnesses for the other side, and there seems to be very little chance of reconciling the views of the different members.
> "The Court: Well, I think if the jury has the evidence before them, they are just as competent to determine and agree upon a verdict as any other jury would be. * * * Any of the jurors want any of the evidence to be read?
> "Juror Olmstead: No, there doesn't seem to be any question as to the evidence, although some members of the jury refuse to believe certain witnesses.

"The Court: * * * You have heard the evidence here, and you all understand all of the evidence. I think the jury ought to agree on a verdict. I think you better retire and deliberate further."

Under all the circumstances, there is merit in appellant's contention that the statement of the court, "I think the jury ought to agree on a verdict," amounted to "a plain intimation that the court thought the evidence in the case warranted a verdict of guilty, and that the jury should so find." The foreman had just announced that the jury stood nine to three for conviction, and that some of the jurors "refused to believe certain witnesses." The defendant was the only witness for the defense who gave testimony in denial of his participation in the alleged offense. Three witnesses for the prosecution testified to the defendant's connection with the offense. From the foreman's statement that "some members of the jury refuse to believe certain witnesses," the natural inference is that the three jurors voting for acquittal refused to believe the witnesses for the prosecution rather than that the nine others refused to believe the defendant's testimony. As was said in People v. Kindleberger, 100 Cal. 367, 369, 34 P. 852, 853:

> "We think the jury understood, or at least may have understood, from these unguarded remarks that in the opinion of the judge the defendant was guilty."

And, as said in People v. Conboy, 15 Cal. App. 97, 98, 113 P. 703:

> "These remarks amounted to a plain intimation that the court thought the evidence in the case warranted a verdict of guilty, and that the jury should so find."

The evidence of the defendant's guilt is not of such character as to enable this court to say that the error of the trial court was not prejudicial. The case had been tried twice before. Each trial had resulted in a disagreement of the jury. Weed was not only an accomplice, but he had been promised that the case against him would be dismissed if he "would testify against Mr. Blackwell." If, as the defendant sought to prove, and as may be implied from one of the foregoing questions put to Mrs. Pierce and her answer thereto, she was under indictment for unlawfully selling intoxicating liquor, that fact, together with her employment by the district attorney to gather evidence against like offenders, would greatly affect her and her husband's credibility as witnesses. The other errors of which complaint is made are not likely to be repeated on the retrial of the case, and need not be specifically considered. From an examination of the whole record it appears that justice requires a retrial of the case.

The judgment and the order are reversed.

Under Pen. Code, § 1098, decision of whether motion by one of defendants, jointly charged with another, for a separate trial, shall be granted, rests in sound discretion of trial court.

2. Criminal law ⚷1144(9)—Motion for separate trial will be assumed to have been properly denied, in absence of showing abuse of discretion (Pen. Code, § 1098).

In absence of showing that discretion rested in trial court under Pen. Code, § 1098, for determining motion of one of defendants, jointly charged, for a separate trial, was abused, it will be assumed that motion was properly denied.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Victor R. McLucas, Judge.

Wallie D. Ford was convicted of unlawfully offering to sell narcotics, and he appeals. Affirmed.

M. H. Broyles, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Dep. Atty. Gen., and Warner I. Praul, of Los Angeles, for the People.

HOUSER, J. Defendant was convicted of the offense of unlawfully offering to sell narcotics. He appeals from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

On the hearing of the action the following facts appeared in evidence: A man by the name of Donaldson, who was a codefendant of this appellant, negotiated with a police officer (without knowledge of the latter's official position) for the sale to him of certain narcotics. At that time Donaldson stated to the police officer that the narcotics which he proposed to sell were in the possession of Ford. Thereafter Donaldson and Ford met the police officer for the purpose of concluding the proposed sale, at which time, after the arrangements for the sale had been fully discussed between the parties, Ford discovered that his prospective customer was a police officer, who then arrested both Ford and Donaldson. About three hours later the police officer and two others visited a certain restaurant owned and operated by Ford. In the rear of the place a package rolled in newspaper which contained numerous bottles and vials of narcotics was found. Before the package was opened Ford stated that it was "a bundle of old laundry"; afterward he admitted to the officers that it was the "stuff" that he wished to sell, and stated in detail his connection with the narcotics, how the several articles came into his possession, and his reasons for wishing to sell the same. His codefendant, Donaldson, also made many admissions in the presence of Ford regarding the transaction, including the amount of money which, in accordance with the terms of an arrangement between him and Ford, each of them was to receive from the sale of the drugs—which statements were not denied by Ford.

In the information, which resulted in the conviction of the defendants, Ford and Donaldson were jointly charged with the offense of unlawfully offering to sell narcotics, and in a separate information, on which the defendant was not tried, Ford alone was accused of the offense of unlawful possession of narcotics. Appellant specifies as prejudicial error the denial by the trial court of his motion "for a severance and separate trial" from his codefendant.

[1, 2] Under the provisions of section 1098 of the Penal Code, where two or more defendants are jointly charged with any public offense, the decision of whether a motion made by one of such defendants for a separate trial shall be granted rests in the sound discretion of the trial court. People v. Bringhurst, 192 Cal. 748, 221 P. 897; People v. Erno, 195 Cal. 272, 232 P. 710; People v. Booth, 72 Cal. App. 160, 236 P. 987; People v. Anderson, 59 Cal. App. 408, 211 P. 254; People v. Rogers, 60 Cal. App. 177, 212 P. 412; People v. Swoape (Cal. App.) 242 P. 1067; People v. Walden (Cal. App.) 243 P. 25; People v. Walsh (Cal. App.) 243 P. 31; People v. Smith (Cal. App.) 243 P. 882. No reasons are assigned nor authorities cited by appellant which would tend to show that the discretion thus vested in the trial court on the hearing of the instant action was abused. In such circumstances it must be assumed that the motion was properly denied.

[3] It is next urged by appellant that the trial court erred to the prejudice of defendant, Ford, in denying his motion for a "directed verdict" for the reason, first, that at the time of his arrest no narcotics were found on his person. Reliance for such position by appellant is placed in the case of People v. Herbert, 59 Cal. App. 158, 210 P. 276. In that case the defendant was charged with unlawful possession of morphine. The evidence showed that at the time of his arrest the arresting officer felt the defendant "make a motion as if throwing something away, and an object was heard to drop upon the street pavement." Upon investigation several packages of morphine and cocaine were found from 8 to 15 feet from where the defendant and the officer were standing. The defendant was convicted; and on appeal he urged that the evidence was insufficient to show possession in the defendant of the drugs in question, for the alleged reason that it must have been shown that possession by the defendant was personal and not constructive. The court said that an instruction given by the trial court to the effect that "possession must have been an immediate and exclusive possession and one under the dominion and control of defendant," fully and correctly stated the law on the subject. However, the judgment was affirmed, which in its effect was an indication that the court regarded the defendant as having been in the immediate and exclusive possession of narcotics which were not on his person, and which, although from 8 to 15 feet away from him at the time of his arrest, were nevertheless under his dominion and control. Furthermore, that case is distinguishable from the instant case in that the charge in the case relied upon by appellant was that of possession, while in the instant case the accusation against defendant is that he did unlawfully and feloniously "offer to sell." The question, therefore, of possession, is not necessarily here involved.

Appellant assigns as a second reason why error was committed by the trial court in denying defendant's motion for a "directed verdict" the fact that all negotiations for the sale of the narcotics in question had been carried on by the arresting officer with defendant Donaldson before the arresting officer had met Ford; that the trial court instructed the jury "that any statements made by Donaldson to the officer in the absence of Ford should not be received as evidence against appellant, Ford"; and that "but for the statements of defendant Donaldson the corpus delicti had not been established against appellant."

[4] On examination of the record herein it appears that the instruction of the trial court to which appellant refers in substance was that the statement made by one defendant in the absence of the other defendant and subsequent to the alleged offense was not admissible as evidence against the defendant who was not present. The attention of this court is not directed to any statements alleged to have been made by Donaldson after the offense was committed which were not in the presence of defendant Ford. It is made clear by a host of authorities that after the relationship between the two defendants had been established, any incriminating statements made by either of them before the offense was committed were admissible in evidence. It therefore follows that the motion made by defendant on the ground stated for a "directed verdict" was properly denied by the trial court.

[5] Appellant also contends that the trial court erred in denying defendant's motion to strike out all testimony having reference to a "partnership" between Donaldson and Ford. The testimony to which appellant refers is that given by the arresting officer regarding conversations between him and Donaldson before the arrest was made, as well as what took place and what was said by him, Donaldson, and Ford at the time the arrest was made. It appears that during such alleged conversations the arresting officer and Donaldson frequently referred to Donaldson as being Ford's "partner." If the evidence offered by the prosecution was believed by the jury (and the result of the trial would indicate that such was the case), a relationship approximating a partnership (especially in the sense in which such term is used outside of the legal profession) actually existed between Donaldson and Ford; hence no harm resulted. But in any event the evidence was admissible and the motion was properly denied, for the reason that the officer was only narrating alleged conversation which had occurred between him and the defendants or one of them; the officer did not pretend to state as a fact that a partnership existed between the two defendants.

[6] Appellant also contends that error was committed by the trial court in that in the course of the trial, over defendant's objection, the several bottles and vials containing the drugs, together with their newspaper covering, which were found by the officers in the rear of the place of business of defendant, Ford, were admitted in evidence. The reason suggested by appellant for his objection to such evidence is that the discovery of the said articles was too remote in time and that no connection was ascertainable between such articles and the offense for which defendant was on trial. It should be remembered that defendant was charged with the crime of unlawfully offering to sell narcotics. The time elapsing between his alleged offer to sell and the discovery of the drugs at his place of business was about three hours. In such circumstances we see no merit in the suggestion that the time was too remote; and the materiality of the unlawful possession of the narcotics by defendant is apparent in that such possession of the forbidden drugs tended to corroborate the testimony of the police officer as to defendant's offer to sell the same.

Appellant also specifies further alleged error committed by the trial court with reference to the refusal to admit in evidence certain testimony given by defendant, Ford, at his preliminary examination. Nothing other than the bare specification of error is submitted by appellant which would in any way tend to show the materiality of the proffered evidence, nor why or in what manner defendant suffered any prejudice by reason of its rejection. It must therefore be concluded that the appellant has no confidence in this point and that it has been abandoned by him.

No prejudicial error appearing in the record, it is ordered that the judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial be and they are affirmed.

Action for divorce by Hattie Heinkel Bauer against Jeffrey L. Bauer. Judgment for plaintiff, and the defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Cooley & Gallagher and Lasher B. Gallagher, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Myron Harris and John Jewett Earle, both of Oakland, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendant to obtain a divorce based on the alleged cruelty of the defendant. The summons and complaint were served on the defendant, and, as he failed to appear, his default was entered. The plaintiff's evidence was taken before a commissioner, and thereafter, on June 21, 1923, an interlocutory decree was rendered, in which it was recited that a divorce ought to be granted to the plaintiff, and that she was entitled to a divorce on the ground of defendant's extreme cruelty to her, and "that defendant pay to plaintiff as a suitable allowance for her support and maintenance the sum of $150 on the 1st day of July, 1923, and the sum of $150 on the first day of each and every month thereafter, for the term of six years, and the sum of $100 on the first day of each and every month thereafter." Thereafter no other proceedings were had until the 23d day of June, 1924. At that time, without taking any other testimony, and basing its action solely upon the testimony theretofore taken, the trial court, on the motion of the plaintiff, entered a final decree, among other things, as follows:

"And it is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that defendant pay to plaintiff as a suitable allowance for her support and maintenance the sum of $150 on the first day of July, 1924, and the sum of $150 on the first day of each and every month thereafter for the term of five years, and the sum of $100 on the first day of each and every month thereafter."

[1-3] Thereafter, on the 15th day of July, 1924, the defendant filed a notice of appeal, quoting the paragraph which we have just quoted, and stating that he appealed from that portion of the judgment. Thereafter, on the 24th day of September, 1924, the defendant filed a bill of exceptions, which purports to contain the proceedings from the 4th day of June, 1923, down to and including the final decree hereinabove referred to. At this time the appellant contends: (a) The complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against the defendant; (b) the complaint does not state facts sufficient to warrant the making of any allowance to plaintiff for support; (c) the proof was and is insufficient to authorize the granting of a decree for any offense of defendant; and (d) there is no basis in the record upon which a provision for support can be predicated. The foregoing contentions, as shown by the record before us, were all contained within the record in so far as it purports to be an attack on the interlocutory decree. However, the interlocutory decree was itself an appealable order. Civ. Code, § 132. Having failed to appeal from that order, the defendant may not review that order on an appeal from the final judgment. Code Civ. Proc. § 956; Deyoe v. Superior Court, 140 Cal. 476, 486, 74 P. 28, 98 Am. St. Rep. 73; 2 Cal. Jur. p. 826. But, on the other hand, the scope of the review on such appeal will be confined to such matters as have intervened since the rendition of the interlocutory decree. Gutierrez v. Hebberd, 106 Cal. 167, 168, 39 P. 529, 935. Moreover, as the appeal was not from the whole judgment, but was from only a part of the judgment, this court has no power "to review any part of the judgment, except the part to which the appeal is directed. * * *" G. Ganahl Lumber Co. v. Weinsveig, 168 Cal. 664, 667, 143 P. 1025, 1027. Conceding without deciding, that the appellant is entitled on such an appeal to contend that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to support an award of alimony, this appellant does not show that he is entitled to that relief. He does not appeal from the judgment, but appeals merely from the property award. Evidently he so framed his notice of appeal through an abundance of precaution. In other words, he wants the divorce decree to stand, but he is attacking solely the property award. As to the property rights of the parties the complaint is not insufficient. It contains the allegations "that defendant is in receipt of a monthly salary of $300 per month; that the sum of $150 is a reasonable sum per month to be allowed her for alimony and for her support for the next six years; and the sum of $100 is a reasonable sum per month to be allowed her thereafter as alimony for her support."

Assuming, solely for the purposes of this case, that we have the right to examine the evidence taken before the referee, as well as the other facts contained in the bill of exceptions, it appears that on the trial the plaintiff introduced evidence supporting all the allegations concerning the property rights of the parties. It further appears that the terms of the interlocutory decree and of the final decree on the subject of the property rights were agreed to by the parties, and that the trial court merely adopted the provisions of such agreement, and made it a part of the decree. In the oral argument the appellant claimed that the trial court did not examine into "the circumstances of the parties respectively." The record wholly fails to sustain the claim.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

In action by bus passenger for injuries received as result of stage running into ditch, where negligence was alleged generally and it was doubtful whether cause of injury was defendant's negligence, instruction as to res ipsa loquitur doctrine was proper.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by Mary Horney against E. B. Dillingham and another, copartners doing business as the Long Beach Whittier Stage Line. Defendants appeal from the judgment for plaintiff. Affirmed.

B. P. Gibbs and W. I. Gilbert, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Swaffield & Swaffield and Russell H. Pray, all of Long Beach, for respondent.

CASHIN, J. An appeal by defendants from a judgment entered on a verdict for the plaintiff in an action to recover damages for personal injuries. The appeal is presented on the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions.

Defendants were common carriers operating automobile stages between the cities of Whittier and Long Beach. The plaintiff, on the night of the accident, was a passenger for hire on one of the stages mentioned, and was being transported from the town of Bellflower to the city of Long Beach.

The complaint alleged that, while the stage was passing along the route mentioned, and while plaintiff was in the exercise of due care, the defendants "so carelessly and negligently managed said stage or automobile bus that, as a result of such negligence and carelessness, said automobile bus was run off the road into a ditch at the side of the main highway," causing the physical injuries of which plaintiff complains, to her damage in the sum alleged. These allegations were denied by defendants, who, as a special defense, alleged that, the night of the accident "being dark and rainy, the plaintiff, knowing the lights on the stage to be poor, was guilty of negligence proximately contributing to her injuries by continuing as a passenger therein."

As grounds for reversal it is urged that the court erred in instructing the jury as to the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, which defendants contend was inapplicable in view of the allegations of the complaint and the facts shown by the evidence; and, further, that the only conclusion reasonably to be drawn from the evidence supports the defense of contributory negligence.

In addition to the instructions mentioned, the jury was instructed that the burden of proving negligence by a preponderance of the evidence rests upon the party alleging it.

The accident occurred between 8 and 9 p. m. of January 1, 1922. It was shown that the stage left Bellflower at about 8 p. m. and that the night was dark and stormy. The plaintiff testified that when she boarded the stage the headlights were burning, and that she noticed nothing unusual in their condition; that, after the stage started, the driver mentioned that the lights were failing; that the stage was stopped at a filling station about three-quarters of a mile beyond Bellflower for the purpose of procuring new batteries, but, the station being closed, the stage then proceeded at a speed of between 15 and 18 miles per hour to a point 2 miles further on, where the accident happened, causing her injuries. The plaintiff further testified that she was unable to see the road ahead by means of the lights of the stage, and, though she believed there was risk in proceeding, she made no protest. The driver, who was called as a witness for the plaintiff, testified that, while the lights were failing, he was able by that means to see the road ahead for a distance of 20 feet, which condition continued to the point of the accident; that in approaching that point he found the paved roadway to be covered with water to a depth of three or four inches for a distance of about 200 feet, further testifying that he had previously passed over the submerged portion of the roadway and knew that the water was there; that shortly before reaching the point where the accident occurred the right front wheel of the stage left the pavement, and later, as the stage proceeded, sank into a recently filled ditch about 2 feet to the right, causing the stage to partially overturn. This witness further testified that one of the springs of the automobile broke before the point of the accident was reached, and that for this reason he was unable to turn the stage back on the pavement.

[1] In view of this testimony the questions whether due care was used in the operation of the stage and by plaintiff in continuing as a passenger therein without protest, the lights being in the condition as testified by the driver, were for the jury, and their verdict thereon was reasonably supported.

[2] Appellants offered no evidence as to the cause of the accident other than testimony as to the condition in which the stage was later found; nor is it contended by them that the evidence adduced by plaintiff was insufficient to support the inference that the accident was due to the negligence of the driver. It is the rule that, where the complaint alleges specifically the negligent acts or omissions complained of, the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur does not apply, and this for the reason that in such case the plaintiff can recover only upon proof of one or more of the specific acts or omissions alleged (Marovich v. Central Cal. T. Co., 191 Cal. 295, 216 P. 595), and, as impliedly held in Connor v. Atchison, etc., Ry. Co., 189 Cal. 1, 207 P. 378, 26 A. L. R. 1462, when the evidence adduced by the plaintiff shows the cause of the accident the question of negligence is one to be determined by the jury, without reference to the prima facie case resulting from the mere happening of the accident. In the instant case negligence was alleged generally (Champagne v Hamburger & Sons, 169 Cal. 683, 147 P. 954; Sharpless v. Pantages, 178 Cal. 122, 172 P. 384; Carnahan v. Motor Transit Co., 65 Cal. App. 402, 408, 224 P. 143); and, while certain facts connected with the accident appear from the testimony, the cause—whether a want of due care on the part of the driver, defects in the construction or mechanism of the stage which led to a loss of control, or the physical condition of the roadway—was not clearly or directly shown. In Connor v. Atchison, etc., Ry. Co., supra, the court said:

"Where the explanation leaves it doubtful as to whether or not the ultimate cause of the injury is the negligence of the party charged, it is proper to instruct the jury as to the res ipsa loquitur doctrine."

And such is the rule as stated in effect in the following cases: Lippert et al. v. Pacific Sugar Corporation, 33 Cal. App. 198, 208, 164 P. 810; Soto v. Spring Valley Water Co., 39 Cal. App. 187, 178 P. 305—it being further held in the cases last cited and in Atkinson v. United Railroads, 71 Cal. App. 82, 234 P. 863, that the plaintiff, by charging specific acts of negligence, is not as to the particular acts alleged thereby deprived of the benefit of the doctrine.

We are satisfied, in view of the pleadings and the evidence, that the instructions complained of were proper.

The judgment is affirmed.

STITZINGER v. TRUITT et al. (Civ. 5575.)★

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 26, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 25, 1927.)

1. Mines and minerals 🔑101—Members of oil syndicate held estopped by conduct from setting up manager's limitation of authority as defense to action on contract to erect derrick.

Members of oil syndicate held estopped from setting up limitation of authority of manager stipulated in articles of syndicate as defense to action for money due on contract to erect derrick, where they used its progressing construction as selling point in sale of units.

2. Mines and minerals 🔑101—Members of oil syndicate, alleged to be joint-stock company, are liable as partners.

Where oil syndicate, alleged to be joint-stock company, did not comply with any statute providing for joint-stock companies or any kind of special partnership, its members were liable as partners, since joint-stock companies are regarded as commercial partnerships, in absence of statute.

3. Mines and minerals 🔑101—Liability of members of oil syndicate doing business under associate name is same as that of partners (Code Civ. Proc. § 388).

Liability of members of association doing business under associate name is same as that of general copartners, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 388.

4. Mines and minerals 🔑101—Articles of oil syndicate limiting manager's expenditure held not binding on creditors without notice.

Provision in articles of oil syndicate, prohibiting manager's expenditure of more than $500 without previous consent of trustees, held not binding on third parties or creditors without notice.

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ira F. Thompson, Judge.

Action by B. L. Stitzinger against Clayton G. Truitt and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants Harry Miller and another appeal. Affirmed.

Anderson & Anderson and Victor T. Watkins, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

McWhinney & Clock, of Long Beach, for respondent.

KOFORD, P. J. Plaintiff recovered judgment for $5,750 for the construction of an oil well derrick. Two only of the defendants appeal—Miller and Ragos. They were personally served with sommons. The points raised by these appellants are, in general, that the facts surrounding the making of the contract for the erection of the derrick were such, and the nature of the written articles forming the syndicate was such that no personal judgment should have been given against them.

The amended complaint alleges that the syndicate is a business trust. The joint answer of these appellants and the syndicate is equivocal, denying that the syndicate is other than the articles constitute it. The court finds that defendants Truitt, Miller, and Ragos organized the syndicate "which was purported to be a trust, but which was in truth and in fact a copartnership, of which the said three named defendants were the copartners."

Other findings of the court follow: That the articles provided that the business and property of the syndicate should be managed by a board of three trustees. That Miller, Ragos, and Truitt, each owner and holder of two units or shares in the syndicate, were elected trustees, and they were respectively chairman, secretary-treasurer and manager. That the articles provided that no expenditure over $500 should be allowed or approved without the previous consent of the trustees. Articles 12 and 17. "That contrary to said provision, but for and on behalf of said copartnership, and within the scope of his authority as the manager and a copartner, defendant Truitt made * * * the contract with plaintiff, which contract was necessary for the copartnership to carry out the terms of the oil and gas lease taken by the copartnership * * * (the syndicate)." That said contract was made by Truitt as member and manager of said copartnership, for its best interests, in its name, and on its behalf, but without the knowledge or consent of Miller or Ragos. That plaintiff had no knowledge of this provision of the articles, nor of any agreement or understanding whereby the authority of Truitt was limited; but that plaintiff was informed by Truitt that Miller and Ragos had authorized him to contract for and to go ahead with the construction of the derrick. That plaintiff relied on these statements, made the contract, and constructed and completed the derrick in good faith and without knowledge that such was without the knowledge or consent of appellants. That appellants, after knowing of the beginning of the erection of the derrick, advertised publicly for the sale of units, and in doing so put forward the statement that the lumber was on the ground and that a derrick was going up. That in an application to the corporation commissioner and to various prospective purchasers of units at the leased premises, at different times between February 18th and April 1st, appellants represented that the derrick had been paid for and was the property of the syndicate.

[1] The appellants claim they are not liable, because the manager exceeded his power as defined in the articles respecting expenditures in excess of $500. Whatever protection against debts there may or may not have been to the unit owners in general by virtue of this provision, we think that, as far as these two appellants are concerned, they are estopped from setting up this defense to the plaintiff's claim by their conduct in accepting the benefits of the contract and allowing the derrick to go up on the leased land. Erecting the derrick was the only possible thing for the syndicate to do, if it was to accomplish anything at all. The conduct of these appellants in standing on the leased premises, in sight of the derrick and using the fact of its progressing construction as a selling point, would be sufficient to lead plaintiff to believe the contract was fully authorized by them.

[2, 3] Respondent cites numerous authorities to the effect that the articles in question created a partnership and not a trust. It is pointed out that, when the members of a so-called business trust reserve to themselves such a large measure of power and control over the trustees as is done in this case, then the trustees are merely agents of the members and the members are personally liable for debts as general partners. Appellants have not replied to these authorities, having filed no closing brief; but in their opening brief appellants claim the articles constitute a joint-stock company. "At common law joint-stock companies were regarded as commercial partnerships, and in the absence of express provisions, statutory or otherwise, the rights and liabilities of their members are to be determined by substantially the same rules." 33 C. J. 880, citing Bullard v. Kinney, 10 Cal. 60; Flint v. Cadman, 247 Mass. 463, 142 N. E. 256. "Except in so far as such liability may be limited by statute, or by special agreement with those dealing with the association, the stockholders of a joint-stock company are personally liable for the debts and obligations of the company, precisely as general partners are liable for the debts of the firm, and liability to creditors is not changed by the fact that the form of the association was intended to give the association the attributes of a corporation." 33 C. J. 889.

There is no claim or pretense here that the syndicate complied with any statute providing for a joint-stock company or for any kind of a special partnership. For this reason, then, the appellants would be liable as general copartners under the general rule; also their liability in such case is of the same nature whether they be regarded as general copartners or merely as members of an association doing business under an associate name. Leake v. City of Venice, 50 Cal. App. 462, 465, 195 P. 440; Code Civ. Proc. § 388.

[4] The question here is not so much what the association is as whether the appellants are liable on any of the several theories of the court's findings. There is also the court's finding, which is supported by the evidence, that the plaintiff had no notice of the asserted limitation on the manager's power. Whatever force the provision might have amongst the members as between themselves in any of the considered organizations, it would not be binding on third parties or creditors having no notice. 33 C. J. 889; Neville v. Gifford, 242 Mass. 124, 136 N. E. 160; Webster v. Utopia Confectionery (Tex. Civ. App.) 254 S. W. 123; Graham Hotel Corp. v. Leader (Tex. Civ. App.) 241 S. W. 700.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is affirmed.

STANTON et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (two cases). (Civ. 5491, 5492). ★

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Feb. 19, 1927. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court April 18, 1927.)

1. Judgment 🔑360—Statute relating to vacating judgment based on findings of fact by court, or special verdict, does not authorize vacating on ground of inadvertence (Code Civ. Proc. § 663).

Code Civ. Proc. § 663, providing that judgment, when based on findings of fact made by court, or special verdict by jury, may be set aside and vacated for erroneous conclusion of law and judgment inconsistent with verdict, does not authorize setting aside of judgment upon ground of inadvertence.

2. Judgment 🔑397—Where orders vacating judgments were made, and new judgments were not then rendered, vacating orders were null (Code Civ. Proc. § 663; § 663a, as added by St. 1915, p. 203).

Where orders vacating judgments were made July 30th, and new judgments were not made nor signed until September 8th following and conclusions of law were not amended or corrected, vacating orders were nullities since, under Code Civ. Proc. § 663 and section 663a, as added by St. 1915, p. 203, only order within power of court was one setting aside judgment and directing as part of same order entry of another judgment.

3. Judgment 🔑388—Where notice of motion to vacate judgments did not specify wherein conclusions of law and findings of fact were inconsistent, court could not vacate judgments (Code Civ. Proc. § 663; § 663a, as added by St. 1915, p. 203).

Where notice of motion to set aside judgments under Code Civ. Proc. § 663, and section 663a, as added by St. 1915, p. 203, did not specify any particular in which conclusions of law and findings of fact were inconsistent, such motions amounted to nothing more than abortive attacks on judgments, and there was nothing before trial court upon which to base order vacating judgments.

4. Judgment 🔑360—Judgment is not "conclusion of law" within meaning of statutes relating to vacating judgments (Code Civ. Proc. § 663; § 663a, as added by St. 1915, p. 203).

Judgment is not "conclusion of law" within meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 663, and section 663a, as added by St. 1915, p. 203, relating to vacating judgments, and does not supersede any conclusion of law in decision, since, upon motion to vacate judgment under such statutes, whether judgment is set aside depends wholly upon whether conclusions of law are consistent with findings of fact.

5. Judgment 🔑388—Notice of motion to vacate judgment, stating grounds, not named in statute, was ineffective to confer jurisdiction (Code Civ. Proc. § 663; § 663a, as added by St. 1915, p. 203).

Notice of motion to vacate judgment stating some grounds, but none of those named in Code Civ. Proc. § 663, and section 663a, as added by St. 1915, p. 203, as being basis for relief sought, was as ineffective to confer jurisdiction on court to vacate judgment as though no ground had been specified.

6. Certiorari 🔑64(1)—On all questions except power to act, rulings of superior court are conclusive on certiorari.

Orders and rulings of superior court are final and conclusive on every question except that of power to act when attempted to be controverted in certiorari proceedings.

Application by Fannie Stanton, as executrix of the estate of A. A. Stanton, deceased, and Fannie Stanton, individually, for writ of review to annul orders of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Hugh J. Crawford, Judge, vacating judgments in two separate actions, and entering other and different judgments in lieu thereof. Orders and judgments annulled.

Kemper Campbell and A. W. Sorenson, both of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

★Superseded by opinion of Supreme Court 261 P. 1001.

Montgomery, Stick, Moerdyke & Gibson, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CRAIG, J. These proceedings are instituted by the petitioners for the purpose of reviewing certain orders of the superior court of Los Angeles county setting aside the respective judgments in two separate actions, orders directing the entry of other judgments in lieu thereof, and such substituted judgments.

It appears that on November 9, 1925, Anna Grazide Alvarado and William P. Alvarado, her husband, commenced an action in said superior court, numbered 182980, wherein it was alleged that the plaintiffs were the owners of certain real property which they had theretofore leased to A. A. Stanton for oil-drilling purposes; that the defendants had failed to perform the conditions of such lease, and that the same had therefore been terminated; and the plaintiffs prayed for the possession of all the leased property, and for damages. The defendants answered, and also filed a cross-complaint by which they alleged that they were lawfully in possession of and entitled to retain 20 acres of the land above mentioned under an oral lease; that the plaintiffs had failed and refused to perform the conditions of such parol contract, as a result of which the cross-complainants had been damaged in the sum of $100,000, for which they in turn prayed judgment.

On March 13, 1926, Alvarado and wife filed a second suit in the superior court of the same county against the same defendants, wherein it was alleged that the latter claimed some interest in said property, and prayed a decree quieting title thereto. In such second proceeding, the answering defendants pleaded the pendency of another action involving the same cause, asserted a leasehold interest in 20 acres of the property described by the plaintiffs, and disclaimed any interest in the remainder. Counsel stipulated, and the trial court ordered, that the cross-complaint and the answer thereto in the first action should serve as such in both cases.

On April 23, 1926, it was stipulated by the respective counsel and ordered by the trial court that the two cases be consolidated and tried together. On the last-mentioned date evidence was introduced, and judgment was ordered "for defendants for $15,000 and specific performance." Findings of fact, conclusions of law, and judgment were made in case No. 182980 that the defendant Stanton "have, hold, and retain 20 acres" of said lands, and awarded to Stanton damages in the sum of $15,000, and directed that the plaintiff specifically perform the verbal lease. At the same time findings of fact, conclusions of law, and judgment were made in case No. 191794, reciting and decreeing that the defendant was entitled to, and that the plaintiffs be required to pay to Stanton, damages in the sum of $15,000, and specifically perform such lease. In this latter proceeding it was found that another action was pending between the same parties and involving the same cause of action.

The plaintiffs on July 1, 1926, served and filed in each suit a notice of intention to move that the judgment be vacated and for the entry of another and different judgment. Such motions were presented together on July 21, 1926, and on July 30, 1926, each was granted. In lieu of the original judgments, the trial court on September 8, 1926, decreed in the first action that plaintiffs' title be quieted to all of the property, except 20 acres constituting the verbal leasehold interest of Stanton, and in the second suit it was adjudged that "defendants and cross-complainants have and recover from plaintiffs and cross-defendants $7,500," less the amount of a counterclaim for $850. The findings and conclusions of law in each case were allowed to stand, however, as originally made. In brief, as the record is here presented, notwithstanding the fact that the two cases were consolidated, the trial court appears to find from the facts and to conclude as a matter of law that the defendants are entitled to $15,000 damages in each case, whereas by its judgments the defendants are awarded one-half such amount in one case, and nothing in the other.

The defendant, A. A. Stanton, since deceased, is substituted by his widow, Fannie Stanton, as executrix of his estate, and she prosecutes this proceeding individually and as such representative, alleging that the trial court exceeded its jurisdiction in vacating the original judgments, and in rendering others in their stead.

Our statutes provide two modes of procedure by which, according to the existing circumstances, judgments may be vacated. Section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure permits relief to a party or his legal representative from a judgment taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect. The motions were not based upon any of these grounds. Section 663 of the same Code provides that:

> "A judgment or decree of a superior court, when based upon findings of fact made by the court, or the special verdict of a jury, may, upon motion of the party aggrieved, be set aside and vacated by the same court, and another and different judgment entered, for either of the following causes materially affecting the substantial rights of such party and entitling him to a different judgment: 1. Incorrect or erroneous conclusions of law not consistent with or not supported by the findings of fact; and in such case when the judgment is set aside, the conclusions of law shall be amended and corrected. 2. A judgment or decree not consistent with or not supported by the special verdict."

[1] This latter section does not authorize the setting aside of a judgment upon the ground of inadvertence (Dolan v. Superior Court, 47 Cal. App. 235, 190 P. 469), nor did the respondents herein base their motions upon that ground. In considering the question as to the validity of the orders vacating the original judgments, we are therefore solely concerned with a consideration of the procedural requirements contained in section 663 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Such motions must be supported by notice "specifying the particulars in which the conclusions of law are not consistent with the findings of fact," as required by section 663a of the Code of Civil Procedure, which section was added by amendment in 1915 (St. 1915, p. 203). The motions upon which the orders vacating the judgments were founded specified in each instance that (1) the judgment contained a copy of the lease, "many of the terms of which are not set forth or provided for in said findings of fact"; (2) that the judgment therefore attempts to make a lease for the defendants by order of court; (3) that the lease contained in the judgment is not the same as that specified in the findings; (4) that the judgment attempts to specifically enforce a lease not referred to in said findings, specifications 5 and 6 state the same grounds in other terms; (7) that the judgment "set forth a restraining order and an injunction against the plaintiffs and cross-defendants, and that there is no provision in said findings of fact for such injunction or restraining order"; and (8) "that said judgment is against law."

[2] As we have seen, the motions to vacate the judgments were presented on July 21, orders granting them and directing the entry of new judgments were made on July 30, though the latter were not made nor signed until September 8, 1926, and the conclusions of law were not amended or corrected. That such vacating orders were nullities is obvious. In Dolan v. Superior Court, supra, it was held that sections 663 and 663a do not permit two orders to be made, one setting aside the judgment and another at a later date directing the entry of a different one, but that:

> "If on the motion it appears to the court that the findings require the judgment to be set aside, it must also appear what conclusions of law should be made on the facts, and the only order within the power of the court under these circumstances is one setting aside the judgment and directing as a part of the same order the entry of another judgment. It is from such an order only that an appeal is provided. An order merely setting aside the judgment and leaving the case undetermined is void and not merely erroneous."

[3] It will be observed that the proponents of such motions did not specify any particular in which the conclusions of law and the findings of fact were inconsistent; in fact, the notices fail to mention the conclusions of law. These purported motions, therefore, amounted to nothing more than abortive attacks upon the judgments themselves, and, since this procedure is not sanctioned by our statutes, there was nothing before the trial court upon which to base the action taken.

[4] Respondents argue that the judgment is the "real conclusion of law," and supersedes any conclusion of law in the decision. Such is the rule upon an appeal from the judgment, but upon a motion under sections 663 and 663a of the Code of Civil Procedure, the conclusions of law, as evidenced by those sections, are the center of attack. In the latter instance the judgment is sustained or set aside, as the case may be, wholly depending upon the decision as to whether or not the conclusions of law are, or are not, consistent with the findings of fact. If the order be granted, the setting aside of the judgment necessarily follows, as well as the entry of a new one, but this results from the fact that the conclusions of law are inconsistent with the findings of fact. Both of the decisions cited by respondents were upon appealed cases. The respective judgments were affirmed, but in neither case was it stated what the result might have been, had the judgment and conclusions of law been contrary to the findings of fact.

[5] It is true, as stated in Roberts v. Hall, 147 Cal. 434, 82 P. 66, that upon an appeal, where the contention is that the judgment is not supported by the findings, the conclusions of law are superseded by the judgment, and hence it is of no consequence that the conclusions do not support the judgment or have not been made to conform to the findings. But an entirely different question is presented here. The complaint is that the notice of motion to vacate was defective. That such a notice is essential and jurisdictional is clear. That a failure of the notice to state any ground for the granting of the motion would be equally fatal is also obvious. It follows that, even though a notice may state some ground, but none of those named in the statute as being the basis for the relief sought, the notice is as ineffective as though no ground had been specified.

An examination of the opinion in Roberts v. Hall, supra, shows that the complaint there made by the appellant was "that the 'conclusions of law' as stated in the decision of the court do not warrant all the provisions of the judgment as to the terms of the injunction awarded." Obviously the question presented here was not involved. In Wilkinson v. Grant, 46 Cal. App. 429, 189 P. 319, the other case cited by respondents, appeals were taken from judgments entered after motions to set aside other judgments had been granted. No question was raised as to the sufficiency of the notices of the motions, nor could there be upon appeals from the judgments. An appeal is authorized to be taken from an order setting aside a judgment originally entered, and upon such appeal the sufficiency of the grounds set forth in the notice might be decided; but in neither of the cases just mentioned was an appeal taken from such order nor the sufficiency of the notice made a ground of complaint.

[6] Respondents also argue at length questions which constitute subjects of appeal only. On every question except that of power to act the orders and rulings of the superior court are final and conclusive when attempted to be controverted in certiorari proceedings. Fleming v. Superior Court, 196 Cal. 344, 238 P. 88.

The orders vacating the judgments and directing the entry of different judgments in lieu thereof, and said last-named judgments, are annulled.

COOMBS v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al. (Civ. 5411.) ★

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Feb. 25, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 28, 1927.)

1. Master and servant ⚷417(5)—Findings of Industrial Commission held reviewable as part of decision (Workmen's Compensation Act 1917, §§ 20, 67; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 632, 633).

Findings of Industrial Accident Commission in proceedings under Workmen's Compensation Act 1917 (Deering's Gen. Laws [1923 Ed.] Act 4749), held part of decision subject to review under section 67, in view of general rule of practice that court's decision consists of written findings of fact and conclusions of law, and section 20, which provides, after final hearing, commission shall make and file its findings upon all questions involved, and its award stating determination as to parties' rights; language used being similar to Code Civ. Proc. §§ 632, 633, relating to statement of facts on court's decision.

2. Master and servant ⚷417(7)—Commission's findings, without support of testimony are reviewable (Workmen's Compensation Act, 1917, § 67).

Workmen's Compensation Act 1917, § 67 (Deering's Gen. Laws [1923 Ed.] Act 4749), providing findings and conclusions of commission on questions of fact shall be conclusive and not subject to review merely, makes findings conclusive, where commission has not exceeded its jurisdiction by making finding without support of testimony.

Certiorari to Review Order of Industrial Accident Commission.

On petition for rehearing. Denied.

For original opinion, see 252 P. 1069.

John A. Rush, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

THOMPSON, J. [1] In denying the petition for rehearing we deem it expedient to say that the language used by the other division of this court in Coombs v. Industrial Accident Commission (Cal. App.) 245 P. 445, "Whether a finding of fact can be annulled where the award is not involved is doubtful, as section 67, referring to review by the courts, provides only for review of orders, rules, regulations, decisions, and awards, and not findings of fact which are expressly made not subject to review," does not receive our approval. It has long been the rule in our practice that the decision of a court consists of written findings of fact and conclusions of law, which decision constitutes the foundation for the judgment. By section 20 of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1917 (Deering's General Laws [1923 Ed.] p. 1710), we find the same practice outlined in the provisions as follows:

> "After final hearing by the commission, it shall, within thirty days, make and file (1) its findings upon all facts involved in the controversy, and (2) its award which shall state its determination as to the rights of the parties."

[2] The similarity of the provision to sections 632 and 633 of the Code of Civil Procedure is indicative of an intent upon the part of the Legislature, in using the word decision, to designate the decision or the findings of the commission on questions of fact. That portion of section 67 of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act which says that "the findings and conclusions of the commission on questions of fact shall be conclusive and final and shall not be subject to review" simply means that the findings of the commission are conclusive, where the commission has not exceeded its jurisdiction by making a finding without the support of testimony. Clapps P. Station v. Industrial Accident Commission, 51 Cal. App. 624, 627, 197 P. 369.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

PEOPLE ex rel. CITY OF TURLOCK v. TURLOCK HOME TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH CO. (Sac. 3771.)

1. Telegraphs and telephones 🔑10(16)—Telephone company's franchise from city may be forfeited for nonpayment of tax notwithstanding statutory right to use streets (Broughton Act, § 3; Civ. Code, § 536).

The right given telephone companies by Civ. Code, § 536, to use streets, even if such section be still in force, does not prevent maintenance of action to have franchise given company by city declared forfeited under Broughton Act, § 3 (St. 1905, p. 777), for nonpayment to city of the required annual franchise tax; at least where complaint does not justify conclusion that company is exercising no rights under the franchise other than those given it by the Code.

2. Forfeitures 🔑5—Complaint and proof must be positive and explicit for declaration of forfeiture.

Forfeitures are never favored by the courts, and in order to declare forfeiture the allegations of the complaint and the proofs must be positive and explicit.

3. Telegraphs and telephones 🔑10(16)—Complaint for forfeiture of franchise for nonpayment of franchise tax held not to authorize inference of receipt of earnings from switch services.

Complaint for forfeiture of franchise of telephone company for nonpayment of annual franchise tax of percentage of gross receipts, by allegation that company has paid the tax on all earnings received by it, except on earnings received from switch services, does not authorize inference that any earnings have been received from such switch service.

4. Pleading 🔑225(2)—Leave to amend should be granted in sustaining demurrer to complaint for defect curable by amendment.

The defect in a complaint of failing to make an essential allegation, being one that may be overcome by amendment, the court in sustaining demurrer should do so with leave to amend.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; L. W. Fulkerth, Judge.

Action by the People, on the relation of the City of Turlock, against the Turlock Home Telephone & Telegraph Company. From a judgment for defendant, on the sustaining of demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with leave to amend.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Leon French, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Wm. N. Graybiel, of Turlock, for appellant.

Samuel V. Cornell, of Turlock, and Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, of San Francisco, amici curiæ, for respondent.

CURTIS, J. This is a proceeding instituted in the name of the people of the state of California upon the relation of the city of Turlock, a municipal corporation, for a judgment declaring forfeited a certain franchise held by the defendant. The amended complaint alleges that the franchise involved herein was granted by said city of Turlock on the 16th day of March, 1909, to J. L. Randolph, his successors and assigns, for a term of 50 years, to erect and operate over the streets of said city poles, masts, and other structures upon which to suspend wires and other appliances for the construction and maintenance of a telephone and telegraph system; that Randolph at some time subsequent to January 1, 1912, assigned and transferred said franchise to defendant; that defendant is the owner, holder, and user of said franchise; and that defendant at all times since the expiration of the five-year period subsequent to the granting of said franchise has paid to the city of Turlock its annual 2 per cent. franchise tax on its gross earnings, except that portion of its gross earnings derived from performing switch service for the farmers' telephone lines that connect with the lines of the defendant at the corporate limits of said city. It is also alleged that said 2 per cent. tax is a tax provided for and required by section 3 of the act known as the Broughton Act. A general demurrer to this amended complaint was sustained by the court without leave to amend, and judgment was entered in favor of defendant. From this judgment the plaintiff has appealed.

[1] The principal argument advanced by respondent before the trial court in support of its demurrer, and the one mainly relied upon before this court to sustain the judgment herein, is that by virtue of the provisions of section 536 of the Civil Code telephone corporations are given the right to construct telephone lines along and upon the streets and highways of the municipalities of the state; and that under the provisions of said section of the Code respondent is given the right to operate and maintain its telephone system over the streets and highways of the city of Turlock independent of any right it may have acquired under the Randolph franchise. Appellant replies to this argument of respondent by contending that section 536 of the Civil Code has been repealed by section 19 of article 11 of the Constitution as amended in 1911. Much of the briefs of the parties is taken up with a discussion of the merits of these respective contentions. We question whether the validity of section 536 of the Civil Code is material to any issue involved in this proceeding. This action was not brought to exclude the respondent, the telephone company, from the use of the streets and highways of the city of Turlock, but simply to declare forfeited the Randolph franchise, which, it is alleged in the amended complaint, the respondent now owns and holds and is using in said city. It may well be that the respondent, under section 536 of the Civil Code, if said section is still in force, has a right to maintain its telephone system in said city, but this right, whatever it may be, as respondent contends, is entirely apart from, and independent of, any right acquired by it by virtue of the ownership of the Randolph franchise. Conceding, therefore, that the rights of respondent under section 536 of the Civil Code are sufficient to protect it in the maintenance and operation of its telephone system in said city, still that fact presents no reason sufficient to defeat appellant's claim to have the Randolph franchise, an entirely different right, forfeited, if it can be shown that the respondent has failed to comply with the law under which the latter franchise was granted, and which failure worked a forfeiture thereof. Section 3 of the Broughton Act provides:

> "In the event said payment [2 per cent. of the gross annual receipts] is not made, said franchise shall be forfeited. * * *" Stats. 1905, p. 777.

If section 536 of the Civil Code is held to be still in force, the difference between the rights which respondent is granted by the terms thereof and those which it has under the Randolph franchise may be very slight. As the Randolph franchise is not set out in the amended complaint and the reference thereto in said pleading is quite brief, we have no means of knowing its exact provisions. We hardly think, however, we would be justified in assuming that the rights acquired by respondent thereunder are the same as those given under the Code section. On the other hand, it appears from the amended complaint that respondent is now not only the owner but the user of said franchise, and that it is paying to the city of Turlock by reason of its ownership and use thereof a franchise tax of 2 per cent. on certain of its gross earnings. Of course, if respondent were exercising no rights under the Randolph franchise, other than those given to it by the Civil Code, provided said Code section is still in force, it would be an idle act to declare a forfeiture of the franchise and it would be useless to prolong this litigation, but the facts, as they are set forth in the amended complaint, do not justify us in drawing any such conclusion. We must assume, therefore, that the facts as pleaded show that the respondent is claimed to be exercising some rights under said Randolph franchise in addition to those acquired by it under section 536 of the Civil Code. Whatever those rights are, the appellant seeks to have declared forfeited, and that is all appellant can recover in this proceeding, should it be successful.

[2-4] Under these circumstances, if the pleadings were otherwise sufficient, the judgment of the court should be reversed and the trial court directed to overrule the demurrer. There is, however, another question presented by the pleadings which we think cannot be passed by without notice. This proceeding is one to declare a forfeiture. It is elementary that forfeitures are never favored by the courts, and, in order to declare a forfeiture, the allegations of the complaint and the proof in support thereof must be positive and explicit. Appellant seeks to have the Randolph franchise forfeited by reason, we may surmise, of respondent's failure to pay the 2 per cent. franchise tax on certain of the gross earnings—that is, on the gross earnings received by respondent for performing switch services for the farmers' telephone lines that connect with respondent's lines at the corporate limits. But there is no allegation whatever to be found in the amended complaint that any earnings have ever been received by respondent for such switch services. We cannot even infer from the allegation that the respondent has paid the tax on all earnings received by it, except on earnings received for switch services, that any earnings whatever have been received by respondent for such switch services. The amended complaint is fatally defective in failing to show that the respondent has received earnings for said switch service and the general demurrer thereto was rightly sustained, but as it is a defect that may be overcome by amendment, appellant should have an opportunity to further amend the complaint. In justice to the trial court we would say that as far as the record shows this defect was not called to its attention at the time of the argument on the demurrer. The parties, it appears, addressed themselves exclusively to the question as to whether section 536 of the Civil Code had been repealed.

It is ordered that the judgment be reversed and appellant be given ten days after the going down of the remittitur to further amend the complaint.

LINSER v. LAUFFER. (Civ. 3193.)★

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 24, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 25, 1927.)

1. Deeds ⚷206—In suit to set aside deeds from mother to son, evidence held to sustain finding that deeds were given without promise of reconveyance.

In suit by daughter's husband to set aside conveyances from mother to son, evidence held sufficient to sustain finding that conveyances were not made on promise or understanding that premises were to be reconveyed to mother upon demand.

2. Deeds ⚷211(4)—Evidence held sufficient to sustain finding that deeds from mother to son were not obtained by undue influence.

In suit against son to set aside deeds obtained from mother, evidence held sufficient to sustain finding that deeds were not obtained by son as result of undue influence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; Denver Sevier, Judge.

Suit by Fred. W. Linser, as administrator of the estate of Phillipina Schroeder, deceased, against Martin P. Lauffer. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Puter & Quinn, of Eureka, for appellant.

W. F. Clyborne and Delos A. Mace, both of Eureka, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This action was brought to set aside two deeds, executed by Phillipina Schroeder, conveying certain lands to defendant, Martin P. Lauffer, and Emma Lauffer, his wife. Judgment was entered in favor of defendant and the plaintiff has appealed.

In the year 1880 Frederick Schroeder, a widower, owned and with his daughter Emma resided upon a mountain ranch, consisting of the land, or the greater part thereof, here in controversy. At that time Phillipina Lauffer was a widow, residing with whom were her two children, Julia B. Lauffer and Martin P. Lauffer, defendant, of the respective ages of 15 and 9 years. During that year Schroeder and Mrs. Lauffer married and thereafter lived together on the Schroeder ranch as husband and wife, their said children living with them, except as hereinafter stated, and performing services suitable to their ages and capacities. Julia married Charles Linser about three years later, and she and her husband lived on the ranch for about a year and thereafter they resided elsewhere. At a subsequent time Martin and Emma married and thereafter lived together on the ranch as husband and wife, and there were there born to them two children. Schroeder died December 20, 1899. In the final settlement of his estate, in accordance with the terms of his last will, an undivided half interest in the lands in controversy was distributed to Phillipina Schroeder, and Martin P. and Emma Lauffer were given a life estate in the other half, the remainder being distributed to their minor children. In June, 1901, Mrs. Schroeder purchased for $2,000 and gave Julia a home, consisting of 220 acres of land, with a house and other improvements thereon. In October, 1901, Mrs. Schroeder signed and acknowledged a deed conveying her half interest in the mountain ranch to Martin P. and Emma Lauffer, but she did not deliver the deed until April, 1905. In March, 1910, she executed a second deed of the same property to the same parties for the purpose of correcting a part of the description in the deed of October, 1901. These are the two deeds which plaintiff seeks to have set aside. April 17, 1905, Mrs. Schroeder made a homestead entry for 160 acres of government land adjoining the lands in controversy, and for a considerable time thereafter she resided on the homestead. In May, 1910, she gave notice of intention to make final proof, but her application therefor was "canceled for failure to appear and make proof." She then abandoned the homestead, and the defendant removed the improvements therefrom. Emma Lauffer died prior to the commencement of this action, and the defendant succeeded to her interest in the Schroeder ranch. Mrs. Schroeder died July 24, 1921, being then of the age of 88 years, "lacking two days." The plaintiff is the duly appointed administrator of her estate.

[1] Appellant contends that the deeds in question were executed for the purpose of qualifying Mrs. Schroeder to make the homestead entry and "at the request and by the advice of the said defendant, and upon the promise of the said defendant and the said Emma Lauffer to reconvey the same upon demand." In support of this contention appellant calls attention to the defendant's testimony relative to a payment of $300 to his mother September 4, 1907. He was asked "whether that was the rent or what," to which he replied, "Well, I think it is, as near as I can remember." The evidence does not show whether the rent referred to was that of the then current year or of some previous year. The defendant testified that he held the land under lease until some time in the year 1905. Plaintiff also produced assessment lists for the years 1906, 1907, and 1908, signed by the defendant, in which the property was listed as belonging to the estate of Frederick Schroeder. The evidence shows that the decree of distribution in that estate was not recorded in the office of the county recorder until the year 1908, and that it was the practice of the county assessor to assess all real estate to the record owners thereof as shown by the records of the county recorder. The assessment lists signed by the defendant therefore were of little value as evidence. Had the defendant listed the property as belonging to Mrs. Schroeder, that circumstance would have been entitled to greater weight. The defendant testified that there was no promise or understanding to the effect that the property was to be reconveyed to Mrs. Schroeder. The evidence is amply sufficient to sustain the finding that there was no such promise or understanding.

[2] Appellant's main contention is that the evidence conclusively shows that Mrs. Schroeder executed the deeds as a result of undue influence exercised over her by the defendant. There undoubtedly existed a confidential relation between the defendant and his mother, and, in addition to such relation as a proposition of law, she had great confidence in her son. Except for the presumptions arising from such relation, however, the evidence tending to show undue influence is very slight, and there is an entire lack of direct evidence that Mrs. Schroeder was in any manner influenced by any person to execute the deeds. She spoke English brokenly, but could make herself understood in that language. She could read and write German and signed her name in German characters. She was a strong woman, energetic and intelligent. The family physician testified:

> "I knew her 28 or 29 years. * * * She was able to go about very well until the last few years. * * * I considered she was a very bright woman, a very capable woman. * * * I always considered her a very bright woman, perfectly able to attend to her own business. * * * I never saw her but what I thought she was all right. * * * She was a hard worker; she always worked around the garden, and most of the time did a good deal of it; * * * visited the neighbors, riding horseback all over the country. * * * About the time that she bought the property there, the Williams property, she told me that she gave Mrs. Linser $2,000, I believe, something like that, and that was her share of the property. * * * She and I were quite intimate friends and she spoke to me about it in a confidential manner. * * * I stopped there sometimes two or three days or three or four days at a time."

A banker, who was acquainted with Mrs. Schroeder for many years, testified:

> "I was as well acquainted with her as anybody. * * * She was sound mentally and physically as well. * * * I never saw anything the matter with her in the world. Of course, she could not speak very good English, and she was sometimes difficult to understand what she was saying, but a person acquainted with her could understand her particularly. She was a bright woman. * * * Perfectly capable. * * * The first time I saw her she was horseback. She was the pioneer woman to ride astraddle that I ever saw in California up to that time. * * * That was when she married Fred Schroeder. She rode from Harris to Blocksburg to get married, and I have known her ever since. * * * (From 1900 to 1910) she was just as sound mentally as I am. * * * I never saw any difference. * * * The time I last saw her she was all right. * * * That might have been a year or so before she died. * * * She was in my office here and called on me. * * * I did not see any difference so far as her mind was concerned; she was getting older, that is all."

A number of other witnesses gave testimony to the same effect as that of the physician and the banker. Several of them testified that Mrs. Schroeder said that she had given Mrs. Linser a home and that that was all she would get, that the mountain ranch was to go to the defendant and his wife. The evidence shows that Mrs. Schroeder traveled alone as late as 1917, visiting friends in Alameda county during that year; that the defendant frequently furnished her money; that she told some of her friends that she could get money from him whenever she wanted it. One of her friends testified:

> "She told me that she bought the property for Julia * * * and that Julia had sold it. When she was telling me about it she was very sorry and deplored the fact that Julia could not have kept it, and she said Julia gets nothing more from me. I have heard her say that a half dozen times. * * * She gets nothing more from me, because she considered that Julia's share. * * * She always expressed the wish that her property would go to Emma and Martin. She said a good deal of it came through Emma, her property, and she always claimed Emma and Martin should have that property."

A neighbor of Mrs. Schroeder testified:

> "She told me that she had bought that property for Julia and Charles and that was to be her part of her estate. * * * She said she thought it would make them a good home. It was a nice place, and that was to be her share of her property. * * * She said that Emma and Martin, her son, was to get her share of the place, she had made a gift of that to them, if they would look after her as long as she lived. * * * She told me she could get money from her son, Martin, any time she wanted it. * * * She told me often that she had a hundred dollar check that Martin had given her. * * * She seemed to have all she wanted."

There is much other testimony of the same character as that quoted. The defendant testified that he never attempted in any manner to influence his mother to execute the deeds, and that, in addition to the consideration of love and affection expressed in the deeds, and as a further consideration therefor, he agreed to support and maintain his mother as long as she lived, and that he had faithfully performed the agreement on his part. It is very doubtful whether the evidence, viewed in the light most favorable to the appellant, is sufficient to support a finding that the execution of the deeds in question was the result of undue influence, but it is perfectly clear that the whole evidence is amply sufficient to justify a contrary finding. This is so manifest from the evidence herein set out that citation of authorities is deemed unnecessary.

ROBERTS v. ROBERTS. (Civ. 5724.)

1. Venue 🔑66—Affidavit of merits on motion for change of venue held insufficient in allegation of statement to counsel.

Allegation of affidavit of merits, on motion for change of venue, that defendant fully stated to his counsel all the facts relating to said demand, held not equivalent of allegation of statement of "the case" or of "the facts of the case," and so to render affidavit insufficient.

2. Venue 🔑66—Affidavit of merits on motion for change of venue held defective in not showing advice was by attorney.

Averment of defendant's affidavit of merits on motion for change of venue that, after fully stating the facts to his attorney, he is advised that he has a good and meritorious defense, held insufficient in not showing the advice was from the attorney.

3. Evidence 🔑43(3)—Trial court held warranted in taking judicial notice of judgment in other action therein by reference thereto in affidavit of merits claiming res judicata.

Reference, in affidavit of merits on motion for change of venue, to judgment in action of a certain number in the same court, pleaded by such reference as res judicata, was sufficient to warrant the trial court in taking judicial notice of judgment.

4. Appeal and error 🔑931(3)—Implied finding of effect of judgment not in record, but of which trial court could take judicial notice, is presumed sustained by it.

Appellate court must presume that implied finding as to effect of judgment, not in record, but of which trial court could take judicial notice, was sustained by the terms of the judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John J. Allen, Judge.

Action by Emilie Roberts against Elmore W. Roberts. From order denying motion for change of venue, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

James Donovan, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

John L. McVey, of Oakland, for respondent.

CASHIN, J. An action was commenced in the superior court of Alameda county to recover on a written contract for the payment of money. The defendant, who is the appellant here, filed with his demurrer to the complaint a demand and motion for a change of venue to Los Angeles county, where, according to his affidavit of merits, he resides. The motion was denied, and the appeal was taken from the order.

[1] It is alleged in the affidavit mentioned that defendant "fully stated all of the facts relating to said demand in this action to his counsel herein." We are of the opinion that a statement "of all the facts relating to said demand" was not equivalent to a statement of "the case" or of "the facts of the case," and the affidavit in this particular was insufficient to meet the requirements of the rule established by the following cases: Nickerson v. California Raisin Co., 61 Cal. 268; People v. Larue, 66 Cal. 235, 5 P. 157; Palmer v. Barclay, 92 Cal. 199, 28 P 226; Westover v. Bridgford, 25 Cal. App. 548, 144 P. 313; Hanna v. De Koch, 52 Cal. App. 389, 198 P. 1006.

Appellant contends that the rule stated in the cases cited has been changed by the decision in Hughes v. Elliott, 167 Cal. 494, 140 P. 17. We do not think that such was the effect of the decision, as the affidavit there in question, in addition to the averment that affiant had stated "all the facts and grounds of defense to the complaint and cause of action," contained a verified declaration of facts amounting to a complete answer to the unverified complaint. As held in Westover v. Bridgford, supra, an affidavit of merits which avers the facts of the case and leaves the question of whether or not the defendant has a meritorious defense based thereon to the consideration of the court is sufficient.

[2] In the instant case defendant's affidavit further avers that, "after fully stating said facts to his said attorney, he is advised that he has a good and meritorious defense to said action."

As held in Walling v. Williams, 183 Cal. 600, 192 P. 34, and Jensen v. Dorr, 9 Cal. App. 19, 98 P. 45, this averment also was insufficient. In the latter case it was said:

> "Assuming, however, that affiant did fully and fairly state all the facts to his counsel, the affidavit is, nevertheless, defective in not stating, in substance at least, that he is advised by such counsel that he has a good and substantial defense upon the merits. * * * As shown by the affidavit, the advice referred to might have been obtained from a nonprofessional source. We cannot assume that, by reason of his stating the facts to his counsel, such counsel advised him that he had a meritorious defense. Non constat counsel, for all that appears in the averment, may have advised him there was no merit in his case, and yet, by reason of other advice, the averment be strictly true."

Appellant further contends that, notwithstanding these defects, his affidavit sets forth facts from which it appears that he has a meritorious defense to the action.

[3, 4] The affidavit avers that by a judgment of the superior court of Alameda county, in an action between the same parties numbered 83587, as shown by the register of actions in that court, the provisions of the contract which are sought to be enforced in the instant case were adjudged to be void, and that the judgment was not appealed from, and has become final. The record does not contain a copy of the judgment, nor was the latter made a part of the affidavit except by reference. Such reference, however, was sufficient to warrant the trial court in taking judicial notice thereof (Sewell v. Johnson, 165 Cal. 762, 134 P. 704, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 645); and we must presume that the implied finding as to its effect, which was adverse to the allegations of the affidavit, was sustained by the terms of the judgment (Estate of Young, 149 Cal. 173, 85 P. 145; Fonner v. Martens, 186 Cal. 623, 625, 200 P. 405; Western Cal. Land Co. v. Welch, 41 Cal. App. 435, 183 P. 169).

The order appealed from is affirmed.

FRED W. HAUGER MOTORS COMPANY (a Corporation), Plaintiff and Respondent, v. P. M. REIDY, Defendant and Appellant, and California Stearns Company (a Corporation), Defendant. (S. F. 11782.) (Supreme Court of California. Feb. 26, 1927.) In Banc. Orders to show cause why appeal from the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, John L. Hudner, Judge, should not be dismissed for failure of respondent to file briefs. Order to show cause discharged. I. Henry Harris, of Los Angeles, for appellant. R. L. McWilliams and H. H. McPike, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This appeal was placed upon a special calendar of this court upon an order to the respondent to show cause why the judgment herein should not be reversed, or that such order be made as might be meet in the premises. At the time of the placing of said cause upon said calendar, and the entry of said order, it appeared that the appellant's brief had been filed herein, but that no brief on behalf of the respondent had been filed, although the time for the filing of such brief under the rules of this court had long since expired. Upon the calling of such calendar the respondent failed to appear and the said order to show cause was thereupon submitted. Thereafter, and on February 23, 1927, the respondent, pursuant to permission theretofore granted, filed herein its brief to be used on this appeal. It is therefore ordered that the order to show cause, heretofore made herein on December 27, 1926, be and the same is hereby discharged.

George G. GRAHAM, Plaintiff and Appellant, v. C. K. BONESTELL and A. Y. Chrisman, Defendants and Respondents. (S. F. 11840.) (Supreme Court of California. Jan. 28, 1927.) In Banc. Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court of Fresno County, Stanley Murray, Judge, in an action for the recovery of personal property. Affirmed. Geo. G. Graham, of Fresno, for appellant. C. K. Bonestell, of San Francisco, and Samuel F. Hollins, of Fresno, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This appeal was placed upon a special calendar of this court upon an order to the respondents to show cause why the judgment herein should not be reversed, or that such order be made as might be meet in the premises. At the time of the placing of said cause upon said calendar, and the entry of said order, it appeared that the appellant's brief had been filed herein, but that no brief on behalf of the respondents had been filed, although the time for the filing of such brief under the rules of this court had long since expired. In response to said order the respondents appeared with a notice of motion for an order affirming the judgment, notice of which motion was duly served upon the appellant herein more than 10 days prior to the hearing thereon. Upon the call of such calendar and the hearing upon said motion, the appellant failed to appear or to respond thereto. The respondents, however, appeared to urge that their said motion should be granted. The matter was submitted to the court for decision in accordance with the terms, of its order to show cause. An examination of the appellant's brief herein discloses the fact that it fails to conform to the requirements of the rules of this court with relation to a supplement thereto or to a setting forth therein of a sufficient summary of the evidence. An examination thereof and of the record on appeal herein fully discloses that this appeal is entirely without merit and is a frivolous appeal. It is therefore hereby ordered that the judgment be and the same is affirmed.

W. I. WAGG, Plaintiff and Appellant, v. John HATCH and Catherine Hatch, Defendants and Respondents. (Civ. 3180.) (District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 19, 1927.) Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, J. B. Landis, Judge, in an action upon a promissory note. Gerald Willis Myers and Bigby & Myers, all of Los Angeles, for appellant. James S. Bennett, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment in favor of defendants. The parties have filed herein the following stipulation: "It is hereby stipulated * * * that the above-entitled case involves the same facts and circumstances as the case of Wagg v. Toler et al. (Cal. App.) 251 P. 973, * * * civil number 3179, and it is hereby stipulated that the above-entitled case may be submitted without oral argument for decision by the court, upon the authority of the opinion in Wagg v. Toler, supra, rendered December 28, 1926." Pursuant to the foregoing stipulation, and on the authority of Wagg v. Toler (Cal. App.) 251 P. 973, the judgment is affirmed.

1. Municipal corporations 🔑706(5)—Evidence held to support recovery for injuries by taxicab colliding with motorcycle at street intersection.

Evidence held to support verdict for plaintiff, both on issue of negligence and contributory negligence, in action against taxicab owner for injuries sustained when defendant ran into plaintiff's motorcycle at street intersection.

2. Appeal and error 🔑1050(1)—Admission of evidence as to plaintiff's wages when injured, if error, held harmless.

In personal injury action against taxicab owner, admission of evidence as to amount of wages plaintiff was receiving at time of injury, if error, held not prejudicial.

3. Appeal and error 🔑1064(1)—Instruction that injured plaintiff must prove case to moral certainty, though incorrect, held not prejudicial to defendant.

In personal injury action by motorcyclist against taxicab owner, instruction that plaintiff must prove case to moral certainty, though incorrect statement of law, held not reversible error on appeal by defendant.

4. Appeal and error 🔑216(2)—Instruction on burden of proof held not erroneous for failure to refer to evidence necessary to establish contributory negligence, in absence of request for proper instruction.

Instruction on burden of proof in personal injury action is not erroneous for failure to make any reference to evidence necessary to establish contributory negligence, since if defendant desired such instruction he should have prepared and submitted it with request that it be given.

5. Trial 🔑194(20)—Instruction that injured plaintiff could recover for future physical pain and mental anxiety held not erroneous as indicating permanency of injury (Civ. Code, § 3283).

In personal injury action, instruction that plaintiff could recover for physical pain and mental anxiety which he suffered "or must necessarily suffer in the future" held not erroneous as indicating that injury would continue to exist, in view of Civ. Code, § 3283, since such instruction only authorized consideration of such injury as would be certain to result.

6. Damages 🔑32—Injured plaintiff may recover damages for future pain and suffering certain to result (Civ. Code, § 3283).

Plaintiff in personal injury action is not limited to damages for past suffering and pain, but jury may include damages for future pain and suffering certain to result, in view of Civ. Code, § 3283.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Elliot Craig, Judge.

Action by Joe J. Mella against George Hooper. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. I. Gilbert, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Albert Sidney Brown, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WASTE, C. J. In this action for personal injuries alleged to have been received by plaintiff through the negligent operation of an automobile used as a taxicab, owned and driven by defendant, the jury awarded plaintiff damages in the sum of $5,000. From the judgment entered on the verdict, defendant appealed.

The accident out of which the injuries arose happened in the space formed by the intersection of Alameda street and East Third street in the city of Los Angeles. At that point a double line of street car tracks run east and west, which are intersected by tracks of a steam railway running north and south. Gates were operated on the east and west sides of Alameda street to protect traffic from passing trains. Just prior to the collision, the plaintiff was riding a motorcycle in a northerly direction on the right, or east, side of Alameda street. Defendant was driving his taxicab easterly along East Third street. A westerly bound street car on East Third street was approaching the intersection. Traffic at the point was congested on both streets, and the gates were down, giving the north and south bound traffic on Alameda street the right of way. The gates were raised, permitting the east and west bound traffic on East Third street to move, the street car and the taxicab approaching each other from opposite directions. An instant before the gates were raised, the plaintiff on his motorcycle and an automobile on his left had entered the intersection and were proceeding northerly across East Third street. Defendant drove rapidly into the intersection, and the driver of the automobile, seeing the speed at which he was approaching, abruptly stopped his car. The plaintiff's vision being obstructed by the automobile on his left, he proceeded across East Third street and had nearly reached the westbound street car track when his motorcycle was struck by the automobile of the defendant. By the impact of the collision plaintiff was thrown onto the fender of the street car. He suffered a compound fracture of the left leg below the knee and was bruised and cut.

[1] On this appeal the appellant contends, first, that the evidence was insufficient to show that he was guilty of any negligence whatsoever, and, second, conceding that appellant was guilty of negligence, the respondent was guilty of contributory negligence directly contributing to and which was the proximate cause of his injuries. As in most cases in which sudden accidents furnish the cause of action, various inferences and different conclusions may be drawn from the evidence. A number of witnesses testified on each side of this case, explaining their testimony of means of a diagram. The respondent contends that the evidence of physical facts and statements made by the appellant after the accident sustains the contention that the collision was brought about through the undue haste of the defendant to "get to the depot," and in his not allowing sufficient time for the northerly bound traffic to clear the intersection before he attempted to cross Alameda street. There is evidence, also, to show that he drove into the intersection at an excessive rate of speed. The situation of the parties and the surroundings at the time of the accident were made very clear to the jurors. Their verdict finds ample support in the record of the evidence taken at the trial, both as to the negligence of the appellant and the lack of contributory negligence on the part of the respondent.

[2] Appellant complains of the admission, over his objection, of the testimony of the respondent as to the amount of wages the latter was receiving at the time of the injury. Read as a whole, however, the testimony only showed that respondent was receiving $4.50 a day when he was injured, and that, but for the injury, he would be receiving the same amount at the time of the trial, and did not, in any way, prejudice the case of the appellant.

[3, 4] Complaint is made of the giving of certain instructions. One, given at the request of the plaintiff and which informed the jury, in effect, that it was incumbent on the plaintiff to prove his case to a "moral certainty," was not a correct statement of the law in civil causes (People v. Miller, 171 Cal. 649, 654, 154 P. 468, but it was more injurious to the plaintiff than to appellant. The concluding portion of the instruction is somewhat garbled and rather meaningless; but the fact that the instruction referred only to the burden of proof of the plaintiff, and made no reference to the evidence necessary to establish contributory negligence, did not constitute error. If the defendant desired any instructions to be given on the subject of contributory negligence, he should have prepared and submitted them to the court with the request that they be given.

[5, 6] Appellant complains that in one of the instructions the jury was told that it might consider as an element of damages such physical pain and mental anxiety as it found plaintiff suffered, or must necessarily suffer, in the future. The contention, in part, is that the word "necessarily" impliedly conveyed to the jury the court's view that the injury sustained by plaintiff would continue to exist in the future, which was a question to be passed upon by the jury. This criticism is without merit. Furthermore, as to the use of the word "necessarily," the statute provides that damages may be awarded in a judicial proceeding for detriment certain to result in the future. Civ. Code, § 3283. At the time of the trial, the respondent was still suffering pain in his leg, on which there was an open sore which required treatment, and it was painful for him to walk. He was not limited to damages for past suffering and pain, and the jury had a right to include in its award damages for future pain and suffering certain to result. To say that the jury may consider such injury as the plaintiff must necessarily suffer was but another way of saying that the jury may consider such injury as would be certain to result. Ryan v. Oakland Gas, etc., Co., 21 Cal. App. 14, 24, 130 P. 693.

What is said with reference to the exception to the instruction under the ruling and exception just discussed is applicable to the objection here made to an instruction defining and explaining "compensatory damages."

POSTAL TELEGRAPH-CABLE CO. v. RAILROAD COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al. (S. F. 11956.)

1. Telegraphs and telephones 🔑10(2)—Railroad Commission cannot order telegraph company holding federal franchise to cease operation along "post road" for intrastate business until certificate is obtained (Public Utilities Act 1915, § 50, subds. [a], [b], as amended by St. 1917, p. 168; Act Cong. July 24, 1866, §§ 1, 2, 4 [14 Stat. 221, 222]; Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8; U. S. Comp. St. § 7457).

Railroad Commission cannot, under Public Utilities Act (St. 1915, p. 148), § 50, subds. (a) and (b), as amended by St. 1917, p. 168, order telegraph company, operating under federal franchise through acceptance of Act Cong. July 24, 1866, §§ 1, 2 (14 Stat. 221), under provisions of section 4, which act was authorized by Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, to cease operation of line constructed along "post roads," which, under Act Cong. March 1, 1884 (U. S. Comp. St. § 7457), include all public roads and highways maintained as such, for intrastate business until it secures certificate of public convenience and necessity, though it may regulate conduct of company's business under police power.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Post Road.]

2. Commerce 🔑28—Telegraph company, by obtaining federal franchise, became government agency for transaction of postal business (Act Cong. July 24, 1866, §§ 1, 2, 4 [14 Stat. 221, 222]).

Telegraph company obtaining federal franchise by accepting Act Cong. July 24, 1866, §§ 1, 2, 4 (14 Stat. 221), under provisions of section 4 thereby became agency of federal government for transaction of postal business, and an agent of interstate and foreign commerce.

3. Telegraphs and telephones 🔑7—Telegraph company acquired state franchise under state statute by building lines (Civ. Code, § 536).

Building of lines by telegraph company within state is sufficient acceptance of Civ. Code, § 536, which constitutes grant of franchise to telegraph corporation to construct lines within state.

4. Constitutional law 🔑101—Railroad Commission order requiring telegraph company holding state franchise to procure certificate of public convenience held unauthorized as impairing vested rights (Civ. Code, § 536; Public Utilities Act 1911, § 50[b]).

Railroad Commission cannot require telegraph company, which accepted grant of franchise under Civ. Code, § 536, to procure certificate of public convenience and necessity before carrying on intrastate business over new line erected after amendment of Constitution in 1911 and enactment of Public Utilities Act (St. 1911, Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 43), § 50 (b), since rights acquired under Civ. Code, § 536 are vested, and cannot be taken away by subsequent state legislation.

In Bank.

Application by the Postal Telegraph-Cable Company for certiorari to review an order of the Railroad Commission of California, and H. W. Brundaze and others, members thereof, requiring the procurement of a certificate of public convenience and necessity. Order annulled.

Max Thelen and Willard P. Smith, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Carl I. Wheat, of San Francisco, Arthur T. George, of Los Angeles, and Reginald L. Vaughan, of San Francisco, for respondents.

WASTE, C. J The petitioner, Postal Telegraph-Cable Company, constructed a line from Niland, through Brawley, Imperial, and El Centro, to Calexico, known as its Imperial valley extension, and opened offices in the places mentioned for the transaction of a general telegraph business. The respondent Railroad Commission, of its own motion, and assuming to act under the provisions of section 50, subds. (a) and (b), of the Public Utilities Act (Stats. 1915, p. 115; amended Stats. 1917, p. 168), instituted an investigation into the construction of the line and the business being carried on over it. After due hearing, it made an order that the telegraph company cease and desist from the operation of the line for intrastate business, unless and until it shall have secured a certificate that the present and future public convenience and necessity require, or will require, such operation. This proceeding is brought to determine the validity of that order.

The Postal Telegraph-Cable Company, at times hereinafter referred to as the telegraph company, a California corporation, is one of several telegraph and telephone companies doing a competitive business in this state. It is part of the "Mackay System," which operates telegraph and cable companies throughout the United States and foreign countries. Its predecessors first entered California in 1886, by a telegraph line extending from the Canadian boundary south through the states of Washington and Oregon, and thereafter constructed and extended their lines generally throughout the state. In 1908 the predecessor companies conveyed all their property in California to this petitioner, and it has carried on all subsequent construction and operation in the state. Apart from the period during which this country was engaged in the World War, there has been a continual increase in the telegraph company's facilities, equipment, and lines in California. During 1924 a line from Los Angeles to Dallas, Tex., and running through Niland, was completed. Prior to the construction of this interstate line, the petitioner's nearest point to the Imperial valley was at Redlands, 124 miles away. The extension, which is physically connected with the line at Niland, is 46½ miles in length. It is substantially constructed, and, except for a distance of one and a half miles, runs along the county and state highways.

It is not now claimed by the respondent commission that the line from Niland to Calexico was unlawfully constructed, and it is conceded that it was being lawfully operated for interstate business and the transmission of government messages. Respondent admits that neither it nor the state, whose agent it is, can demand a certificate of convenience and necessity as a prerequisite to the construction or operation of a telegraph line within the state for the doing of interstate business; and that any order of the commission requiring such a certificate or any statutory enactment purporting to require a certificate, would be violative of the commerce clause of the federal Constitution. Respondent further concedes that the state cannot require a certificate of public convenience and necessity as a prerequisite to the construction of a line physically connected to an interstate line, even though potentially usable for intrastate purposes, for such line, regardless of where constructed, would also be potentially usable for interstate business. These concessions remove from any possible application to this proceeding the provisions of section 50 (a) of the Public Utilities Act, which require certificates from the Railroad Commission in certain cases of construction by specified classes of public utilities.

But, with so much conceded, the respondent contends that, as to intrastate telegraph business authority inheres in the state to require compliance with a proper and reasonable exercise of the state's police power. It therefore invokes the provisions of section 50 (b) of the Public Utilities Act, which provides that certain named types of public utilities, including telegraph corporations, shall not exercise "any right or privilege under any franchise or permit hereafter granted, or under any franchise or permit heretofore granted but not heretofore actually exercised, or the exercise of which has been suspended for more than one year, without first having obtained from the commission a certificate that public convenience and necessity require the exercise of such right or privilege; provided, that when the commission shall find, after hearing, that a public utility has heretofore begun actual construction work and is prosecuting such work, in good faith, uninterruptedly and with reasonable diligence in proportion to the magnitude of the undertaking, under any franchise or permit heretofore granted but not heretofore actually exercised, such public utility may proceed, under such rules and regulations as the commission may prescribe, to the completion of such work, and may, after such completion, exercise such right or privilege; and provided, further, that this section shall not be construed to validate any right or privilege now invalid or hereafter becoming invalid under any law of this state."

[1] By reason of the concessions of the respondent and its present contentions, the sole issue to be considered in this proceeding may be thus stated: Can the Postal Telegraph-Cable Company, after it has lawfully constructed its line from Niland to Calexico, for the construction of which no certificate from the Railroad Commission was necessary, be forced to let the line stand idle, in so far as California intrastate business is concerned, unless and until it secures a certificate of public convenience and necessity for the transaction of such business? In answer to this question, the petitioner contends that the provisions of the Public Utilities Act relied on by the respondent (if applied to it) and the order of the Commission violate its rights under the federal Constitution and the statutes enacted by Congress pursuant thereto. In making this contention it relies, first upon the fact that it is lawfully within this state and carrying on its business under a "federal franchise," from which it contends that it is beyond the power of the state to in any way interfere with its operation. That petitioner possesses a federal franchise is beyond question. Section 8 of article 1 of the Constitution of the United States provides:

> "The Congress shall have power * * * to establish post offices and post roads."

By an act to "Aid in the construction of telegraph lines and to secure to the government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," passed July 24, 1866 (14 Stats. at L. 221, c. 230; Rev. Stats. §§ 5263–5268 [U. S. Comp. St. §§ 10072–10077]), Congress provided (section 1) that any telegraph company then organized, or which might thereafter be organized, under the laws of any state in the Union, "shall have the right to construct, maintain, and operate lines of telegraph through and over any portion of the public domain of the United States, over and along any of the military or post roads of the United States which have been or may hereafter be declared such by act of Congress. * * *" It is further provided in the act (section 2) "that telegraphic communications between the several departments of the government of the United States and their officers and agents shall, in their transmission over the lines of any of said companies, have priority over all other business, and shall be sent at rates to be annually fixed by the postmaster general." Before any telegraph company may exercise any of the powers or privileges conferred by the act, such company is required (section 4) to file its written acceptance with the postmaster general of the restrictions and obligations thereby imposed. Petitioner filed its written acceptance of the act with the postmaster general on August 4, 1908, since which time it has been entitled to all the rights and privileges granted thereby. These rights and privileges constitute its federal franchise. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hopkins, 160 Cal. 106, 110, 113, 116 P. 557. By a subsequent act, Congress declared that all public roads and highways, while kept up and maintained as such, are post routes. Act March 1, 1884, 23 Stat. at L. 3, c. 9 (U. S. Comp. St. § 7457). Petitioner therefore has the right to construct, maintain, and operate its lines over and along the public roads and highways of the United States, while kept up and maintained as such, irrespective of whether mail is actually being carried thereon, either by way of city letter carriers or in rural delivery. This right cannot be denied to it. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hopkins, supra; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Lakin, 53 Wash. 326, 335, 101 P. 1094, 1098, 17 Ann. Cas. 718; Town of Essex v. New England Tel. Co., 239 U. S. 313, 36 S. Ct. 102, 60 L. Ed. 301. As Congress has authority to say that a telegraph company may construct and operate its telegraph over these lines, the state can have no authority to say it shall not be done, and cannot, by any specific statute, prevent the company from placing its lines along the post roads, or stop the use of them after they are placed there. Western Union Tel. Co. v Massachusetts, 125 U. S. 530, 548, 554, 8 S. Ct. 961, 31 L. Ed. 790.

[2] The decisions appear to be uniform to the effect that, by the act of Congress, and its acceptance by petitioner, the latter became an instrumentality of the United States in carrying out its governmental functions. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Visalia, 149 Cal. 744, 746, 87 P. 1023. Having accepted the benefits and burdens of the act, it thereby became an agency of the federal government for the transaction of its postal business, and an agent of interstate and foreign commerce. State v. Western Union Tel. Co., 43 Mont. 445, 117 P. 93.

The respondent seems to understand the petitioner as arguing that the effect of its "federal franchise" is to give it an absolute right to carry on its intrastate telegraph business, to the complete exclusion of the police power of the state. Petitioner makes no such contention, as, indeed, it cannot. It concedes the right of the state and its municipalities to impose upon a telegraph company, under the police power, reasonable regulations with reference to the manner of the exercise by it of the rights conferred by the national government. Town of Essex v. New England Tel. Co., supra; Carver v. State, 11 Ga. App. 22, 74 S. E. 556; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Lakin, supra. These powers are, however, regulatory, and not prohibitory, and this distinction renders tenable the contention petitioner is here making that the state cannot so interfere with its operation, even under the assumed guise of the exercise of the police power, as to work a prohibition of any part of its business. In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Lakin, supra, the court said:

> "The power of the city was limited to its right to regulate the use of the privilege granted by Congress. * * * Beyond this it had no power to go."

Regulations of the state must not be arbitrary, unreasonable, nor such as have the effect of excluding the company from the state or forbidding it to carry on its business therein. A state cannot so exclude or prohibit either directly or indirectly. In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Superior Court of Sacramento County, 15 Cal. App. 679, 688, 115 P. 1091, 1095, 115 P. 1100, it was said that, notwithstanding the fact that the state has no power under the indicated circumstances to exclude such telegraph corporations from the right or privilege of carrying on the business for which they are formed within its borders, it may impose upon such corporations, "as it may upon all corporations of whatever kind or nature, organized and existing under the laws of another state, reasonable regulations, and to that end prescribe and require certain reasonable prerequisites to the exercise of the authority conferred on them by Congress to do business in such state," with the limitation, of course, that "no state will be permitted, whether under the guise of regulation or otherwise, to enact any legislation the effect of which would or might, practically, be to prevent them from doing business in such state, or in effect result in an attempt on the part of such state to regulate commercial intercourse between its citizens and those of other states, or to control the transmission of all telegraphic correspondence within its own jurisdiction."

When the act of Congress granting telegraph companies the right to construct, maintain, and operate their lines over the public domain (July 24, 1866, supra) first came before the Supreme Court of the United States, it was carefully examined by it in order to determine whether or not Congress had power to prevent the states from placing obstructions in the way of the usefulness of the telegraph. It was decided that the statute was a proper exercise of the power of Congress over interstate commerce, and the power to establish post offices and post roads, and that "the statute, * * * in effect, amounts to a prohibition of all state monopolies in this particular. It substantially declares in the interest of commerce and the convenient transmission of intelligence from place to place by the government of the United States and its citizens, that the erection of telegraph lines shall, so far as state interference is concerned, be free to all who will submit to the conditions imposed by Congress, and that corporations organized under the laws of one state for constructing and operating telegraph lines shall not be excluded by another from prosecuting their business within its jurisdiction." Pensacola Tel. Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 96 U. S. 1, 11 (24 L. Ed. 708). A statute of the state of Florida, which purported to grant a monopoly to a particular telegraph company in certain state territory, to the exclusion of all other telegraph companies, was held unconstitutional as to those telegraph corporations which had accepted the act of Congress of July 24, 1866, for the reason that it interfered with interstate commerce and with the transmission of intelligence from place to place by the government. The opinion of the court in the Pensacola Case was cited in a comparatively recent decision of the same court as establishing beyond question the validity, and pointing out the general purposes, of the act of 1866, and it was held that a state has no authority to say that a telegraph company may not operate lines constructed over postal routes within its borders. Town of Essex v. New England Tel. Co., supra, page 320 (36 S. Ct. 102).

We take it to be, therefore, conclusively settled that the authority for the "federal franchise" possessed by the petitioner is the provision of the United States Constitution, supra, that "the Congress shall have power * * * to establish post offices and post roads." Under this provision, the authorities seem to as conclusively establish that the power of the national government is exclusive, subject to the right of the state, under its police power, to make certain reasonable regulations as to the manner in which the business of the telegraph company shall be conducted. The order here sought to be annulled amounts to an injunction entirely suspending the doing of intrastate business over the Imperial Valley extension of the telegraph company's line. It does not, therefore, find support in the exercise of the police power to regulate, but amounts to an attempt to exercise a power to prohibit. For this reason, the order of the commission and the provisions of section 50 (b) of the Public Utilities Act, if applied to the petitioner here, violate petitioner's rights under the federal Constitution and the act of Congress which give effect to its provisions relating to post offices and post roads. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Massachusetts, supra, page 554 (8 S. Ct. 961).

[3, 4] For another reason the respondent may not now demand the certificate of public convenience and necessity from petitioner before it can carry on its intrastate business. Section 536 of the Civil Code provides:

> "Telegraph or telephone corporations may construct lines of telegraph or telephone lines along and upon any public road or highway, along or across any of the waters or lands within this state, and may erect poles, posts, piers, or abutments for supporting the insulators, wires, and other necessary fixtures of their lines, in such manner and at such points as not to incommode the public use of the road or highway or interrupt the navigation of the waters."

This section constitutes a grant of a franchise which the state offered, and petitioner accepted by the construction of its lines. The rights acquired by the telegraph company, by accepting and availing itself of the provisions of the section, are vested rights which the Constitutions, both state and federal, protect. They cannot be taken away by the state, even though the Legislature should repeal the section, or by the people through a constitutional provision. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hopkins, supra, page 119 et. seq. (116 P. 557); Postal-Telegraph-Cable Co. v. Los Angeles County, 160 Cal. 129, 131, 116 P. 566; In re Keppelmann, 166 Cal. 770, 773, 138 P. 346. The finding of the respondent commission of the physical fact that petitioner was maintaining and operating its lines of telegraph over the roads and highways of the state establishes, as a matter of law and of fact, the proposition that it has accepted, and owns a state franchise for that purpose, which was offered to it by section 536, supra. Postal-Telegraph-Cable Co. v. Los Angeles, 164 Cal. 156, 160, 128 P. 19.

Respondent takes the position that, conceding that it may have been true when section 536 was enacted that the right to operate telegraph lines was implied as a necessary adjunct to the right to construct, the situation was changed by the adoption, in 1911, of amendments to the state Constitution, and the enactment by the Legislature of the "Public Utilities Act," which went into effect March 23, 1912 (Stats. 1911, Extra Session, pp. 18, 43), and which expressly added (section 50 [b]) a new requirement; i. e., a certificate of public convenience and necessity from the Railroad Commission as a condition precedent to the exercise by the public utility of its franchise rights. This statute, it admits, did not prevent the continuation of public utility facilities already in operation, without a certificate; but it contends that the continuing right to construct telegraph lines offered by the state, under section 536, did not give the petitioner an unexpressed, but nevertheless vested, right to operate new lines constructed after the Public Utilities Act went into effect. We cannot agree with this contention. Neither the constitutional amendments nor the passage of the Public Utilities Act worked the change contended for by the respondent. In view of the nature of the business of the telegraph company, and the broad and unrestricted terms of the offer contained in section 536, which has not been withdrawn or modified, we find no ground for the contention that each act of constructing a telegraph line, or an extension of service, was to constitute an acceptance pro tanto. The offer was intended to be, and was accepted in its entirety as made. Petitioner has now exactly the same rights under its state franchise that it has had from the time it constructed and began to maintain and operate its first telegraph line within the borders of the state. The grant, resulting from the acceptance of the state offer, constituted a contract between the telegraph company and the state, secured by the Constitution of the United States against impairment by any state legislation. The conclusion we have reached renders it unnecessary to consider the other points made by the petitioner.

The order is annulled.

1. Liens 🔑12—Wording of lien statute existing when contract lien was created determines priority of subsequent statutory lien (Civ. Code, § 2897).

Wording of existing statutes or codes creating lien subsequent to liens created by contract determines question of priority, under Civ. Code, § 2897, as contract lien is presumed to have been created with knowledge of law.

2. Constitutional law 🔑161—Lien under statute existing when earlier contract lien was created may be given precedence without violating Constitution (Civ. Code, § 2897).

If statute providing for creation of liens and determining their priority exists at time of creation of contract lien, no constitutional provisions are violated by giving precedence to a subsequently acquired statutory lien, under Civ. Code, § 2897.

3. Animals 🔑26(1)—Agister's lien "dependent upon possession" may be maintained until discharged by payment; "may retain possession" (Civ. Code, § 3051).

Agister's lien, under Civ. Code, § 3051, may be maintained until discharged by payment, as in case of lien for charges for work done and materials furnished in making, altering, or repairing personal property; "dependent on possession" and "may retain possession of the same until the charges are paid" meaning the same.

4. Chattel mortgages 🔑138(1)—Agisters have preferential lien as against holders of chattel mortgages (Civ. Code, §§ 3051, 3052).

Under Civ. Code, § 3052, as amended in 1907 (St. 1907, p. 86, § 2), giving every holder of lien under section 3051 the same rights and remedies, agisters, as well as persons repairing or altering personalty, have a preferential lien as against holders of chattel mortgages.

5. Chattel mortgages 🔑138(1)—Agister's lien is statutory, not merely contractual, and should be given precedence over lien of mortgagee, who is benefited by preservation of cattle (Civ. Code, § 3051).

Agister's lien is not a mere creature of contract, but is created by Civ. Code, § 3051, from fact of keeping cattle rightfully in his possession, and should be given preference over lien of mortgagee, to whose benefit indebtedness for any expenditure reasonably necessary for preservation of cattle really inures.

Shenk, J., dissenting in part.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; Stanley Murray, Judge.

Action by the First National Bank of Los Angeles against Charles F. Silva and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. On hearing in the Supreme Court after judgment of affirmance in the District Court of Appeal. Judgment of the superior court affirmed.

Flint & MacKay and Robert B. Jackson, all of Los Angeles, and F. W. Henderson, of Merced, and Joseph Barcroft, of Madera, for appellant.

Sherwood Green and John W. Maloy, both of Madera, for respondents.

WASTE, C. J. A petition to have this cause heard in the Supreme Court after judgment in the District Court of Appeal, Third Appellate District, was granted in order that further argument might be had on the question therein involved. After further consideration of the case, we are of the view that the decision of the District Court of Appeal was correct. The following portion of the opinion by Mr. Justice Plummer is therefore adopted as the opinion of this court:

"The facts necessary to be stated are in brief as follows: The defendant Charles F. Silva, the owner of a band of cattle, made, executed and delivered to the plaintiff a chattel mortgage thereon. Thereafter, and on the 1st day of September, 1923, the defendant Silva placed said cattle in the possession of the defendants Donnelly and Clark for pasturage purposes upon pasture lands belonging to said defendants. Said cattle were pastured by Donnelly and Clark until the 1st day of December, 1923, and they claim an agister's lien for the value of the pasturage in the sum of $1,890. The amount of this claim is not disputed. The only question involved is whether an agister's lien takes precedence of a prior chattel mortgage.

[1, 2] "Section 2897 of the Civil Code, in relation to priority of liens, reads as follows: 'Other things being equal, different liens upon the same property have priority according to the time of their creation, except in cases of bottomry and respondentia.' In order to determine whether a lien takes precedence under this section, it is necessary to determine whether other things are equal. Where the lien is created by contract, there is no difficulty whatever in determining the question of priority; it is only when a lien is created by contract and a subsequent lien is created by reason of an existing statute. In the latter case, the wording of the statutes or codes determines the question of priority, as the contract lien is presumed to have been created with knowledge of the law. If the statute exists providing for the creation of liens and determining their priority at the time of the creation of the contract lien, then no constitutional provisions are violated by giving precedence to a subsequently acquired statutory lien over a prior contract lien.

[3] "Some of the cases also distinguish between what are purely common-law liens and statute liens. In this case, however, whether formerly existing as common-law liens or otherwise, a large number of liens, including the lien of agisters, are grouped together and provided for in the same section of the Civil Code. Section 3051 of the Civil Code places agister's liens in the category which we have mentioned. We here quote: 'Every person who, while lawfully in possession of an article of personal property renders any service to the owner thereof, by labor or skill, employed for the protection, improvement, safe-keeping, or carriage thereof, has a special lien thereon, dependent on possession, for the compensation, if any, which is due to him from the owner for such service; a person who makes, alters, or repairs any article of personal property, at the request of the owner, or legal possessor of the property, has a lien on the same for his reasonable charges for the balance due for such work done and materials furnished, and may retain possession of the same until the charges are paid; and livery or boarding or feed stable proprietors, and persons pasturing horses or stock, have a lien, dependent on possession, for their compensation in caring for, boarding, feeding, or pasturing such horses or stock; and laundry proprietors and persons conducting a laundry business, have a general lien, dependent on possession, upon all personal property in their hands belonging to a customer, for the balance due them from such customer for laundry work; and veterinary proprietors and veterinary surgeons shall have a lien, dependent on possession, for their compensation in caring for, boarding, feeding, and medical treatment of animals; and keepers of garages for automobiles shall have a lien, dependent on possession, for their compensation in caring for and safekeeping (of) such automobiles.' There seems to be no difference in the legal meaning of the language used in reference to the different liens there provided for, although there is some difference in the actual language used. In all but one instance, the lien given is 'dependent on possession,' while, in one instance, the language reads, 'and may retain possession of the same until the charges are paid.' While the language differs, the meaning is the same; that is, the lien is dependent upon the possession of the article upon which the lien is claimed by the one asserting the lien, and may be maintained until the lien is discharged by payment.

[4] "Section 3052 of the Civil Code was amended in 1907 (St. 1907, p. 86, § 2), giving to every lienholder of a lien provided for in section 3051 of the Civil Code exactly the same rights and the same remedies. Prior to the amendment, section 3052 gave rights and remedies only to a person who had altered or repaired articles of personal property. Thus, a clear distinction was made by the Legislature with regard to the remedies afforded lienholders. Since the amendment of section 3052, the right to sell the property upon which the lien is claimed is given to any one of the several classes of persons named in section 3051, with the same right and privilege to convert the personal property into cash, irrespective of the prior chattel mortgage, as might have been exercised by any one claiming a lien for repairs or alterations prior to the amendment of the section. In the case of Wilson v. Donaldson, 121 Cal. 8, 53 P. 404, 43 L. R. A. 524, 66 Am. St. Rep. 17, the question involved was whether one who had harvested certain grain had a lien thereon for the charges and expenses of harvesting that would take precedence of a chattel mortgage. The court in that case, in holding that a harvester's lien did not take precedence, commented upon the character of lien which is involved in this case, and in its comments quoted from an Indiana case, there cited, the following language: 'As the agister's lien depends alone upon the statute, it can have no greater force than the statute gives, and as the Legislature has, as we have said, manifested no intention of giving to it superiority over other liens, it can have none,' and then in relation to the lien involved in that case, further said: 'In the absence of the statute, the appellant would have no lien whatever. All his rights come from the statute, and therefore must be weighed and limited by the statute. If the Legislature had desired to give such lien claimants a priority over contract liens, it was an easy thing to have said so.' This decision was rendered in May, 1898, since which date section 3052, Civil Code, relied upon in that case, has been amended, and the Legislature has placed agister's liens along with a number of other kinds of liens in the same class occupied by repairmen. This being true, if persons making repairs or alterations on articles of personal property, etc., have a preferential lien as against holders of chattel mortgages, and it has been so held by the courts of this state, then we can perceive no valid reason why other lienholders grouped with repairmen under section 3051, Civil Code, and given exactly the same rights and privileges by section 3052, Civil Code, should not also occupy the same preferential position, and chattel mortgages held to be executed with knowledge of the law and the possibility of statutory preferential liens in all of the cases specified in section 3051, Civil Code, as well as in one or two particular instances therein specified, especially when the language of the two sections of the Code indicates that the Legislature intended no such difference, and has, by the amendment of section 3052, Civil Code, explicitly placed all the lienholders there referred to upon an equality. In the case of Mortgage Securities Co. v. Pfaffmann, 177 Cal. 109, 169 P. 1033, L. R. A. 1918D, 118, the Supreme Court of this state has held that, under sections 3051 and 3052 of the Civil Code, the statutory lien of one who makes repairs upon personal property is superior to the pre-existing lien of a chattel mortgage. In that case the court refers to the amendment to section 3052, Civil Code, giving the same rights and remedies to all the lienholders mentioned and provided for in section 3051, Civil Code. The case of Wilson v. Donaldson, supra, is also referred to and the fact pointed out that that decision was prior to the amendment, and also further states that the case of Wilson v. Donaldson cannot be treated as having been a thoroughly considered case. In neither the Wilson v. Donaldson Case, nor in the case of Mortgage Securities Co. v. Pfaffmann, was the question of an agister's lien involved. The former related to harvesting grain, and the latter referred to repairs made upon an automobile upon which a chattel mortgage had previously been given. Both cases, however, take up and discuss agister's liens. The Wilson Case refers to the case of Case v. Allen, 21 Kan. *217, 30 Am. Rep. 425, wherein an agister's lien is held superior to a chattel mortgage, and commented adversely on this holding, while the court in the later case of Mortgage Securities Co. v. Pfaffmann refers to the Kansas decision as a well-considered case, and entirely approves the rule there laid down. After considering and mentioning the different kinds of liens, the court in the Mortgage Securities Co. Case says: 'It remains to be added that the question of priority is wholly controlled by our statutory law. If by the fair intendment of that law these classes now enumerated in section 3051 of the Civil Code are given a preferential lien over the holder of an earlier chattel mortgage, we are not embarrassed in so declaring. We are well convinced that our law does with intention make the possessory lien of the improver and of the repairer superior to the lien of the pre-existing chattel mortgage. True, it is said in Wilson v. Donaldson that if the Legislature had desired to give such lien claimants priority over chattel mortgage liens it was an easy thing to have said so, but our conviction is that it has said so and that its declaration has the support of reason and justice. Did the Legislature mean that every artisan and mechanic to whom might be delivered a chattel for improvement and repair must search the records to discover whether that article had been mortgaged, and, failing so to do, be at the peril of the impairment or total destruction of his lien, or did it mean that the money lender who took for security a chattel mortgage should take it with the understanding as part of his contract that improvements and repairs placed upon the article should be subject to a preferential possessory lien? Without hesitation we answer that the second alternative is sustainable as a just interpretation of the legislative enactments. Under the language of the two sections it seems most manifest that such is the true construction. Instancing but one consideration alone, and that the right and power of the possessory lien claimant to sell the property, that right absolute is given him, and he may exercise it so far as the statute reads without regard to the existence of the chattel mortgage and without regard to whether or not the chattel mortgage is foreclosable. One would certainly look to see some limiting language in the law if these provisions as to the right of sale and disposition of the proceeds of the sale were to be subordinated to a preferential right on the part of the holder of a chattel mortgage, and it certainly makes more for the protection of society and for the conduct of its business to say that all of these classes of men who preserve, improve, or repair personal property should, like mechanics and artisans, under the mechanic's lien law, have their liens declared preferential. Concerning the money lender who holds the chattel mortgage, two suggestions may be briefly advanced—one, that the possessory lien claimant has preserved, improved, or repaired the property upon which he has a lien, and, consequently, has added a value to the security commensurate with his just charge; the other, that the money lender desiring to take the security of a chattel mortgage can with much more readiness reduce the amount of his loan to protect himself against the possible liability of a possessory lien than can the work-a-day artisan take the time to inspect the records to see whether such chattel mortgage exists against the property.'

"If by section 3052, Civil Code, the Legislature, in giving the right to a repairman to sell the property on which he has made repairs without reference to the chattel mortgage, indicated its intention to say that such lien shall take precedence, we do not well see how it can be argued that other lienholders provided for in section 3051, Civil Code, and given exactly the same rights and remedies by section 3052, Civil Code, are not likewise placed in the preferential class. If it is correct that the Legislature intended to say that a repairman shall have a preferential lien as against chattel mortgages, then it certainly has said the same thing as to all other lienholders grouped with the repairmen and given the same standing as to rights and remedies.

"The case of Guinn v. McReynolds, 177 Cal. 230, 170 P. 421, where a preferential lien was denied to the county of Tulare, under section 2322a of the Political Code as it then stood in giving liens for the extermination of squirrels and other pests, did not involve a construction of section 3052, Civil Code, and at the time of the [transactions involved in that case] there was nothing in the codes or statutes indicating that the county should have a preferential lien. It may be added that section 2322a of the Political Code has been amended (St. 1921, p. 1157; St. 1923, p. 1180, § 2), and gives such lien. In Case v. Allen, 21 Kan. *217, 30 Am. Rep. 425, the Supreme Court of that state expressly held that an agister's lien created by statute is paramount to a lien of a prior chattel mortgage upon the same cattle, and sets forth therein fully the reasons for so holding. This case, as we have shown, was approved by the Supreme Court of this state in the Mortgage Securities Co. Case, which practically overruled the Wilson Case. It may also be mentioned that the Wilson Case was a department decision, while the Mortgage Securities Co. Case was a decision en banc. The Mortgage Securities Co. Case was before the appellate court (47 Cal. App. 383, 190 P. 641), after retrial, and the judgment therein upholds the priority of the lien of the repairman. Kranzthor v. Al. G. Faulkner Co., 43 Cal. App. 441, 185 P. 305, also upholds the priority of a repairman's lien over a chattel mortgage. Other cases holding that an agister's liens take precedence may be cited as follows: Colquitt & Baggs v. Kirkman, 47 Ga. 555; Smith v. Stevens, 36 Minn. 303, 31 N. W. 55. In line with the decision in Mortgage Securities Co. Case is that of Jesse A. Smith Auto Co. v. Kaestner, 164 Wis. 205, 159 N. W. 738."

[5] While it may be, as contended by appellant, the weight of authority in other jurisdictions is against giving precedence to any of the lienholders mentioned in section 3051 of the Civil Code, we are of the opinion that it is now the established rule in this state they are given preferential liens over holders of earlier chattel mortgages. It is eminently just that the rule should be applied to this case. As was said in Case v. Allen, supra, at page *220:

> "The lien of the agister is not the mere creature of contract. It is created by statute from the fact of the keeping of the cattle. The possession of the agister was rightful; and, the possession being rightful, the keeping gave rise to the lien; and such keeping was as much for the interest of the mortgagee as the mortgagor. The cattle were kept alive thereby; and the principle seems to be that where the mortgagee does not take the possession, but leaves it with the mortgagor, he thereby assents to the creation of a statutory lien for any expenditure reasonably necessary for the preservation or ordinary repair of the thing mortgaged. Such indebtedness really inures to his benefit. The entire value of his mortgage may rest upon the creation of such indebtedness and lien, as in the case at bar, where the thing mortgaged is live stock, and the lien for food."

The conclusion we have reached makes it unnecessary to consider the further contention of the respondents that the appellant gave express or implied consent that the bill for pasturage should constitute a lien superior to that of the chattel mortgage.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CURTIS, J.; LANGDON, J.; PRESTON, J.; SEAWELL, J.; RICHARDS, J.

SHENK, J. (concurring in part). I concur in the judgment on the ground that the record discloses that appellant assented to the creation of a statutory lien preferment as against itself. The facts were stipulated. On the first day of September, 1923, the respondents Donnelly and Clark became the lessees of 13,760 acres of land in Madera county formerly held under lease by the respondent Silva. While in possession of the premises Silva had mortgaged some 700 head of cattle to the plaintiff's assignor with the usual provision in the mortgage that on the default of the mortgagor the mortgagee would have the right to take possession of the mortgaged property without notice. On September 1, 1923, Silva was in default and the cattle were on said premises. On that day Donnelly and Clark notified the appellant that they were informed that the appellant had an interest in said livestock and that from September 1, 1923, a charge of one dollar per head per month would be made against the appellant for pasturage. Under date of September 5th the appellant's representative notified Donnelly and Clark that the cattle would be removed in ten days. They were not removed and when on November 22, 1923, their possession was demanded by the appellant such possession was refused on account of nonpayment of pasturage charges. Under these circumstances the implied consent of the appellant that pasturage charges would accrue and the lien thereof attach would seem to have been satisfactorily shown.

But I cannot agree that under our law an agister's lien has priority over a pre-existing recorded chattel mortgage. It is conceded that an agister's lien did not exist at common law and the well-established rule is not questioned that under a statute which creates a lien which did not exist at common law such lien has no priority unless plainly authorized by the statute which creates it. Sections 3051 and 3052 of the Civil Code do not expressly create a preference as to the liens provided for in section 3051 and, in my opinion, such preference is not fairly implied from the language used. As to those which were liens at common law no difficulty is encountered, for under established rules they may be accorded priority. Such a lien was involved in Mortgage Securities Co. v. Pfaffmann, 177 Cal. 109, 169 P. 1033, L. R. A. 1918D, 118, where it was declared that under the sections of the code referred to the possessory lien of the repairer of personal property was superior to the lien of a pre-existing chattel mortgage. One who made, altered or repaired an article of personal property had a lien at common law and the Pfaffmann Case was necessarily limited in its effect to a repairman's lien. Nothing else was there involved or decided. That case recognized that the agister had no lien at common law. In commenting upon such a lien it was there definitely stated that "under statutes creating agister's liens where questions of priority arose, all the reasoning which, * * * goes to support the priority of the repairer's lien was wholly absent". This for the reason that the agistment does not fall within the principle of improving personal property. The main opinion recognizes that the weight of authority in other jurisdictions is against the preferment of the agister's lien. The rule is stated in 11 Corpus Juris, at page 652, with a citation of some forty-two cases from twenty-one states and the respondents have cited no authority to the contrary except Case v. Allen, 21 Kan. *217, 30 Am. Rep. 425, which, in Wilson v. Donaldson, 121 Cal. 8, 53 P. 404, 43 L. R. A. 524, 66 Am. St. Rep. 17, was stated to be a well-considered case upholding the priority of an agister's lien provided by statute. But the supreme court of Kansas in Bank v. Brecheisen, 65 Kan. 807, 70 P. 795, was at pains to limit the effect of Case v. Allen, and the supreme court of Utah (Grubb v. Lashus, 42 Utah, 254, 129 P. 1029) correctly says that courts are practically unanimous in disapproving the views expressed in Case v. Allen. So it may properly be said that the overwhelming weight of authority elsewhere is that an agister's lien has no priority over a pre-existing chattel mortgage unless given such by statute. The main opinion declares that it is now the established rule in this state that the lienholders mentioned in section 3051 of the Civil Code have preferential liens over prior chattel mortgages. In my opinion this may not rightly be said. Rather should it be said that only such liens provided for in said section as were liens at common law should have such preference. As has been pointed out such a common law lien confirmed by statute was involved in the Pfaffmann case and the reasons for its priority were there declared to be wholly lacking in the case of an agistment. Fifteen days after the decision in the Pfaffmann Case this court decided in Guinn v. McReynolds, 177 Cal. 230, 170 P. 421, that prior to 1917 section 2322a of the Political Code which gave a lien and substantially the same right of foreclosure thereof as section 3052 of the Civil Code did not prefer the lien therein created to a pre-existing chattel mortgage. Section 2322a was later amended to grant such preference. In Guinn v. McReynolds reference is made to many instances in which the statutes of this state have declared particular liens created to be prior and always with plain language to that effect. In neither section 3051 nor section 3052 is the priority of an agister's lien declared and there is no case in this state and no well-considered case elsewhere granting such preferment in the absence of statutory authority.

PUGLIESE v. PUGLIESE. (L. A. 9549.)

Divorce ⊂⊃262—Husband's appeal in divorce case will not be stayed for noncompliance with orders to pay counsel fees without showing of ability.

Appeal by husband in divorce case will not be stayed for his failure to comply with orders to pay certain amounts as plaintiff's counsel fees in lower court and on appeal, in absence of showing that he was able to pay or that wife was unable to provide herself with counsel on appeal.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Wm. C. Doran, Judge.

Action for divorce by Anita Pugliese against Frank Pugliese. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. On motion to stay appeal. Motion denied.

E. M. Torchia and C. W. Pendleton, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Clyde W. Smith, of San Pedro, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Motion to stay appellant's appeal. The action was one for divorce, wherein the plaintiff obtained an interlocutory decree of divorce, which included a judgment or order for a division of the community property between the parties. The community property consisted of certain real estate, and also of a gasoline launch partly owned by the defendant and which was the source of his livelihood as a fisherman. The order also provided for the payment of the sum of $50 per month for the support of the minor children of the parties, and further provided for the payment of $250 as plaintiff's counsel fees, and also for her costs of suit. The defendant began and has since continued to make the monthly payment for the support of his minor children as required by said order. He has also paid a sum of money which would satisfy the plaintiff's demand for costs. He has not, however, paid the amount of the counsel fees as provided in the original order. The defendant has appealed from said interlocutory decree.

Upon taking said appeal the appellant was cited by the superior court to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt in failing to obey the order of the court relating to the payment of counsel fees. The record discloses that, upon the hearing of said citation, the trial court dismissed the contempt proceedings. The record further shows that the court, upon the showing that such appeal had been taken, ordered the appellant to pay an additional sum of $250 for the payment of counsel fees upon said appeal. So far as this record discloses, the plaintiff has made no further effort to enforce said orders for the payment of counsel fees, either by execution or by any further proceedings in contempt. She, however, appears in this court with a further motion to stay the appellant's appeal until he shall have complied with said orders. In support of her motion she presents an affidavit which merely shows that the defendant has not obeyed said orders or either of them, but which fails to show either that the appellant is able to comply with said orders, or that she herself is not able to provide herself with and to pay counsel to represent her upon said appeal.

The record upon the trial of the cause shows that the only property which the defendant was permitted to retain was his interest in his gasoline launch, his earnings by means of which as a fisherman being uncertain, and at best little more than sufficient to enable him each month to make the payment required for the support of his children. There has been no showing made here that he has any further ability to comply with the orders of the trial court with relation to his payment of his wife's counsel fees upon the trial and upon appeal. In the presence of the foregoing facts we are of the opinion that the respondent has made an insufficient showing for an order herein staying the hearing upon this appeal.

The motion is denied.

ARNOLD v. SULLENGER, County Auditor.

1. Constitutional law 🔑63(3)—Statute authorizing board of supervisors to fix county surveyor's compensation held to contravene Constitution; "regulate" (Pol. Code, § 4044; Const. art. 11, § 5).

Pol. Code, § 4044, authorizing board of supervisors to fix county surveyor's compensation, not exceeding $10 per day, held invalid as contravening Const. art. 11, § 5, providing that Legislature shall regulate compensation of county officers; since "regulate" means to fix or establish.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Regulate.]

2. Officers 🔑100(1)—Statute fixing salary of county surveyor did not increase salary during term, where law fixing compensation at time of election was invalid; "increase of salary" (St. 1923, p. 1060, amending Pol. Code, § 4242, subd. 12; Const. art. 11, § 9).

St. 1923, p. 1060, amending Pol. Code, § 4242, subd. 12, to fix salary of county surveyor of counties of thirteenth class, held not to constitute "increase of salary" of county surveyor elected in November, 1922, during his term of office, within Const. art. 11, § 9, since there was no law in force fixing compensation at time of election; Pol. Code, § 4044, being invalid.

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; H. V. Alvarado, Judge.

Proceeding in mandamus by Ralph R. Arnold against A. N. Sullenger, as Auditor of the County of Contra Costa. From a judgment granting the writ, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Archibald B. Tinning, Dist. Atty., of Martinez, and T. H. De Lap, Deputy Dist. Atty., of Richmond, for appellant.

Jones & Dall, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SHENK, J. The respondent, as surveyor of the county of Contra Costa, commenced this proceeding in mandamus in the superior court to compel the appellant, as auditor of said county, to draw his warrant upon the county treasurer in the sum of $500 as salary due the respondent for the month of August, 1924. The appellant answered, and the cause was heard on an agreed statement of facts which are set forth in the findings. Judgment was rendered ordering the issuance of a peremptory writ, from which judgment this appeal is prosecuted on the judgment roll.

The respondent was elected county surveyor of the county at the general election in November, 1918. When he qualified, in January, 1919, Contra Costa county was a county of the sixteenth class, and under subdivision 12 of section 4245 of the Political Code (as amended by Stat. 1917, p. 978), his salary was fixed at $3,250 per annum. On July 27, 1919, the County Engineer Act (Stats. 1919, p. 1290), became effective. Pursuant to the provisions of this act the respondent was appointed county engineer, and his salary was fixed at $6,000 per annum by the board of supervisors. He received this compensation until the County Engineer Act was, on October 7, 1921, declared unconstitutional. Coulter v. Pool, 187 Cal. 181, 201 P. 120. Under the provisions of section 11 of said act the office of county surveyor was deemed abolished when the person holding said office should be appointed county engineer. On July 20, 1921, Contra Costa was placed in the thirteenth class. Stats. 1921, p. 850. As the County Engineer Act was then deemed to be valid, no provision was made in the amendment of section 4242 of the Political Code for the salary of county surveyor. After the decision in Coulter v. Pool the respondent drew a salary at the rate of $3,250 per annum under the provisions of section 4245 of the Political Code until the expiration of his term, in January, 1923. At the November election in 1922 the respondent was reelected county surveyor, and, upon his qualification, took office to succeed himself in January, 1923. From the commencement of said term until July 31, 1924, the respondent presented claims to the board of supervisors of said county for compensation at the rate of $10 per day, and his claims were allowed under the terms of section 4044 of the Political Code, which provided that: "The surveyor shall receive such compensation as the board of supervisors may allow, not to exceed ten dollars per day for all work performed." On June 21, 1923, section 4242 of the Political Code was amended, whereby, in subdivision 12 thereof (Stats. 1923, p. 1060), the compensation of the surveyor of counties of the thirteenth class was fixed by the Legislature at $6,000 per annum. It is the compensation fixed by the amendment of section 4242 that is claimed by the respondent in this proceeding.

[1, 2] The question for determination is whether section 4044 of the Political Code is unconstitutional in so far as it attempts to vest in the board of supervisors the power and discretion to fix the compensation of the county surveyor at "not to exceed ten dollars per day." If such provision be valid it would follow that the compensation fixed in subdivision 12 of section 4242 of the Political Code, as amended in 1923, at $6,000 per annum would constitute an increase in the compensation of the respondent after his election and during his term of office in contravention of section 9 of article 11 of the Constitution, for on no theory may it be said that on the face of the statute (Shearer v. Flannery, 68 Cal. App. 91, 228 P. 549) the compensation authorized by section 4044 would in one year be equal to $6,000. Compensation at the maximum rate of ten dollars per day for every day in the year would be slightly in excess of one-half of that sum. The conclusive presumption recognized in Galeener v. Honeycutt, 173 Cal. 100, 159 P. 595, and cases therein cited, to the effect that the governor and legislature have investigated, ascertained and determined that the change does not result in the increase of compensation would therefore have no application in this case. On the other hand, if section 4044, so far as it attempts to delegate to the board of supervisors the power to fix the compensation of the county surveyor, be held to be constitutionally unauthorized, it would then follow that no compensation for the respondent was lawfully fixed at the time of his election or during his term of office until the amendment of section 4242 of the Political Code became effective. When so fixed it would not result in an unconstitutional increase or an increase at all. When the compensation of the county surveyor is not fixed at the time of his election the constitutional provision does not prevent the fixing thereof after his term begins. Shearer v. Flannery, supra, and cases therein cited.

That the respondent is a county officer is not questioned. It is well settled, in view of the provisions of section 5 of article 11 of the Constitution, that the Legislature cannot directly delegate to a board of supervisors the power to fix the compensation of a county officer. Coulter v. Pool, supra; People v. Wheeler, 136 Cal. 652, 69 P. 435; People v. Johnson, 95 Cal. 471, 31 P. 611; Dougherty v. Austin, 94 Cal. 601, 28 P. 834, 29 P. 1092, 16 L. R. A. 161; Sarter v. Siskiyou County, 42 Cal. App. 530, 183 P. 852.

Section 5 of article 11 of the Constitution provides that the Legislature by general and uniform laws shall "regulate the compensation of all such officers," which includes county officers. It is insisted by appellant that the word "regulate" as employed in the constitutional provision should be defined to mean "adjust by rule, method, or established mode; to direct by rule or restriction; to subject to governing principles or laws." An examination of the cases in this state, and particularly those above cited, clearly indicates that the word "regulate" has always been deemed to mean "to fix" or "to establish," and no other signification may now properly be attached to that word in the connection in which it is so employed in this section of the Constitution. No controlling importance may be attached to the fact that in section 4044 the Legislature purported to fix a maximum of $10 per day to the compensation that might be fixed by the board of supervisors for the county surveyor. Even so the section attempts to vest in the board of supervisors the power in its discretion to fix said compensation within the limits specified.

Under the fee system it was undoubtedly competent for the Legislature to fix the fees that might be charged by certain public officers and authorize them to retain the same as long as the aggregate did not exceed the maximum fixed by statute. Instances of such action are found in the county government acts of earlier years (see Martin v. Santa Barbara, 105 Cal. 208, 38 P. 687). In such cases the compensation to which the officer was entitled was fixed by statute, with no power in the board of supervisors to alter the same. Under section 4044 the board of supervisors could, if the provision be valid, fix the compensation of the county surveyor at five or six or any number of dollars per day within the maximum, and thus exercise a discretionary power in fixing the compensation for a county officer not authorized by law.

We conclude, therefore, that section 4044 of the Political Code, in so far as it attempts to delegate to the board of supervisors the power to fix the compensation of the county surveyor, is invalid, as contrary to section 5 of article 11 of the Constitution. When so considered there was no law in force at the time of the election of the respondent which fixed his compensation, and the amendment of section 4242 of the Political Code in 1923, fixing such compensation at $6,000 per annum did not constitute an increase during his term of office as contemplated by section 9 of article 11 of the Constitution.

The judgment is affirmed.

Findings of trial court, based on conflicting evidence, that there was fraud inducing conveyance from aged woman, will be upheld.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; R. Y. Williams, Judge.

Suit to set aside a deed by Louis Johnston and others against Emilla June Field and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Head, Rutan & Scovel, of Santa Ana, for appellants.

Roland Thompson and James L. Davis, both of Santa Ana, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court in and for the county of Orange in favor of the plaintiffs in an action brought by them to set aside a deed executed by one Eva Jeanette Shaffer, since deceased, on the 4th day of April, 1922, by which deed she purported to transfer to the defendants and appellants certain real property constituting practically the whole of her estate. The alleged grounds upon which the plaintiffs sought to have said conveyance set aside were that the same was obtained by said grantees by fraud and undue influence and that the same was without consideration and was never in fact delivered by said grantor to the grantees named therein. The cause was tried by the court, sitting without a jury, at the conclusion of which trial the court made its findings of fact and conclusions of law wherein the averments of the plaintiffs were sustained and the said conveyance avoided.

The sole contention of the appellants is that the findings of the trial court in the foregoing regard were insufficiently supported by the evidence. Practically the entire brief of the appellants, consisting of 80 printed pages, is devoted to a review of the evidence in the case. The brief of the respondents is also largely made up of a similar recital of the evidence which, it is claimed, sustains the findings and conclusions of the trial court. We are thus brought to an examination of the entire record, with a view to determining whether, upon the several issues presented at the trial, the evidence is so far conflicting that we ought not to disturb the findings and judgment of the trial court. We are satisfied from such a review that such is the case. The grantor of the deed in question was an infirm old woman, of whom the plaintiffs and defendants are her children by two marriages and constitute her only heirs. At the time of her death she was of the age of 75 years, and during the several days preceding her death, and during the course of which the conveyance in question was made, was in a dying condition, and was so known to be, not only by her said children, but also by the physicians who were in attendance upon her during said period. It would be useless to attempt to review in detail the testimony of her said children and of her said physicians in order to point out the sharply conflicting evidence givien by these witnesses as to the mental and physical condition of the grantor of this conveyance during these several days preceding her decease. We shall not therefore attempt such review, but will merely state it to be our fixed conclusion that the case presents such a conflict in the evidence that the judgment of the trial judge, who, acting impartially, and after seeing the parties and hearing the evidence in the case, reached the conclusion that the conveyance ought not to stand, should be upheld.

In re O'CONNOR'S ESTATE. (L. A. 9395.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 10, 1927.)

1. Executors and administrators ⚷510(2)—Order overruling exceptions to executor's final account is unappealable (Code Civ. Proc. § 963).

Order overruling exceptions to executor's final account is not appealable, under Code Civ. Proc. § 963.

2. Executors and administrators ⚷314(12)—Notice of appeal from decree of distribution held sufficient as against contention that it was from order overruling objections to final account (Code Civ. Proc. § 963).

Notice of appeal from decree of distribution, designating its date and date of its entry and amendment, held sufficient to vest appellate jurisdiction, under Code Civ. Proc. § 963, as against contention that it applied solely to unappealable order overruling objections to executor's final account.

3. Executors and administrators 🔑503—Approval of executor's expenditure of $55, representing items less than $20, without voucher on verified account, omitting names of payees, held erroneous, in absence of evidence of payment (Code Civ. Proc. § 1632).

Court's approval of $55 item without vouchers, in executor's final account, because of unverified statement by counsel that item was aggregate of smaller items of less than $20, held erroneous, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1632, in absence of evidence of payment thereof or statement in verified account as to payees' identity.

4. Executors and administrators 🔑110—Executor held properly credited with taxes and street assessments paid on lot devised to him.

Past-due taxes, levied before testatrix' death, and street assessments, payable in annual installments, on lot devised to executor, held properly paid by him in care and management of estate, so as to entitle him to credit therefor on final accounting; his title to lot being subject to be divested if estate became insolvent.

5. Executors and administrators 🔑495(1)—Realization loss held properly credited to executor, but erroneously included in aggregate on which his and his attorney's compensation was computed (Code Civ. Proc. § 1618).

Executor was properly given credit on final accounting for realization loss, but such item should not have been included in aggregate on which compensation of himself and his attorney was computed, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1618.

6. Executors and administrators 🔑496(2)—Executor held entitled to commission on value of lot devised to him, in absence of showing that he did not take possession thereof (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1581, 1618).

In absence of contrary showing, it will be presumed that executor complied with requirement of Code Civ. Proc. § 1581, that he take possession of all of testator's real and personal estate, so as to entitle him to commission, under section 1618, on value of lot devised to him, which appraisement and account showed as part of estate's assets.

7. Executors and administrators 🔑288—Gas and oil rights held properly distributed as directed by codicil, as against contention that all hope of production had been abandoned and that distribution would constitute cloud on title.

Gas and oil rights held properly distributed among devisees as directed by codicil, in absence of evidence or citation of authorities sustaining contention that all hope or expectation of oil or gas production had been abandoned and that such distribution would constitute cloud on title.

8. Executors and administrators 🔑497—Allowances to executor and attorney for extraordinary services in securing loan will not be disturbed, without showing abuse of discretion (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1618, 1619).

Allowances to executor and his attorney for extraordinary services in securing loan to pay debts of estate will not be disturbed by Supreme Court, in absence of showing that lower court improperly exercised its discretion, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1618, 1619.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. H. Thomas, Judge pro tem.

In the matter of the estate of Mary Esther O'Connor, deceased. From an order overruling objections to the final account of Charles F. Bailey, executor, and from a decree of distribution, Lucy J. Hartman, residuary legatee, appeals. Motion to dismiss appeal denied, and decree reversed, with directions.

Lee Utley, of Los Angeles, for executor and petitioner.

James Donovan and Edgar L. Bishop, both of Los Angeles, for residuary legatee and objector.

SHENK, J. Mary Esther O'Connor died testate in the county of Los Angeles. Her will, including a codicil, was admitted to probate. Both in the will and codicil Lucy J. Hartman, a sister of the decedent, was made residuary legatee. In the codicil Charles F. Bailey, the respondent herein, was devised a lot at the corner of Figueroa and Sixty-Seventh streets, in the city of Los Angeles, and he was also made sole executor without bond. Certain property belonging to the estate and located at Los Nietos had been appraised at $15,000, based to a large extent on its probable oil and gas indications. This property was later reappraised at $6,500. The administration proceeded to a consideration of an amended final account and petition for distribution, which came on regularly for hearing. Exceptions to certain items of the account and objection to distribution according to the terms of the codicil were filed by the residuary legatee and were overruled. The court thereupon entered its order settling the final account and rendered its decree of distribution. In the decree the court recited that, "after hearing the evidence at such time," the court arrived at the determination therein set forth. The residuary legatee made a motion to strike out the quoted phrase on the ground that no evidence had been taken. The motion was granted, and in lieu of the words stricken the court inserted the following:

"On taking up the first objection of counsel for objector, Lucy J. Hartman, Mr. Lee Utley, attorney for the executor in said matter, arose and stated in open court that the item amounting to $55 was the sum total of several items, none of which amounted to $20, and did not present any vouchers for any of said items amounting in the aggregate to said sum total. That there was no objection made to such statement and the court accepted said statement as a fact and then overruled the said objection. As to the five remaining objections to the final account of the executor, no evidence of any kind was offered or received at the time, and in arriving at its final conclusions the court considered only said objection to the amended final account, the amended final account itself, and other documents and papers among the files on file in the above-entitled action."

[1, 2] The decree of distribution was dated May 12, 1926, and was entered on June 11, 1926. The order amending the recital in the decree was made and filed June 17, 1926. The residuary legatee served and filed a notice of appeal from both the order overruling her exceptions to the final account, and also from the decree dated May 12th and entered June 11th, as amended June 17, 1926, reciting said dates in the notice. The respondent made a motion in this court to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the notice of appeal was insufficient to vest appellate jurisdiction. On the hearing of said motion it was insisted that the said notice of appeal applied solely to the order overruling the objections, and that such an order is not appealable, under section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure. If the notice of appeal were so limited there would be no recourse but to dismiss the appeal, for it is clear that an order overruling exceptions to a final account is not an appealable order. But, when the notice of appeal is analyzed and the surplusage discarded, it may fairly be said to constitute a notice of appeal from the decree of distribution. It gave notice of appeal from said decree, designating correctly its date and the date of its entry and amendment, and there was no other decree entered in the matter. While the language of the notice is somewhat confusing, it sufficiently identifies the decree from which the appeal was intended to be taken, and the respondent was not misled thereby. Harrelson v. Miller & Lux, Inc., 182 Cal. 414, 188 P. 800; 2 Cal. Jur. p. 318. The motion to dismiss the appeal was continued for determination preliminarily to the consideration of the appeal on its merits. From what has been said it follows that the motion should be denied.

[3] On the merits the appellant urges six points for reversal. The first point is that the court erroneously approved an item of $55 for money expended in administering upon certain property of the estate in Spokane. There was no voucher for this item, and it is insisted that it should be excluded for the reason that it represents an expenditure of over $20. Section 1632, Code Civ. Proc. As indicated in the order of the court above quoted, the basis for the approval of the item without vouchers was a statement by counsel for respondent in open court, not under oath, that the item was an aggregate of smaller items of less than $20 each. There was no evidence in support of the fact of payment of this item, nor does the verified account state to whom payment was made. The item should therefore have been rejected. Section 1632, Code Civ. Proc.; Estate of Hedrick, 127 Cal. 184, 59 P. 590.

[4] The second objection relates to taxes and street assessments paid by the executor on the Figueroa street lot. The court allowed credit to the executor for the payment thereof. It is the contention of the appellant that taxes are a charge against the land, and not the estate, and that certain assessments paid by the executor were not personal claims against the testatrix, but against the land. It is also claimed that as the executor is to receive this particular lot on distribution, he should not receive credit for these payments. A portion of the taxes were levied prior to the death of the testatrix, and the whole thereof were due when paid. The assessments were annual payments on a street bond which were paid as they became due during the course of administration. Although the lot had been devised to the executor, it was and continued to be a part of the assets of the estate until distribution. The title of the devisee was at all times subject to be divested if the estate became insolvent. The taxes and assessments were past-due liens upon the property of the estate in course of administration and were properly payable by the executor in the care and management of the estate. People v. Olvera, 43 Cal. 492; Weinreich v. Hensley, 121 Cal. 647, 657, 54 P. 254; Estate of Freud, 131 Cal. 667, 63 P. 1080, 82 Am. St. Rep. 407; 12 Cal. Jur. p. 113.

[5, 6] The third and fourth exceptions are addressed to the allowance of compensation to the executor and his attorney. The compensation was computed upon the reappraised value of the estate, including a realization loss of $100. The executor was properly given credit for this loss, but the item should not have been included in the aggregate upon which the compensation of himself and his attorney was computed. Section 1618, Code Civ. Proc.; Estate of Fernandez, 119 Cal. 579, 585, 51 P. 851. It is insisted that neither the executor nor his attorney is entitled to a commission on the value of the Figueroa street lot devised to the executor "unless the same was taken into possession for the purpose of administration." The statute requires the executor to take into possession all the estate of the testator, both real and personal (section 1581, Code Civ. Proc.), and in the absence of a showing to the contrary, and none is here shown, it will be presumed that the executor has complied with the statutory requirement. The inventory and appraisement and the account show the lot as part of the assets of the estate. The objection that compensation should not be allowed to both the executor and his attorney is without merit. Section 1618, Code Civ. Proc.; 11 Cal. Jur. 1176.

[7] The fifth objection is to the distribution of the 1 per cent. gas and oil rights made in the codicil to certain devisees, on the ground that all hope or expectation of oil or gas production from said property has been abandoned and such distribution will constitute a cloud upon the title. No evidence was offered, and no authority has been cited to sustain the contention. The dispositive language of the codicil was authority for the order, and the point is untenable.

[8] The sixth exception is to the allowance of $75 to the attorney and $50 to the executor for extraordinary services in securing a loan of $2,500 with which to pay debts of the estate. Sections 1618 and 1619 of the Code of Civil Procedure permit the court, in its discretion, to make such allowances, and it does not appear that the court has improperly exercised such discretion.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied. The decree is reversed, with direction to the trial court to disallow the said item of $55 and to not include the said item of $100 in the amount upon which the compensation of the executor and his attorney is computed, the costs of this appeal to be paid out of the assets of said estate.

GOULD v. OTTO et ux. (Civ. 5639.)★

1. Brokers ⚿43(1)—Where contract employing plaintiff as real estate agent was not in writing, he could not recover on quantum meruit (Code Civ. Proc. § 1973, subd. 6; Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6).

Where contract employing plaintiff as agent to sell certain real estate was not in writing, as required by statute of frauds (Code Civ. Proc. § 1973, subd. 6; Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6), he could not recover on quantum meruit.

2. Brokers ⚿43(1)—Agent, having no written authority to sell real property, could not recover compensation for sending purchaser to owner (Code Civ. Proc. § 1973, subd. 6; Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6).

Agent, having no written authority for sale of real property as required by statute of frauds (Code Civ. Proc. § 1973, subd. 6; Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6), could not recover compensation for merely sending purchaser to owner, on ground that he did not complete negotiations and statute did not apply, since verbal contract, being invalid, conferred no legal authority on him to procure purchaser.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action to recover commission on sale of real property by M. D. Gould against F. W. Otto and wife. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Ross & Ross, of Redwood City, for appellants.

Eric Lyders, of San Francisco, and J. J. Bullock, of Redwood City, for respondent.

KNIGHT, J. Plaintiff brought this action to recover the sum of $640 claimed to be due for services rendered in connection with the sale of defendants' real property, and was given judgment for the sum of $300. The defendants appeal.

The amended complaint contained six counts. The first declared upon an agreement authorizing respondent to sell said real property at a stated price, for commission of $640; the others were common counts, the third being upon a quantum meruit for services rendered at appellants' request. Answering, appellants denied the allegations of the respective counts, and alleged as affirmative defense that the agreement upon which the several causes of action were founded was unenforceable because there was no note or memorandum thereof in writing subscribed by appellants or their agent, as is required by the statute of frauds. Subdivision 6, § 1973, Code Civ. Proc.; subdivision 6, § 1624, Civ. Code.

The material facts are not disputed, and are as follows: On March 9, 1924, at the office of the California Homes Association in San Carlos, San Mateo county, appellants verbally authorized respondent to sell the real property described in the complaint, respondent at the time being a licensed real estate salesman in the employ of said company, and one Fred H. Drake. The next day, according to respondent's testimony, pursuant to such verbal authorization, and acting in the capacity of a real estate salesman, he took three prospective buyers to inspect the property, among them being one Mansfield, and on April 14, 1924, Mansfield's wife purchased the property, having carried on the negotiations and concluded the sale directly with appellants.

It is apparent from the rulings of the trial court made on the admissibility of evidence and on motion for nonsuit, as well as from the conclusions stated in its written opinion, that judgment was rendered in respondent's favor upon the theory that, although a contract for the employment of an agent to sell real estate must be in writing, respondent in fact made no sale of the property having merely sent a prospective buyer to appellants, who negotiated and concluded the sale, without solicitations on the part of respondent, and that, for the service of "sending the purchaser" to appellants, respondent was entitled to reasonable compensation. Therefore, basing its decision solely on the third count of the amended complaint, the court made findings to the effect that respondent had "rendered and performed for defendants certain services" for which the latter agreed to pay a reasonable amount and accordingly judgment was entered for the sum of $300, the court having found such amount to be the reasonable value of said services.

[1] We are of the opinion that the judgment cannot be sustained. In a certain class of cases arising under the seventh subdivision of the statute of frauds it has been held that, where a party has conferred upon another, with the assent of the latter, a benefit which was not intended as a gratuity, and the recipient cannot be held upon his original promise to compensate by virtue of the statute of frauds, the law implies a promise on the part of the party receiving the benefits to pay the reasonable value of whatever has been received under the contract; and under those circumstances recovery may be had under a quantum meruit, but not on the contract itself. Zellner v. Wassman, 184 Cal. 80, 193 P. 84; Hagan v. McNary, 170 Cal. 141, 148 P. 937, L. R. A. 1918E, 562; Rutherford v. Peppa, 53 Cal. App. 309, 199 P. 1111. But it is also held that the rule mentioned has no application to those cases where the contract of employment is itself within the statute of frauds, such as the oral employment of an agent to sell real estate. Under such circumstances the law does not imply a promise, and if there be no contract of employment in writing, the agent is not entitled to recover upon a quantum meruit. Jamison v. Hyde, 141 Cal. 109, 74 P. 695; Kleinsorge & Heilbron v. Liness, 17 Cal. App. 534, 120 P. 444; Sellers v. Solway Land Co., 31 Cal. App. 259, 160 P. 175; 12 Cal. Jur. 932.

In Jamison v. Hyde, supra, the complaint was in two counts, the first declaring on a contract for the payment of commissions on the sale of real estate and the second being a common count based upon allegations similar to those contained in the third count herein; and it was said:

> "There being no contract of employment in writing, it is clear also that plaintiff is not entitled to recover the reasonable value of the services under the second count of his complaint. This question has long been settled by the decisions of this court. McCarthy v. Loupe, 62 Cal. 299; Myres v. Surryhme, 67 Cal. 657 [8 P. 523]; McGeary v. Satchwell, 129 Cal. 389 [62 P. 58])."

To the same effect is Sellers v. Solway Land Co., supra, wherein it is declared:

> "It has long been held in this state that an agent having sold real property under a contract of employment invalid because not in writing can recover neither upon the contract nor upon quantum meruit. McCarthy v. Loupe, 62 Cal. 299; Myres v. Surryhme, 67 Cal. 657 [8 P. 523]; Zeimer v. Antisell, 75 Cal. 509 [17 P. 642]; McPhail v. Buell, 87 Cal. 115 [25 P. 266]; Shanklin v. Hall, 100 Cal. 26 [34 P. 636]; McGeary v. Satchwell, 129 Cal. 389 [62 P. 58]; Jamison v. Hyde, 141 Cal. 109 [74 P. 695]."

[2] The fact that respondent may not have completed the negotiations and concluded the sale does not have the effect of taking the case out of the operation of the foregoing rules, for the reason that the verbal contract under which he presumed to act being invalid, conferred no legal authority on him to procure a purchaser for said property. Kleinsorge & Heilbron v. Liness, supra.

In support of the judgment respondent cites the cases of West v. Visalia Abstract Co., 53 Cal. App. 467, 200 P. 351, and Shaffer v. Beinhorn, 190 Cal. 569, 213 P. 960, but we think neither is in point. In the first case the oral agreement sued upon was one made between real estate brokers to divide commissions, and therefore was not an agreement for the employment of an agent to sell real estate so as to fall within the requirements of the statute of frauds. The second case involved the question of whether, in view of section 20 of the Real Estate Brokers Act (St. 1919, p. 1259), providing that no action for the recovery of real estate commissions can be maintained unless it be alleged and proved that the parties claiming such commissions were duly licensed brokers or salesmen at the time the cause of action arose, the plaintiffs therein, neither of whom was so licensed, might recover compensation from a real estate broker under an agreement to pay them if they would find anyone interested in the purchase of the property to whom the broker would be able to negotiate a sale, or would introduce the broker to such person. The opinion in the case does not disclose whether or not the agreement upon which the cause of action was founded was in writing, and the question of the application of the statute of frauds was not raised.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is reversed.

Where dairy company's driver, while loading milk bottles on truck in employer's garage, was injured by fragments of glass from bottles broken by wall of adjoining building falling in earthquake, held that injuries arose out of employment within Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1913, p. 279, as amended); they being caused by the broken glass and not by the earthquake.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by William Wilson to recover for personal injuries, opposed by the Enterprise Dairy Company, employer, and another. Compensation was awarded by the Industrial Accident Commission, and the employer and State Compensation Insurance Fund petition for certiorari. Award affirmed.

Frank J. Creede, of San Francisco, for petitioners.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

WORKS, P. J. The facts involved in this controversy are shown by a stipulation entered into at a hearing before the Industrial Accident Commission. It was stipulated that one William D. Wilson was in the employ of petitioner dairy company as an automobile truck driver, and that, in the course of his employment, "the employee was injured in the following manner: After having driven his automobile into a garage of the employer to load said automobile with milk, and while he was engaged in loading the said automobile with milk from a refrigerator belonging to the employer in said garage, an earthquake occurred, and the brick wall of an adjoining two-story building fell through the roof of said garage, causing the employee to receive severe contusions over the spine and left chest posterior, with multiple lacerated wounds of his hands and arms from broken glass, the said glass coming from milk bottles which he was loading and had loaded." As a result of the hearing, an award was made allowing compensation to Wilson for the injuries mentioned in the stipulation. Petitioners, after asking for a rehearing before the commission, and, upon the request for a rehearing being denied, applied to this court for the writ of review, and the writ issued.

[1, 2] The sole question presented for our determination is whether Wilson's injuries arose out of his employment. The award was for a small lump sum, payable forthwith. If it be granted, for the sake of argument, without deciding, that a part of the injuries were compensable and that the remainder were not, no complaint is made of the failure of respondent commission to segregate the two parts. Under such circumstances, indeed, we should doubtless be compelled to assume that the commission allowed compensation only for the compensable injuries. Be that as it may, however, and considering alone the fact that there is no objection to a lack of segregation, if any part of the injuries were compensable the award must stand. Consequently, we shall henceforth disregard that rather uncertain portion of the stipulation relating to "severe contusions over the spine and left chest posterior." Even with this exclusion the stipulation may not be regarded as a model of certainty. After the exclusion the concord of the parties may be rendered thus: While the employee, after driving his truck into a garage belonging to his employer, was engaged in loading bottled milk upon the truck, taking the bottles from a refrigerator located in the garage and also belonging to the employer, "an earthquake occurred, and the brick wall of an adjoining two-story building fell through the roof of said garage, causing the employee to receive * * * multiple lacerated wounds of his hands and arms from broken glass, the said glass coming from milk bottles he was loading and had loaded." In solving the problem here presented, we shall assume that the milk bottles, both those which the employee "was loading" and those which he "had loaded," were broken by the falling brick wall and not by improper handling by the employee, or by any other means. We shall also assume that the brick wall fell because of the earthquake shock. These assumptions embody our understanding of the import of the stipulation, and they remove its principal uncertainties.

[3] The rule which is to govern the disposition of this proceeding has been correctly stated, we think, in this language, relating to a claim of compensation because of the death of an employee:

> "We believe the reasonable rule to be that, if deceased, by reason of his employment, was exposed to a risk of being injured by a storm which was greater than the risk to which the public in that vicinity was subject, or if his employment necessarily accentuated the natural hazard from the storm, which increased hazard contributed to the injury, it was an injury arising out of the employment although unexpected and unusual." Central Illinois Co. v. Industrial Commission, 291 Ill. 256, 126 N. E. 144, 13 A. L. R. 967.

[4] We think the present proceeding is within the rule stated. Let us ascertain the true situation under the facts before us by the statement of an imagined case. Suppose that Wilson had been in the employ of a merchant engaged in the sale of glassware; his duty having been to make delivery to customers of goods sold by the employer. Suppose that he was engaged in the delivery of a quantity of fragile merchandise of the character mentioned, that he transported it in his truck to the sidewalk curbing in front of the residence of a customer who had bought it, and that then, with a heavily loaded basket on his shoulder, containing the fragile glassware, he started on foot toward the residence of the customer. Suppose further that before he reached his goal an earthquake shock occurred of sufficient intensity to throw him to the ground, thereby causing the glass to break and to cut him severely, he suffering no injury whatever from the fall itself—that is, by his mere contact with the ground. Is there any doubt that under such circumstances Wilson would have been entitled to compensation because of his injuries? The question appears to answer itself. Nor can we see a difference in legal effect between the supposed case and the one actually presented to us. We think, specifically, that no difference arises merely because milk bottles, as commonly known, are not to a great extent fragile. Although they are fabricated for the purpose of withstanding some considerable degree of rough usage, the fact remains that Wilson was cut—lacerated, in the language of the stipulation—by the fragments into which flew those that he handled. This fact, we think, demonstrates that in the course of Wilson's employment he was subject to risks different from and in addition to those to which other persons were exposed who were within the area affected by the earthquake in question. His injuries from the broken bottles, therefore, arose out of the employment. Within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1913, p. 279 as amended), he was injured by the broken glass and not by the earthquake. As bearing upon the question here presented, it is instructive to note the facts upon which compensation was directed in Central Illinois Co. v. Industrial Commission, supra.

We see nothing to interfere with the conclusion here reached in the cases cited by petitioner, among which are State v. District Court, 129 Minn. 502, 153 N. W. 119, L. R. A. 1916A, 344, Thier v. Widdifield, 210 Mich. 355, 178 N. W. 16, and Alzina Construction Co. v. Industrial Commission, 309 Ill. 395, 141 N. E. 191.

Action by the Fashion Hat Frame Company against Leah Ringel, Samuel Malnick, ★Rehearing denied. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

also known as Sam Malnick and S. Malnick, and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant Sam Malnick appeals. Affirmed.

Frank E. Powers, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Harry K. Wolff and D. K. Seibert, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued on a promissory note for $1,000, executed by defendant Ringel, made payable to Sam Malnick, and indorsed by him and by the other defendant. Plaintiff had judgment for the amount prayed for, together with interest and attorney's fees, and the defendant Sam Malnick has alone appealed on a bill of exceptions.

The note was assigned to Joseph Malnick by Sam Malnick for money advanced by the former to the latter for the benefit of defendant Ringel. It was presented to Joseph Malnick by Sam Malnick, fully executed by Ringel, and indorsed by defendant Semon and by Sam Malnick. Subsequent to the maturity of said note it was assigned and delivered for a valuable consideration by Joseph Malnick to the plaintiff.

The appellant specifies two particulars in which he claims that the evidence was insufficient to support the judgment—because it does not show that the note was presented to Ringel on the day it became due, and because it shows failure to give the appellant notice of dishonor as required by law. Respondent insists that the judgment must be affirmed because this appellant waived demand and notice. This issue was raised by amendment to the complaint, and the trial court found that, subsequent to the demand upon the maker and subsequent to the notice to appellant of the dishonor, the appellant, with full knowledge of the circumstances, promised to pay all moneys due under the note and requested a short extension of time for that purpose.

[1] This finding is not attacked in the bill, and, though appellant states in his brief that it is not supported by the evidence, the record does not support appellant's claim. It appears that numerous demands were made upon the appellant subsequent to the maturity of the note and that on each occasion he promised that he and the maker would pay or that he alone would pay and asked time to arrange for the payment. With the evidence appearing in the record and the inferences which the trial court could draw therefrom, we are satisfied that the finding of waiver cannot be successfully attacked.

[2] This being so, the case comes within the rule that a promise by the indorser to pay after knowledge of the failure of presentation is a waiver of demand and notice. Oxnard v. Varnum, 111 Pa. 193, 2 A. 224, 56 Am. Rep. 255, 259.

[3] Notice of dishonor being provided for the benefit of the indorser, his subsequent promise to pay is to be treated as a waiver of the right to notice and an affirmance of his original obligation. Section 3163, Civ. Code; Stanley v. McElrath, 86 Cal. 449, 457, 25 P. 16, 26 P. 800, 10 L. R. A. 545; Curtis v. Sprague, 51 Cal. 239, 240.

TYLER, P. J. Action by a physician to recover the reasonable value of professional services. It is claimed that the work done was of the reasonable value of $1,500; that the sum of $500 had been paid on account thereof, leaving a balance of $1,000, for which sum judgment is prayed.

The answer admits that the services were rendered, but denies that they were reasonably worth the amount claimed, or that they were performed at the special instance and request of defendant. As a further answer and defense defendant pleaded the statute of frauds, claiming that the action was an attempt to hold the defendant for the debt of another without a memorandum in writing. The trial court found in favor of defendant. It is plaintiff's contention that the findings to the effect that the services were not rendered at the request of defendant, and that, if any promise was made, it was not in writing, and was therefore invalid under subdivision 2, § 1973, of the Code of Civil Procedure are contrary to, and not supported by the evidence. For a full understanding of the case a somewhat extended review of the evidence becomes necessary. Defendant was an uncle of one Tom Arslan. In 1922 Arslan came from Fresno to the University of California Hospital at San Francisco to consult and be treated for a tumor by Dr. Naffziger, a brain specialist. He was accompanied by his brother Harry Arslan. Upon examination, it was discovered that an immediate operation was necessary. Plaintiff first performed a decompression operation for relief of pressure. A major operation was necessary, and plaintiff discussed with the brothers the question of the payment of his fees. He was assured by them that they were responsible, but that their uncle would pay the same, but the doctor was cautioned by them not to mention the fact to their relative that they had used his name. Immediately after entering the hospital the patient procured the services of a private nurse, and at his request she wrote to his uncle at Fresno. The exact contents of this letter do not appear, as neither the nurse nor defendant could remember the particular language used. The nurse testified that it informed defendant of the condition of his nephew, and requested that he become responsible for the payment of plaintiff's fee. Defendant, on the other hand, testified that, while he did not remember the exact wording of the letter, he considered it a mere request to obtain his consent as a relative of the patient to the serious operation contemplated. In answer to this communication, defendant wrote to plaintiff as follows:

> "I received a letter from Miss Keesecer, nurse for Tom Arslan, who advised that you are waiting to hear from me. If an operation is necessary, please have it done right away.
> "Yours very truly, J. T. Illbeg."

Shortly after the receipt of this letter by plaintiff an operation was performed, which improved the patient's condition, and he was discharged from the hospital, but subsequently died. Prior to his death Arslan had paid plaintiff the sum of $500 on account of his services. Appellant contended at the trial, and does here, that the letter written by the nurse to defendant Illbeg was for an assurance as to the payment of plaintiff's fee; that defendant's letter in reply constitutes a request for the operation which makes him an original obligor. It is upon these facts that plaintiff bases his claim that the findings are contrary to the evidence. In cases of doubt, the question as to which party is primarily liable is a question of fact. McClenahan v. Keyes, 188 Cal. 574, 206 P. 454.

[1, 2] It is only when there is no evidence to sustain a finding or where it can be said as a matter of law that the evidence is insufficient to sustain it that this court has jurisdiction to consider the evidence. It was respondent's contention at the trial that the letter written by the nurse was for the sole purpose of obtaining his consent to the serious operation, he being a close relative of the patient, and that his reply thereto did not constitute a request by him for the operation, nor did it contain a promise to pay any sum whatsoever, and defendant at no time ever agreed to become liable for the services rendered. In support of this claim, defendant introduced evidence to show that constant demand was made by plaintiff upon his nephews to pay, but no demand was ever made upon him; that the only instance in which the matter was brought to his attention was on the occasion immediately following the operation, when he received a letter from plaintiff advising him of his nephew's condition. This letter, in concluding, advised defendant that Harry Arslan promised to attend to the settlement of his brother's account, and requested that defendant see him, and have him communicate with plaintiff concerning the same. It is claimed that this letter clearly evidences the fact that plaintiff did not consider defendant liable. Other letters written by plaintiff to the Arslan brothers and their replies thereto show that plaintiff was looking to them for payment. In one of these letters the plaintiff agreed to accept the sum of $750 in full for his services if the amount was paid at once. It also appeared that defendant had in his hands funds belonging to Tom Arslan to the amount of about $1,500, and that he advanced the entire sum to his nephew from time to time during his illness for the purpose of paying his bills, and it was owing to this fact that the Arslan brothers had assured plaintiff that they were responsible as their uncle would send the money. It further appeared that plaintiff had never met defendant, and knew nothing concerning his affairs, nor did he ever request the nurse to write to defendant for an assurance of the payment of his fees.

Under all these circumstances, we are of the opinion that the question presented to the trial court was one of fact, and that the case is one which presents a conflict of evidence, and is controlled by the familiar rule upon the subject.

The decision of the trial court being amply supported by evidence, the judgment should be, and it is hereby, affirmed.

MAHL v. E. A. PORTAL CO., Inc., et al. (Civ. 5746.)

1. Corporations 🔑133—Proper remedy to compel transfer of stock on corporation's books was in equity, where assignor's wife claimed stock as community property.

Where assignee of certificate of stock in corporation desired transfer of certificate on corporation's books, stock having been community property in assignment of which wife did not join and which she claimed, proper remedy to compel transfer on corporation's books was by suit in equity, and not by proceeding for mandamus.

2. Mandamus 🔑126—Mandamus does not lie to compel transfer of stock on corporation's books, where assignor's wife claimed community interest.

Mandamus does not lie to compel transfer of stock on corporation's books, where assignor's wife claimed stock as community property in transfer of which she did not join, though wife was made party.

Application by Frederick W. Mahl, Jr., for writ of mandate to be directed to E. A. Portal Company, Inc., and others to compel the transfer of a certificate of stock on the books of the defendant first named. Writ denied.

Byrne & Lamson, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Knight, Boland & Christin, of San Francisco, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. The petitioner applied to E. A. Portal Company, a corporation, and C. A. Budd, its secretary, to have a certificate of stock transferred on the books of the corporation, the respondents refused to make the transfer, and the petitioner has applied to this court for a writ of mandate directing the respondents to make the transfer. The parties stipulated as follows:

"Respondent E. A. Portal Company, Inc., is now, and at all times herein mentioned was, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of California, having 500 shares of capital stock of a par value of $100 per share, of which 300 shares and no more are subscribed, issued and outstanding.

"C. A. Budd is now, and at all times herein mentioned was, the duly elected, qualified, and acting secretary of said E. A. Portal Co., Inc.

"On and prior to the 20th October, 1926, Frederic Gehret and Blanche Gehret were, and now are, husband and wife, and as such had, on and prior to said day, saved and accumulated from the earnings of said Frederic Gehret and Blanche Gehret, as husband and wife, certain money and property which then constituted, and now constitutes, community property; that included in said savings and accumulations and such community property were 50 shares of the capital stock of respondent E. A. Portal Co., Inc., represented by certificate No. 1, standing on the books of said corporation in the name of Frederic Gehret.

"On said 20th October, 1926, said Frederic Gehret indorsed his name on the back of said certificate, and without any consideration whatever therefor delivered the same to petitioner, with the present intent and design of transferring to petitioner all his right and said Blanche Gehret's right and title thereto and interest therein.

"Concurrently therewith the commissioner of corporations of the state of California, upon application made therefor, issued his permit wherein and whereby he authorized the transfer of said certificate, and the shares and property evidenced thereby, from said Frederic Gehret to petitioner.

"Petitioner thereupon presented said certificate, so indorsed by said Frederic Gehret, together with said permit so issued by the commissioner of corporations, to respondent C. A. Budd, as secretary of respondent E. A. Portal Co., Inc., and then and there demanded of said respondents Budd and said corporation, that she and it, respectively, transfer upon the books of said corporation the said fifty shares of stock from the name of Frederic Gehret to the name of your petitioner, and to issue to your petitioner a certificate therefor.

"Prior to the presentment of said certificate as last aforesaid, respondent Blanche Gehret gave notice to respondent E. A. Portal Co., Inc., and C. A. Budd, that said certificate and the shares and property represented thereby were community property, and that she had not consented in writing, or otherwise, to the transfer thereof, but in fact repudiated, and objected to, the transfer of said certificate and the shares and property represented thereby from said Frederic Gehret to petitioner, and that the same was and is wholly void under and by virtue of the laws of the state of California having to do with community property of husband and wife.

"Respondent E. A. Portal Co., Inc., and C. A. Budd thereupon did and do now refuse to transfer said shares of stock upon the books of said E. A. Portal Co., Inc., to petitioner and/or to issue to him a certificate therefor, and each of said respondents assigned, and still do assign, as the only reason therefor, that said certificate of stock and the shares and property represented thereby and the property right therein, was and is community property of Frederic Gehret and Blanche Gehret, his wife, and that said Blanche Gehret had given notice in writing to said respondents that said certificate and the shares and property represented thereby was community property, and that she had not consented in writing or otherwise to the transfer thereof.

"Said corporation is engaged in the business of buying and selling radio receiving sets and the accessories thereto, and has established valuable trade connections, and has acquired a valuable good will, together with certain tangible property; that it is impossible to estimate or appraise the value of said 50 shares of stock; that, until the transfer aforesaid, all of the issued, subscribed and outstanding stock of said corporation was in the name of one E. A. Portal and Frederic Gehret, and it is impossible to > procure or buy any of said stock in the open market, or otherwise, and said stock has no established market value, and that petitioner desires to vote said stock at the forthcoming annual meeting of the stockholders of said E. A. Portal Co., Inc.; that the penalty of $400 as provided in section 324 of the Civil Code of California is inadequate to compensate petitioner for his loss of said stock and the right to vote the same."

[1] In Cook on Corporations (6th Ed.) § 391, the author said:

> "This (remedy by suit in equity) is the surest, most complete, and most just remedy for compelling a corporation to register a transfer of stock, and for adjusting the various conflicting rights or claims of other parties. It is a remedy applicable to almost all cases arising under a refusal of the corporation to allow a registry of transfer. The case will be decided on equitable principles, however, and a transfer will not be decreed if it involves bad faith. The corporation itself is of course a necessary and in fact the chief defendant where stock has been presented for transfer, which has been refused. In a suit in equity by the claimant of stock against other parties, claiming the stock, the corporation is a proper but not a necessary party defendant, in order that a transfer of the stock may be had upon the corporate books."

In Spangenberg v. Western, etc., Co., 166 Cal. 284, 135 P. 1127, there was before the court an appeal from the judgment of the trial court granting a writ of mandamus directing the officers of the defendant corporation to transfer on defendant's books shares of stock in said corporation. In sustaining the appeal and reversing the judgment of the trial court, speaking through Mr. Justice Shaw, the court said:

> "But by the great weight of authority it has been generally settled that a suit in equity is, to quote from Cook on Corporations, 'the surest, most complete and most just remedy for compelling a corporation to register a transfer of stock.' Cook on Corporations (6th Ed.) § 39. This remedy, being practically a suit for the specific performance of the obligation to transfer the stock, would generally be more satisfactory than the remedy by mandamus, since every claimant could be made a party to the action and a complete adjustment could be made of the rights and interests of all concerned. Such actions have been maintained in this state. National Bank of the Pacific v. Western P. R. Co., 157 Cal. 573, 108 P. 676, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 987, 21 Ann. Cas. 1391, for example. That case was contested on other grounds, but it was conceded by both parties that a suit in equity was the appropriate remedy. We are of the opinion that, unless some extraordinary emergency exists, a suit in equity to compel the transfer would be found to be the most appropriate remedy."

[2] The reasoning of the above authorities is specially applicable to the facts of this case. It is apparent from the agreed statement of facts that the corporation defendant is asserting no title or claim in itself. However, it is apparent that Mrs. Gehret is claiming that she is about to be wronged by the transfer which the petitioner would have this court direct the officers of the corporation to consummate by transferring the shares of stock represented by certificate number one on the books of the corporation. True it is that Mrs. Gehret has been made a party, but it is likewise true that "the surest, most complete, and most just remedy" for protecting her rights is a suit in equity.

The writ is denied.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act for injuries by Arthur Eckstrom, claimant, opposed by the York Junction Transfer & Storage Company, employer, and the Zurich Accident & Liability Insurance Company, Limited, insurer. The Industrial Accident Commission awarded claimant compensation, and the employer and insurer apply for certiorari. Award annulled.

J. L. Kearney and Verge, Cooney & Kearney, all of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

CRAIG, J. The respondent, Arthur Eckstrom, on the occasion forming the basis of this proceeding, maintained a furniture repairing shop designated and known as the Highland Park Enameling Company, in the city of Los Angeles, wherein he engaged in cabinet making, furniture repairing, piano and furniture polishing, upholstering, and mattress making, for various persons who patronized his shop. The petitioner York Junction Transfer & Storage Company conducted a general trucking and storage business, some 10 miles from Eckstrom's establishment. In moving household effects the transfer company at times injured or broke pieces of furniture, which it had been accustomed to engage Eckstrom to repair, either at his shop or at the residence of a patron whose articles had been so damaged.

At the time in question, a representative of the transfer company called at the respondent's shop, requested him to refinish certain tables and a chair which the former had previously removed to a residence on Rimpau avenue in said city, and conveyed Eckstrom thereto. The latter testified that such work was completed in about three hours, and that, when being returned to his shop in an automobile of said company, another machine collided therewith, resulting in an injury to his shoulder.

Upon application to the Industrial Accident Commission for adjustment of claim, evidence was introduced by the respective parties, from which the commission made findings reciting that Eckstrom sustained injury occurring in the course of and arising out of his employment; that he was performing services as an employee of the transfer company, "and he was not at said time acting as an independent contractor," and made an award "of the sum of $20.83 a week, commencing on the 8th day after the date of injury, continuing until the termination of the disability, or the further order of the commission."

It is conceded that the applicant conducted and advertised for the repair work of the general public, and that he had performed services for the transfer company only at isolated and infrequent intervals during a period of about three years. It appears that for an entire year previous to the injury there were two months during which he did no work for the company; that it had no preference as to calls for his services as compared with other people, and had paid him 75 cents per hour for ordinary custom work as occasional odd jobs might require, although there is no showing that a definite compensation had ever been agreed upon. During the month of April, 1925, it paid him for such services $11.85, in May but 50 cents, and during other months various small amounts, aggregating $44.55, to and including March, 1926. It further appears that the members of the transfer company were not familiar with furniture repairing or finishing, and actually exercised no supervision over the manner in which the applicant did such work.

It seems to have been assumed that the sole question here presented is as to whether or not the applicant was such employee as to entitle him to compensation under the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act (St. 1913, p. 279 as amended by St. 1915, pp. 1079, 1302, St. 1917, p. 831, St. 1919, p. 910).

[1-3] Under the facts as above delineated, it is apparent that the particular employment in which Eckstrom was engaged was both casual and without the "trade, business, profession, or occupation of his employer." Under such circumstances the employer is not liable under the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act. The business of the employer, York Junction Transfer & Storage Company, was a general trucking and storage business. This is the only business in which said employer is shown by the record to have engaged. If the repairing of furniture was also a part of its business, it was incumbent upon the applicant to have established that fact. On the other hand, the employment was casual. The term "casual" is defined by subdivision (c), § 8, of the act (St. 1917, p. 831), as referring "only to employments where the work contemplated is to be completed in not exceeding ten working days, without regard to the number of men employed, and where the total cost of such work is less than one hundred dollars." When on the 2d day of October, 1925, Eckstrom was asked by a representative of the York Junction Transfer & Storage Company to go to Rimpau avenue and repair some furniture, it cannot be doubted that both the employer and the employee realized that the employment would not involve a compensation amounting to $100, or that its duration would not be as much as ten days. The period of time actually consumed was about three hours, and Eckstrom charged 75 cents per hour. It is immaterial that occasionally, but at no regular intervals prior to this time, the company had engaged Eckstrom's services in a like manner. Each occasion was entirely distinct from the others, each was charged for separately, and there is nothing to indicate any continuing contract of employment.

The award is annulled.

PEOPLE v. ALPINE. (Cr. 1349; 3017.)★

1. Homicide 🔑192—Defendant, pleading self-defense, may testify to being held up by deceased, and reporting it to policeman, to show aggression.

In prosecution for murder, in which defendant claimed he killed deceased in self-defense, in attack following holdup and threats, he may testify to being held up by deceased and reporting it to policeman, since relation of parties prior to homicide may be shown to indicate who was the aggressor under self-defense plea.

2. Homicide 🔑339—Error in excluding defendant's testimony that deceased held him up held not cured by bringing out facts on cross-examination.

In prosecution for murder, in which defendant pleaded self-defense, error in refusing to allow defendant's testimony as to being held up by deceased held not cured by bringing out such facts on cross-examination, though injurious effect may have been minimized.

3. Witnesses 🔑277(2)—Where defendant testified that deceased held him up, cross-examination as to standing of policeman to whom hold-up was reported, held improper.

Where defendant in murder case pleaded self-defense, claiming that deceased threatened him after he reported to policeman that deceased held him up, cross-examination as to such policeman's standing as police officer, and whether defendant had ever seen him in jail, held improper.

4. Homicide 🔑190(8) — That deceased's threats against defendant were communicated to him before homicide might be shown on issue of self-defense.

In prosecution for murder, in which defendant pleaded self-defense, it was proper for him to show that deceased had threatened his life, or to do him great bodily harm, and that threats had been communicated to him.

5. Criminal law 🔑419, 420(11)—Evidence that witness heard deceased's threats against defendant communicated to defendant held not inadmissible as hearsay.

Where defendant pleaded self-defense in murder case, and showed that deceased had told witnesses to tell defendant that he would "cut him up," evidence that witness heard such threats communicated to defendant held admissible, not being hearsay, since one hearing conversation need not be party thereto to relate it.

6. Homicide 🔑188(5)—In murder case, witness who knew deceased, knew others who knew him, and knew his reputation for quietude, may state what that reputation was without preliminary examination.

In murder case, defendant's witness, who stated that he knew deceased, and knew others who knew him, and knew his reputation for peace and quietude, and as to his being dangerous, turbulent and bloodthirsty, should be allowed to state what that reputation was without preliminary examination by prosecutor who could minimize or destroy weight of testimony on cross-examination.

7. Homicide 🔑188(5)—Hotelkeeper, acquainted with deceased, who saw him about twice in neighborhood, knew people who knew him, and discussed his character with various people, may state deceased's reputation for quietude.

In murder case, hotelkeeper who was acquainted with deceased, saw him "about twice" in neighborhood, knew a few people who knew him when they saw him, and had talked with "various people," when deceased's name, general conduct, and character was discussed, held qualified to state what deceased's reputation was for peace and quietude.

8. Homicide 🔑188(5)—Witness well acquainted with deceased may testify to deceased's reputation for quietude without showing that he knew any one who knew deceased.

In murder case, witness may testify to reputation of deceased for peace, quietude, and as to being dangerous, turbulent and bloodthirsty, though there was no showing whether he knew any one who knew deceased, where he had known him for 16 years, and had seen him "lots of times" within period of 8 months.

9. Homicide 🔑340(2)—Instruction that self-defense is not available to one killing another in prearranged duel, though erroneous under evidence, held not prejudicial.

In prosecution for murder, instruction that self-defense is not available to one entering into deadly mutual combat, in which he slays his adversary by prearranged duel, or by consent, though erroneous, since there was no evidence on which to base it, held not prejudicial.

10. Criminal law 🔑720(9)—Argument that defendant "skipped town" because he was involved in holdup held misconduct, in view of evidence.

Where defendant in murder case had taken trip to British Columbia shortly after time when he alleged deceased held him up, argument that he "skipped town" because he had been involved in holdup held misconduct, in view of evidence, and refusal to instruct jury to disregard it was error.

11. Criminal law 🔑730(8)—Argument in murder case that defendant's witnesses were underworld characters and hi-jackers held misconduct, and court's refusal to instruct error.

Argument, in murder case, that defendant's witnesses were members of underworld and hi-jackers, and that it would not be safe for any juror to meet any one of them in a dark alley at night, held misconduct, and refusal to instruct jury to disregard it was error.

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Sidney N. Reeve, Judge.

Harry Alpine was convicted of murder, and he appeals. Reversed.

Morris Abraham and Charles I. Rosin, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

WORKS, P. J. Defendant was convicted of murder in the first degree, and was sentenced to life imprisonment, under recommendation of the jury that tried him. He appeals from the judgment and from an order of the trial court denying his motion for a new trial.

The victim of the alleged murder was one Barney Blum. Appellant admitted the killing, and defended solely on the ground that he took Blum's life in defense of his own. In order properly to consider the points made upon the appeal, it becomes necessary to state in a general way the theories upon which, respectively, the prosecution and the defense were conducted in the trial court. It was the theory of the prosecution that appellant was indebted to Blum in the sum of $150, and that he had delivered a watch and chain to that individual to hold as security for the payment of the debt; that difficulties arose between the two because of this state of affairs; and that appellant's killing of Blum was deliberate and premeditated.

The theory of the defense was that about 3 weeks before the killing Blum "held up" appellant at the muzzle of a gun, and robbed him of a watch and chain and of money; that he then threatened to kill appellant if the latter reported the robbery to the police; that he also demanded that appellant bring more money to him at a certain place on the next day, whereupon he would return to appellant the watch and chain, but threatened to kill appellant if he did not bring the money; that appellant did not deliver the money as demanded, but reported the robbery to a police officer with whom he was acquainted, and requested the officer to ask Blum to return the watch and chain; that the officer later asked Blum in the presence of appellant to return the articles, but that Blum said he had pawned them, and promised to give to appellant, if allowed the chance to do so, the pawn ticket which he held for them, provided appellant did not proceed against him criminally; that appellant said he would give him the chance, as he did not care for the small amount of money that had been taken from him; that the pawn ticket was not produced; that Blum told several persons that he would kill appellant as a "squawker" and "stool pigeon"; and that these threats were repeated to appellant; and that, finally, appellant shot Blum in the midst of a vicious attack which the latter made upon him, and after Blum had struck him on the hand with a monkey wrench, as the hand was held to protect his head, at which the blow was aimed. Blum was shot by appellant on September 2, 1925.

When appellant was on the witness stand, he was asked a variety of questions designed to elicit the story of his relations with Blum from August 11, 1925, to the day of the final catastrophe; the day in August being the one, according to the theory of the defense, upon which appellant had been robbed by Blum. Objections to these questions were uniformly made by the district attorney on the grounds that they were incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and in one or two instances, as assuming something not in evidence, and the objections were as uniformly sustained. The questions were, in part, as follows, after appellant had testified that he was on Brooklyn avenue, near Cummings street, at which point it was claimed the robbery had occurred, on August 11, 1925:

> "Was any one with you at the corner of Cummings and Brooklyn avenue on the 11th day of August, this year? * * * Were you at Cummings street near Brooklyn avenue in the nighttime of that day? * * * Did you see that night Barney Blum at Cummings street and Brooklyn avenue? * * * When you were at [that corner] did you have a Howard gold watch? * * * A gold chain and $15 in money? * * * Did Barney Blum rob you of a gun—of a gold watch, a chain, and $15 in money on the 11th of August? * * * Had you ever seen this man Blum before the 11th day of August, 1925, in the city of Los Angeles? * * * Did you make a report to a police officer of the city of Los Angeles a short time after the 11th of August, 1925, of a robbery committed by this man upon you at that point?"

Here the district attorney, after interposing his objection, remarked:

> "I * * * am going to ask the court to warn counsel not to ask further questions in that regard. He knows perfectly well under the rules of evidence, and under your honor's rulings in this matter, that it is incompetent, it is immaterial, and he is endeavoring by his questions to get before this jury a matter indirectly, which he knows cannot be done directly."

The court merely sustained the objection. These further questions were then propounded:

> "Do you know a police officer by the name of Ben Penosky? * * * Did you see police officer Ben Penosky at the University Police Station or near there a short time after the 11th day of August, 1925?"

After sustaining the objections to these interrogatories, the trial judge remarked:

> "I have been consistent in my rulings, * * * and will continue to be consistent in my rulings along that line of questioning, so far as this witness is concerned."

The witness was then asked:

> "Did you with police officer Ben Penosky in this city go together and search for Barney Blum and did you find him in this city?"

An objection to this question was sustained. Various other questions devoted to the purpose already stated, and which it is unnecessary further to specify, were propounded to the witness. They were all ruled out.

[1] The trial court erred in these rulings, except in one or two instances, in which the objection was made that questions assumed something not in evidence. Even that objection, however, was not always good when it was made. Appellant, clearly, was entitled to show the matters sought to be elicited by the questions as a part of the evidence under his plea of self-defense. The prosecution contended that the watch and chain had been delivered to Blum as security for the payment of debt. It was the theory of the defense that Blum had taken the articles from appellant in a holdup; that appellant had reported the occurrence to a police officer; and that Blum had repeatedly threatened to kill him because of the exposure. What appellant sought to prove was, therefore, a vital element in the case. "The relations of the parties to a homicide, prior to the commission thereof, may be shown for the purpose of determining their state of mind at the time of the killing, and to establish malice or motive on the part of the defendant, or to assist the jury in determining who was the aggressor in the fatal affray, or as tending to shed light upon the issue whether defendant, as a reasonable man, believed that he was in danger of losing his life or suffering great bodily harm." 13 Cal. Jur. p. 696. For the time being, at least, the trial court effectually emasculated the only defense appellant was seeking to present to the jury.

Toward the close of the direct examination of appellant he was allowed to testify that the police officer, Penosky, had a conversation with Blum in his presence on August 31st, although he was not permitted to state what the conversation was. One of the early questions asked on the cross-examination was this: "This man Penosky that you have reference to, is that the same Penosky who has been dismissed from the police department?" The court sustained an objection to the question on the ground that it was not a proper cross-examination, but, upon a statement of the district attorney that it was asked for the purpose of identifying the officer, the question was voluntarily reframed, thus: "Do you know whether or not Mr. Penosky is at the present time connected with the police department?" Over objection, the court permitted an answer, which was, merely: "I don't know." A few questions later, still referring to Penosky, the district attorney asked: "Did you ever see him in the county jail?" Appellant's counsel not only objected to this question, but asked the court to strike it out and to instruct the jury to disregard it. The court ruled adversely, however, and the witness answered: "I did not." After some further cross-examination on other matters appellant referred, in an answer, to something as having occurred "after I was held up." The district attorney then asked a few questions which brought out answers fixing the time when the alleged holdup happened, and showing that appellant had not reported the occurrence to the police station, or to the sheriff, or to the district attorney, but only to Penosky, a policeman with whom he was acquainted. These questions were shortly followed by this: "Q. Now, tell the jury—I presume you would like to do so—all about this holdup." Appellant then detailed his story of the event.

[3] In our opinion, the errors of the trial court, committed during the direct examination of appellant, were not cured by the cross-examination, although their injurious effect was perhaps minimized by it. The jury was given to understand that it was not the right of appellant to tell the story of the alleged holdup. This was plainly shown by the remarks of the district attorney during the direct examination, when he unjustly charged counsel with an attempt, by indirection, to get forbidden matters before the jury, and by the continued rulings of the trial judge, especially as that officer felt it necessary to notify counsel that he had been consistent in his rulings, and that he would continue to be so. Not only was this wrongful impression left with the jury, but the impression must also have been created upon that body, when appellant was finally permitted to tell the story of the holdup, that the permission was granted as a matter of grace by the prosecution. Also, early in the cross-examination, the trial court overruled the very proper objections to the questions as to Penosky's standing as a police officer, and as to whether appellant had ever seen Penosky in jail, thus condemning in advance any evidence in which that individual might figure. And, further, and finally, the prosecutor cross-examined appellant upon the holdup story, and in some degree discredited it before it had ever been heard by the jury. From all these circumstances it manifestly appears that the story finally reached the jury under very different auspices than those which would have fostered its fall from the lips of appellant on his direct examination. He was entitled to the impression which it might have created when coming to the jury in that natural and legitimate way, shaken though it might have been upon timely and orderly cross-examination or upon the production of opposing testimony. When it finally got to the jury, it doubtless possessed little of the weight which it might otherwise have been accorded by that body.

[4, 5] One Saul Finkel testified that Blum asked him to tell appellant that "if I see him I will cut him up." Finkel said that Blum made this request the latter part of August. Finkel also testified that he conveyed Blum's message to appellant. One Isidore Goldfein testified that late in August Blum said to him, speaking of appellant, "I will kill him if I get ahold of him. I will cut him up." Goldfein further testified that he repeated Blum's statement to appellant. Appellant sought to prove by Finkel that he heard Goldfein and by Goldfein that he heard Finkel, make his communication to appellant. An endeavor also was made to prove by Goldfein's wife that she heard her husband make his communication. Objection was made to each of these items of corroboration on the ground that the evidence was immaterial, and that it was hearsay, and the objections were sustained. Each of these rulings was error. The proffered evidence plainly was material. There was evidence in the record that appellant shot Blum in repelling an assault which the latter made upon him. In connection with this evidence it was proper for appellant to show that Blum had threatened his life or to do him great bodily harm, and that the threats had been repeated to him. 30 Cal. Jur. 66, 191. The corroborative evidence offered from the lips of Finkel, Goldfein, and Mrs. Goldfein was not hearsay. One need not be a party to a conversation in order to relate it. If he has heard the conversation, that is enough. People v. Fitzpatrick (Cal. App.) 247 P. 601.

[6] Appellant endeavored to prove by three or four witnesses that the general reputation of Blum in Los Angeles, in which city he lived, and in which he was shot by appellant, for peace, quietude, and as to his being dangerous, turbulent, and bloodthirsty, was bad. Each of the witnesses testified that he knew Blum; that he knew other persons in Los Angeles who were acquainted with that individual; and that he knew what Blum's general reputation was in the respects mentioned. In each instance the district attorney then asked, and was granted by the court, the right to conduct what is termed in the record a voir dire examination. The prosecutor then asked each witness a variety of questions as to the sources of information, etc., upon which he proposed to testify concerning Blum's reputation, and at the end of his examination the prosecutor objected that there was no sufficient foundation for the testimony as to reputation, and the objection was sustained. The Attorney General seeks to justify this unusual procedure upon the ground that one who is asked to testify to reputation is an expert witness, and that all such witnesses may be examined by opposing counsel, touching their qualifications, before being permitted to state their opinions. There is no such rule as to witnesses of the character now under consideration, and the Attorney General cites no authority to support his position. Each of the witnesses whose testimony was offered by appellant to prove Blum's reputation was shown to be qualified to answer before the question as to reputation was put to him. The questions preliminarily addressed to each witness were similar in form to those usually put to witnesses who are called to impeach other witnesses on the ground that their general reputation for truth, honesty, and integrity is bad, under a practice which is supported by a mass of authority. See People v. Hickman, 113 Cal. 80, 45 P. 175. For a general statement of the rules affecting the examination of impeaching witnesses, see, also, note to Allen v. State, 73 Am. Dec. 771, and note to Lodge v. State, 82 Am. St. Rep. 26, although we do not mean to say that all the rules there stated are applicable in California. The practice under which evidence as to reputation is received, when the question of reputation is in issue, follows that which applies when the attempt is made merely to impeach a witness because of bad reputation. The existence of such a practice is vouched for by the Attorney General in his brief. We think the witnesses should have been permitted to answer as to the reputation of Blum in the respects mentioned in the preliminary questions addressed to them. The next step would have been for the prosecutor to minimize or destroy, by cross-examination, the weight of their testimony by such questions as he put to them upon his so-called voir dire examination.

[7] Two other witnesses were called to testify to the reputation of Blum. It was objected as to each of them that he was not shown to be qualified by the questions put to him by appellant's counsel, and the objection was sustained in each instance. One of these witnesses testified that he had kept a hotel at a certain place for about six months; that he had lived in the same neighborhood most of his life; that he got acquainted with Blum while he kept the hotel, and saw him "about twice" in the neighborhood; that he knew a few people that knew Blum when they saw him; and that he talked with "various people in the city of Los Angeles and in the neighborhood in which the name and general conduct and character" of Blum was discussed. The question as to Blum's general reputation was then put to the witness. The court erred in sustaining the objection to the question.

[8] The other witness referred to in the last preceding paragraph testified that he had known Blum 16 or 17 years; that he first saw him in Los Angeles "3 years ago"; that Blum then went away, and was gone for a year and a half, and then returned; that he had after that known him in Los Angeles for 8 months; that during that period he saw Blum "lots of times"; that he was not acquainted with people who knew Blum in Los Angeles; and that he had heard discussed Blum's reputation in Los Angeles in the respects stated above. The witness was then asked if he knew Blum's general reputation in Los Angeles. Upon objection being made, the following occurred.

> "A Deputy District Attorney: He said he never knew anybody that knew Barney Blum in the city of Los Angeles.
> "The Court: Was that your answer to the question that you never knew anybody that knew him?
> "The Witness: Oh, no; there is a lot of people who knew him.
> "The Court: Did you know anybody that knew him?
> "The Witness: Yes, I knew him."

The question was then read, to which the witness had already answered that he knew no one who knew Blum, when the following transpired:

> "Counsel for defendant: Did you understand that question? A. I do understand it now but I didn't understand it then. Q. You didn't understand it then? A. No, sir."

The witness was then asked if he knew Blum's reputation in Los Angeles in the respects already mentioned, objection was interposed, and the objection was sustained. The ruling was error. If we grant, without deciding, that the final result of the record is that there was no showing whether or not the witness knew any one who knew Blum—and the record indicates no more than that—we know of no rule which forbids a witness to testify to the general reputation of an individual merely because he knows no one who knows him. It would seem that one may know the general reputation of A. in a community without knowing any one who knows A., if he knows A. himself. He cannot know of his own knowledge that others are acquainted with A. unless he has seen them in his presence, but he nevertheless may have heard many discuss A.'s reputation who actually know him.

[9] Appellant takes exception to an instruction given to the jury by the trial court, to the effect that "self-defense is not available as a plea to one who, by prearranged duel, or by consent, has entered into a deadly mutual combat in which he slays his adversary." There was no evidence upon which to base such an instruction, and it was error to give it. We think, however, that the error could not have been harmful.

[10] It is contended that a deputy district attorney who aided in the prosecution of appellant was guilty of misconduct during the trial. The alleged misconduct occurred during the final argument addressed to the jury. The record shows the following:

> "A Deputy District Attorney: 'Oh,' they say, 'Would you loan $150 on a watch and chain?' Let me ask you something. Think about this, will you? If you knew that a watch and chain had been obtained in the commission of a holdup by a pal of yours, and you knew that that man wanted to skip town, and he didn't have the money to skip town, and you knew that if he was here he would be caught or arrested and prosecuted for robbery, and you had the money, would you loan him $150 on a watch and chain?"

Immediately upon these remarks being made to the jury appellant objected to them, whereupon the court stated that "it is a matter of argument." Appellant then assigned the remarks as misconduct, and asked the court to instruct the jury to disregard them. The trial judge merely responded: "You have your assignment." The remarks were misconduct, and the court's refusal to instruct the jury as requested was error. The testimony showed that appellant had taken a trip to Vancouver, British Columbia, soon after the time when, as he testified, Blum had made him the victim of a "holdup." There was nothing in the evidence which even remotely justified the argument made by the district attorney to the effect that appellant had "skipped town" because he himself had obtained a watch in a "holdup." This is what is meant by the remarks of the prosecutor, a fact attested more strongly by the context than by the excerpt itself which we have taken from the argument. The lending of $150 mentioned in the prosecutor's remarks referred, of course, to the loan claimed by the prosecution to have been made by Blum to appellant.

[11] During his address to the jury the counsel for appellant, Mr. Allender, referred, for the purposes of illustration, comparison, and argument, to various criminal cases in which he had represented the defendants. During the closing argument for the prosecution a deputy district attorney had this to say:

"Do you recall the character of the men that Mr. Allender has been representing since 1892 up to the present date, 33 years? Highway robbers, murderers, men of the underworld and he is now defending Alpine. Do you not see back of this case, ladies and gentlemen, the operation of the underworld? Do you not see some peculiar interest on the part of Goldfein, Finkel, and Fisher?"

We must pause here to remark that these individuals were witnesses who took the stand in behalf of appellant, and who were, apparently, his friends. After his remarks above quoted, the deputy district attorney commented on certain activities of Finkel after appellant's arrest, and which aided him in his defense, and also to activities of one Berg, another witness for appellant, in the same direction. He also alluded to the circumstances, as to which there was evidence, that appellant had known Blum before the time when appellant testified that Blum took his watch from him, and that appellant had been seen with Blum. The prosecutor also referred to one Snyder, a man who had been mentioned in the testimony as an acquaintance of both appellant and Blum, but who was not a witness.

A statement of these matters is necessary to the understanding of a second point made by appellant to the effect that the deputy district attorney was guilty of misconduct. After referring to the matters above mentioned, the deputy proceeded:

"You remember when those threats were made [that Blum would kill appellant], according to Finkel, Fisher, and Goldfein, on the 30th, the 31st, and the 1st, the shooting on the 2d, the arrest on the 2d, Finkel was there, and not one single word out of Finkel, not one single word from the mouth of the defendant when the officers were taking the statement of the defendant to the effect that threats had been made to Finkel, Goldfein, and Fisher. He says they were communicated to him. They say that they communicated the threats to him; they were fresh in his mind at that time, and yet not one single word. I will tell you why. See if it is not logical and reasonable. Assuming that Barney Blum is a hi-jacker, that Paul Gibbons [also a witness] is a hi-jacker, that Snyder is a hi-jacker, that Goldfein and Alpine have been going around in a Nash with Blum and Snyder. Are they members of the underworld? I am asking you if they get Harry Alpine to go up there on the 2d day of September, 1925, and get rid of Barney Blum in order to destroy evidence which they thought he had in his possession, and which, if he 'squawked,' would send the whole bunch of them to the penitentiary. * * *"

Later the deputy said to the jury:

"How would you like to meet him [appellant] in a dark alley, or down a dark street, you ladies, unattended by an escort, or even attended by a strong escort? How would you like to meet Fisher, Goldfein and Finkel on a lonely street in a dark place unaccompanied and unattended, or even accompanied and attended by an escort? You saw their type upon the stand. You have seen hi-jackers during the time you have been sitting in this courtroom day after day and week after week. Do Finkel and Goldfein and Fisher look like innocent little business men to you? Draw your own conclusions."

No part of these outbursts was objected to immediately, but they occurred near the end of the argument of the deputy. Shortly before he actually concluded, and at the opening of a session after a noon adjournment had been taken, the record shows the following:

"Mr. Allender: If the court please, at this time I object to the statement that has been made by [the prosecutor] to the jury just prior to adjournment, in which he referred to Mr. Sol Finkel, Mr. Goldfein, and Mr. I. Fisher as being members of the underworld, hi-jackers, and that it wouldn't be safe for any member of the jury to meet any one of these men in a dark alley at night. I object to that statement on the ground it is not supported by any evidence, or warranted by any evidence in this case, and assign it as misconduct, and I ask the court to instruct the jury to disregard it.

"The Court: As I stated before, it is a matter of deduction that counsel is making during his argument, and that the objection will be overruled, and your assignment is pretty late, but I will allow the assignment."

From this the court did not intend to say that he would instruct the jury as was requested, for he gave no such instruction, but only that he would allow the assignment to be presented. The remarks of the deputy district attorney to which appellant took exception constituted misconduct of an extreme type, and the trial judge erred in not instructing the jury to disregard them. They did not present a legitimate argument upon the evidence before the jury, and, moreover, they constituted an impeachment of appellant's witnesses in a manner not contemplated by the law.

Misconduct is charged as to the following showing of the record made during the closing argument:

"A Deputy District Attorney: I am asking you as reasonable people and reasoning human beings, Alpine leaving the state of California, after being held up by Barney Blum, because he was afraid Barney Blum was going to kill him, or Alpine borrowing $150 from Barney Blum and fleeing the state of California because of a robbery the man had committed.

"Mr. Allender: If the court please, I am going to make an objection to that statement, and I protest against declarations of that kind from a deputy district attorney closing the case, upon the ground that it is unwarranted by the evidence. There is no evidence to sustain it at all. I assign it as misconduct before this jury, and request your honor to instruct the jury to disregard it.

"The Court: It is a matter of deduction made during the course of the argument, and you have your assignment."

Here, again, there was misconduct upon the part of the prosecutor and error by the trial judge.

Other claims of error are made by appellant, but we find it unnecessary to consider them.

As required by the provisions of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, we have examined the entire cause, including the voluminous report of the evidence. We have even read the entire arguments of counsel, covering 300 pages of typewritten record. From our examination we are of the opinion that the errors complained of have resulted in a miscarriage of justice. It is quite likely that the conviction of appellant was because of the errors and misconduct that are shown by the record. But two witnesses, in addition to appellant himself, testified to specific facts casting light upon the question whether Blum was the aggressor in the encounter which cost his life, and their testimony indicated that he was. In addition to this direct testimony there was circumstantial evidence both in favor of and against the accused. From the standpoint of the prosecution the most that can be said is that the evidence as a whole was quite evenly balanced, but it may be doubted whether that can be said. In venturing these observations, we can speak only from the showing made by the record. The jury had an opportunity to observe the demeanor of the witnesses, and may have had reason to return the verdict which was found, irrespective of the error and misconduct which were committed during the trial. As to this, of course, we can say nothing. From the mere record, as we read it, the errors may very easily have turned the scale in favor of the prosecution.

Judgment and order reversed.

We concur: CRAIG, J.; THOMPSON, J.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank, Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. The petition for a hearing in this court is denied. We are not to be understood, however, as approving that portion of the decision of the District Court of Appeal wherein it is apparently held that a so-called voir dire examination of a character witness would constitute error.

MACLAY RANCHO REALTY CO. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (Civ. 5403.)

1. Discovery 🔑85—Statute authorizing court to order inspection of writings afforded judicial discretion in passing on application therefor (Code Civ. Proc. § 1000).

Code Civ. Proc. § 1000, authorizing court to order either party to give to other right to inspect books and records, held to afford trial court judicial discretion in passing on any application therefor.

2. Discovery 🔑97(4)—Trial court, in passing on application for inspection of writings, was not bound to accept, as final, averments of affidavits in support of motion therefor (Code Civ. Proc. § 1000).

Trial court was not bound to accept, as final, averments of defendant's affidavits in motion for order allowing its inspection of books, but might determine facts from other matters before it, since Code Civ. Proc. § 1000, afforded trial court judicial discretion in passing thereon.

3. Appeal and error 🔑920(1)—On appeal from order denying right to inspect writings, all intendments are in favor of validity of trial court's orders (Code Civ. Proc. § 1000).

On appeal from court's denial of order to permit defendant to inspect plaintiff's books under Code Civ. Proc. § 1000, all intendments are to be indulged in favor of validity of trial court's order.

4. Mandamus 🔑42—Writ of mandate will not issue commanding that order for inspection of writings be granted, in absence of abuse of discretion in its refusal (Code Civ. Proc. § 1000).

Though facts warranted order granting leave to inspect writings under Code Civ. Proc. § 1000, writ of mandate commanding that order be granted will not issue, in absence of abuse of discretion.

Application for writ of mandate by the Maclay Rancho Realty Company to compel the Superior Court of California in and for the County of Los Angeles and W. C. Doran, Judge, to issue an order granting permission to inspect and copy items of account. Writ denied.

Marshall Stimson and Noel C. Edwards, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

R. M. Widney, of Pacoima, for respondents.

CRAIG, J. On or about July 7, 1925, one A. B. Widney commenced an action in the superior court of Los Angeles county against the Maclay Rancho Realty Company, a corporation, for moneys alleged by the complaint and amendments thereto to be due to the plaintiff from the defendant therein through the subdivision and sale of certain real property under a contract in writing between the parties, dated June 1, 1923.

It appears that the defendant took the plaintiff's deposition, which was filed on September 11, 1925, and that on the 18th a demurrer to the complaint, motion to strike, and demand for bill of particulars were filed; that on September 28th an amended complaint was filed; and that on October 8th the demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and the motion to strike was denied. On January 20, 1926, the plaintiff filed bills of particulars, numbered 1 and 2, and entered the default of the Maclay Rancho Realty Company to his amended complaint. On the next day the realty company filed a demurrer to said amended complaint, notice of motion to strike therefrom, and a demand for bill of particulars. On January 25, 1926, a stipulation extending the defendant's time to plead, an answer, and a cross-complaint were filed, together with a motion to vacate the default, which latter was thereafter granted, and Widney interposed an answer to the cross-complaint heretofore mentioned.

The bill of particulars numbered 1 was furnished pursuant to the demand of the realty company, who objected thereto, and demanded a second bill, which also was furnished. Each such bill of particulars consisted of more than 70 pages, and is claimed to have contained receipts and disbursements by the plaintiff for the defendant's account, covering transactions extending over a period of about two years, under their contract, as shown by the plaintiff's books and records.

By its cross-complaint the defendant realty company demanded an accounting "of all the collections, dealings and transactions from the commencement thereof and the money received and paid to the plaintiff and paid by the plaintiff to the defendant respectively."

On April 5, 1926, the defendant realty company, petitioner herein, gave notice of motion, supported by affidavit of its counsel, for an order allowing its inspection of "the books of account, cash books, ledgers containing the entries of receipts, and disbursements made and set forth in the bills of particulars dated October 12, 1925, and January 18, 1926, pertaining to transactions between the plaintiff and the defendant." The motion was heard on April 15th, and was denied, with permission to renew it, counsel having stated that the moving documents were incomplete, and requested such permission. The second motion for inspection was heard on April 22d, and it also was denied. On the 26th day of April the defendant again moved the same court for an order permitting inspection of the plaintiff's books and records, which motion was heard on April 29th, and likewise denied. Each of these motions was made upon the ground "that the books are in the possession of the plaintiff, and that they contain evidence relative to the merits of the action and the defense therein"; that such evidence was material; and that the defendant could not safely proceed to trial without the inspection requested; and was based upon "the records and files in this action." It further appears that in each of its rulings the court considered the pleadings, affidavits, and bills of particulars theretofore filed, as above recited.

The defendant, Maclay Rancho Realty Company, petitions this court for a writ of mandate commanding that the trial court issue an order granting it permission to inspect and take copies from the books of the plaintiff Widney of "entries showing moneys paid out or received by said A. B. Widney for the Maclay Rancho Realty Company, * * * in connection with the contract which is the subject of the above-mentioned action." An alternative writ was issued, and a referee was appointed to take evidence and to report his findings upon the issues of fact involved in this proceeding. Pursuant to such appointment the referee heard the evidence and argument of the respective parties and rendered an exhaustive report wherein he found, among others, the facts heretofore stated.

During the hearing before the referee it was stipulated, and the latter found, that "said bills of particulars were made from the books of the plaintiff in said action; that such books are the books of which the defendant therein demanded an inspection; and that the items called for in the inspection of said books are the items therein which are set forth in said bills of particulars." Counter affidavits of counsel for the plaintiff in the main action, which appear to have been filed with, and the referee finds to have been considered by, the court below, recite that "there are no books, contracts, or other papers or documents in plaintiff's possession containing any other information than that furnished to said defendant and its attorneys"; and that the defendant "has an itemized statement from plaintiff of all of the accounts between plaintiff and defendant."

[1-4] It seems clear that section 1000 of the Code of Civil Procedure, by the provisions of which the petitioner claimed the right to inspect the books and records in question, affords the trial court judicial discretion in passing upon any application therefor. Possessing such discretion, the court was not required to accept the averments of the affidavits in support of the motion as final, but might conclude from other matters before it that in some particulars the facts were otherwise. This it apparently did. It may well have decided that under the circumstances appearing the inspection was not necessary to the preparation and proof of the petitioner's case. All intendments are to be indulged by us in favor of the validity of the trial court's orders, and, considering the situation as presented to it, the conclusion would be amply justified that petitioner had received full information concerning the accounts in controversy, and all of the information and data contained in the books sought to be inspected. No doubt, as argued by petitioner, the facts in this case might have warranted the making of the order requested, but it is elementary that, where the action is discretionary with the trial court, the writ here asked will not issue, unless the refusal of the trial court to act amounts to an abuse of discretion.

The referee found also that the motion of April 29, 1926, was submitted to, and decided by, the superior court upon the papers, records, and files in the cause, as well as upon the affidavits of Marshall Stimson and counter affidavits of R. M. Widney; further, that there was before the trial court upon such hearing "the records and papers on file in said cause as hereinbefore found, including the complaint, amended complaint, and second amended complaint of the plaintiff, the answer of the defendant to said second amended complaint and its cross-complaint, the deposition of A. B. Widney, plaintiff, the aforesaid two bills of particulars furnished to the defendant on the demand of the defendant, and the affidavit of counsel for the defendant and the counter affidavits of counsel for the plaintiff and J. B. Meikle which had been read and presented to the court and filed at the hearing of the second motion of April 22, 1926."

It is too obvious for argument that, since the greater part of the matters which the trial court considered are not before us, it is impossible for us to review the action of that court in determining the issues before it.

The peremptory writ of mandate is denied.

OLDS & STOLLER, Inc., v. SEIFERT.
(Civ. 5682.)

1. Municipal corporations ⚷706(5)—Evidence held to show driver of automobile damaged in collision at street intersection was not negligent, and that defendant was negligent.

In action for damage to automobile in collision at street intersection, evidence held to show that assignor of plaintiff had right of way and was not wanting in due care, and that defendant was negligent.

2. Appeal and error ⚷1051(1)—Where automobile owner assigned claim to insurer, admission of purported policy, if error, held harmless, in view of owner's written assignment.

Where insurer of automobile against damage due to collision sued as assignee of owner after paying loss, admission of paper, purporting to be policy issued to owner, if error, held harmless, in view of written assignment which was alone sufficient to enable plaintiff to maintain action.

3. Damages ⚷159(5), 188(1)—Evidence of value of repairs to damaged automobile is admissible and sufficient prima facie to establish amount of damage, without allegation of value before and after accident.

In action for damage to automobile in collision, evidence of value of repairs is admissible and sufficient prima facie to establish amount of damage, though there was no allegation as to value of car before and after accident, since such difference in value is presumptively amount of costs of repairs.

4. Damages ⚷141—General allegation of damages, with prayer for stated amount, is sufficient.

General allegation of damages, with prayer for stated amount, is sufficient to authorize recovery for all damages that necessarily resulted from act complained of.

5. Damages ⚷113—Measure of damages is difference in value of damaged property immediately before and after injury or cost of repair if less (Civ. Code, § 3333).

Measure of damages, in absence of total destruction of property injured, is difference between value of property immediately before and immediately after injury, but, if property be capable of repair at expense less than diminution in value, damage is limited to cost of making repairs, in view of Civ. Code, § 3333.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; P. F. Gosbey, Judge.

Action by Olds & Stoller, Inc., against E. D. Seifert. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

William H. Johnson, of San Jose, for appellant.

Wm. M. Abbott, K. W. Cannon, and J. E. Reardon, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

CASHIN, J. An action to recover damages for injuries to an automobile resulting from a collision. The owner of the injured automobile assigned his claim to plaintiff corporation, and, from a judgment recovered by the latter, the defendant appeals. The appeal is presented on the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions.

Appellant contends that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict of the jury; that the verdict was against law; that certain evidence was improperly admitted over objection, and that an instruction given the jury was erroneous.

The collision occurred in Santa Clara county at the intersection of Mountain View road, running east and west, with the San Francisco and San Jose highway, which runs north and south. At the time of the accident, the automobile owned by the assignor (hereinafter designated as the Buick car) was being operated by Mrs. Dorothy H. Weinstock. As this car, coming from the east along the Mountain View road, neared the intersection, appellant, who was driving a Stearns car, approached from the south along the highway mentioned. The testimony shows that the Buick car was stopped about 11 feet east of the paved portion of the highway, that a truck proceeding south along the highway was stopped by its driver to the north of the intersection, and that the latter signaled to Mrs. Weinstock to proceed. According to her testimony, after receiving the signal she looked to the south along the highway, and, seeing no approaching car in that direction, drove into the intersection at a speed of about 5 miles per hour; the collision with the Stearns car occurring near the center of the intersection. Two witnesses, who observed the movements of the cars immediately before the accident, testified that the Buick car was the first to enter the intersection, and that the Stearns car approached at a speed of about 35 miles per hour; one of the witnesses stating that the speed was not decreased when the intersection was reached. This testimony was corroborated in some degree by the fact that the Stearns car after the collision continued on its course for a distance between 30 and 40 feet, in the meantime striking the truck mentioned with sufficient force to throw the driver to the ground.

[1] Appellant contends that the physical condition of the cars after the accident shows that the Stearns car was struck by the Buick car, but we think it a fair conclusion from the evidence that the latter was struck in front by the side of the Stearns car in an attempt by appellant to avoid a direct collision. This evidence was sufficient to sustain the findings that the driver of the Buick car had the right of way (Vickerson v. Standard Auto Sales Co., 64 Cal. App. 287, 221 P. 392), was not wanting in due care and that the defendant was negligent (Whitworth v. Jones, 58 Cal. App. 492, 209 P. 60; Conner v. Dale, 63 Cal. App. 338, 218 P. 462; Commonwealth Insurance Co. v. Riverside-Portland Cement Co., 69 Cal. App. 165, 230 P. 995; Bauman v. Edgar, 72 Cal. App. 448, 236 P. 943).

[2] We find no merit in appellant's contention that the verdict was against law, nor, in view of the evidence, that the instruction complained of was erroneous. The complaint alleged that respondent, previous to the accident, issued its policy of insurance to the owner of the Buick car, agreeing to indemnify the latter against loss or damage due to collision; it being provided therein that, upon payment of the loss, the insurer should be subrogated to the extent of such payment to the owner's right of recovery, and that, following the accident, the loss was paid and the owner in writing assigned to respondent his claim against appellant. At the trial, respondent offered, and there was admitted in evidence, the assignment of the claim, with a paper which purported to be the policy mentioned. The owner was unable to testify that the latter document was the original policy, stating, however, that it was the document received as such from respondent. The written assignment of the claim was sufficient to enable respondent to maintain the action; and the admission of the purported policy over objection, if erroneous, was not prejudicial.

[3-5] The parties stipulated at the trial that the reasonable value of the labor and materials necessary to repair the Buick car was the sum of $587.45, this sum being the amount of the judgment. The stipulation was made subject to objections by appellant, who offered no evidence on the issue as to the damage; but he now contends that, there being no allegation in the complaint as to the value of the car before and after the accident, evidence of the value of the repairs was not admissible.

A general allegation of damages with a prayer for a stated amount, is sufficient to authorize the recovery of all damages that necessarily result from the act complained of. 5 Ency. of Plead. & Prac. p. 731; 8 Cal. Jur. "Damages," § 125, p. 885. The measure of damages, in the absence of the total destruction of the property injured, is the difference between the value of the property immediately before and immediately after the injury, provided, however, if the property be capable of repair at an expense less than the diminution in the value because of the injury, the damage is limited to the cost of making the repairs. Kincaid v. Dunn, 26 Cal. App. 686, 148 P. 235; Civ. Code, § 3333.

As held in Overpeck v. Rapid City, 14 S. D. 507, 85 N. W. 990, 991, the difference in the value of the property before and after the injury is presumptively the amount of the cost of repairs, and in Rhodes v. Firestone Tire, etc., Co., 51 Cal. App. 569, 197 P. 392, proof that repairs were necessary and their cost reasonable was held to be admissible and sufficient prima facie to establish the amount of the damage.

The evidence was sufficient to support the verdict, and, no prejudicial error being shown, the judgment is affirmed.

O'KUNA v. SMALL CLAIMS COURT OF PALO ALTO TP., SANTA CLARA COUNTY, et al. (Civ. 5749.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 4, 1927.)

Courts 🔑176½—Writ of review held proper, where judgment was entered in small claims court, without notifying defendant until time for appeal had expired.

Where judgment was entered in small claims court without giving defendant notice thereof until after time for appeal had expired, writ of review was proper remedy to review such judgment; it being an exception to general rule that certiorari cannot be resorted to after expiration of time for appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Petition for a writ of certiorari by Joe O. O'Kuna against the Small Claims Court of the Township of Palo Alto, Santa Clara County, and others. From a judgment dismissing the writ, petitioner appeals. Reversed.

Harrison & Harrison and Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Isabel L. Charles and Rodgers & Smith, all of Palo Alto, and E. L. Maxwell, of Mountain View, for respondents.

TYLER, P. J. Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment entered upon the sustaining of a demurrer to a petition for a writ of certiorari. There is no dispute as to the facts. They show, in substance, that on or about the 20th day of December, 1923, an automobile owned and driven by respondent Wagnon was damaged in a collision with an automobile driven by appellant. On January 5, 1924, Wagnon brought an action in the small claims court of the township of Palo Alto against appellant to recover the sum of $50, the amount of the alleged damage. The action came on for hearing before the respondent small claims court and respondent Isabel L. Charles as a justice thereof. Appellant objected to the jurisdiction of said court and of said justice, upon the ground that he did not reside in and was not a resident of the said township, but that, on the contrary, he was at all times a resident of the city and county of San Francisco. This fact was established without conflict at the trial. Notwithstanding such plea and evidence, respondent small claims court and the said justice thereof proceeded to try the case on its merits, and required appellant to testify therein. No judgment was rendered at the conclusion of the trial, but one was subsequently made and entered in favor of respondent Wagnon and against appellant for the sum claimed. Appellant had no knowledge whatsoever that judgment had been rendered in the action for more than five days thereafter, at which time his right of appeal had expired, when an execution was issued out of said court directed to the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco, pursuant to which certain personal property belonging to appellant was seized, which the sheriff threatened to sell. Appellant thereupon immediately applied by petition for a writ of review to the superior court of Santa Clara county, alleging the foregoing facts and the lack of jurisdiction in the small claims court to render the judgment, and thereby sought to require the small claims court and the justice thereof to certify the records and proceedings in said action to said superior court, for the purpose of obtaining the annulment of the judgment. Upon the filing of this petition an order was duly made and filed, directing the issuance of the writ prayed for. The said justice of the small claims court and Wagnon filed a demurrer to the petition. The demurrers were sustained without leave to amend, and thereafter a judgment of dismissal of the writ of review was made and entered. From this judgment the present appeal is taken. It was respondents' contention below, and is here, that, conceding lack of jurisdiction in the small claims court and the justice thereof, petitioner was not entitled to a review, because the judgment of the small claims court was appealable. The lower court was of a like opinion.

The general rule may be stated to be that certiorari will not lie where the petitioner has the right of appeal. However, there are cases where, on account of unusual circumstances, writs of review lie, although there has been at one time a right of appeal. An exception to the rule that certiorari cannot be resorted to after the time for appeal has expired may be found in instances where no notice of judgment has been had until after such time has elapsed. The principle is acknowledged in Elder v. Justice's Court, 136 Cal. 364, 68 P. 1022. In that case it was held that, where a petitioner had no knowledge of the recovery of a judgment until after his time for appeal had expired, certiorari was a proper remedy to review the action of the court. This case was decided at a time when the statute in relation to rendition of judgments in justices' courts contained no provision as now exists for notices to parties of rendition of judgment. The provisions of the statute relating to small claims court contain no provision for such notice. The case last cited is on all fours with the instant case, and is here controlling. See, also, Olcese v. Justice's Court, 156 Cal. 82, 103 P. 317. We are of the opinion, therefore, that the lower court erred in dismissing the petition for writ of review, and in refusing to examine the proceedings of the small claims court and its justice to determine whether said proceedings were without jurisdiction.

The judgment is reversed.

TYLER, P. J. Appellant was charged by an indictment with a violation of section 288 of the Penal Code, to wit, a commission of a lewd and lascivious act upon the body of a female child. He appeals from the judgment entered on a verdict of guilty and from an order denying a new trial, urging as grounds for reversal that the evidence, aside from the appellant's extrajudicial statements, was insufficient to prove the corpus delicti, that certain rulings by the trial court were erroneous, and that its statements and those by the attorneys for the prosecution, made during the course of the trial, constituted prejudicial misconduct. The evidence, aside from appellant's extrajudicial confession, shows that the child was about 3 years of age, and appellant, who boarded with her parents, occupied a room in their dwelling. On the day the crime is alleged to have been committed, appellant was present in the room mentioned, and, as may fairly be inferred from the evidence, he claimed to be ill, and was occupying a bed therein. The parents were absent, and the child had been left in the care of her grandmother, who had come from her home to lend this assistance. The grandmother testified that during the day, the exact hour not appearing from the evidence, she heard the child crying in appellant's room, and that in reply to her question as to the cause he stated that the child was crying for a piece of chewing gum. It was further testified by her parents that during the evening of the following day the child was restless, unable to sleep, and complained of irritation in her private parts, which, on examination, showed an inflamed condition; that on the third day the child was taken to a physician, whereupon she was found to be infected with gonorrhœa. The grandmother was unable to state definitely whether the first occurrence described happened on Monday or Tuesday, further testifying that the first examination was made on the evening of the day during which the child visited appellant's room. Sufficient appears, however, from her testimony, with that of the parents, to support the conclusion that the visit was made on Monday, and the examinations on the following Tuesday and Wednesday, as stated by the parents. It was testified by the physician who made the examination that he found gonorrhœal germs to be present, and that the parts, which were inflamed, showed other symptoms of the disease, which he described, stating as his opinion that the disease was of recent origin. Other physicians testified as to the minimum period required for the development of the affliction after contact, one, Dr. Kruse, testifying that such period in the case of a child of tender years might be 24 hours, and the others stating the minimum to be 48 hours or more, depending upon physical conditions.

[1-4] With reference to the first point urged for a reversal, it may be said that the two elements of the corpus delicti are (1) certain facts forming its bases; and (2) the existence of criminal agency as the cause of them. People v. Vertrees, 169 Cal. 404, 146 P. 890. To justify a conviction, the jury must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of the existence of every fact necessary to constitute the offense and to identify the defendant as the perpetrator; but, as held in People v. Jones, 123 Cal. 65, 55 P. 698, the evidence of the criminal act need not be of that conclusive character in order to justify the admission of an extrajudicial confession, and, although such confession cannot warrant a conviction unless corroborated by proof aliunde of the corpus delicti, yet full proof thereof independent of the confession is not required; it being sufficient that there are corroborating facts which, with the confession, show the existence of an offense of which the defendant is guilty. And such facts may be shown by circumstantial evidence (People v. Alviso, 55 Cal. 230; People v. Wilkins, 158 Cal. 530, 111 P. 612); it being sufficient that the evidence show prima facie a criminal agency (People v. Jones, supra; People v. Wagner, 29 Cal. App. 363, 155 P. 649; People v. Alba, 52 Cal. App. 603, 199 P. 894).

[5, 6] We think that the facts directly proved, with the inferences reasonably to be drawn therefrom, were sufficient to meet the requirements of the rule stated. That the child was in the room with appellant was shown, and that the latter was then in bed is a fair inference from the testimony. This, with the crying of the child, its physical condition found on the first examination, which might reasonably be said to have been due to contact more or less violent with appellant's person, and the condition shown by the second examination, together with the testimony that infection might have developed within the elapsed period, sufficiently corroborated appellant's statement that an offense had been committed of which he was guilty. This statement, which was voluntary, was made to the child's mother on the Wednesday following the day of the alleged commission of the offense. According to her testimony, which was not disputed, appellant stated, in substance, that at the time alleged he placed his private parts against those of the child, and that an emission occurred, further stating, "I done it, and I want to spend the last penny to cure your baby." Following this statement, the child was taken to a physician, who, after the examination, notified the police. Appellant, however, had in the meantime disappeared, but during the following month surrendered himself to the officers. We do not deem further discussion upon the point necessary, as we are of the opinion that the evidence, aside from appellant's confession, was sufficient to establish the corpus delicti. Complaint is made that the court restricted the cross-examination of Dr. Kruse on the question of the presence of meningococcus germs in vaginal discharges. The witness, having stated that such germs were not to her knowledge found therein, and that her statement was based on her experience and reading, was asked whether she had read any medical works stating that they were so found. While, as held in Fisher v. Southern Pacific, 89 Cal. 399, 26 P. 894, such cross-examination for the purpose of testing the competency of the witness as an expert is proper, here, as in Griffith v. Los Angeles Pacific Co., 14 Cal. App. 145, 111 P. 107, the witness had testified in effect that she had read nothing which was contrary to her conclusion, and the ruling was not therefore erroneous.

[7] Objections were sustained to questions asked the grandmother of the child as to the time when appellant arose on the day of the alleged commission of the offense, and whether its parents had then returned. The rulings of the court were proper, in view of the previous statement by the witness on cross-examination that she was unable to remember.

[8] The court, over objection by appellant and after rejection of offered testimony by the father of the child that appellant had confessed the crime to him—it being shown that the alleged confession was not voluntary—permitted the witness to testify that appellant on that occasion admitted that he was suffering from gonorrhœa. The ruling of the court is assigned as error. This evidence was properly admitted. The fact stated did not of itself import guilt, and hence was not a confession. People v. Miller, 122 Cal. 84, 54 P. 523; People v. Knowlton, 122 Cal. 357, 55 P. 141; People v. Wilkins, 158 Cal. 530, 111 P. 612; People v. Fowler, 178 Cal. 657, 174 P. 892.

[9, 10] Appellant next complains of the rejection of his proposed instruction as to the proof of the corpus delicti. An instruction given by the court included the substance of that offered; but it is urged that the jury was erroneously told therein that they might consider the extrajudicial statements in determining whether the elements of the crime charged were proven beyond a reasonable doubt.

[11] While expressions in the cases cited by appellant tend to support his contention, it is held in People v. Selby, 198 Cal. 426, 245 P. 426, that upon prima facie proof of the corpus delicti the extrajudicial statements, admissions, or confessions of the accused may be admitted in evidence; and, having been so admitted, may with the other evidence be considered by the jury in its determination whether or not all the elements of the crime and the defendant's connection therewith have been established beyond a reasonable doubt. The instruction given correctly stated the rule thus established. Objections to questions asked on the cross-examination of the mother and father of the child as to facts which, if true, tended to show hostility toward appellant, and further questions as to the past history of both witnesses, were sustained, and these rulings are complained of. These questions were proper on cross-examination, and should have been allowed. We cannot say, however, that the act of the court in restricting the cross-examination injuriously affected the substantial rights of the defendant.

[12, 13] The same may be said of the claim that the district attorney was guilty of misconduct in stating to the jury that the child was a sufferer from an infection from which she would never recover, and that, if it were his child, the defendant would not be on trial for the offense. Nor is there any merit in the contention that the trial court was guilty of misconduct, or that its refusal to give defendant additional time to present affidavits in support of his motion for a new trial was an abuse of discretion. Other points do not require consideration.

In conclusion, it may be said that from a consideration of the entire case, including the evidence, we are of the opinion that the errors complained of have not resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

KNIGHT, J. I concur.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. I dissent. I am of the opinon that there is not sufficient evidence to establish the corpus delicti. The only evidence remaining, after eliminating not only the extrajudicial admissions and the confessions of the defendant, but also such evidence as tends to connect the defendant with the crime when established, is that the child cried in defendant's bedroom; that she complained of an inflammation, and that she was subsequently found to be suffering from a venereal disease; that none of those residing in the house, unless it be the defendant, were infected with such disease, and which disease all the experts who testified agree in the case of a female child is more usually contracted by accidental infection than by direct contact, as from bed linen, towels, soap, sponges and lavatory seats. This evidence at best but casts a suspicion upon the defendant, and proves mere opportunity. The proofs of mere suspicious circumstances and of opportunity to commit a crime are never sufficient to justify a conviction (People v. Robbins, 171 Cal. 466, 154 P. 317), and a fortiori to establish the existence of a crime.

In the majority opinion, People v. Jones, 123 Cal. 65, 55 P. 698, is relied upon as authority holding that the evidence is sufficient to establish the corpus delicti. It is true that in the Jones Case the court uses this language, quoted by Mr. Justice Clifford from Greenleaf on Evidence in U. S. v. Williams, 1 Cliff. 24, Fed. Cas. No. 16707:

> "Full proof of the body of the crime, the corpus delicti, independently of the confession, is not required, says Nelson, C. J., in People v. Badgley, 16 Wend. 59, by any of the cases; and in many of them slight corroborating facts were held sufficient."

If the court in the Jones Case intended to vary the rule which has had the sanction of the courts of this state from the beginning of judicial pronouncement on the question that the extrajudicial statements, admissions, and confessions of an accused are not admissible until the corpus delicti has been established, such holding has been brushed aside, and the time-established rule reaffirmed in People v. Vertrees, 169 Cal. 404, 146 P. 890, where the court holds that:

> "While slight proof of the corpus delicti has in many cases been properly held a sufficient basis for the admission of such confessions, it is nevertheless true that the confessions and admissions of the defendant cannot be used to establish any necessary element for the commission of the crime. * * * It has been held in this state that, although all of the elements of the crime charged must appear in the proof of the corpus delicti, it is not necessary that the evidence of the criminal act should be of the conclusive character required for conviction before the confession may be admitted in evidence. * * * But no authority has been cited which justifies the use of the confession itself to prove one or more of the necessary elements in the commission of the crime that would be wholly lacking without such confession." (Italics mine.)

See, also, People v. Simonsen, 107 Cal. 346, 40 P. 440; People v. Tapia, 131 Cal. 651; 63 P. 1001; People v. Frank, 2 Cal. App. 285, 83 P. 578; People v. Frey, 165 Cal. 144, 131 P. 127.

It is evident that People v. Jones was not called to the attention of the court when it was considering the Vertrees Case. If it had been, the court would doubtless have disagreed with the language quoted that "full proof of the body of the crime, the corpus delicti, independently of the confession is not required," or would have declared it to be mere dictum, which it appears to be, as it was not necessary to a decision of the case, there being sufficient evidence to establish the corpus delicti independent of the confession, and in fact the court so stated:

> "In the case before us I think the evidence, though weak and unsatisfactory in particulars capable of more explicit statement, is sufficient to justify the admission of the confession."

The language of Mr. Justice Clifford, quoted in People v. Jones, is also quoted in People v. Selby, 198 Cal. 435, 245 P. 426. So also does the court in the Selby Case quote with approval from People v. Rowland, 12 Cal. App. 7, 106 P. 428:

> "It is of course, a well-established rule of law that the confession or extrajudicial admissions of a party accused of crime cannot be considered for the purpose of proving the corpus delicti, or, in other words, of proving the elements necessary to constitute the crime with which he is charged."

The question with which the court in the Selby Case was primarily concerned, when quoting the language of Mr. Justice Clifford to the effect that full proof of the body of the crime independently of the confession is not required, was concerning an instruction refused which was in effect that the jury could not consider the confession of the accused until the corpus delicti had been established to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt. It is clear that the language of Mr. Justice Clifford, quoted in the Selby Case from the Jones Case, was not intended by the court to establish a new rule in this state; otherwise the court would have expressly so stated and not cited with approval the Rowland Case, which is supported by the unanimous authority on the question in this state and which is in direct conflict therewith.

It is apparent that in the instant case the elements of the commission of the crime are utterly lacking without the admissions and confession of the defendant. These, under the rule stated in People v. Vertrees, supra, and which is supported by the other authorities cited, cannot be used to supply the defects of proof of any essential element of the crime. The infection from which the child was suffering was only one of the elements of the corpus delicti; it is like the fact of death in a homicide case, which, as is said in People v. Simonsen, supra, does not establish the corpus delicti, but only the corpus. The second essential element—that is, the criminal agency from which the infection resulted—was supplied wholly by the statements of the defendant, testified to by the parents of the child.

Shorn of the statements, admissions, and confession of the accused and his disappearance and flight—which can avail no more than his admissions to establish the corpus delicti, being but a circumstance tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime and to authorize the inference of guilt, the corpus delicti being proven (State v. Poe, 123 Iowa, 118, 98 N. W. 587, 101 Am. St. Rep. 307; 8 R. C. L. 192)—there remains only suspicion and opportunity. If opportunity be held to be sufficient to establish the fact that a crime has been committed, but few would be immune from prosecution and the indignity of being forced to make a defense in a criminal court.

It is my opinion that the case should be reversed for lack of proof of the corpus delicti.

BURT v. FORREST. (Civ. 5552.)★

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. March 4, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 2, 1927.)

1. Chattel mortgages 🔑282—Foreclosure proceedings held not invalidated by failure to find value of property (Code Civ. Proc. § 726).

In action for accounting and foreclosure, failure to find as to value of property held not error, since such finding would not obviate necessity of foreclosure and sale to satisfy judgment, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 726, and would not affect bids.

2. Pledges 🔑57—Pledgee may foreclose right of redemption by judicial sale under direction of competent court (Civ. Code, § 3011).

Instead of selling property pledged, pledgee may foreclose right of redemption by judicial sale under direction of competent court, in view of Civ. Code, § 3011.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; James G. Quinn, Judge.

Action by J. S. Burt against George M. Forrest, in which defendant filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Franklin P. Bull, of San Francisco, for appellant.

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

Olin L. Berry, of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action to obtain an accounting and a judgment in foreclosure on the amount found to be due. The defendant appeared and answered and also filed a cross-complaint. The plaintiff answered the cross-complaint, and a trial was had before the trial court sitting without a jury. The trial court made findings of fact in favor of the plaintiff and caused a judgment to be entered in accordance therewith. The defendant has appealed from the judgment under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Under a different set of pleadings the litigation was before this court in the case entitled Forrest v. Burt, 67 Cal. App. 564, 227 P. 949. The facts are fully set forth in the case as there reported.

[1] In their pleadings both parties alleged that the equitable title to the Quality Electric Motor Company rested in the defendant. The trial court so found. The appellant does not attack that finding. He does not contend that plaintiff's complaint was insufficient or that the findings failed to cover all of the allegations of the plaintiff's complaint. The defendant does not contend that he either pleaded or proved a cause of action in conversion, nor as for a breach of trust. However, standing on the allegations of his cross-complaint, he complains because the trial court made no finding on the appellant's allegation "that the value of the assets, property, and business of said Quality Electric Motor Company is now in excess of the sum of $36,000." In this connection the appellant contends that the trial court should have found the value thereof, that the trial court should have ascertained the amount of the advances which had been made for the account of the appellant, and that it should then have deducted such advances from the value of the assets and have ordered a lien in favor of the appellant, on appellant's property, for the balance $8,000 more or less and allow the plaintiff to keep the property as his own instead of merely holding it as security. In that connection the appellant argues that, as he is impecunious, such procedure would have operated to protect him from possible depressed prices arising out of a foreclosure sale. In his briefs the appellant cites no authorities supporting the procedure contended for. We know of none. If the proof showed that the title rested in the appellant, the trial court was bound to so find. In connection with that finding, another finding, regarding the value of the assets, would have been immaterial. The existence or nonexistence of a finding as to the value of the assets would not, standing alone, obviate the necessity of entering a decree of foreclosure and ordering a sale of the assets at a public sale for the purpose of satisfying the judgment. Code Civ. Proc. § 726. Moreover, there can be no possible injury to either party in failing to make a finding as to the value of property which is about to be sold at public sale. Such a finding would neither increase nor decrease the bids that would thereafter be made.

In short, the appellant made a contract by which he tied up his own properties to secure advances made for his benefit. Having failed to redeem them, he complains of the hardships which will be the natural results of his own acts, and seeks to pass the burdens to the person who was his benefactor. Because the trial court refused to entertain such contentions, the appellant alleges error. The point is without merit.

[2] Appellant's opening brief was filed March 26, 1925. Respondent's brief was filed April 8, 1925. Appellant's reply was filed July 22, 1925. Thereafter, on August 18, 1925, without leave of court, appellant filed a document, "Supplemental Brief," in which, for the first time, he made the contention that the property was held in pledge, that, when a pledge is due, the pledgee may sell the property without foreclosure, etc. Conceding that the point is good, it is equally clear that the procedure adopted by the respondent is supported by authority (Civ. Code, § 3011; Farmers' & Merchants' Bank v. Copsey, 134 Cal. 287, 289, 66 P. 324), and that the procedure followed by the respondent has resulted in no prejudicial error to the rights of the appellant

The judgment is affirmed.

4. Larceny 🔑19—Requested instruction that sudden intentional snatching of property from owner constituted grand larceny held erroneous.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Lincoln S. Church, Judge.

Pedro Pedel was convicted of robbery of the second degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

James Wesolo, of Oakland, for appellant.
U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Wm. F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PARKER, Justice pro tem. Defendant, Pedro Pedel, was charged by information with the crime of robbery. Upon trial before a jury he was convicted and the degree found to be robbery of the second degree. Thereafter defendant moved for a new trial and the motion was denied, whereupon the court pronounced its judgment.

The appeal rests upon three points, viz., first, that the evidence was insufficient to warrant the verdict of the jury; second, that the court erred in refusing to advise the jury to bring in a verdict of not guilty; third, error in the refusal of the trial court to give certain instructions requested by defendant.

[1] The evidence is wholly that presented by the prosecution, and in itself not inherently weak or improbable. The prosecuting witness was a Japanese, and he testified that on October 27, 1926, he was proceeding unaccompanied along one of the public streets of Emeryville, in Alameda county, at or about the hour of 9:30 p. m. There was no one else on the street at that time in the immediate locality as far as could be observed. Suddenly and without warning, the prosecuting witness testifies, he was struck from behind, and upon turning was confronted by defendant, whom he identified at the trial and before trial. Upon turning he was again struck, at which time he shouted for help. Receiving a third blow he collapsed to the sidewalk, practically unconscious. Prior to the assault the prosecuting witness had upon his person, in an inside pocket of his vest, a wallet containing a $50 bill and also a check book. When he regained consciousness after the assault, both the wallet, containing the money, and the check book were gone. In their place and stead he had numerous cuts and bruises on and about the head and face. He testified, further, that he had given no one permission to take any of his effects and that the same were taken against his consent.

A police officer, witness for the prosecution, testified that his residence was just across the street from the scene of the assault. About 9:30 or 10 o'clock p. m. of the night in question the officer was coming down the steps of his home, when he heard some one shouting and hollering. Upon looking he observed two people across the street who were apparently fighting or scuffling. He immediately started to the scene of the conflict, and, as he approached, one of the parties to the affray ran and the officer gave pursuit. The fugitive had gone approximately 200 feet when, coming to a fence, he attempted to jump or scramble over it. By this time the officer was upon him and apprehended him in the act of scaling the fence. The party so captured was the defendant. The officer returned with him to the place of the assault, where the prosecuting witness had remained, and, after a brief questioning, escorted both defendant and complainant to the city hall, a distance of 1½ blocks. The complaining witness appeared battered and bloodstained and stated his loss of the wallet, money, and check book. After locking up the defendant the officer returned to search for the missing property. Just on the other side of the fence, at the spot where defendant was stopped, the officer found a wallet containing a $50 bill and a check book. The wallet and check book were presently identified by complainant as being his property and on his person immediately prior to the assault.

On the day following the events narrated the defendant was confronted by the complaining witness, and at that time was identified by the latter and accused of the robbery. He made no denial or explanatory statement; in fact, he remained mute.

Incidental to the facts presented by the people it was elicited by counsel for defendant that on the night of the occurrence the complaining witness up to the hour of 9 p. m. was engaged in gambling at a Chinese gambling house, and that as spectators and patrons there were present quite a few Filipinos, watching the games if not participating in them. The defendant is a Filipino, and his counsel brought out the fact that he is of an appearance and stature similar to that of persons who were at the gambling house.

It is on this state of uncontradicted facts that appellant predicates his contention that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict; likewise, on the same facts, does he urge the error of the trial court in refusing to advise the jury to return a verdict of acquittal.

The argument of the appellant is that there is no testimony that the defendant actually took the money and wallet, and that no witness is presented who saw defendant in the act of making the physical transfer of the property alleged to have been taken. Suffice it to say that it is an elementary and fundamental principle of criminal jurisprudence that the law does not require demonstration. To insist upon the quantum of proof demanded by appellant would be ignoring this principle entirely and setting up a standard of proof unreasonable and dangerous. The evidence was sufficient to sustain the verdict, and the court properly refused to advise the jury to acquit.

In reading the instructions of the court it is readily apparent that, with the exception of three instructions hereinafter noted, everything asked by defendant and refused was sufficiently covered.

[2-5] The appellant requested, and the court refused to give in any form, these instructions, viz.:

> "You are hereby instructed that a sudden snatching of property from the hand of the owner without violence to him and without putting him in fear is not robbery, and the fact that the owner is frightened on account of the theft is immaterial, if the theft is not in consequence of the fright.
> "If you believe that there was no force or violence but a sudden snatching of property from complaining witness, and this was done intentionally, then you may find defendant guilty of grand larceny.
> "You are hereby instructed that flight of the defendant does not intend to prove deliberation or premeditation."

No error appears in the refusal to give these instructions or either of them. There are no facts in evidence warranting the giving of the first two, and, as a matter of law, neither one in the abstract correctly sets forth the law. As to the last instruction, it is clear that deliberation or premeditation is not an element of the crime of robbery.

There are other specifications of error in the admission and rejection of testimony, but all are based upon appellant's theory of the insufficiency of the evidence.

The judgment is affirmed, as is the order denying appellant's motion for a new trial.

CITTI v. BAVA. (Civ. 5548.)★

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. March 1, 1927. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court April 28, 1927.)

1. Appeal and error 🔑1050(1)—Evidence 🔑213(1)—Evidence of defendant's attempted settlement with owner of colliding car held inadmissible and prejudicial, in passenger's action for injuries.

In action for injuries by passenger of automobile against owner and operator, testimony relative to settlement with owner of car with which defendant's car collided, made through alleged representatives of defendant, held clearly inadmissible and prejudicial to defendant's rights.

2. Evidence 🔑213(1)—Offer of compromise not accepted cannot be given in evidence (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 895, 2078).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 895, defendant's offer of compromise to plaintiff, not accepted by plaintiff, cannot be given in evidence against defendant, and, under section 2078, such offer of compromise, if made, does not constitute admission that anything is due plaintiff.

3. Evidence 🔑213(4)—Admission of distinct fact during negotiations is admissible against party making it, although forming part of offer of compromise.

If clear admission of distinct fact is made during negotiations for settlement, such fact is admissible against party making it, although forming part of offer to compromise, but other admissions in negotiations for compromise are regarded as hypothetical admissions and are not admissible in evidence.

4. Negligence 🔑22½—Negligence of automobile driver in colliding with another car does not imply negligence toward passenger in his car.

Negligence of automobile operator in colliding with another car does not necessarily imply negligence toward passenger who was a guest, since legal responsibility of driver was entirely different toward him and other automobile lawfully traveling on public highway.

★Superseded by opinion of Supreme Court, 266 P. 954.

5. Trial 🔑127—Offering evidence in action for damages that defendant is indemnified against loss constitutes prejudicial misconduct.

During trial of action for damages, evidence that defendant has been indemnified against loss by surety company is not only inadmissible, but its offer on part of plaintiff is prejudicial misconduct.

6. Trial 🔑37—Erroneous admission by attorney that evidence of defendant's settlement with owner of colliding automobile was admissible if connected with defendant held not to render it competent.

In action for personal injuries in automobile collision by passenger against owner and operator of automobile, implied admissions by one of defendant's attorneys during objections to testimony, relative to settlement made by defendant with owner of colliding automobile, to effect that settlement would be admissible if it was connected with defendant held not to render such testimony competent or admissible, in view of proper objections and assignments of misconduct made by other attorney.

7. Witnesses 🔑286(1)—Nonresponsive statement by hostile witness on cross-examination does not justify redirect examination relative thereto.

Voluntary statement by hostile witness on cross-examination, which was not responsive to question, furnishes no justification for redirect examination relative to such matter.

8. Appeal and error 🔑1053(4)—Instruction to disregard testimony of settlement between defendant and owner of colliding automobile held too general to cure harmful effect.

Instruction requiring jury to disregard testimony in reference to settlement between defendant and owner of colliding automobile, if sufficient to have neutralized harmful effect of such testimony, nevertheless held too general, in that it did not include settlement between owner and insurance company, which was settlement contended for when bringing out testimony.

PRESTON, Presiding Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by the defendant, Pietro Bava, from a judgment entered against him upon a verdict of a jury in the sum of $6,000.

This action followed an automobile collision on the public highway leading from San Jose to San Francisco, and at a point about 10 miles north of the city of San Jose.

The defendant, Pietro Bava, owned and operated a six-passenger Haynes automobile. About 5:50 p. m. on September 26, 1922, he left San Jose, driving his automobile, and had with him in the car as his guests the plaintiff, F. Citti, R. Dei, and two other men. Both the plaintiff and Dei, also one Bonnetto, were in the rear seat of the automobile, with the plaintiff in the middle. They were all going from San Jose to San Francisco to attend a wrestling match to be held that night at Dreamland Rink at 8:30 p. m., between Strangler Lewis and one Gardini. When they reached the intersection of the road upon which they were traveling and a crossroad known as Fremont avenue, the Haynes car collided with a Ford car going easterly on Fremont avenue, driven by Louis Aftergut. All of the occupants of the Haynes car were more or less injured. The plaintiff suffered a fracture of the skull, which resulted in a partial paralysis, and cuts and bruises. Dei also suffered a ruptured intestine and received cuts and bruises. Both the plaintiff and Dei brought an action for damages against the defendant, Bava, and both cases were tried together and resulted in a verdict in favor of Dei for $4,000, and the plaintiff, Citti, for $6,000 as stated.

> "Q. Did you tell Mr. Bava anything when you saw how fast he was going? A. I told him five or six or seven, or probably eight times, 'Bava, stop, you will kill us all.' Q. What did Bava say? A. He answered that 'I will bring you in an hour to San Francisco.' Q. At the time that you were approaching this crossroad, how many miles an hour was the automobile in which you were riding traveling? A. He was going from 55 to 60 miles. Q. Did anybody else say anything to him about how fast he was driving? A. Yes; Citti told him two or three times to stop, that he was going too fast and he wanted to get out, and I also repeated I wanted to get off, he would kill us all. Q. And what did Bava reply? A. This was the second time, he answered back that 'in three-quarters of an hour I will bring you to San Francisco,' and then he replied no more. Q. Was there any time that Mr. Bava was driving his car 20 or 25 miles an hour, from the time he left 594 W. San Carlos street up to the time of this accident? A. From the starting point of my residence where he picked me up, around to the hospital he went around 35 to 37 miles; from there out to Cupertino he went around 40, until he got to the corner and made the turn and then he went faster. Q. How far from the scene of the accident was the last time that you saw it (referring to speedometer)? A. I saw the speedometer the last time after he made the turn at Cupertino where the oil station was. He went around the corner 20 miles an hour or thereabouts, and immediately after he made the turn I saw the speedometer at 50 miles an hour. Q. And how far was that from the scene of the accident, half a mile, or a mile, or how far? A. It was about 3 miles. * * * Q. What time did this accident happen? A. It must have been around 5 or 6 or 7 minutes after 6 o'clock, along that time. Q. What is the distance from San Jose out to the place of this accident? A. I don't know exactly the distance, * * * maybe 9 or 8 miles from North Market street to the place of the accident."

The plaintiff, F. Citti, testified in part as follows:

"Q. After you had left Cupertino how fast were you traveling? A. He was going from 40 to 45 and 60 miles. Q. Did anybody, did you or anybody else say anything to Bava about the rate of speed that you were traveling? A. I told Bava myself three or four times to slow down, go slow, and this cook, called Dei, told him five or six times to go slow and slow. Q. And where, at what places, did you tell him this? A. Been telling him to go slow after he left the O'Connor Sanitarium when he started to go 35 and 45. Q. Did Bava make any reply? A. Bava didn't reply until after he made the turn at Cupertino, telling Dei or cook that 'in three-quarters of an hour to an hour I will take you to San Francisco.'"

The witness Forestiae, who was one of the parties in the Haynes automobile, riding in the front seat, on the right-hand side of Mr. Bava, the driver, testified in part as follows:

"Q. Now, from the time that Mr. Citti got in the car up to the time of this accident, that Mr. Dei got in the car, up to the time of this accident, did you ever hear either Mr. Citti or Mr. Dei say to Bava anything on that trip about the speed that Mr. Bava was driving the car? A. No; never heard them say anything. Q. Mr. Citti or Mr. Dei did they ever ask to get out of the car? A. No. Q. Did they ever ask Mr. Bava to stop? A. No. Q. Did they ever ask him to slow down? A. No. Q. Did Mr. Citti or Mr. Dei make any complaint to Mr. Bava about the way he was driving his car? A. No; they never complained. Q. Did you ever hear Citti or Dei say to Mr. Bava to slow down or he would kill them? A. No. Q. Did Citti or Dei make any such a statement to Mr. Bava? A. No, sir. Q. And what rate of speed was he going from the time that he made the turn in the road at Cupertino up before this accident? A. Was driving at the rate of 25, between 25 and 30 miles an hour. Q. Was there anything in the way that Bava drove his car to cause you alarm? A. No. Q. Now, he drove it carefully? A. Sure. Q. And at a slow rate of speed? A. Sure. Q. You were not alarmed in the least at the way Mr. Bava was driving his car, and he appeared to be driving it carefully and in a lawful rate of speed to the time of the accident? A. If there had been any danger I would have got out of the car. Q. And you didn't get out because there was not any? A. No, sir; I did not get out of the car. Q. There was no reason for anybody getting out? A. No. Q. No reason for anybody to complain about the way Bava was driving the car? A. No, sir. Q. Who reached the intersection first, the Haynes car or the Ford car? A. Mr. Bava's machine arrived at the crossing first."

Mike Bonnetto, another occupant of the automobile, testified in part as follows:

"Q. From the time that you got in the Haynes car up to the time and place of this accident, did you hear Mr. Citti or Mr. Dei say anything to Mr. Bava about the rate of speed that he was driving the Haynes car? A. No, sir. Q. Did you ever hear Dei or Citti say to Pete Bava to go slow? A. No. Q. Did you ever hear Citti or Dei tell Bava to stop and let them out? A. No. Q. Did you ever hear Dei or Citti say to Pete Bava that he would kill them? A. No. Q. Did you ever see Citti or Dei stoop and lean over between Bava and Guy Forestiae and look at the speedometer? A. No. Q. At the time of this accident and before the accident, did you have good hearing? A. Yes, sir. Q. And did you have good eyesight? A. Yes. Q. How fast did you drive from Dei's house to the Sanitarium? A. 20 miles. Q. And how fast from Cupertino to the place of the accident? A. About 25. Q. Which car reached the intersection first, the Ford or the Haynes car? A. The Haynes. Q. Do you know whether the Haynes ran into the Ford or the Ford ran into the Haynes? A. The Ford ran into the Haynes machine."

The defendant, Bava, also testified in part as follows:

"Q. And what was your speed as you went from O'Connor Sanitarium out to Cupertino and before you reached this Fremont avenue before this accident? A. About 25, 30 miles. Q. Well, as you were going across the intersection, how fast were you going? A. About 15 miles. Q. And did you observe the rate of speed that the Ford car was going? A. Yes; because I went outside of the road. I saw the Ford coming fast, and went outside to pass, but he lost his control, come hit me in the middle of my car. Q. Mr. Bava, from the time that Mr. Dei and Mr. Citti got in your Haynes car up to the time and place of this accident, did you even hear Mr. Dei say to you to go slower? A. No. Q. Did you hear him say stop or you would kill us? A. No. Q. Did you ever hear Dei or Citti speak in a loud voice asking you to slow down? A. No; never did. Q. Did Dei ever say to you, 'Bava, you will kill us all if you do go so fast'? A. No. Q. Did anybody in your Haynes car from the time you took Citti into the car up to the time and place of this accident, ever say anything to you about the speed of your car? A. No. Q. Did Citti ever say to you to go slower at any time? A. No. Q. Did Citti or Dei ever ask you or demand of you to let them off or let them out? A. No."

Mr. Louis Aftergut, the driver of the Ford car, testified for the plaintiff, and his testimony was in part as follows:

"A. I was traveling toward San Jose on the Los Altos highway. * * * Q. Is it called the Fremont road, if you remember? A. I don't know the name of it. Los Altos road I know it by. Q. In what kind of a conveyance were you traveling? A. Ford. Q. Ford automobile, and you were proceeding from Los Altos toward San Jose? A. Toward Santa Clara. Q. To Santa Clara, in an easterly direction, that is? A. Well, whatever way. I don't know what direction it is. Q. At that time did you have any accident? A. Yes. Q. What was the accident? A. Another machine ran into me. Q. Whose machine ran into you? A. I can't pronounce that, Bava. Q. Pietro Bava's machine, and about what time was it that his machine ran into you? A. Oh, about 6 o'clock. Q. Will you please tell this jury just how it happened? A. Well, I was traveling toward Santa Clara, and Bava was coming from Cupertino toward Sunnyvale and met on the crossing there. Q. How fast was Bava going? A. In my estimation he was doing between 45 and 50. Q. And how fast were you traveling at the time? A. About 20. Q. And what happened to his machine, did it hit yours, or did his run into yours? A. He hit me. Q. What part of the machine did he hit? A. Somewhere near the middle on the right side. Q. What did he do to your machine? A. Wrecked it in general. Q. Now, Mr. Aftergut, when you saw Bava's machine approaching, did you make any attempt to avoid the accident? A. I did. Q. What attempt did you make? A. Turned with him. Q. By that you mean you turned in the direction of Sunnyvale? A. Yes. Q. What did he do? A. I don't know what he done. Q. After his machine hit yours what happened to it, his machine? A. I didn't see it until I got out of mine; then it was stopped. Q. And where was it stopped? A. Down the highway toward Sunnyvale. Q. How far down? A. Oh, about 150 feet or so. Q. And what was the condition of his automobile? A. Oh, was not much left of it from what I could see, * * * the car was setting on the highway straight up."

Other testimony was offered and received in evidence by both the defendant and plaintiff, but the foregoing is sufficient to show the conflicting character of the testimony.

The appellant contends that the court erred in admitting evidence offered on behalf of plaintiff concerning a settlement made with Louis Aftergut, the owner and driver of the Ford automobile involved in the collision. As has already been stated, Mr. Aftergut was called as a witness for the plaintiff, and, in the course of his direct examination by Mr. Jenkins, one of the attorneys for plaintiff, the following proceedings were had:

"Q. Did Mr. Bava ever make any claim to you that it was your fault? A. No.

"By Mr. Reardon (One of the Attorneys for Defendant): Object to that as incompetent, irrelevant, immaterial.

"By the Court: He has answered it.

"Q. Did Mr. Bava ever settle with you for your damages?

"By Mr. Reardon: We object to that as incompetent, irrelevant, immaterial.

"By Mr. Gabriel (also Associate Counsel for Defendant): Unless it is shown Mr. Bava himself did it, if you can show that.

"Q. Did anybody settle with you for the damages; that can be answered 'Yes' or 'No,' and I will find out who.

"By Mr. Reardon: Object to that as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial.

"By Mr. Gabriel: We are not bound by anybody's actions and unless they can show that Mr. Bava—

"By the Court: I presume that would be so, Mr. Jenkins.

"By Mr. Jenkins: Well, first of all, if he answers 'No,' that ends it; if he answers 'Yes,' I have to connect it up with Mr. Bava if I can. I am entitled to find out.

"By Mr. Gabriel: If you will promise to connect Mr. Bava.

"By Mr. Jenkins: I will promise to do my best.

"By Mr. Gabriel: That is different.

"By the Court: We will overrule the objection. Answer that question whether or not he has been settled with by anybody. A. What is the question?

"Q. Have you been settled with by anybody for your damages? A. I have.

"Q. And who settled with you?

"By Mr. Reardon: Same objection, your honor.

"By Mr. Gabriel: We object to that unless it was Mr. Bava.

"By Mr. Jenkins: Unless it will be subject to be stricken out unless we connect it to Bava.

"By Mr. Gabriel: I don't think counsel ought to put something in.

"By Mr. Jenkins: I proposed to put him on the stand and ask if he is not representing Bava.

"By Mr. Gabriel: I object, incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, any transactions this man may have had with anybody else is no concern of this action of Citti and Dei against Bava.

"By Mr. Jenkins: I propose to show Bava's agent or a man pretended to act for him settled.

"By Mr. Gabriel: Well, if you find that out, if you can connect that up you have a right to. I don't think it fair to give to the jury unless you can.

"By the Court: You may ask the question. A. Olds & Stoller Interexchange.

"By Mr. Gabriel: What is that? A. Olds & Stoller Interexchange.

"By Mr. Jenkins: Olds & Stoller Interexchange? A. Something like that.

"By Mr. Reardon: Same objection.

"Q. Was it this man sitting here?

"By Mr. Reardon: Same objection, your honor. I ask to have all of this line of questioning on behalf of Mr. Jenkins assigned as misconduct and used principally, solely, and only for the purpose of trying to prejudice this jury against Pietro Bava, the defendant in this case, all these questions.

"By the Court: Well—

"Q. Was this settlement of Olds & Stoller by reason of any policy you held with Olds & Stoller?

"By Mr. Reardon: Same objection, assign it as misconduct.

"By the Court: Objection overruled. A. What is the question?

"Q. Was this settlement made with Olds & Stoller by reason of any policy you had with Olds & Stoller?

"By Mr. Reardon: Object and ask to have it assigned as misconduct.

"By the Court: Objection overruled; assignment denied.

"Q. Did you have a policy of Olds & Stoller on—a policy of insurance with which they settled with you? A. No.

"Q. It was not your policy? A. No.

"Q. Who was the man that settled with you?

"Mr. Reardon: Same objection.

"Q. Do you know?

"By the Court: I cannot see the objection is good at this time.

"Q. Who was the man that negotiated the settlement with you?

"By Mr. Reardon: Same objection, assign the same as misconduct, used for prejudicial purposes.

"By the Court: Objection overruled; assignment denied.

"Q. Mr. Curtaz here? A. Yes.

"Q. The gentleman who says he is an attorney in Mr. Abbott's office, one of the attorneys for the defendant here? A. I don't know whose office.

"By Mr. Reardon: This is leading and suggestive, coming ex parte from Mr. Jenkins himself.

"Q. Have you—did you give Mr. Curtaz the name of any other witnesses who were there?

"By Mr. Reardon: Same objection as incompetent, irrelevant, immaterial, not unless made in the presence of the defendant.

"By the Court: I think the objection should be overruled. A. Why, I don't think I did, but I don't remember. If I did, I don't remember.

"Q. You don't remember whether you did or not? A. I don't think I did, but I am not positive."

The plaintiff then produced as a witness Benjamin F. Curtaz, and in the course of his examination the following proceedings were had:

"Q. Are you the Mr. Curtaz who made the settlement with Mr. Aftergut? A. I am.

"By Mr. Reardon: Just a moment. I object to that as incompetent, irrelevant, immaterial, and not an issue in this case, if your honor please.

"By the Court: Objection overruled.

"By Mr. Reardon: I would like to have the objection go before the answer. Mr. Curtaz answered it a little quick.

"By the Court: Very well.

"Q. Who were you acting for at that time?

"By Mr. Reardon: Same objection.

"Q. You were in court at the last trial when Mr. Aftergut testified that it was Bava that settled with him, weren't you? A. I was. Q. And you didn't contradict that statement at that time?

"By Mr. Reardon: I object to that as argumentative and incompetent and immaterial as to anything that transpired at the last trial, if your honor please, in reference to Mr. Aftergut or any dealings that Mr. Aftergut had.

"By the Court: Well, the objection is not good. A. That was not his testimony.

"Q. What was his testimony, you have it, * * * please tell me what his testimony was, what was it?

"By Mr. Reardon: I submit the testimony is the best evidence, if your honor please. I think this is all argumentative, incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. This is an action brought by Citti and Dei against Pietro Bava, and any issues or dealings with Mr. Aftergut is not an issue in this case. Mr. Aftergut is not a defendant or plaintiff; they don't sue him in this case; he is not made a party to this action.

"By the Court: Objection overruled.

"Q. What did he testify to then? A. You have the answer there. Q. Do you know what he testified to?

"Mr. Reardon: Object as not the best evidence. A. I do. * * * Read the record I think is the best way to do.

"Mr. Jenkins (reading): 'Q. Have you been reimbursed by the defendant for your damages? A. I have.' Reading from page 7, you heard this witness testify to this: 'Have you been reimbursed by the defendant for your damages? A. I have.'

"By Mr. Reardon: Objected to as incompetent, irrelevant, immaterial, ask to have it assigned as misconduct.

"By the Court: The objection is overruled.

"By Mr. Reardon: If it can be understood I object to all this line of testimony as being utterly incompetent, irrelevant, immaterial as to any dealings or transactions that Mr. Aftergut may have had. I won't make the objection so often, and is used for prejudicial purposes and misconduct.

"By the Court: It may be so understood.

"Q. You heard Mr. Aftergut testify in response to my question, 'Have you been reimbursed by the defendant for his damages?' Answer: 'I have.' A. I heard that and what followed. Q. You heard that, and you did not contradict it, did you? A. No; what follows contradicts that, in my opinion. Q. Did Pietro Bava discuss the terms with you? A. I don't remember. Q. (Reading): 'Did this gentleman here, Mr. Curtaz, make the settlement with you? A. He did. Q. Did you make a statement to these gentlemen of the facts of the accident? A. I don't remember whether I did or not.' Q. It was you who made the settlement, was it not? A. It was. Q. And at that time didn't volunteer that Bava had not made any settlement with you? A. You didn't ask me. Q. You didn't at that time testify or infer from anybody that the settlement was not made with Bava, did you? A. No; I didn't. You didn't put me on the stand. Q. And you let the jury believe at that time that Bava had made the settlement?

"By Mr. Reardon: Same objection, assign it as misconduct.

"By the Court: Same ruling. A. No."

During the cross-examination of this same witness, the following proceedings occurred:

"By Mr. Gabriel: Now, if the court please, we move to strike out all the testimony with reference to any settlement with Aftergut on the ground it has not been connected up with Bava.

"By Mr. Jenkins: I think that is right, your honor.

"By the Court: Let the motion be granted.

"By Mr. Gabriel: Ask the jury be instructed to disregard all testimony in reference to any settlement made with Aftergut in this action.

"By Mr. Reardon: We also want the record to show, if your honor please, that—

"By the Court: Let's get at one thing at a time. Ladies and gentlemen, the court has granted the motion on the part of the defendant to strike out all testimony with reference to a settlement between Mr. Bava and Mr. Aftergut who was a witness here yesterday and who was involved in this collision, and the court instructs you to disregard any testimony as to any such settlement."

During the redirect examination of R. Dei, a witness for plaintiff and also a plaintiff himself, the following proceedings were had:

"Q. What insurance man was it with her (referring to wife of defendant)?

"By Mr. Reardon: I object to that, incompetent, irrelevant, immaterial, and I assign counsel asking such a question as misconduct.

"By the Court: What do you say about it?

"Mr. Jenkins: I am entitled to know who was with her.

"By Mr. Reardon: I ask that that question be stricken out, incompetent, irrelevant, immaterial, and assign it as misconduct, asked for the purpose of trying to prejudice this jury against this defendant, Pietro Bava.

"By the Court: Objection overruled.

"Q. Who was the man that was with her, if you know? A. That man that is writing there (indicating). Q. Mr. Curtaz? A. I don't know his name.

"By Mr. Reardon: I ask that this be assigned as misconduct on the part of counsel. It is done for the purpose of prejudicing the jury against the defendant, and that is all he is using it for.

"Q. Did they have a paper for you to sign at that time? A. This man came near the bed there, and Rosie came alongside of the bed also, with a paper to put in my hand, and the nurse informed them not to talk to me long because I couldn't stand to be talked to. Q. By 'this man' who do you mean? A. The man with the glasses on his eyes (indicating Mr. Curtaz).

"By Mr. Reardon: We ask that the answer be stricken out as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial; not responsive to the question.

"By the Court: I think we will let it stand."

All this testimony was clearly inadmissible and highly prejudicial to the rights of the defendant.

[2] In the first place, any offer of compromise from the defendant himself to Citti, the plaintiff, which was not accepted by Citti, could not be given in evidence against the defendant (section 895, Code Civ. Proc.) and such an offer of compromise, if made, would not be an admission that anything is due Citti (section 2078, Code Civ. Proc.).

[3] With reference to admissions made in negotiations for a compromise between the litigants themselves, we think the correct rule is this: If a clear admission of a distinct fact is made in the course of negotiations for a settlement, such fact is admissible in evidence against the party making it, even though it forms a part of an offer to compromise, but all other admissions in negotiations for a compromise are regarded as hypothetical admissions, from which it is not proper to draw any inference of liability, and are therefor not to be received in evidence. Smith v. Whittier, 95 Cal. 279, 30 P. 529; Scott v. Sciaroni, 66 Cal. App. 577, 226 P. 827; Dunlap v. Montana Tonopah Mining Co. (C. C.) 192 F. 714; Wigmore on Evidence, vol. 2, § 1061; Truman v. Sutter-Butte Canal Co. (Cal. App.) 244 P. 923.

The plaintiff in this case, however, did not seek to show by this testimony that the defendant had in fact made any admissions of negligence, or had made any statement from which negligence might be inferred, to plaintiff or any one else, but, on the other hand, sought to show that a settlement had been made with Aftergut by Bava, or the insurance company, for any damages that Aftergut claimed.

If it be a fact that the defendant, or the insurance company, settled with Aftergut, and paid him a sum of money, this fact should certainly not prejudice the rights of the defendant in the present action, and could be no evidence that Aftergut's demand was well founded, or that the defendant was guilty of negligence in the case at bar.

It is very often a wise thing, however unfounded a complaint may be, for a person to pay a sum of money and buy his "peace" and thereby rid himself of the annoyance and trouble incident to litigation. Peace to some people is so desired that they seek it, even at the sacrifice of their legal rights, and in such a case the purchase of peace is not to be taken that the purchaser was at fault, but merely that he is willing to sacrifice his legal rights and pay a sum of money to quiet the complainant and avoid trouble and litigation.

[4] Furthermore, if it be conceded that the defendant here was negligent in colliding with Aftergut, it would not necessarily follow that he was negligent towards the plaintiff in this action. The plaintiff was a guest of the defendant, and Aftergut was traveling upon a public highway, where he had a legal right to be. Therefore the two cases are entirely different as far as legal responsibility goes, and not depending altogether upon the same facts or the same rules of law.

[5] This court and the Supreme Court have many times declared it to be the law in this state that, during the trial of an action for damages, evidence that the defendant has been indemnified against loss by a surety company is not only inadmissible, but its offer on the part of the plaintiff is prejudicial misconduct. Roche v. Llewellyn Iron Works Co., 140 Cal. 563, 74 P. 147; Pierce v. United Gas & Electric Co., 161 Cal. 176, 118 P. 700; Arnold v. California Portland Cement Co., 41 Cal. App. 427, 183 P. 171; De Liere v. Goldberg, Bowen & Co., 30 Cal. App. 612, 159 P. 197; Dameron v. Ansbro, 39 Cal. App. 298, 178 P. 874.

It has also been held that even in the examination of jurors upon their voir dire such questions are highly improper. Dameron v. Ansbro, supra; Pierce v. United Gas & Electric Co., supra; Arnold v. California Portland Cement Co., supra.

[6] The respondent attempts to justify the admission of this testimony upon the implied admissions or statements made by one of the attorneys for the defendant in some of his objections to the testimony, to the effect that it would be competent evidence if it could be shown that the defendant, Bava, made the settlement with Aftergut, but, as we have already seen, it would not be competent evidence even if the settlement with Aftergut was connected up with the defendant, Bava. Certainly these erroneous admissions on the part of one of the attorneys for defendant would not make the objectionable testimony competent or admissible in the face of timely, full and proper objections and assignments of misconduct made by the other attorney for defendant.

[7] Respondent contends that defendant's attorney, in the cross-examination of the witness Dei, opened the door for the redirect examination above set forth, by propounding the following questions:

> "By Mr. Reardon: How long after the accident was it that Rose Bava called to see you in your room in the O'Connor Sanitarium? A. I don't remember exactly * * * must have been five, six, or seven days. Seems to me I saw Rose Bava once in my room. Q. At the O'Connor Sanitarium? A. Yes; at the hospital, with the insurance man with her."

There is no merit in this contention. The only part of this answer that is responsive to the question is "Yes"; the balance was a voluntary statement by a hostile witness, and should have been stricken out by the court, and furnished no justification for this redirect examination.

[8] Respondent also seeks to avoid the harmful effect of this testimony upon the ground that the questions were asked in good faith to try to connect the defendant, Bava, with the settlement, and also on the ground that the court instructed the jury during the cross-examination of the witness Curtaz as follows:

> "Ladies and gentlemen, the court has granted the motion on the part of the defendant to strike out all testimony with reference to a settlement between Mr. Bava and Mr. Aftergut, who was a witness here yesterday and who was involved in this collision, and the court instructs you to disregard any testimony as to any such settlement."

These questions may have been asked by plaintiff's attorney in good faith under the erroneous belief that they were proper. However, it is plain that they were well calculated to, and did, no doubt, have a very prejudicial effect upon the minds of the jurors. This admonition of the court was regarding the settlement between Mr. Bava and Mr. Aftergut. The record does not disclose, neither is it contended, that there was any settlement made with Aftergut by Bava; the only settlement contended for was between Aftergut and the insurance company, and it will be noticed that the cautionary instruction by the court did not advise the jury to disregard the settlement entered into between the insurance company and Aftergut. There was no cautionary instruction to the jury to disregard the evidence concerning the matter of an insurance settlement altogether. The instruction also might well have been understood by the jury as referring only to the testimony of Aftergut and not to the testimony of Dei or Curtaz.

Moreover, we doubt very seriously whether this instruction could have entirely blotted from the minds of the jurors the harmful effect of all this testimony, for the reason that the court had previously on many occasions overruled the strenuous objections of defendant's attorney, thereby stamping with approval this objectionable and highly prejudicial testimony.

When the knowledge once reaches the jury that a defendant in a personal injury case is protected by insurance, human experience teaches us that this knowledge almost invariably has the effect of inducing the jury to reach a verdict for the plaintiff in a close case, and has the tendency in any case of making the damages larger than they would have been under the same facts had not the fact that the defendant was indemnified against loss been injected into the case, and the court in most cases is helpless to correct its evil effect by instructions. In the case at bar, conceding that the harmful effect of this testimony could have been completely neutralized by prompt and vigorous action on the part of the trial court, yet the instruction given to the jury was too general for this purpose.

The respondent finally contends that the trial court denied a motion for a new trial, based upon the admission of the evidence discussed, and the misconduct of plaintiff's attorney, and thereby determined that no prejudice was suffered by the defendant by reason of any of the matters to which we have referred, and relies upon the majority opinion in the case of Lafargue v. United Railroads, 183 Cal. 720, 192 P. 538. Our answer to this contention is this: If the only objection raised was that of the misconduct of the attorney, and a motion for a new trial upon that ground had been denied by the trial court, we would be inclined to agree with counsel that the judgment should not be disturbed upon that ground alone, but, when the misconduct of counsel and the erroneous admission of testimony in this case, coupled with the fact that the evidence adduced upon the question of defendant's negligence is very contradictory, are all considered, we are firmly of the opinion that all these matters, taken together, had a strong tendency to divert the minds of the jurors from the real issues in the case, and caused them to at least render a verdict for a larger amount in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant than they otherwise would have done. It is not at all improbable that the jury may have returned a verdict in favor of the defendant, had not these prejudicial matters been injected into the case by plaintiff, as the evidence, if believed by the jury, would have been ample to sustain such a verdict.

We conclude, therefore, that there was a miscarriage of justice in this case, and the judgment should be reversed, and it is so ordered.

MUTUAL BEN. LIFE INS. CO. v. CLARK et al. (Civ. 3192.) †

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 1, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 28, 1927.)

1. Gifts ⚷47(1)—One claiming gift of proceeds of life policy has burden of proving elements establishing completed gift.

One claiming proceeds of life insurance policy as gift has burden of proving every element necessary to establish completed gift by clear and convincing evidence, whether it be considered gift inter vivos or causa mortis.

2. Insurance ⚷213—Insured's intention in assigning policy should be given effect, if it does not contravene public policy or statute.

It is the duty of court to ascertain intention of insured in assigning policy, and give that intention effect, provided it does not contravene public policy or any statute.

In determining validity of gift, intent with which delivery was made is always important and essential element to be considered, since, unless donor intends to divest himself completely of control and dominion over property, gift is incomplete and ineffectual.

There can be no gift without an intention to give, and a delivery, either actual or constructive, of thing given.

5. Gifts ⚷55—Distinction between "gift causa mortis" and "gift inter vivos" is that former is subject to donor's revocation.

The only distinction between a "gift causa mortis" and a "gift inter vivos" is that former, being in its nature testamentary, is subject to donor's revocation while he lives.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Action in interpleader by the Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company against Jennie E. Clark, as executrix of the will of William Carter Clark, also known as William C. Clark, deceased, and Eva Powell. Judgment for defendant first named, and defendant last named appeals. Affirmed.

W. A. Dow, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Fitzgerald, Abbott & Beardsley, of Oakland, for respondent.

PRESTON, Justice pro tem. The plaintiff, Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company, a corporation, brought this action in interpleader to compel the defendants to litigate between themselves their respective claims to the proceeds of a life insurance policy upon the life of William C. Clark, deceased.

The case was tried by the court sitting without a jury, and the court decided that the proceeds of said policy belonged to the estate of William C. Clark, and that Eva Powell had no interest therein. From the judgment following this decision Eva Powell prosecutes this appeal.

The material facts are briefly these: William C. Clark was for many years a prominent attorney in Oakland, Cal. He was never married, and resided with his unmarried sister, Jennie E. Clark, who is now the executrix of his will, the principal beneficiary thereunder, and the respondent in this action. The appellant, Eva Powell, was a single woman, and she and William C. Clark had been friends for a great number of years, having been intimately associated in Sunday school, church, and other religious work, but she was not related to him in any way. There is also a suggestion in the record of a courtship attempted to be carried on by Mr. Clark and discouraged by Miss Powell, but no proposal of marriage or engagement is shown by the record. Mr. Clark lived at all times in Oakland, Cal., and Miss Powell formerly lived in Oakland, or Berkeley, Cal., but for about four years after the date of the assignment here in question, and up to the time of the death of Mr. Clark, Eva Powell lived in New York and Chicago.

On the 22d of March, 1904, the plaintiff herein, Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company, issued a policy of insurance upon the life of said William C. Clark in the sum of $5,000, "payable to William C. Clark, his executors, administrators and assigns."

On December 10, 1917, William C. Clark signed in duplicate in the San Francisco office of the insurance company, upon a printed form furnished him by the company, an assignment of the policy to Miss Eva Powell, the appellant herein. Both copies were sent to the home office of the company in Newark, N. J. The duplicate was retained by the company at the home office, and the original was indorsed as follows: "Received by the Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company, Newark, New Jersey, Dec. 17, 1917. I. Wm. Johnson, Secretary," and returned to the San Francisco office, and by that office mailed to William C. Clark at Oakland, and the letter of transmittal from the San Francisco office to Mr. Clark stated that the assignment should be attached to the policy for future reference.

William C. Clark died in the city of Oakland on the 20th of September, 1922, leaving a last will and testament, in which he appointed his sister, Jennie E. Clark, executrix thereof, and also made Jennie E. Clark the principal beneficiary thereunder.

This life insurance policy and the original assignment remained in the possession of Mr. Clark until his death, and was found after his death by his sister, Jennie E. Clark, in a safe deposit box in an Oakland bank, and to this policy was attached by a wire clip the assignment above mentioned. There was also found in this safe deposit box a letter written by William C. Clark and addressed to his sister, Jennie E. Clark, in which he stated that he had assigned the policy to Miss Eva Powell, and that, if she did not want to keep it, she could indorse it back to Jennie E. Clark. This letter was destroyed by Jennie E. Clark, and the exact language could not be proven.

The policy was never seen by the appellant; neither did she ever see or hear of the assignment during the lifetime of the insured. No mention of the policy, or the proceeds thereof, was made by William C. Clark in his will. Neither did his executrix, Jennie E. Clark, make any mention of this policy, or the proceeds, in the administration of his estate. There was no consideration of any kind for the assignment, which is the entire basis of appellant's claim.

Under these facts appellant contends that William C. Clark made her a complete and valid gift inter vivos of the proceeds of said life insurance policy.

The law has rightly said that a donor must do certain essential things to make a complete and valid gift. Let us, therefore, see what these requirements are, and see if they have been complied with in the case at bar.

[1-3] The burden of proof in this case is upon the appellant. It is the policy of the law to receive with caution a claim to a gift asserted for the first time after the death of the alleged donor. Therefore it was incumbent upon the appellant to prove every element necessary to establish a completed gift by clear and convincing evidence, and this degree of proof is required, whether it be a gift inter vivos or causa mortis. Sullivan v.

Shea, 32 Cal. App. 369, 162 P. 925; 28 Cor. Jur. 670; Freese v. Odd Fellows' Savings Bank, 136 Cal. 662, 69 P. 493; Denigan v. Hibernia Savings & Loan Society, 127 Cal. 137, 59 P. 389; Humble v. Gay, 168 Cal. 516, 143 P. 778. The rule is also well established that it is the duty of the court to ascertain the intention of the insured and give that intention effect, provided it does not contravene public policy or any statute. Waring v. Wilcox, 8 Cal. App. 317, 96 P. 910; Bogart v. Thompson, 24 Misc. Rep. 581, 53 N. Y. S. 623; Union Mutual Life Insurance Co. v. Broderick et al., 196 Cal. 497, 238 P. 1034. It is also a settled rule that, in determining the validity of a gift, the intent with which the delivery is made is always an important and essential element to be considered. Unless the donor intends to divest himself completely of control and dominion over the property given, the gift is incomplete and ineffectual, and what the intention was is a question of fact to be determined by the trial court upon the facts and circumstances in the case. Estate of Hall, 154 Cal. 527, 98 P. 269; Union Mutual Life Insurance Co. v. Broderick, supra.

Section 1146 of the Civil Code defines a gift as a transfer of personal property, made voluntarily, and without consideration. Section 1147 of the same Code provides that a verbal gift is not valid unless the means of obtaining possession and control of the thing are given; nor, if it is capable of delivery, unless there is an actual or symbolical delivery of the thing to the donee. Section 1148 of the same Code provides that a gift, other than a gift in view of death, cannot be revoked by the giver.

The delivery must be absolute, and this is true whether a gift be inter vivos or causa mortis; that is to say, the donor must not only part with the possession of the property intended as a gift, but must relinquish to the donee all dominion and control over it. 14 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 1019; Knight v. Tripp, 121 Cal. 674, 54 P. 267; Beebe v. Coffin, 153 Cal. 174, 94 P. 766; Noble v. Garden, 146 Cal. 225, 79 P. 883, 2 Ann. Cas. 1001; Collins v. Maude, 144 Cal. 289, 77 P. 945; Pullen v. Placer County Bank, 138 Cal. 169, 66 P. 740, 71 P. 83, 94 Am. St. Rep. 19.

[4] It is not contended by the appellant that the alleged gift in question was made by William C. Clark in contemplation of impending death. Therefore the question of a gift causa mortis is not here involved, but only a gift inter vivos. This admission on the part of the appellant does not, however, change or alter the necessary requirements to render a gift complete. There can be no gift without an intention to give, and a delivery, either actual or constructive, of the thing given. Knight v. Tripp, supra. There must be both a purpose to give and the execution of this purpose. The purpose must be expressed, either orally or in writing, and it must be executed by the actual delivery to the donee of the thing given, or of the means of getting possession and enjoyment thereof. It is the fact of delivery that converts the unexecuted and revocable purpose into an executed and complete gift. Collins v. Maude, supra.

[5] The only distinction between a gift causa mortis and a gift inter vivos is that the former, being in its nature testamentary, is subject to the donor's revocation while he lives. The essential of delivery and the immediate surrender of all dominion and control over the subject of the gift is absolutely necessary in the one class of gifts as in the other. Falling short of such unconditional delivery, a gift is incomplete. If, however, the transfer of such dominion and control is postponed until the death of the donor, or to some other future date, it becomes thereby no more than an unexecuted and unenforceable promise to make a future gift. Hibberd v. Smith, 67 Cal. 547, 4 P. 473, 8 P. 46, 56 Am. Rep. 726; Daniel v. Smith, 64 Cal. 346, 30 P. 575; Zeller v. Jordan, 105 Cal. 143, 38 P. 640; Hart v. Ketchum, 121 Cal. 426, 53 P. 931; Pullen v. Placer County Bank, supra; Beebe v. Coffin, supra; Basket v. Hassell, 107 U. S. 602, 2 S. Ct. 415, 27 L. Ed. 500; Collins v. Maude, supra; Adams v. Merced Stone Co., 176 Cal. 415, 178 P. 498, 3 A. L. R. 928.

In the case of Pullen v. Placer County Bank, above cited, it was said:

> "A gift vests the donee with the absolute property in the thing given, and it is no longer subject to the control of the donor. If, on the other hand, the thing given remains under the control of the donor, or * * * is subject to his revocation, his gift is not complete."

The assignment in question is, in part, as follows:

> "For value received, I do hereby assign, transfer and set over unto Eva Powell, whose post office address is 2703 Dwight Way, Berkeley, California, the above named policy of insurance, and all sum or sums of money, interest, benefit and advantage whatsoever, now due or hereafter to arise, or to be had or made by virtue thereof; to have and to hold unto the said Eva Powell in case she survives me, otherwise this assignment to be void. I hereby reserve the right to cancel this assignment without notice to or consent of the assignee."

[6] Therefore, conceding, but not deciding, that the sending to the home office of both copies of the assignment was a sufficient delivery, nevertheless, measured by the foregoing indisputable standards, the conclusion seems irresistible that the attempted gift from William C. Clark to appellant Eva Powell fell short of completion. It was the intention of the insured, manifested by the assignment, that it was to be effective only in the event that appellant should survive the insured, and then only in the event the insured did not exercise the reserved right of revocation. The assignment was not absolute or irrevocable in any respect; it was, at most, an attempted testamentary disposition of the proceeds of a life insurance policy; and, not being executed with the formalities required by law, is of no binding force, and appellant can predicate no action thereon.

[7] There is no merit in the contention of appellant that the assignment worked only a change of the beneficiary. The policy in question gave to the insured the right to make an assignment and also the right to change the beneficiary. In order to change the beneficiary, it was incumbent upon William C. Clark to do something essentially different from what he did, for the policy provides:

> "The insured will be entitled at any time while this policy is in force and not assigned, upon return of the policy to Newark with the insured's written request for the appropriate indorsement of the policy by the company, to have the beneficiary changed."

Thus it will be seen that the policy itself provides that, in order to have the beneficiary changed, it was necessary first that no assignment be made; that the policy be returned to the home office; that the insured, in writing, request that the beneficiary be changed; and that the appropriate indorsement be made upon the policy showing the change of beneficiary.

[8] When a person places insurance upon his own life, he is the owner of the policy, and, when the policy is made payable to the insured, or to his estate, as is the case with the policy under consideration, it is undoubtedly a contract made by the insured with the insurance company for the benefit of the insured, and, as such, is a chose in action, and is capable of being transferred or assigned. If the insured assigns such a policy, he thereby ceases to be a party to the contract of insurance, and his assignee becomes the owner, and takes the place of the insured in the contract of insurance.

[9] Where the policy of insurance names a third person as beneficiary, the policy is then a contract made for the benefit of a third person, and the third person is called the "beneficiary." The beneficiary is not a party to the contract, and is not the owner thereof, and, where a policy of insurance reserves to the insured the right to change the beneficiary, the interest of a designated beneficiary, prior to the death of the insured, is that of a mere expectancy of an incompleted gift, subject to revocation at the will of the insured. Waring v. Wilcox, supra; Hoeft v. Supreme Lodge, etc., 113 Cal. 91, 45 P. 185, 33 L. R. A. 174; N. Y. Life Insurance Co. v. Daley, 25 Cal. App. 376, 143 P. 1033; Supreme Council, etc., v. Gehrenbeck, 124 Cal. 43, 56 P. 640; N. Y. Life Insurance Co. v. Dunn, 46 Cal. App. 203, 188 P. 1028; McEwen v. N. Y. Life Insurance Co., 23 Cal. App. 694, 139 P. 242; N. Y. Life Insurance Co. v. Bank of Italy, 60 Cal. App. 602, 214 P. 61; Hopkins v. N. W. Life Assurance Co. (C. C. A.) 99 F. 199.

Therefore there is a vast difference between the assignee of the insured and a mere beneficiary in a life insurance policy. The rights of the owner of a policy and those of a beneficiary are essentially different. An examination of the policy here in question clearly shows this to be true. The policy provides that the owner shall have the following rights: (a) To surrender the policy for its cash or surrender value; (b) to surrender the policy for a paid-up policy; (c) to have the policy automatically extended from the date of default of premiums; (d) to borrow upon the policy up to the full surrender value; (e) to have the beneficiary changed; (f) to control the method of payment to the beneficiary; (g) to receive all dividends earned or to use them to apply on the premiums or to purchase additional insurance; (h) to change the policy into an endowment policy.

None of these rights is given to the beneficiary. They are matters with which the beneficiary, for whose benefit the policy may be written, has nothing to do, but all these rights go to the assignee of the policy, because the assignee becomes the owner of the policy and takes the place of the insured therein.

[10] As we have already stated, the policy provided how the beneficiary may be changed, and these requirements of the policy were not waived in this case, for the plaintiff alleged in its complaint in interpleader "that the beneficiary of said policy has never been changed." William C. Clark had no absolute right to change the beneficiary, but was only given such right by the policy itself, and, in order to change the beneficiary, he would have to carry out the provisions of the policy in that regard, which he did not do. McLaughlin v. McLaughlin, 104 Cal. 171, 37 P. 865, 43 Am. St. Rep. 83; Yore v. Booth, 110 Cal. 238, 42 P. 808, 52 Am. St. Rep. 81; Barboza v. Conselho, 43 Cal. App. 775, 185 P. 1028.

Moreover, the pleadings were drawn and the case was tried upon the theory that there was an assignment and not a change of the beneficiary. In the appellant's answer she alleged that she was the owner of the proceeds of the policy by virtue of an assignment, and her proof of death of William C. Clark was made upon the ground that she was an assignee of the proceeds of the policy. Therefore an incomplete assignment could not be used to effect a change of beneficiary, and did not comply with the terms of the policy as to change of beneficiary.

We conclude, therefore, that under circumstances thus shown, the findings of the court against the completeness of the attempted gift may not be disturbed, and that the judgment should be, and it is hereby, affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

1. Husband and wife 🔑14(1), 133(1)—Finding that wife had title to lots conveyed to her alone and half interest in lots conveyed to her and husband held sustained by evidence (Civ. Code, § 164).

In wife's action against husband and others to quiet title, evidence held sufficient to sustain finding that conveyances to wife alone and to husband and wife gave wife title and half interest as tenant in common to respective properties, though consideration was paid by husband, in view of presumption of gift under Civ. Code, § 164.

2. Husband and wife 🔑49½(7) — Husband paying for conveyances to wife alone and to wife with himself was presumed to have made gift of entire property and half interest respectively (Civ. Code, § 164).

Husband who paid for two conveyances, one to wife alone and other to himself and wife, was presumed to have made gift of property in one case and gift of one-half interest in other, under Civ. Code, § 164, providing title to property conveyed to married woman alone is presumed to vest in her as separate property, and that on conveyance to husband and wife presumption is that wife takes party conveyed to her as tenant in common.

3. Husband and wife 🔑49½(8)—Finding that deeds to spouses as joint tenants, paid for by husband, were deeds of gift making spouses joint tenants, held sustained by evidence.

In wife's action against husband to quiet title, finding that deeds conveying land to husband and wife as joint tenants, paid for by husband, constituted deeds of gift making husband and wife joint tenants, held sustained by evidence.

4. Joint tenancy 🔑13—Joint tenant may convey his interest.

Joint tenant has right to convey his title and interest.

5. Husband and wife 🔑14(10)—Wife who was joint tenant with husband became tenant in common with person to whom husband conveyed his interest.

Where husband holding property with wife as joint tenant made conveyance of his interest therein to son, grantor's son and wife held as tenants in common and not as joint tenants, as conveyance by joint tenant destroys joint tenancy making tenancy in common.

6. Husband and wife 🔑217—Wife owning property could have title quieted as against husband without repaying amount of mortgages which husband voluntarily satisfied.

Where by deed of gift wife had acquired complete title, wife could have title quieted against husband without repayment of mortgage debts that husband had paid off after her acquisition of property, in absence of any agreement as to loan or payment of mortgages.

7. Stipulations 🔑14(4)—Power of attorney under which husband closed trust was immaterial in wife's action to quiet title under counsel's agreement that husband could not convey wife's interest thereunder without consideration.

In wife's action against husband and husband's son to quiet title to certain lots, statement of court that power of attorney given by wife to husband, under which husband made conveyance to his son, was immaterial, held not error, where power of attorney was not directly offered in evidence, and where parties agreed that husband could not use power of attorney to convey wife's community interest or separate property without valuable consideration, conveyance thereunder having been made for alleged purpose of closing a trust in which son was beneficiary.

8. Husband and wife 🔑49½(8)—Rejection of husband's testimony as to intention to give property to wife held error in wife's action to quiet title based on deeds of gift.

In wife's action against husband to quiet title based on deeds of gift which husband had made in wife's name, refusal to permit husband to state whether he had any intention to give property to wife held error.

9. Husband and wife 🔑49½(8)—Husband's intention to make gift by having property conveyed to wife should be determined from conduct.

Intention of husband in having property conveyed in wife's name should be determined from acts, declarations, and conduct at time of transaction, as such evidence may be more important than subsequent declarations that he did not intend to make gift.

10. Appeal and error 🔑1056(6)—Rejecting evidence of husband's intent in making deeds of gift to wife held not ground for reversal, where evidence would not have changed finding of gift.

In action by wife against husband to quiet title based on alleged deeds of gift from husband made in her name, error in rejecting evidence as to what husband's intention was at time of transaction held not ground for reversal, where answer to question would not have changed court's finding that deed of gift was intended, in view of declarations and conduct at time of transaction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Elliot Craig, Judge.

Suit by Mary C. Tilden against B. E. Tilden, S. D. Tilden, Julia Kengla, and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and the two defendants first named appeal. Modified, and affirmed as modified.

William S. Corbin and James K. Wilson, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

G. A. McElroy, of Los Angeles, and F. M. Bottorff, of Berkeley, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. Plaintiff is the wife of defendant B. E. Tilden. Defendant S. D. Tilden is a son of B. E. Tilden by a former marriage. Plaintiff brought this action to quiet title to several parcels of real property in Los Angeles county. The several parcels are described in the complaint. The plaintiff alleged that she is the owner of 20 described lots in block 60 of the city of Santa Monica; that she is the owner of the south 155 feet of the east 173 feet of block 1 of Colegrove, in the city of Los Angeles; that she is the owner of lots 6 and 7 in block E of tract 342 in Los Angeles county; that she is the owner of lots 14, 15, and 16 in block D of the Beautiful Home tract in Los Angeles county.

The court by its decree determined that the plaintiff is the owner in fee simple, as her separate property, of the described parcel in block 1 of Colegrove, and also of the described 20 lots in Santa Monica; that the plaintiff, Mary C. Tilden, and the defendant B. E. Tilden are the owners, in the manner and under conditions to be hereinafter stated, of the three described lots in the Beautiful Home tract and lot 6 in block E of tract 342; that the plaintiff, Mary C. Tilden, and the defendant S. D. Tilden, as tenants in common, are the owners (an undivided one-half interest thereof to each) of lot 7 in block E of tract 342. The court further by its decree canceled and declared null and void, in so far as they attempted to convey the interest or estate of Mary C. Tilden in the described lands and premises, certain deeds of conveyance of the properties in controversy, which said deeds purported to be deeds of grant from Mary C. Tilden and B. E. Tilden to S. D. Tilden, and were signed by B. E. Tilden and also by Mary C. Tilden by B. E. Tilden, her attorney in fact.

There are in the record two other defendants, I. N. Minnick (sued as John Doe) and Julia Kengla, whose interests relate to said lot 6 in block E of tract 342. Minnick filed an answer showing a contract of sale of date February 28, 1921, of said lot 6 by B. E. Tilden to Mrs. Kengla and an assignment thereof by Mrs. Kengla to Minnick. Prior to the trial of this action, stipulations were filed relating to said lot 6, and relating to the lots in the Beautiful Home tract, whereby in settlement of certain matters in relation to sales of those lots, it was provided, among other things, that if the plaintiff's claim, relating to the property, should be sustained, then she should recover judgment against the defendants B. E. Tilden and S. D. Tilden in a stated proportion, which in the findings was filed at the sum of $159.51—which amount is included in the judgment.

The defendants B. E. Tilden and S. D. Tilden, by their answer to the complaint, denied ownership by the plaintiff of any interest in the lands described in the complaint, and alleged that the defendant S. D. Tilden is the owner and is entitled to possession of the said land. By a separate defense, these defendants alleged that S. D. Tilden is the owner of the 20 lots in Santa Monica under and by virtue of a deed dated March 16, 1921 (recorded March 22, 1921), executed by Mary C. Tilden, by her attorney in fact, B. E. Tilden, and B. E. Tilden; that S. D. Tilden is the owner of the parcel in block 1 of Colegrove by virtue of a deed in like form and of same date as the other deed last above mentioned; that S. D. Tilden is the owner of the lots 6 and 7 in block E of tract 342, and the lots 14, 15, and 16 in block D of the Beautiful Home tract by virtue of another similar deed from the same grantors; that said several pieces of land had been bought by B. E. Tilden for and with money of S. D. Tilden during his minority and put in name of Mary C. Tilden temporarily until S. D. Tilden became of age; that the general power of attorney from Mary C. Tilden to B. E. Tilden, of date January 3, 1914, "was made before we knew what property would be purchased, therefore no property could be described except one lot 6 in block E, which was joint tenancy. Also deed of March 4, 1914, lots 14, 15, and 16 in block D, Beautiful Home tract were joint tenants."

The answer set forth by copy the said power of attorney, and alleged that the same was in full force and effect at the time of the execution of said deeds to S. D. Tilden; and that the said deeds were executed pursuant to the agreement between the plaintiff, Mary C. Tilden, and defendant B. E. Tilden recited in said power of attorney. But there is not in said power of attorney any recital of agreement, other than the grant of power and authority to execute conveyances, etc., and to deal in real or personal property of the said Mary C. Tilden. It was further alleged that said power of attorney (dated and acknowledged on January 3, 1914), was recorded in the office of the county recorder of Los Angeles county on March 15, 1921.

The plaintiff and the defendant B. E. Tilden were married in the year 1912. Down to the time of the trial of this action in April, 1923, they continued to be husband and wife, and so far as the record shows they still are husband and wife. The several properties described in the complaint were acquired, as shown by the several deeds, as follows: Plaintiff's Exhibit 1, dated February 18, 1914, conveyed the lots in Beautiful Home tract to B. E. Tilden and Mary E. Tilden "as joint tenants, and not as tenants in common, and to the survivor of them." Plaintiff's Exhibit 2, dated December 9, 1915, conveyed the parcel in block 1 of Colegrove "to M. C. Tilden, a married woman." Plaintiff's Exhibit 3, dated March 22, 1913, conveyed lot 6 of block E in tract 342 to B. E. Tilden and Mary C. Tilden, "husband and wife, as joint tenants, and not as tenants in common, with the right of survivorship." Plaintiff's Exhibit 4, dated May 10, 1915, conveyed the 20 lots in Santa Monica "to M. C. Tilden, a married woman." Plaintiff's Exhibit 5, dated February 9, 1915, conveyed lot 7 of block E, tract 342, "to Burt E. Tilden and Mary C. Tilden, his wife." The evidence shows, and it is a fact without dispute, that the consideration for these several conveyances was paid by the defendant B. E. Tilden out of funds which were his separate property, unless, as the defendants Tilden contended at the trial, said funds in fact belonged to S. D. Tilden and were only held in trust for him by B. E. Tilden. The court found, however, that this alleged trust did not exist, and appellants do not now attack, or at least have not very definitely contended against, the validity of this finding. We assume, therefore, that there was no such trust.

[1, 2] The first point of appellants is that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the finding that B. E. Tilden gave to the plaintiff the Santa Monica lots, the Colegrove lot, or a one-half interest as tenant in common in the lot 7 in block E of tract 342. It is conceded that without evidence other than the deeds, a presumption of gift of these properties by the husband to the wife would exist under section 164 of the Civil Code. That section, as it existed at the time when the several properties were acquired as above stated, in part read as follows:

> "All other property acquired after marriage by either husband or wife, or both, is community property; but whenever any property is conveyed to a married woman by an instrument in writing, the presumption is that the title is thereby vested in her as her separate property. And in case the conveyance be to such married woman and to her husband, or to her and any other person, the presumption is that the married woman takes the part conveyed to her, as tenant in common, unless a different intention is expressed in the instrument, and the presumption in this section mentioned is conclusive in favor of a purchaser or incumbrancer in good faith and for a valuable consideration. * * *"

It is further conceded to be true, not only that Mrs. Tilden paid nothing for these conveyances made to her, but also that S. D. Tilden paid nothing for any of the conveyances made to him other than that, as has been mentioned, he insisted at the trial that he received them as beneficiary of a trust.

The argument of counsel for appellants, in advancing their claim that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the finding referred to in the preceding paragraph, lays much stress upon "the probabilities as to the truth" of the testimony of Mrs. Tilden, and upon sundry matters which, while they were important in the trial court where the conflicting evidence had to be weighed and considered, are not very helpful to the consideration of an appeal. In addition to the presumption of gift to which we have referred, there was evidence tending to prove that the deeds to Mrs. Tilden were deeds of gift. Mrs. Tilden testified that at about the time when the Santa Monica lots were conveyed to her, Mr. Tilden said to her that he carried comparatively no life insurance and "that he was giving me this property to protect me in case of his sudden death and against the vindictive nature of Mrs. Tilden and Sam." The Mrs. Tilden mentioned in that statement was the mother of defendant S. D. Tilden. Plaintiff also testified that in earlier conversations her husband had stated that he would give her things from time to time for the same purpose of protection to her; that in December, 1915, and at other times, he made practically the same statements to her; that her husband, as well as herself, frequently referred to the Santa Monica and Colegrove properties as her property. Prior to the commencement of this action there was pending in a court at Chicago, Ill., a separate maintenance suit by the plaintiff, Mary C. Tilden, against said defendant B. E. Tilden. It was proved here that in an affidavit filed in that action, said defendant declared that from time to time he had purchased and caused to be conveyed to her various parcels of real property therein mentioned and described, which included the 20 lots in Santa Monica. Notwithstanding the fact that much of the testimony presented by the plaintiff was contradicted by other evidence introduced by the defendants, the attack upon the finding in question must fail, because the finding is sustained by sufficient evidence.

[3] The second point of appellants is that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the finding that B. E. Tilden gave to the plaintiff any interest in lot 6 in block E of tract 342, or the lots in the Beautiful Home tract. These are the parcels which were conveyed to the plaintiff and defendant B. E. Tilden as joint tenants. Based upon this finding and the additional fact that B. E. Tilden had conveyed to the defendant S. D. Tilden his interest in said premises, the court decreed that the plaintiff, Mary C. Tilden, and the defendant B. E. Tilden, as joint tenants with the right of survivorship, and not as tenants in common, are the owners of said parcels of land, "and that the defendant S. D. Tilden has no right, title or interest in and to said premises, except such right, title or interest of the said B. E. Tilden as was heretofore conveyed to the said S. D. Tilden by the said B. E. Tilden, to wit: The joint tenancy interest of said B. E. Tilden, and that the defendant I. N. Minnick has no estate or interest whatever in and to the interest of the plaintiff in said lands or premises, except such rights in and to the above-described lot 6 in block E, tract 342, as may have been created by reason of the stipulation now on file in the above-entitled action, and that the defendants B. E. Tilden, S. D. Tilden and I. N. Minnick, each and every one of them, be and they hereby are debarred and forever enjoined from asserting any claim whatever in or to the lands or premises adverse to the aforesaid interest of the plaintiff therein." The said stipulation is attached to and made part of the findings. It contains provisions under which presumably the interests of Minnick are protected, by conveyance of the lot, made or to be made to him by all of the Tildens, and by substitution of the purchase money paid by him, so that said purchase money will be applied in accordance with the stipulation. Minnick is not appealing from the judgment. In view of the evidence hereinbefore mentioned, we are satisfied that the deeds conveying the lots in the Beautiful Home tract and the lot 6 in block E of tract 342 were deeds of gift whereby the plaintiff and the defendant B. E. Tilden became the owners as joint tenants of those lands.

[4, 5] Appellants' third point relates to the lands last above mentioned, and error is assigned in that the court attempted to preserve for the plaintiff an interest in these lots in joint tenancy with the right of survivorship, after the conveyance by B. E. Tilden of his interest therein to his son. In this respect we think that the decree is erroneous. As joint tenant of the property, B. E. Tilden had a right to convey his own title and interest therein to his son. The effect of such conveyance was such that thereafter the property belonged to Mary C. Tilden and S. D. Tilden as tenants in common. Hilborn v. Soale, 44 Cal. App. 115, 185 P. 982; Green v. Skinner, 185 Cal. 435, 197 P. 60. The stipulations to which we have referred contemplated that sales of all of this joint tenancy property should be completed, and the proceeds in money should be divided in accordance with the agreements of the parties. But as the record does not show a completion of those transactions, it will be necessary to direct a modification of the judgment.

Appellants' fourth point covers certain details of the same matters of evidence referred to under the first point, and does not require extended notice. We are satisfied that the evidence as a whole was sufficient to establish an executed gift to the plaintiff, regardless of the fact that certain items of evidence discussed by appellant might not alone be sufficient for that purpose.

[6] The fifth point is in effect that because certain items of the property given were subject to mortgages existing when the properties were acquired, and because thereafter the mortgage debts were paid by B. E. Tilden, that, therefore, the court erred in its decree herein by failing to require that the plaintiff repay to B. E. Tilden the amounts of said incumbrances, as a condition to granting her any relief as to those lots. One of the mortgages covered the Santa Monica lots, and the other the lot in block 1 of Colegrove, both of which, according to the decree, were given in entirety to the plaintiff. On this point the case is no different than it would be if the husband as owner had by his own deed conveyed the property directly to his wife at a time when it was incumbered by mortgage and had afterwards removed the incumbrances. By the deed of gift the wife had acquired complete title. There is no evidence or claim of a loan to her by B. E. Tilden, or that in paying the mortgage debts he was acting pursuant to any agreement with his wife. Under these conditions, if he voluntarily caused the mortgages to be satisfied, we are not aware of any reason or authority under which she could be required to repay the money to him as a condition to the granting of a decree establishing her title as against his subsequent adverse claim, or that of any person claiming under him. The authorities cited by appellant do not appear to sustain any such proposition.

The next three points of appellant relate to alleged errors of the court in rulings excluding offered evidence: (a) Error in excluding power of attorney; (b) error in excluding evidence of intention of B. E. Tilden in relation to conveyances to his wife; (c) error in exclusion of evidence as to sale of lot 3, in block D of Beautiful Home tract, which lot was not involved in this action, but was conveyed to B. E. Tilden and Mary C. Tilden in the same deed by which they acquired lots 14, 15, and 16 in that block.

[7] It seems to be conceded that the power of attorney was not directly offered in evidence, but appellant claims to have been deterred from making such offer by a statement in which the court declared that the document was immaterial in the case. The judge said that he made this statement in view of the stipulation of the parties that the purpose of the deed transferring property to S. D. Tilden was the closing or purported closing of a trust in which the son was beneficiary. It further appeared in the course of the discussion that the court and counsel for defendants were in agreement that a husband cannot by use of power of attorney convey community property or the wife's separate property without a valuable consideration. On the record thus made, we are satisfied that the court committed no error in relation to said power of attorney.

[8-10] The alleged error in excluding evidence of intent relates to a question asked of B. E. Tilden as a witness, inquiring whether at the time when the lot 6, in block E of tract 342 was placed in the name of B. E. Tilden and Mary C. Tilden, he had any intention to give it to his wife, and two further questions inquiring whether at any time he gave or intended to give any of this property to his wife. The witness was permitted to state that he did not tell his wife that he was going to give or had given the property to her. We are of the opinion that the rejected evidence was admissible, and that its exclusion was erroneous. Such seems to have been the opinion of the Supreme Court as expressed in Gilmour v. North Pasadena Land, etc., Co., 178 Cal. 6, at page 9, 171 P. 1066. See, also, Potter v. Smith, 48 Cal. App. 162, 169, 191 P. 1023. It also appears, however, that the question of the alleged donor's intention should be determined from his acts, declarations, and conduct at the time of the transaction; and such evidence easily may be more important and convincing than his subsequent declaration that he did not intend to make such gift. In view of all of the evidence produced in this case, we are satisfied that even if these questions had been answered, and B. E. Tilden had testified that he did not intend to make these gifts to his wife, such testimony would not have changed the findings which were made by the court. For it was manifest throughout the trial that he was contending that he had never intended to make such gift or gifts.

Upon the alleged error in relation to the exclusion of evidence as to the sale of said lot 3, we think the reply is sufficient that B. E. Tilden was permitted to testify that said lot 3 was exchanged for Chicago property, which was acquired in joint tenancy.

[11] Finally, appellants contend that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the finding that on the execution and delivery of the deeds to plaintiff, she went into possession of the Santa Monica and Colegrove properties. But it appears that Mrs. Tilden did testify that she had possession of that property after it was deeded to her and continued in possession thereof; that the property was rented and that she had been receiving the rentals thereof. It may be true that, as testified by B. E. Tilden, her collection of the rents did not begin until after these controversies arose, and it may be that for a time Mr. Tilden attended to the renting of the property and the collections of rent. This, however, is consistent with the theory of agency on his part quite as much as with the theory that he was acting in his own behalf. We think the evidence is sufficient to sustain the finding—if any finding of fact on that evidentiary matter was necessary.

It is ordered that the judgment be modified in that part thereof relating to lots 14, 15, and 16, in block E of the Beautiful Home tract, and lot 6 in block E of tract 342, by striking out the words, "the plaintiff, Mary C. Tilden, and the defendant B. E. Tilden, as joint tenants with the right of survivorship and not as tenants in common," and substituting therefor the words, "the plaintiff, Mary C. Tilden, and the defendant S. D. Tilden as tenants in common."

As thus modified, the judgment is affirmed.

1. Brokers 🔑86(5)—Evidence held to make prima facie showing that proposed purchasers were ready, able, and willing to complete transaction.

In real estate brokers' action for commissions on sale of real and personal property, evidence held to make prima facie showing that proposed purchasers were ready, able, and willing to complete transaction.

2. Brokers 🔑84(2)—In real estate brokers' action for commissions, defendant had burden of overcoming prima facie showing that proposed purchasers were ready, able, and willing to complete transaction.

In real estate brokers' action for commissions, defendant, on plaintiffs making prima facie showing that proposed purchasers were ready, able, and willing to complete transaction, had burden to overcome such showing, either by cross-examination or affirmative proof.

3. Brokers 🔑54—In action for commissions, proposed purchaser's actual present ability to carry out contract in advance of execution of formal contract need not be shown.

In real estate brokers' action for commissions, it need not be shown that would-be purchaser have purchase price on hand in money or that he had consummated a loan on his available properties or securities in anticipation of the execution of a formal contract of purchase as would enable him to comply with its terms in advance of its execution.

4. Pleading 🔑252(2)—Original complaint is superseded and nullified by amended complaint.

An amended complaint supersedes and wholly nullifies the original complaint.

5. Appeal and error 🔑667—Judgment roll containing defective amended complaint may not be impeached by showing that essential averments were unintentionally omitted.

Judgment roll, containing an amended complaint lacking in essential averments, cannot be impeached by showing that omission of such averments which were in fact included in original complaint was unintentional and inadvertent.

6. Pleading 🔑253—Plea to original complaint will be treated as plea to amended complaint if applicable and responsive thereto.

A plea to an original complaint will be treated as a plea to an amended complaint, if applicable and responsive thereto; otherwise it will be treated as a nullity.

7. Pleading 🔑403(3)—In broker's action for commissions, inadvertent omissions of essential averments in amended complaint held cured by answer.

In real estate brokers' action for commissions, where amended complaint contained in judgment roll on appeal was lacking in essential averment that plaintiffs had produced a purchaser ready, able, and willing to purchase, which averment had been made in original complaint, but inadvertently omitted from amended complaint, held answer expressly denying that plaintiffs had procured party willing, able, and ready to purchase on terms specified cured defect in amended complaint.

8. Trial 🔑82—Objection to evidence on ground of insufficiency of complaint to raise issue should be specific, where complaint contains allegation from which essential fact is necessarily to be implied.

Where complaint does not fully set forth matters essential to a statement of the cause of action intended, but contains an allegation from which the essential fact is necessarily to be implied, an objection to evidence on the ground that complaint is insufficient to raise issue should be specific.

9. Judgment 🔑18(3) — Judgment in action, tried on issues tendered by answer to original complaint, held effective, though amended complaint inadvertently lacked essential averments.

Where action for brokers' commissions was indisputably tried on issues tendered by answer to original complaint containing all essential averments, judgment was not affected by a fatal infirmity, though amended complaint, filed after proof, inadvertently omitted essential averments.

10. Brokers 🔑86(1)—Evidence held to sustain findings for plaintiffs in real estate brokers' action for commissions.

In real estate brokers' action for commissions on real and personal property, evidence held sufficient to sustain findings for plaintiffs.

11. Appeal and error 🔑1002, 1011(1)—Decision on facts by jury or trial court on conflicting evidence is conclusive on courts of review.

Where evidence addressed pro and con to the issue or issues is contradictory, a decision of the jury or trial court on the facts is conclusive and binding upon courts of review.

12. Brokers 🔑63(2)—Property owner refusing to sell cannot, in brokers' action for commissions, set up any defense except inability of proposed purchaser to purchase, unless it was one of terms of brokers' contract.

Where owner of property refuses to sell to purchaser procured by broker on any ground other than the inability of the proposed purchaser to purchase, the owner cannot, in an action against him by broker for compensation, successfully set up such ground as a defense, unless it was included in agreement between owner and broker as one of terms or conditions which must be met or complied with before broker had earned or was entitled to compensation.

13. Brokers 🔑61(3) — Refusal of property owner's wife to join in sale does not impair brokers' right to commissions.

That property owner's wife refused to join him in transfer of properties to proposed purchaser does not in the least affect or impair brokers' right to compensation promised them for securing purchaser.

14. Brokers 🔑49(3) — Proposed purchaser's offer held unconditional, though execution of contract of sale was conditioned on owner's furnishing certificate of title.

Offer to purchase property held unconditional as affecting brokers' right to commission, though proposed purchasers demanded, as a condition to the execution of the contract of sale, that purchaser furnish them a certificate of his title.

15. Brokers 🔑49(3)—Offer to purchase with $34,000 down payment, accompanied by $1,000 payment to broker, held compliance with terms of listing contract requiring down payment of $35,000.

Where owner's terms to brokers required down payment of $35,000, held an offer to purchase on a down payment of $34,000, accompanied by payment to broker of $1,000 as a guaranty of good faith, was compliance with terms of listing agreement as affecting brokers' right to commission.

RICHARDS, J. [1] The petition for a hearing herein, after decision by the District Court of Appeal in and for the Third Appellate District, was granted chiefly for the reason that the opinion of Mr. Justice Hart therein did not refer to or sufficiently distinguish the decision of this court in the case of Merzoian v. Kludjian, 183 Cal. 422, 191 P. 673, from the case at bar. We are of the opinion that both as to the facts and the principles of law involved the cases are easily distinguishable. In the case of Merzoian v. Kludjian, supra, it affirmatively appeared that the purchaser, who had been procured by the broker as one ready, able, and willing to purchase the property in question, had neither the money, nor the property, nor the credit, which would suffice to enable him unaided to complete said purchase according to the terms of his contract. In the case at bar a quite different situation is presented. The proffered purchasers were two brothers, named Fred W. and H. W. Moore, both of whom had made a written offer to purchase the Ramm properties, by the terms of which they were to make and did make a deposit of $1,000 at the time of such offer and were to pay "$34,000 additional when you shall furnish certificate or abstract of title from which it shall appear that you can convey good title; * * * it being understood that at the time of such payment of $34,000 formal contract of sale is to be executed." The foregoing offer was verbally accepted by the seller; it being understood that a more formal contract was thereafter to be executed. Fred W. Moore was called and examined as a witness for plaintiff with respect to the readiness, ability, and willingness of himself and his brother to complete their proposed purchase of said properties. He testified that he had resided for several years at Dinuba, where the Ramm properties were situated, and was familiar with said properties, and was also on sufficiently familiar terms of acquaintance with the owner thereof to call him "Charlie," from which fact it might well be inferred that the owner was equally familiar with the properties and financial standing of his neighbors, the proposed purchasers, and for that reason did not urge their inability to complete the transaction as his ground for repudiating the same. The witness testified that he and his brother had made an offer in writing to purchase said properties; that they were buying the same together; that they were ready, able, and willing to purchase said properties, and were able to raise the $35,000 in cash required for the first payment thereon; that they had considerable property at Dinuba, and also had considerable of the money in bank; that the witness himself had over $15,000 in bank, and that, while he did not know how much his brother had he knew they were able to take care of the deal; that he had several personal interviews with the seller, going over the properties and checking up on the personal property which was to go to with the land, as a result of which a formal contract of purchase was drawn, which provided that at the time of the execution and of the production of a sufficient abstract or certificate of title the said installment upon the total purchase price was to be paid; that such formal contract when so drawn was submitted to the seller and was read by him; but that the latter refused to execute the same or to go further with the transaction, giving as his sole ground therefor that his wife would not sign the papers; that both the witness and the agent pursued the seller for several days thereafter in an effort to persuade him to go on with the transaction; and that his sole objection to doing so was that his wife would not sign the papers.

[2, 3] We are of the opinion that the plaintiff by the foregoing evidence sufficiently made a prima facie showing that the proposed purchasers of the properties in question were ready, able, and willing to complete the transaction had the seller not repudiated the same. We are also of the opinion that the plaintiff, having made this prima facie showing, the burden was cast upon the defendant to overcome the same, either by developing upon cross-examination that the purchasers' money and property in possession, admittedly considerable, was insufficient to enable them to command adequate credit to complete the negotiations; or by making affirmative proof to the same effect in defense of the plaintiff's asserted cause of action. The defendant, Ramm, who was living and present at the time of the trial, did neither of these. Upon cross-examination of the purchaser, counsel for defendant made no inquiry into the extent of his properties or those of his brother beyond the inquiry as to the amount of the money of each in bank, and offered no evidence upon that subject in aid of his defense. The plaintiff's prima facie showing was not therefore broken down; and, this being so, it furnished a sufficient basis for the finding of the trial court in the plaintiff's favor upon that issue. As to the principles of law laid down in Merzoian v. Kludjian, supra, it may be conceded that these were correct as applicable to the facts of that case, but the rule therein declared, which would require a would-be purchaser of property to make a showing, either that he had the purchase price on hand in the form of money or that he had consummated such a loan upon his available properties or securities in anticipation of the preparation and execution of the formal contract of purchase as would enable him to comply with its terms in advance of its execution, would be to lay down too drastic a rule governing business transactions of the kind presented in the instant case. With respect to the other features of this case, treated in the decision of the District Court of Appeal, we are satisfied with the disposal of the same as embraced in the opinion of Mr. Justice Hart, and we accordingly adopt the same. Said opinion reads as follows:

"Subsequent to the trial of this case the defendant, Charles H. Ramm, passed away and his widow, Pearl E. Ramm, was duly appointed administratrix of his estate.

"The plaintiffs, duly licensed real estate brokers and engaged in the town of Dinuba, Tulare county, in the business of selling and buying and also negotiating the sale and purchase of real estate for and in behalf of other parties, brought this action to recover from defendant's intestate the sum of $3,250, which the complaint alleges constituted the sum total of commissions earned by plaintiffs for procuring purchasers of a certain tract of land of 60 acres and certain personal property belonging to defendant. The complaint alleges that, on or about the 5th day of February, 1920, at said town of Dinuba, the defendant, by an instrument in writing, appointed plaintiffs to sell said land and personal property for the total sum of $120,000. The memorandum of agreement is by the complaint expressly made a part thereof. It reads as follows:

" 'Dinuba, Calif. Jan. 5, 1920.

" 'I hereby appoint Russell & Newton my agents, with exclusive right to sell the property described on the reverse side of this sheet, for the sum of $120,000 one hundred twenty thousand dollars to be paid as follows, to wit: Cash on 40 ac $20,000 on 20 ac 15,000.00, payments of terms on 40 ac $2,500.00 each year & on 20 ac $1,000. each yr until paid with privilege of paying more at any time or any less amount hereafter authorized by me and to receive deposit on same.

" 'I agree to furnish deed and abstract, or certificate of title showing clear title in me to date, and should Russell & Newton sell such property, or be instrumental in selling the same, I agree to pay them 5 per cent. commission on the above named selling price $10,000 and bal 2½ per cent. commission of the consideration for which said property is sold over and above the purchase price above specified. This authorization is to remain in full force and effect 5 days and thereafter until revoked by me in writing.

" 'Russell & Newton shall be entitled to commission, as above set out, on any sale made to parties to whom they may have shown or exhibited this land during the term of this agreement, even though said sale is not consummated until after the term hereof, and I agree to pay such commission in such event.

" 'Name: Chas. H. Ramm.'

"On the reverse side of said writing are the following notations:

" 'Name: Charles Ramm
" '60 acres $120,000
" 'Located one mile from Dinuba [Description of personal property omitted.]'

"The complaint, construing said writing, alleges that Ramm agreed to pay them for procuring a purchaser of said properties 5 per cent. upon $10,000.00 of the purchase price and 2½ per cent. on the balance thereof. The complaint proceeds:

" 'V. That within 5 days from the making and signing of said memorandum by said defendant, these plaintiffs procured purchasers for said land, to wit: Fred W. Moore and H. H. Moore, who were and are ready, able, and willing to perform said contract to be sold to said purchasers according to the terms set forth in said memorandum of agreement, and said purchasers then and there offered to purchase said land for said price of $120,000, according to said terms; that these plaintiffs and said purchasers demanded of defendant that he sell said land to said persons according to the terms of said agreement, and then and there offered to do and perform said agreement in every particular according to the terms thereof.

" 'VI. That said defendant then and there refused to sell said lands to said persons according to the terms of said agreement, or at all, and ever since said date has failed and refused, and now fails and refuses to sell said land upon any terms, or to carry out or perform said agreement.

" 'VII. That, by reason of said premises, said plaintiffs have earned as their commissions in procuring said purchasers for said land the sum of $3,250, and defendant has become, and is indebted to these plaintiffs in said sum of $3,250, and that plaintiffs have demanded of said defendant that he pay to them said sum, but to pay the same or any part thereof, defendant has failed and refuses, and still fails and refuses.'

"The answer admits paragraph 1 of the complaint alleging that plaintiffs are duly authorized real estate brokers and dealers in real estate, admits paragraph 2, alleging the appointment of plaintiffs by defendant as his agents to negotiate the sale of the properties referred to in the memorandum of agreement, and also admits the allegations of paragraph 4, explaining the terms of the authorization to sell, but specifically denies paragraphs 5, 6, and 7 hereinabove presented.

"The cause was tried by the court sitting without a jury. The findings are general and are to the effect that all of the allegations of each and all of the paragraphs of the complaint are true, and that 'each and all of the allegations and denials' of paragraphs 1, 2, 5, 6, and 7 of the answer are untrue. Accordingly, the plaintiffs were awarded judgment in the sum of $3,250, with interest, etc., and from said judgment the defendants appeal upon a record prepared in accordance with the provisions of section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

"The point first pressed is that an amended complaint, which is in the record, utterly fails to state a cause of action for the relief sought, because it contains no averment that the plaintiffs procured a purchaser of the properties, referred to in the memorandum of agreement and described in said amended complaint, ready, willing, and able to purchase the same. The consideration and the disposition of this point will require an explanation of the circumstances under which the so-called amended complaint found its way into the case.

"It will be observed that neither in the memorandum agreement nor in the complaint is there a specific description of the real property which it was claimed by plaintiffs that defendant had authorized them to sell. On the close of their case (that is, after they had completed the introduction of all the testimony they intended to present in their original case) the plaintiffs rested, and the defendant did likewise (that is, he then announced that he had no testimony to offer as in rebuttal of the case made by the plaintiffs). Thereupon one of the attorneys representing the plaintiffs stated to the court that, in view of certain facts which had been developed by the evidence introduced in support of the complaint, he desired to move the court for leave to file an amendment to the complaint so that the pleading of plaintiffs would conform to the proof as made, referring particularly to the evidence disclosing a description by metes and bounds of the real property referred to in the memorandum agreement, and at the same time submitted or read to the court a draft of the proposed amendment, and addressed the court relative thereto as follows: 'If the court please, before the matter of argument, in view of certain testimony that has been introduced, we will ask at this time for leave to amend the complaint in this particular: Immediately after paragraph 3 we would ask to amend by adding this paragraph, we will call it 3½.' The proposed amendment contained a specific description of said real property by metes and bounds and the averment that defendant was, at and prior to the execution of the agreement upon which this action is predicated, the owner of said property. Counsel for defendant promptly objected to the allowance of the amendment on certain grounds; one of the grounds being that defendant had not been served with notice of the application for leave to file the proposed amendment, notice being necessary, since, as the argument proceeded, 'there is nothing here that the defendant is the owner of or ever was the owner of any of this land, and we will have to deny these allegations if the amendment is allowed, and try the case over again.' To which counsel for plaintiffs replied by offering to 'stipulate that they (the allegations of the proposed amendment) be deemed denied,' but counsel for defendant refused to yield assent to that proposition. Thereupon the court stated: 'Well, I think the court, in any event, will reserve the ruling upon this application until we have more time to consider it. I recollect nothing you put in evidence about sandy soil. I recollect nothing in evidence about sandy soil'—the proposed amendment having described the soil of the real property concerned herein as being 'sandy.'

"The case was thereupon 'submitted on briefs to be filed in 10, 10, and 5 days.' The reporter's transcript or record contains nothing further in relation to the application to amend the complaint as indicated. In other words, there is nothing in said transcript or record indicating that the court ruled on the application, either allowing or disallowing it. The judgment roll, however, embodies, among the other papers constituting the same, not an amendment to the complaint but what purports to be an amended complaint. After stating that it has been filed by leave of the court first had and obtained, 'for the purpose of making said complaint conform to the proofs,' it reavers paragraphs 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the complaint, omits paragraph 5 of said original pleading, and numbers as paragraph 5 the averments as to the description and ownership by defendant of the real property as they were substantially proposed as an amendment to the complaint, to be numbered 'paragraph 3½,' as hereinabove indicated. The said paragraph 5 is followed by paragraphs 6 and 7, containing the precise allegations of the paragraphs likewise numbered in the original complaint. The amended pleading was not signed by either of the attorneys for the plaintiffs nor either of the latter, but was verified by the plaintiff Russell on the 27th day of October and filed on the following day, which was 10 days after the day (October 18th) on which the trial of the cause was commenced and completed.

[4] "Upon the record as it is thus presented, the defendant, notwithstanding that the reporter's transcript does not directly or expressly show that the court granted the application to file the amended, or amendment to the complaint, invokes the presumption, upon the clerk's certificate of the judgment roll, of which the purported amended complaint is made a part, that said amended pleading was filed by leave of the court, and further invokes the rule that the amended complaint supersedes and wholly nullifies the original complaint. Wade, 69 Cal. 133, 138, 10 P. 369; Schneider v. Brown, 85 Cal. 205, 206, 24 P. 715; Collins v. Scott, 100 Cal. 446, 34 P. 1085; Ralphs v. Hensler, 114 Cal. 196, 45 P. 1062; Whitehead v. Sweet, 126 Cal. 67, 58 P. 376; Schlake v. MacConnell, 69 Cal. App. 207, 230 P. 974.

[5] "The situation here, upon its face, is rather unique. It is difficult to work out any sound reason for the filing of the amended complaint a number of days after the trial had been completed, or, for that matter, for filing it at all, upon any other theory than that said pleading was intended merely to function as an amendment to the original complaint to the extent only of making the complaint conform to the evidence disclosing the exact description of the real property referred to in the memorandum of agreement. We think it probable that such was the sole purpose of the amended pleading, since it is not conceivable that counsel for the plaintiffs would file an amended complaint pretermitting allegations contained in the original complaint which, it may be assumed not only from their recognized learning in the law but from the fact that they did insert such allegations of fact in their original pleading, counsel well knew were absolutely necessary to the statement of a cause of action for the relief herein sought. Indeed, we do know, from the proceedings relative to the matter occurring on the close of the taking of testimony, that, in point of fact, the purpose of the plaintiffs was merely to add to the complaint as originally filed another paragraph (to be numbered 3½, as was then suggested) whereby an accurate description of the real property involved therein as it was revealed by the evidence would be set forth in that pleading. We have no doubt that the omission of paragraph 5 of the original complaint from the amended complaint was unintentional and an inadvertence. These considerations, however, cannot affect or successfully be set up, so far as this court is concerned, in impeachment of the judgment roll as it was certified by the clerk, or, in other words, as against the presumption that the amended complaint, as it itself declares, was filed by and upon the permission of the trial court previously granted, nor can they interrupt the operation of the rule that said amended pleading supersedes and thus has forced from the judgment roll the original complaint. But, with these propositions in mind, we are still of the opinion that the essential issues of fact in an action of this character were, nevertheless, herein sufficiently presented and, as so presented, were tried and adjudicated. We have the right to presume that a copy of the amended complaint was duly served on the defendant. At all events, we have it from the record of the proceedings of the trial that the defendant knew that there was a motion made at the close of the plaintiff's case for leave to amend the complaint, and that, so far as the record shows to the contrary, was still pending and undisposed of at the time the cause was ordered to be submitted upon briefs to be subsequently filed by the respective counsel. Notwithstanding all this, no demurrer or answer to the amended complaint was filed. The answer to the original complaint, however, is included within the judgment roll here, and we may assume, if not presume, that defendant was content to let the original answer stand as the answer to the amended complaint.

[6] "The rule, as generally approved by the authorities, is that 'a plea to the original declaration will be treated as a plea to an amended declaration, if applicable and responsive thereto.' Of course, if the answer or plea be not responsive to the complaint or declaration, then it will be treated as a nullity. See 31 Cyc. pp. 460, 461, and cases cited in the footnotes. That the answer is responsive to the amended complaint here, there can be no doubt. As pointed out above, the amended complaint contains all the allegations of the original complaint, save and except that expressly and directly asserting that plaintiffs procured purchasers of the properties who were ready, willing, and able to purchase the same. Its allegations may then thus be summarized: That defendant, in a writing subscribed by him, authorized the plaintiffs to negotiate the sale of the properties on certain terms and conditions and for a specified compensation to plaintiffs; that the real property (specifically described) was that referred to in the memorandum of agreement, and 'that said 60 acres was the real property intended by the parties to said agreement as the property for which the said plaintiffs were to obtain a purchaser as mentioned in said written agreement.' Then follows paragraph 6, declaring, 'that said defendants then and there refused to sell said lands to said persons according to the terms of said agreement,' etc. This allegation in paragraph 6 is, of course, entirely too vague and uncertain to justify the declaration that it properly states the fact which it was necessary to allege to state a cause of action, viz.: That the plaintiffs, within the time specified in the agreement, procured a proposed purchaser or proposed purchasers of the properties ready, willing, and able to purchase the same 'according to the terms of said agreement,' but the allegation does sufficiently imply that they had procured such purchasers to justify the conclusion that the answer to the original complaint is, in that vital particular, as manifestly it is in the other essential particulars, 'responsive to the amended complaint.'

[7, 8] "Treating, therefore, said answer as an answer to the amended complaint, we have this situation, viz.: That defendant admits the execution of the written agreement and that thereby he authorized plaintiffs to negotiate the sale of the properties, within the time named, upon the specified terms and conditions, but expressly denies that plaintiffs procured, at the time and upon the terms and conditions specified in the agreement, a party willing, able, and ready to purchase the properties. Thus the answer came to the aid of the amended complaint and cured its defective allegation as to the procurement by plaintiffs, within the time and upon the terms and conditions set forth in the agreement, of purchasers of the properties ready, willing, and able to purchase the same upon said terms and conditions. Slaughter, Adm'x, etc., v. Goldberg, Bowen & Co. et al., 26 Cal. App. 318, 324, 325, 147 P. 90. Moreover (still regarding the amended complaint and the answer to the original as the only pleadings in the case), the action was tried upon the theory that the issue as to the procurement of the purchasers of the properties by plaintiffs within the specified time and upon the stipulated terms and conditions was squarely presented and tendered by the pleadings. The evidence addressed to the proof of that fact was offered and received without objection. It is true, that, on a few occasions, objections were interposed by defendant to testimony offered by plaintiffs to support the allegation of the complaint that such purchaser or purchasers were so procured, but the objections were not specific but upon the general grounds that the testimony was 'irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent.' Where, as is true of the amended complaint here, a complaint attempts to set forth matters essential to the statement of a cause of action but does not fully measure up to that indispensable requirement, and yet contains an allegation from which an essential fact is necessarily to be implied, the objection to evidence upon the ground that such issue has not been raised in the complaint should be specific (Boyle v. Coast Imp. Co., 27 Cal. App. 714, 720, 151 P. 25), or, in other words, such objection in such case should be as specific as an objection to a complaint by demurrer upon the ground of uncertainty or ambiguity, etc.

[9] "But another answer to the contention that the judgment is affected by a fatal infirmity in that it is without the support of a complaint which states a cause of action, for the reason that the amended complaint, which supplanted the original, does not contain the essential allegation of the procurement of a purchaser, etc., lies in the indisputable fact that the action, as the court in its findings expressly declared, was tried upon the issues tendered by the answer to the original complaint, and, as seen, one of the issues so directly tendered involved the question whether the plaintiffs, within the time specified, procured a purchaser or purchasers willing, ready, and able to purchase the properties upon the terms and conditions upon which plaintiffs were authorized to negotiate the sale of the same. Thus it is perfectly clear, from whatever viewpoint the situation as to the pleadings and the trial may, with legal propriety, be considered, that the question whether the plaintiffs performed the agreement on their part or the services called for thereby was submitted as one of the issues to be tried and adjudicated and which was in fact tried and adjudicated as fully and completely as if the amended complaint had never been introduced into the judgment roll and the pleadings stood only as they were originally filed.

[10] "The point next urged for a reversal is that the findings are not supported by the evidence. The point is without merit. As already stated, the only testimony or evidence presented at the trial was that introduced by plaintiffs, the defendant having rested his case on the proofs so made. As above pointed out, the fact that the defendant's intestate conferred upon plaintiffs authority to obtain a buyer of the land and personal property referred to in the written memorandum mentioned within the time and on the terms and conditions specified in said writing for the compensation also specified therein, was and is admitted. It also stands admitted that, at the time the transactions involved herein took place, the plaintiffs were regularly licensed real estate brokers. The evidence shows that Charles H. Ramm, at all of said times, resided upon a 60-acre tract of land situated approximately one mile north of the center of the town of Dinuba; that he owned 40 acres of said land and was then buying the remainder thereof (20 acres) from his father; 20 acres of the tract were planted to grapes of the Malaga variety and a like number of acres thereof to grapes of the Emperor variety. A dwelling house of 6 rooms was standing on the east 20 acres, on 12 acres of which grapes of the Emperor variety, 4 years old, were growing, and on 4½ acres of which plum trees were growing. It appears that the proposition to vest plaintiffs with authority to negotiate the sale of the properties was first suggested by defendant's intestate, he having said to them that, on account of ill health, he desired to dispose of the ranch; that, after the said proposition was so made, Newton, one of the plaintiffs, accompanied Mr. Ramm to the ranch, and, after inspecting the properties and thus learning what properties, other than the ranch itself, were to be sold through plaintiffs, he (said Newton) immediately proceeded to look for a purchaser of said properties; that he found and took to the ranch certain prospective buyers, and among these were two parties by the names of Fred Moore and Harry Moore, brothers; that the Moores were pleased with the ranch and requested plaintiffs to furnish them with a detailed description of the land and all the other property which was to be embraced within the sale; that Newton thereupon made another visit to the ranch to obtain that information, and, securing it from defendant's intestate, presented it to the Moores. It was further shown that, on several different occasions thereafter, Newton took Mr. Fred Moore to the ranch; that, on one of these occasions, both Newton and said Moore had a conversation with Ramm regarding the personal property which it was intended should 'go with the place,' and also as to the terms upon which it could be purchased. It was shown that it was on the occasion of one of these visits that Newton made out the broker's agreement (attached to and made a part of both the original and amended complaint), and which was then signed by Mr. Ramm on his ranch, authorizing plaintiffs to procure a purchaser of the properties. On the last occasion, on which Newton and Fred Moore visited the ranch, the former had in his possession said Moore's check for the sum of $1,000, the same to be used as a deposit upon the purchase price of the place. Newton stated to Ramm that he had said check in his possession, and tendered it to Ramm, who, thereupon, addressing Newton, said: 'You are my agent—you hold the check.' On the same occasion, Fred Moore said to Ramm, 'I bought your ranch, and I want to see the stuff that goes with the place, tools and all;' to which Ramm replied, 'All right;' and thereupon took Newton and Moore over the premises and pointed out the tools, horses, and other articles of personal property which were to be included within the sale. It was further shown that on the Monday succeeding the visit to the ranch by Newton and Moore last spoken of, Ramm went to Newton's office and left with the latter a complete list of the tools that were to go with the ranch on the sale thereof. Several days later, in accordance with a previous understanding between the parties, the plaintiff, Newton, Ramm, and the two Moores, met at the office of Attorney Green, in Dinuba, for the purpose of preparing an agreement of sale. At that meeting, said Green made memoranda of the details of the agreement or the sale with a view of committing the same to writing, but, before he had completed the preparation of the contract, Ramm was called to the telephone and immediately thereafter left the lawyer's office, with the understanding that he, with the Moores and Newton, would again meet at said law office and complete the contract by the execution thereof by Ramm and the Moores. This meeting was subsequently held, and at that time the contract, already prepared, was signed by the Moores. Said proposed contract or writing constituted an offer to purchase the properties referred to in the writing, signed by Ramm, authorizing plaintiffs to sell said properties and contained a description of said properties; recited that the Moores had posted with the plaintiffs the sum of $1,000, 'as a guaranty of good faith'; that the proposed purchasers would pay to Ramm the additional sum of $34,000 when he had furnished to the said proposed purchasers a 'certificate or abstract of title from which it shall appear that you (Ramm) can convey good title, * * * it being understood that at the time of such payment of $34,000 formal contract of sale is to be executed, the balance of the purchase price in consecutive annual installments of $3,500, with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, payable annually.'

"The above document was delivered to Ramm at said meeting. He read it and then stated that his wife would not sign the papers, and refused to proceed with the deal. Notwithstanding this turn in the negotiations, the Moores and the plaintiffs continued in their efforts to consummate the sale, and, to that end, endeavored on different occasions, without avail, to persuade Ramm to complete the transaction upon the terms and conditions upon which he had authorized plaintiffs to sell the properties.

"Green, the attorney above spoken of, testified and corroborated in all important particulars Newton's testimony, from which the above statement of the facts is taken.

"Fred H. Moore, one of the proposed purchasers, testified that he and his brother, the other proposed purchaser, had sufficient financial means with which to carry out the deal according to the terms and conditions upon which the plaintiffs were authorized to negotiate the sale of the properties and as specified in the written offer by the Moores to purchase the same.

"It was not shown, or any attempt made to show that, at any time during the negotiations between plaintiffs and Ramm or between the former, the latter and the Moores that the name of Mrs. Ramm was ever mentioned in connection with the proposed sale, nor was it shown, or any attempt made to show, that she was ever at any time requested to sign any papers in connection with the transaction. There is no testimony that Ramm objected to the form of the offer or the terms and conditions as set forth in the proposed agreement or offer by the Moores to purchase the properties, the only objection to proceeding with the transaction being, as shown, that his wife had stated she would refuse to sign any papers or documents looking to the consummation of the sale.

[11-13] "The above recital of the facts as they were disclosed by the testimony presented by the plaintiffs clearly confirms the statement heretofore made that the finding that the plaintiffs procured purchasers of the properties willing, ready, and able to purchase the same is evidentially well supported. There is no conflict in the evidence upon the vital facts essential to the support of the findings and the judgment in an action of this character. The testimony is not inherently improbable, or, upon its face, characterized by an intrinsic weakness which would justify this court in passing upon the weight thereof. The solution of that question was therefore the sole function of the court; it having been selected to try the questions of fact. The rule is too elemental and has been so often repeated in the decisions as to require the restatement thereof that, even where the evidence addressed pro and con to the issue or issues is contradictory, and there is thus produced therein a substantial conflict, the decision of the jury or trial court upon the facts is conclusive and binding upon the courts of review. For a much greater reason should this rule apply where, as here, the testimony is not inherently improbable, and, upon its face, is all one way and uncontradicted. The only ground upon which Ramm refused to carry out the proposition to sell the properties to the Moores was, not that the latter were not willing, ready, and able to purchase the same, but solely because his wife refused to join him in the sale and execution of the contract of sale. As seen, there is no testimony showing or even remotely tending to show that the consent of Mrs. Ramm to the sale or the requirement that she should join her husband in the execution of the contract of sale, or any of the preliminary negotiations or writings relative to the sale, was an element or factor in the contract between plaintiffs and Ramm, whereby the former were authorized to find a purchaser of the properties. Where the owner of property refuses to sell to the purchaser procured by the broker upon any ground other than that of the inability of the proposed purchaser to purchase, the owner cannot, in an action against him by the broker for compensation, successfully set up such ground as a defense, unless the fact constituting that ground is included in the agreement between the owner and broker as one of the terms or conditions which must be met or complied with by the broker before he has earned or is entitled to compensation for his services. It follows that the fact that Ramm's wife refused to join her husband in the transfer of the properties to the Moores does not in the least affect or impair the right of the plaintiffs to the compensation which Ramm agreed to pay them for securing purchasers of the properties. Indeed, it is the general rule that the refusal of the wife of the owner to join in the conveyance of the property to the proposed vendee does not, itself, in a case of this character, operate to deprive the broker of his right to compensation. See Justy v. Erro, 16 Cal. App. 519, 522, 117 P. 575, and cases therein cited; Farrington v. McClellan, 26 Cal. App. 375, 383, 146 P. 1051; Goodrich v. Turney, 44 Cal. App. 516, 186 P. 806; Johnson v. Krier, 59 Cal. App. 330, 333, 210 P. 966; Freeman v. Creelman, 60 Cal. App. 14, 22, 23, 212 P. 56.

[14, 15] "The contention that, because the Moores demanded, as a condition to the execution of the contract of sale, a certificate of title to the real property from Ramm, their proposal to purchase did not constitute an unconditional offer to purchase the properties, and that for that reason the plaintiffs failed to procure in said Moores purchasers willing, ready, and able to buy said properties, is without merit. By the writing authorizing the plaintiffs to obtain purchasers of the properties Ramm expressly agreed to furnish to any proposed buyer a 'deed and abstract, or certificate of title, showing clear title in me to date.' It is argued that the provision in said writing means and was intended to bear no other meaning, that defendant agreed to furnish an abstract or certificate of title only when the deed was tendered and not before or at the time the contract of sale was executed. We cannot, as above intimated, yield our assent to that construction of said provision. If, as all the parties here seem to assume, the proposed contract was one of sale of the properties, then the execution thereof, which means that the cash payments required to be made at the time of the execution of the contract on the purchase price were then and there to be made, would operate to consummate the sale, and, obviously, before the contract was executed, the purchasers would be entitled to receive from the defendant duly authenticated evidence of his title to the properties. Such a situation, indeed, would clearly come within the language of the provision as it is construed by counsel for defendant. And we can perceive no reason for holding that the provision was not intended as well to apply to a contract for the sale of the properties, since it does not expressly or definitely fix the occasion on which the certificate of title is to be furnished. But it is further insisted that there was failure on the part of the Moores to offer to purchase 'upon the terms of the agreement,' in that they offered therein to pay 'cash down' on the first payment the sum of $34,000 only, whereas the agreement authorizing plaintiffs to sell the property called for a cash payment of $35,000. The written proposal of the Moores to purchase the properties specifically set forth, as has above been pointed out, the offer to make the initial payment as follows: 'One thousand dollars, which we have posted with Russell & Newton, as a guaranty of good faith,' and '$34,000 additional, when you (Ramm) shall furnish certificate or abstract of title,' etc. Thus clearly and unambiguously an offer of the cash payment of $35,000 on the consummation of the sale, as called for by the agreement between Ramm and plaintiffs, was submitted by the Moores, and we are at a loss to understand why a contention that such offer was not submitted is here urged. Our conclusion, on this branch of the case, is that the offer submitted by the Moores to purchase the properties was in all respects in accord with the terms and conditions of the listing agreement, or, in other words, constituted a direct offer to purchase upon such terms and conditions.

[16] "Lastly, it is contended that the description of the real property as it is given in the listing contract or memorandum of agreement between plaintiffs and Ramm is so vague and ambiguous as to render uncertain the particular tract or tracts of land to which said agreement related. The answer to this contention is that which is given in each of the following comparatively recent cases dealing with a like contention: Goodrich v. Turney, 44 Cal. App. 516, 186 P. 806; California Packing Corp. v. Grove, 51 Cal. App. 253, 196 P. 891; Tolosano v. Will, 62 Cal. App. 622, 217 P. 803. The cases of Goodrich v. Turney and Tolosano v. Will involved actions by brokers for the recovery of compensation for procuring purchasers of land owned by the defendants. The Packing Corporation Case was an action to recover an amount alleged to be due from defendant for his failure to deliver certain fruit in pursuance of the terms of a written contract. In the case of Goodrich v. Turney the description of the land proposed to be exchanged by defendant for land owned by another party was as follows: 'An undivided one-half interest "in lots 423 and 424 of Fairmead Colony Tract No. 3, in Madera County, as a tenant in common with" his wife.' In California Packing Corporation v. Grove the description was: '"The following orchards and lands leased or owned by the seller in the county of ——, state of California, to wit: Located ¾ miles southeast of Visalia." * * * Acres, 10. Present age, 6. Varieties of fruit, Tuscan peaches. Acres, 10. Present age, 6. Varieties of fruit, Phillips peaches.' In the case of Tolosano v. Will the property was described, as is stated in the opinion, 'as 40 acres located 12 miles West of Fresno; also that 36 acres of said land are planted to Thompson grapes, 4 years old, and 4 acres of alfalfa; that there is situated upon the property a house of three rooms, a barn, a tank house, a windmill, and an electric plant. The number of sweat boxes, picking boxes, horses, farming tools, and implements upon the premises were also stated.' These descriptions were held to be sufficient in written instruments involving transactions of the character of the one here or in executory contracts relating to the transfer of real property, and in none of them was the description of the real property more definite than that of the real property in the listing card in this case. Furthermore, it appears without contradiction in this case that one of the plaintiffs here, prior to the preparation of the listing card, or the signing of any agreement or authorization by Ramm, visited the premises in question and that the latter pointed out to him the precise real and personal property which he desired to put in the hands of plaintiffs to be sold. It further likewise appears that one of the Moores, before offering to purchase the properties, visited the premises, and that Ramm not only showed him the real property which he had employed plaintiffs to secure a purchaser for, but also called his attention to the specific articles of personal property which were to be included in and go with the sale. It was not shown or pretended at the trial that Ramm owned any other real property situated one mile north of and from Dinuba. Moreover, the amended complaint, as we have seen, purports to describe the real property by township, range, and sectional subdivision, and the same is admitted to be correct by the failure of the answer to controvert it either generally or specifically. From all these considerations it is clear that nobody connected with the transaction was at any time misled or under any misapprehension or uncertainty as to the particular properties referred to in the listing card.

[17, 18] "It is the settled rule in this state 'as to particularity of description required in executory contracts to convey is extremely liberal in favor of their sufficiency. The rule is that, where the description, so far as it goes, is consistent but does not appear to be complete, it may be completed by extrinsic parol evidence, provided a new description is not introduced into the body of the contract, and the complaint must contain the averments of such extrinsic matter as may be necessary to render the description complete.' Marriner v. Dennison, 78 Cal. 202, 20 P. 386.

"In Macknight, Adm'r, etc., v. Davitt, 37 Cal. App. 720, 174 P. 77, in which the action was by a broker to recover commissions for negotiating the sale of certain lands, it is said: 'Much greater liberality is allowed in construing and curing defective descriptions in broker's contracts than in a deed of grant of land, for, so far as the statute of frauds is concerned, the terms of the employment are the essential part, and such contracts will not be declared void merely because of a defect, uncertainty, or ambiguity in the description of the property to be sold or exchanged when such defect can be cured by the allegation or proof of extrinsic facts and circumstances.' See Maze v. Gordon, 96 Cal. 61, 30 P. 962; Proulx v. Sacramento Val., etc., Co., 19 Cal. App. 529, 534, 126 P. 509.

[19, 20] "Some suggestion is made in the briefs as to the insufficiency of the written memorandum of agreement to meet the requirements of the statute of frauds in such cases. The reply to any such suggestion is that the statute of frauds is not set up by the defendant, the rule being that in order that the defendant in any case may avail himself of the benefit of said statute, where it does not appear from the face of the complaint that the statute has not been complied with, it is necessary that it should be pleaded and proved. Furthermore, in this case the execution of the written memorandum was not denied and was introduced in evidence without any attempt to impeach it upon any ground. Alaska Salmon Co. v. Standard Box Co., 158 Cal. 567, 112 P. 454; Broder v. Conklin, 77 Cal. 330, 19 P. 513."

The judgment is affirmed.

WASTE, C. J. I dissent. The respondents herein instituted this action in the superior court of Fresno county against Charles H. Ramm, deceased, to recover commissions in the sum of $3,250 alleged to have been earned by them as real estate brokers. Trial was had before the court without a jury, and judgment was entered in favor of said respondents as prayed for.

It appears that on January 5, 1920, the appellant's intestate authorized the respondents in writing to sell a tract of 60 acres of land situate in Tulare county, with the personal property thereon, for the sum of $120,000. Said written authorization provided that $35,000 of said purchase price was to be paid by the purchaser in cash and the remaining $85,000 was to be liquidated at the rate of $3,500 per annum with interest at 6 per cent. The commissions to be received by the respondents in the event of a sale was consummated were also provided for in the authorization of sale.

On this appeal it is contended by the appellant, among other things, that the respondents failed to produce a purchaser or purchasers "ready, able and willing" to buy the property on the terms fixed by the owner. The respondents, on the other hand, urge that the purchasers procured by them were "ready, able, and willing" to purchase the property on the terms specified, but that the appellant's intestate refused to convey to said purchasers.

The rule is that, to entitle a broker to commissions under a contract or written authorization of the character of that here involved and where, as here, no sale has been actually consummated, it is incumbent on him to prove that he found a purchaser or purchasers, not only ready and willing, but also able to buy the property on the terms prescribed by the owner. Merzoian v. Kludjian, 183 Cal. 422, 191 P. 673; Mattingly v. Pennie, 105 Cal. 514, 39 P. 200, 45 Am. St. Rep. 87; Tashjian v. Krikorian, 55 Cal. App. 160, 202 P. 956. It follows, therefore, that the respondents' right of recovery is dependent upon their having procured a purchaser able to buy the property on the terms fixed by the owner.

All of the evidence touching upon the financial ability of the purchasers found by the respondents was given by Fred W. Moore, who testified that he and his brother, H. H. Moore, had signed a written offer wherein and whereby they had agreed to purchase the tract of land then owned by appellant's intestate for the sum of $120,000, of which amount $35,000 was to be paid in cash; that he had sufficient money in the bank against which a check for $1,000 given by him to the respondents as a deposit might be drawn; that he "was able to buy it and go through with all my obligations"; that he and his brother were "buying it together"; that they were able to pay for the property; that he (the witness) had "considerable" property. On cross-examination the witness testified that he and his brother were "able to raise" the $34,000 required to complete the initial cash payment; that they "had considerable of it in the bank"; that he had about $15,000 in the bank, but that he did not know "what my brother had, but we were able to take care of the deal"; that he would not be required to raise the $34,000 necessary to complete the initial cash payment, as he "knew my brother would take care of half of it, his half of it"; that he did not intend or expect "to take care of more than half"; that they had "everything arranged to take care of the deal"; that he did not "remember" just how he was to raise the $2,500 needed to complete his half of the initial cash payment; that he was going to borrow said amount from "somebody" and give his note therefor; that he did not "remember just how he was figuring on raising it now."

The cases passing upon what constitutes ability to pay on the part of a purposed purchaser involve such a variety of circumstances that it is difficult to deduce any fixed rule from them. It is my opinion, however, that the evidence set forth in narrative form above is insufficient to support the findings and judgment in favor of respondents. In other words, the respondents have failed to satisfy the burden resting upon them of proving that they had produced a purchaser or purchasers having the ability to buy the property upon the terms fixed by the owner.

The evidence clearly establishes that the witness, Fred W. Moore, intended and expected only to furnish one-half of the purchase price of $120,000 and but one-half of the initial cash payment of $35,000. Assuming, without deciding, that the evidence sufficiently shows that said witness was financially able to care for and pay his one-half of the purchase price and initial cash payment, there still remains a hiatus in the chain of proof for there is an utter lack of evidence tending to show or establish that the witness' brother, H. H. Moore, was financially able to care for and discharge his one-half of the obligation in the event a sale was consummated.

The law will not presume the existence of the purchaser's financial ability; the burden is upon the broker to establish that fact. It is declared in Merzoian v. Kludjian, supra, that:

> "It was a part of plaintiff's case in chief to show that [the purchaser] was ready, able, and willing to make the purchase, and this could be done by proof either that he had the funds in hand, in whole or in part, or that he commanded resources upon which he could obtain the requisite credit." (Italics added.)

The statement of the witness, Fred W. Moore, that he and his brother "were able to take care of the deal" was but the expression of an opinion on the part of said witness and is too indefinite and conjectural to satisfy the burden resting upon the respondents or to establish the ability of H. H. Moore to proceed with the consummation of the sale so far as he personally was concerned. As already indicated, there is an absence of evidence tending to show the financial ability of said H. H. Moore, for the witness Fred W. Moore stated he did not know the nature or extent of his brother's assets. The evidence adduced is also insufficient to establish the ability of the witness Fred W. Moore to care for and discharge the entire financial burden in the event a sale was consummated. His testimony merely reveals that he had approximately $15,000 on deposit in a bank and "considerable" property. As declared in Merzoian v. Kludjian, supra, "he did not state whether he could have borrowed money on that property" nor is his testimony "at all certain as to his available assets." The witness, in fact, testified that he did not "remember" how and where he was to secure the nominal sum of $2,500 needed to complete and discharge his one-half of the initial cash payment. This being so, it may not reasonably be inferred that he was in a position to pay the entire initial cash payment or to discharge the full purchase price in the event a sale was consummated. Moreover, his testimony to the effect that he would have borrowed said $2,500 from "somebody" lends no support to a supposition that he might have borrowed sufficient to discharge the entire initial payment in the event of a sale, for the authorities in this state uniformly hold that a statement of the proposed purchaser evincing a confidence in his ability to borrow the money "from some one, without showing that there was any one legally bound to loan him this money, is insufficient to establish his financial ability to make this purchase." Tashjian v. Krikorian, supra.

The evidence in the instant case, when considered in a light most favorable to the respondents, is insufficient to establish that the purchasers produced by them were "ready, able and willing" to complete the sale.

HERSHEY et al. v. RECLAMATION DIST. NO. 108 et al. (Sac. 3866.)

1. Fraud 🔑49—Fraud must be affirmatively pleaded and proved.

Fraud is never to be presumed, but must be affirmatively pleaded and proved, or facts from which it is to be inferred must be of such character that no other reasonable conclusion may be reached but that of fraud.

2. Drains 🔑67—Assessment statutes, making method therein set forth of objecting to assessments exclusive, held constitutional (Pol. Code, § 3455, as amended and § 3462).

Provisions of Pol. Code, § 3455, as amended by St. 1917, p. 1197, and St. 1919, p. 604, and section 3462, providing that property owners be served with notice of hearings on assessments and plans of reclamation district, and requiring them to state objections thereto in writing or be concluded from thereafter asserting objections, held not to deprive property owners of constitutional right.

3. Constitutional law 🔑43(1)—Landowners failing to object to validity of statute or to request modification of assessment at time could not thereafter object (Pol. Code, § 3455, as amended, and § 3462).

Where landowners assessed for expenses of reclamation district under Pol. Code, § 3455, as amended by St. 1917, p. 1197, and St. 1919, p. 604, failed, after notice, to request modification or amendment of assessment as required by section 3462, or to raise question of validity of section 3455, they could not thereafter raise such questions.

4. Constitutional law 🔑43(1)—One receiving benefit from unconstitutional law is estopped from asserting its unconstitutionality.

One cannot deny the constitutionality of a law after having received and accepted benefits thereunder.

5. Statutes 🔑97(3)—Legislature may create reclamation districts by special acts.

Reclamation districts may be created by special acts of the Legislature.

6. Statutes 🔑97(1)—Irrigation districts may be created by special acts.

Legislature has the power to create irrigation districts by special acts.

7. Waters and water courses 🔑224—Legislature may merge reclamation and irrigation districts into one system.

The Legislature holds the power to consolidate into one system two established systems of bringing arid and swamp and overflowed lands into a state of productiveness.

8. Statutes 🔑148—A section of the Code may be amended by reference to its number.

Amendment to Code section may be made by reference to the number of the section amended.

9. Statutes 🔑123(7)—Title to act amending act under which reclamation district was organized held to give landowners in district notice of change in reclamation laws (Pol. Code, § 3455, amended by St. 1917, p. 1197).

Landowners in reclamation district held to have been given sufficient notice that irrigation plans were to be included in operations of reclamation district by St. 1917, p. 1197, amending Pol. Code, § 3455, which incorporated as part of its title the words "relating to swamp and overflowed salt marsh and tidelands."

10. Waters and water courses 🔑216—"Reclamation" is sufficiently broad to include irrigation.

The term "reclamation" is sufficiently comprehensive to include the irrigation of lands which are excessively arid.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Reclamation.]

11. Drains 🔑14(1)—Plans and estimates submitted by reclamation district trustees held sufficiently itemized.

Items set out in forming the plans and estimates submitted by trustees of reclamation district to reclamation board held to substantially comply with requirement as to segregation and itemizing of expenses.

12. Drains 🔑91—In absence of evidence to contrary, officers of reclamation district may be presumed to have computed interest legally in assessing landowners.

It may be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the officers of reclamation district, in estimates of costs, before making assessments on landowners computed interest at not more than legal rate.

13. Appeal and error 🔑1008(1)—Trial court's judgment as to whether computation of interest, in expense estimates by trustees of reclamation district, was on proper basis, could not be disturbed.

Trial court's judgment, after hearing evidence that the computation of interest by the officers of reclamation district in estimates of expenses, on basis of which assessments were made on landowners, was proper, held conclusive unless erroneous as a matter of law.

14. Waters and water courses 🔑231—Benefit from irrigation system held question of fact for trial court.

Benefits derived by plaintiff's lands from irrigation system in comparison to benefits derived by other lands in reclamation district held questions of fact to be determined by the district authorities in the first instance, and by the trial court finally.

15. Appeal and error 🔑1008(1)—Judgment of trial court as to whether losses occurring in management of irrigation operations, invalidated assessment could not be disturbed.

Though the appellate court may question certain expenditures and transactions in the management of reclamation district, it would not disturb the judgment of the trial court as to whether or not losses invalidated an assessment made on the landowners.

16. Drains ⊂⊃18—Courts will allow public officers charged with comprehensive scheme of reclamation much latitude in management, in absence of bad faith.

In the absence of bad faith on the part of public officers managing a complicated plan or scheme of reclamation, courts will allow such officers much latitude in management.

Appeal from Superior Court, Colusa County; George H. Thompson, Judge.

Action by Cornelia A. Hershey and Davidella Hershey, as administratrices of the estate of Ella L. Hershey, deceased, substituted for Ella L. Hershey, and others, against Reclamation District No. 108 and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

George Clark and Clark, Nichols & Eltse, all of Berkeley, for appellants.

W. H. Devlin and Devlin & Devlin, all of Sacramento, and Thos. Rutledge, of Colusa, for respondents.

SEAWELL, J. Ella L. Hershey, one of the original plaintiffs, having died, Cornelia A. Hershey and Davidella Hershey, as administratrices of her estate, have been substituted in her place and stead. This is an attack made by plaintiffs upon assessment No. 5 levied upon land situate within reclamation district No. 108, located in Yolo and Colusa counties, the easterly boundary line of which is the Sacramento river. The district comprises approximately 60,000 acres of land. Said reclamation district being within the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district, section 3455, Political Code, as amended (Stats. 1917, p. 1197, and Stats. 1919, p. 604), is made applicable to the proceedings taken by the trustees and officers of the district, which proceedings constitute the basis of the assessment sought to be invalidated by this proceeding. Plaintiffs' lands included within the limits of the district consist of approximately 2,500 acres and were assessed for both reclamation and irrigation purposes. The lands were assessed in two parcels, and were designated as tracts Nos. 9 and 10, respectively. Tract No. 9 contains 2,377 acres and was assessed in the sum of $163,175.55; No. 10 contains approximately 123 acres and was assessed in the sum of $467.25. The two parcels are contiguous. The action was brought against said reclamation district and its officers and 200 other owners in the district, numbered from 1 to 200, both inclusive.

The report to the board of supervisors upon which the assessment proceedings are based is dated March 1, 1923, and was filed with the board of supervisors of the county of Colusa on March 31, 1923. It contains the plan of reclamation and the estimates upon which the assessment is asserted. Judgment in the court below went against the plaintiffs, and this appeal is from the judgment as entered.

In addition to the formal allegations of the complaint, it is alleged that on March 1, 1923, the trustees of said district made an alleged order purporting to adopt certain plans and new, amendatory, supplemental, and additional plans for the reclamation and irrigation of lands within reclamation district No. 108, together with alleged estimates of the cost of past and contemplated reclamation and irrigation works of the district, including incidental expenses and alleged maintenance and repairs thereof, and that said plans and estimates contained statements that the improvements made were necessary to the reclamation and irrigation of the lands of the district. The complaint alleges the filing by the board of trustees of the requisite number of copies of the original plans and estimates with the board of supervisors of the county of Colusa, the certification and transmission of copies thereof to the state reclamation board, and the making of a purported order by the latter board approving the same and the subsequent making of a purported order by the board of supervisors of the county of Colusa appointing three commissioners of assessment to levy an assessment and apportion the same according to the benefits that would accrue to each tract of land; the making up of the assessment lists showing the amounts stated in said estimates; the fixing of the time when objections would be heard; the publication of notice thereof and the levying of the final assessment against plaintiffs' lands, which aggregated the sum of $163,642.80. Proceeding, the complaint alleges the filing of written objections to said assessments and the overruling of the same by the board of supervisors of the county of Colusa, which body then and there made an order approving and affirming said assessments. Thereafter the original list was filed with the county treasurer of the county of Colusa, and a certified copy was filed with the county treasurer of the county of Yolo. The objections to the assessment alleged to have been filed by plaintiffs with the board of supervisors are set forth in the complaint and constitute practically the balance of the pleading. First, a repudiation of any liability springing from the assessment was made upon the ground that the costs and expenses of the reclamation and irrigation project were not apportioned according to the benefits that had accrued or would accrue, but that said apportionment was, as to plaintiffs' lands, unequal, excessive, and unfair as compared with the assessments imposed upon the lands of others similarly subject to taxation. The assessment is also contested upon the grounds that the commissioners imposed upon plaintiffs' land charges amounting to about $20 per acre for costs and charges

⊂⊃For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes theretofore incurred in the construction, operation, and maintenance of irrigation works and incidental expenses incurred in connection with such works and charges for interest on indebtedness incurred in constructing, maintaining, and operating said works and about $10 additional per acre for the construction of additional irrigation works and the maintenance thereof and for additional expenses to be incurred in connection with future works and the operation and maintenance thereof, which works have not benefited and will not benefit plaintiffs' lands. It was also made a ground of objection that the whole of said expenses incurred or to be incurred were for the benefit of lands other than the lands of plaintiffs and that plaintiffs' lands do not in any sense need irrigation; that the charges imposed upon said lands for irrigation works and irrigation expenses are disproportionate to the benefits that have or will accrue to the same; that said plans and estimates purport to show estimates of amounts expended and to be expended upon (a) the back levee of the district; (b) drainage works, including pumping plants; (c) power plants; (d) irrigation works and an irrigation system and the expenses of the construction, maintenance, and incidental expenses thereof; (e) incidental expenses of such works. It is also made a ground of written objection that said estimates were and are excessive and untrue and relate to things and represent and include expenses which were not made for the work of reclamation or the irrigation of the lands of said district and therefore there was no authority to incur the same. The court found that the foregoing objections pleaded were not filed with the board of supervisors, but others, less elaborate and specific, which are hereafter summarized, were filed.

Concluding this subject the complaint proceeds by alleging that the plans and estimates do not, upon the face of either, show such invalid charges, but they were known to the defendants and unknown to plaintiffs and can only be ascertained by bringing the defendants into court; that said plans and estimates as to certain items of reclamation and irrigation fail to show with any degree of certainty the nature of the work done of where the work, if done, was in fact done; that the commissioners in levying the assessment could not, in the case of the estimates or statements of expenditures relating to certain items [(a) to (e), inclusive], determine from said plans and estimates the nature or purpose of large amounts of expenses that were included in the total estimates for work done or to be done and said commissioners were compelled to ascertain from the engineer of the district the nature of work done or to be done in order to make said estimates; that said facts were not ascertainable from an inspection of the plans and estimates by the landowners and could only be known by a full and careful accounting and hearing in a court action; that the expenses complained of and charged against plaintiffs' lands are not shown in any plans or estimates showing the nature of the work; that plaintiffs' lands were assessed with large sums on account of interest accrued or thereafter to accrue on expenses incurred. It is claimed that it is impossible to ascertain from the face of the plans and estimates what periods of time are covered by said estimates of expenses on account of interest accrued or to accrue or to determine the amount that should have been included in said assessment as accrued or unaccrued future interest. It is alleged that a large amount of the various sums which go to make up the assessment consist of expenses that were not for maintenance or repair, but were expenses upon new, supplemental, and additional plans of reclamation and irrigation that were never adopted or made the plans of the district prior to the time said expenses were incurred; that large expenses were charged on plaintiffs' lands without being segregated or separately stated in said plans, and are mixed and confused with expenditures laid out on plans and estimates previously adopted; and that a large portion of the expenses contained in said estimates were incurred without the prior making, adopting, approving, or filing of any plans and estimates for said contemplated expenditures. This, it is alleged, applied particularly to the Knight's Landing power plant built and equipped at a cost of about $200,000, which was never of any benefit or use to plaintiffs' lands and which has since been discontinued. In general language objection is made to every item of reclamation and irrigation included in the estimated costs of construction, estimated maintenance costs, estimated drainage operation costs, estimated irrigation costs and incidental expenses, and all charges for maintenance or repair of such work. Large sums of money are alleged to have been expended and heavy expenses incurred on new, supplemental, and additional plans without the prior adoption, filing, or approving of the same, and said plans and estimates contain no showing as to when warrants were issued or the purpose thereof or as to the times of incurring said expenses. It is complained that the incidental expenses mentioned in the reports and estimates are grossly excessive and those claimed to have been incurred were not described, and, it is charged, the estimate was made in a lump sum for the purpose of concealing expenditures of moneys made in a manner not authorized by law. It is alleged that the plans and estimates were adopted by the trustees of the district pursuant to a purpose and plan to compel the commissioners of assessment to relieve the lands of the River Farms Company, a corporation, and others of heavy burdens that had been imposed upon their lands by reason of the adoption of plans of reclamation and irrigation that had proven unwise and had failed and which far exceeded in cost the estimate of the district engineer; that pursuant to said plan of favoritism said River Farms Company's lands were relieved of a large amount of said expense which was superimposed upon plaintiffs' land; that one of the trustees who voted to adopt the plans was president or manager of and a stockholder in said River Farms Company. Finally it is alleged that neither the board of trustees of said district, nor the state reclamation board, nor the board of supervisors of the county of Colusa, had jurisdiction to make any order or orders of any kind with respect to the plans and estimates referred to in said complaint, and said commissioners of assessment were without jurisdiction to make any assessment upon said lands of plaintiffs.

The prayer is that the court shall make and enter its decree setting aside, canceling, and annulling and holding to be invalid the assessment so made. The foregoing is a full and fair résumé of the material allegations of the complaint.

By their answer defendants aver the adoption by the board of trustees of said district, on or about May 1, 1923, of plans for the reclamation and irrigation of land in reclamation district No. 108, together with estimates of the cost of the work to be done, and already done, including maintenance and repair thereof. They aver that said plans and costs were necessary in the reclamation and irrigation of said lands. The approval of the plans and estimates by the reclamation board of the state of California and the acceptance of the same, the order of the board of supervisors approving the assessment, and the taking of the necessary steps in all stages of the proceedings required to give validity to the assessment, are pleaded. They deny that prior to the date of the hearing of the objections to said assessment the objections were made as alleged by plaintiffs, and allege that many objections set forth in the complaint were not contained in the written objections. Defendants aver that the commissioners in assessing plaintiffs' land apportioned the cost of reclamation works, including irrigation works in proportion to the benefits accrued or that would accrue upon each tract of land, and that the assessment levied upon plaintiffs' lands was not excessive or unequal as compared with other lands. They aver that no amount or sum was imposed upon plaintiffs' lands for or as charges theretofore incurred in the construction or operation or maintenance of irrigation works, or incidental expenses in connection therewith, or for interest on indebtedness incurred in constructing, maintaining, or operating such works, or any sum for the construction of additional irrigation works or the maintenance thereof or for incidental expenses to be incurred in connection with the future operation or maintenance of the same. It is averred that plaintiffs need irrigation and will be benefited by the works set forth in the plans. It is alleged that the plans and estimates were taken by the commissioners as an entirety and that the assessment was assessed against each tract of land in proper proportion to the benefits that have accrued or will accrue to the same, and that said assessment against each tract of plaintiffs' lands was made in one entire sum. They deny that any invalid charges were included in said assessment, and aver that said plans and estimates set forth with certainty the work done, its nature, and the cost and expenses of each piece of work and that said commissioners and all other persons could determine from said plans and estimates all things and matters of whatsoever kind necessary to the making of the assessments and which were included therein. They deny that the commissioners were compelled to or did rely upon the engineer for the information as to the nature of the work to be done. Deny that plaintiffs' lands were assessed with any sum on account of interest then accrued or to accrue on any expenses which had theretofore accrued. Uncertainty as to the period of time covered by interest charges, the rate charged, accrued, or to accrue is denied. It is averred that no estimate was made on plans or works of reclamation or irrigation which were adopted before the expenses were incurred and that all the work done as set forth in the plans and estimates was necessary and was done in accordance with the requirements of the same and was for the benefit of plaintiffs' lands. Favoritism shown or extended to the River Farms Company, or any landowner whatsoever, or unwise or improper action or conduct on the part of the district or its officers, is likewise denied. As a second defense the order of the state reclamation board made April 24, 1923, approving the plans and estimates of said reclamation district No. 108, and which has not since been vacated, annulled, or modified, is pleaded. For a third defense the order of the board of supervisors of the county of Colusa made December 6, 1923, approving the assessment attacked by the complaint, is set up as an estoppel against all objections not specifically made by the plaintiffs in their written objections filed with said board of supervisors.

The trial court made elaborate findings upholding the validity of the assessment. The proceedings, beginning with the plans adopted by the board of trustees of the district March 2, 1923, are set forth in chronological order. The written objections to the assessment of plaintiffs, as actually made, are set out in their numerical order. The first five objections challenge the jurisdiction of the board of supervisors, trustees of the district, and commissioners of assessment, respectively, to make the preliminary orders and perform the acts and duties necessary to lay the foundation of a valid assessment. No. 6 attacks the plans and estimates on the ground that they do not represent a fair or reasonable scheme of reclamation and were so devised as to prevent a fair apportionment of costs and expenses in proportion to benefits accruing to each tract of land. No. 7 protests against an attempt to impose upon plaintiffs' lands charges for an irrigation system, and complaint is made that no system had been devised for the irrigation of their lands and said lands have not been irrigated, and, further, the assessment was an effort to charge their lands and the lands of others with an expense due to the mistakes of those who originated the irrigation works and canal system. No. 8 rests upon the assertion that the plans are insufficient and do not adequately describe the work done or proposed to be done. The same objection is made as to the estimates of expenses. Objection is also made that the assessment contains large amounts imposed upon plaintiffs' lands for work done under plans that were never adopted or approved, and that neither the plans for reclamation or irrigation have been adequately adopted or sanctioned. Objection No. 9 insists that the assessment was not made or spread in proportion to the entire amount raised by the levy, and was unfairly and inequitably levied, and plaintiffs' assessment is therefore greater than their proportionate share should be. No. 10 avers that the value of plaintiffs' land will not be enhanced in proportion to the amount of the assessment; that the alleged improvements have not improved said lands; that the tracts of land on behalf of which the scheme of irrigation was proposed and originated and which are benefited thereby should be charged with the costs and expenses of irrigation construction and maintenance and the "lands which never desired irrigation and the owners of which never sought irrigation" should not be loaded with the vast unforeseen expenses since sought to be avoided or lessened by the original projectors of the scheme, by bringing in plaintiffs and others as burden-bearers.

The court found that the proceedings leading up to and including the levy and assessment were regular and legal; that said lands were assessed in proportion to the benefits to be derived from the expenditures of money set forth in said plans as the estimated cost of the work; that the commissioners did not impose any separate sum or charge whatever upon plaintiffs' lands or any part thereof for charges theretofore incurred in the construction or operation or maintenance of irrigation works or incidental expenses or interest on indebtedness incurred in the construction, maintenance, or operation of such works or for the construction of additional irrigation works or for the maintenance or incidental expenses thereof in connection with future works. As to the estimates for interest, the following is taken from said plans and estimates as incorporated in the findings:

> Estimates of Costs.
> "In the following tabulation is given the total estimated cost of all works included in these plans of reclamation district No. 108 to be completed or acquired after July 27, 1917. This total estimated cost as shown for each item includes interest estimated on the outstanding expenditures for such item and the expenditures to be hereafter made in connection with such item up to the date of the estimated time that will be required to levy, equalize and collect upon the assessment to be hereafter made in accordance with these plans and estimates, the district having no funds available for the payment of the outstanding warrants or warrants to be hereafter issued until collection can be made on said assessment to be hereafter made."

It is found that no amount was included in said plans and estimates of said assessment for expenses which were not for maintenance or repair; that each expense was segregated or separately stated as required by law; that each piece of work referred to in the complaint was done for the benefit of said district and the lands therein, including plaintiffs', and the assessment was in all respects and as to all lands within the district fairly and lawfully made and levied. The court, in short, found against plaintiffs and in favor of defendants upon every material issue made by the pleadings.

[1] The complaint makes no charge of felonious misappropriation or embezzlement of the funds of the district, and the allegations of improper application of the funds of the district, if, indeed, they may be regarded as sounding in fraud, rest upon doubtful implications flowing from the general language, of the pleading rather than upon direct and positive allegations. Fraud is never to be presumed, but it must be affirmatively pleaded and proved, or the facts from which it is to be inferred must be of such character that no other reasonable conclusion may be reached but the single one of evil design on the part of the person or entity whose acts are attempted to be impugned. We conclude from the pleadings that it is not the claim of the plaintiffs that the moneys which came into the hands of the officers of the district were feloniously misappropriated by them or were not applied to the payment of reclamation and irrigation works and the maintenance and repair of the project and on account of interest, but that certain of the expenditures made were not authorized by law. Favoritism is alleged to have been shown to the River Farms Company, but no satisfactory evidence was adduced at the trial to sustain the allegation and the court found against plaintiffs on that issue. The written objections actually filed by plaintiffs with the board of supervisors are not specific, but are set forth in the most general terms.

[2, 3] Plaintiffs at no time, either by the complaint herein or the written objections filed with the board of supervisors, requested a modification or amendment of the assessment in any particular or a reapportionment of the entire assessment as by section 3462, Political Code, provided, or for general relief. A direct attack is made upon the validity of the assessment in its entirety by reason of the acts, omissions, and failures of the district and its officers to comply with the statutory procedure in such cases provided and for want of jurisdiction on the grounds set forth in the written objections. Said written objections filed with the board of supervisors as prescribed by section 3462, Political Code, being ten in number, and which constitute the foundation of the action, assumed to state the specific grounds of objection, but not one of them questioned the validity or sufficiency of section 3455, Political Code, but each objection was placed on jurisdictional grounds because of alleged infirmities therein pointed out. "Jurisdiction" is a comprehensive term. A court or judicial body may lack jurisdiction to render a judgment, order, or decree, although the act under which the proceedings are prosecuted is invulnerable to attack on strictly constitutional grounds. Section 3462, supra, requires the objector to specify the grounds of objection to the assessment, and unless this be done the decision of the board of supervisors becomes final and the assessment list is conclusive evidence that said assessment has been made and levied according to law. "No objection to such assessment shall be considered by the board of supervisors, or allowed in any other action or proceeding, unless such objection shall have been made in writing to the board of supervisors as above specified." Pol. Code, § 3462. "As above specified" relates to the clause which prescribes the grounds of the objections to be stated in writing. The purpose of this provision obviously is to save the assessment from subsequent attack upon some ground which would compel a court to invalidate the entire assessment, thereby entailing a heavy loss or waste which could have been avoided had the attention of the board of supervisors been timely called to the error, omission, or defect. Had the objection been made on the ground that section 3455, supra, as amended in 1917, was invalid for any reason and the objectors were relying upon such invalidity as a ground of attack that would be urged against any assessment that might be levied under it, it may be that the irrigation project would have been abandoned or postponed to such time as the question of its validity should have been determined, thereby avoiding a heavy loss which must be sustained by some one or deferred to such time as the Legislature should, by reenactment, cure such defects as are now urged against the plan of improvement by reason of the defective title of the act or any objection that might be made upon the due process clauses of the state or federal Constitutions. Again, it is provided by subdivision 4, section 3455, supra, that after the board of supervisors has approved the plans a hearing must be held by the state reclamation board to consider such objections as may be offered with respect to said plans and it shall thereafter approve, modify, amend, or reject the same. Subdivision 5 of said section further provides that when the state reclamation board shall have taken action approving, modifying, or rejecting any original, supplementary, or new plan of reclamation, after a hearing as therein provided, "such action shall be final, and thereafter the sufficiency of said plans shall not be subject to attack either before the reclamation board or in any court. * * *" No appearance was made or objection filed or taken by any of the plaintiffs against the proposed plan of reclamation, including irrigation. The foregoing provisions deny to the property owners no constitutional right. They are served with notice to appear and state in writing their objections, and defaulting therein they are concluded by statutes of repose. O'Dea v. Mitchell, 144 Cal. 374, 77 P. 1020, involved the failure of parties in a street assessment case to avail themselves of the remedy provided by the statute by filing written objections as to the extent or area of the district within the time required by statute, and it was held to constitute a waiver of all objections. The question of the invasion of a constitutional right was disposed of as follows:

> "Appellants contend that the assessment here involved is in conflict with the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, because lots which should have been assessed were not included in the district, and therefore excessive and unjust burdens were placed upon the lots which were assessed—thus violating the principle of equality; but for the reasons above stated, if for no other, this contention cannot be maintained; appellants having failed to invoke the remedy provided by the statute, are now in no position to assert rights, if any they have, which could have been secured by that remedy."

[4] The right to question the constitutionality of a statute may be waived. "It is a general rule applicable in civil cases that a constitutional question must be raised at the earliest opportunity or it will be considered as waived." 12 C. J. 785. "And where parties have failed to invoke a remedy provided by statute they are in no position thereafter to assert rights which could have been secured by that remedy, by endeavoring to invoke the aid of the Constitution." 5 Cal. Jur. 627. One who receives a benefit from an unconstitutional law is estopped from asserting its unconstitutionality. Vickery v. Board of Commissioners, etc., 134 Ind. 554, 32 N. E. 880. As to the necessity of pointing out specifically the grounds of protest against inclusion of lands in a drainage district or being thereafter estopped from objecting on jurisdictional grounds not set forth in the protest, see Mackay et al. v. Hancock County, 137 Iowa, 88, 114 N. W. 552.

[5-7] It cannot be doubted, in view of the well-settled law upon the subject, that the Legislature has the power to create, by special acts, reclamation or irrigation districts. It could have established reclamation district No. 108 as a separate irrigation district, notwithstanding its organization as a reclamation district, in which case the district area would have had a dual existence. That the Legislature holds the power to merge or consolidate into a unified system two established systems of bringing arid and swamp and overflowed lands into a state of cultivability and productiveness there can exist no reasonable doubt. The effort of the Legislature in adopting the amendment here questioned was to effect such a result.

Section 3455, Political Code, amended in 1917, under which amended act reclamation district No. 108 asserts authority to exercise the powers and functions of an irrigation district, provides:

> "3455. (a) * * * Within Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district, * * *. If and when any such district is located, in whole or in part, within the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district; (1) (Plans to be reported to supervisors). The board of trustees of such reclamation district must report to the board of supervisors of the county within which the district, or the greater part thereof, is situate, by filing, with the county clerk of said county, three copies of the original plan or plans of the works of reclamation and three copies of every new, supplemental, or additional plan, if any, together with the estimates of the cost of the contemplated works of the district, including incidental expenses, maintenance and repair necessary for the reclamation of the lands of the district in pursuance of any such plan or plans. The term 'works of reclamation' as used in this chapter shall include not only such public works and equipment, as are necessary for the unwatering of lands in reclamation districts, but shall also include such like works as may be necessary to water or irrigate the same lands in such districts."

The portion of the subdivision above quoted provides that "the term 'works of reclamation' as used in this chapter shall include not only such public works and equipment, as are necessary for the unwatering of lands in reclamation districts, but shall also include such like works as may be necessary to water or irrigate the same lands in such districts." (Italics supplied.)

[8] The act consolidating and reorganizing reclamation district No. 729 with reclamation district No. 108 and fixing and establishing the boundaries of the consolidated district to be known as reclamation district No. 108 went into effect in August, 1913. Its management and control was made subject to the provisions of the Political Code of the state and to other laws of the state relative to reclamation districts. Stats. 1913, p. 62. An act approving, confirming, and declaring valid the creation, formation, and organization of said consolidation was adopted in 1915 (Stats. 1915, p. 559). The act amending section 3455, Political Code, to its present form and amending a number of other sections of the Political Code "relating to swamp and overflowed, salt marsh and tidelands" by reference to the numbers of the sections amended went into effect July 17, 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 1197). An amendment of a Code section may be made by reference to the number of the section to be amended. Estate of Elliott, 165 Cal. 339, 132 P. 439. The same Legislature passed an approval and confirmation act of the district as defined in 1915, which provided that in the control and management of the affairs of the district it is subject to the provisions of the Political Code and to all laws of the state, except as therein provided, in connection with the issuance and payment of warrants and payment of assessments and conferred jurisdiction upon the board of supervisors of Colusa county as to all matters concerning said district and providing also for the management, control and administration of the affairs of said district. Stats. 1917, p. 1219. By an act approved in 1919 it was again provided that the management and control of the affairs of the district are subject to the provisions of the Political Code and to all other laws of the state, except as provided in said act, in the issuance and payment of warrants and payment of assessments; also providing for the deposit of moneys of the district with the treasurer of Colusa county and conferring jurisdiction upon the board of supervisors of the county of Colusa as to all matters concerning said district; providing for the management, control, and administration of the affairs of the district and ratifying the incorporation of certain lands in said district; authorizing the trustees to make equitable settlements with the owners of land so incorporated as to the cost of any work theretofore done before the act became effective; declaring reclamation district No. 108 to be the successor in interest of reclamation district No. 108 as defined and approved by the several acts of 1913, 1915, and 1917. By an act of the Legislature of 1921 another section was added to the Political Code. The title of said act is expressive of the subject and follows:

> "An act to add to the Political Code a new section, to be numbered three thousand four hundred sixty-seven, relating to the power of trustees of reclamation districts to make rules and regulations for furnishing water for the irrigation of lands in the district, fixing charges and rates for the same, collection of the same, levying assessments for the same on the lands in the district, providing for a special fund kept by the county treasurer in which sums collected for irrigation shall be kept, and providing for the paying out said fund on orders or warrants by the trustees for the costs of irrigation." Stats. 1921, p. 1590.

[9, 10] From the foregoing reference to statutes it will be seen that reclamation district No. 108 exists as a creature of special statutory enactments, and it is given broad powers thereunder in addition to the powers conferred by general laws. Large sums of money for irrigation construction were expended, beginning with July, 1917, before the act of 1919 was adopted. All reclamation districts existing in the state at the time of and prior to the 1917 amendment formed under any statute of the state were subject to the provisions of the Political Code relating to reclamation districts just as though such districts had been formed by or created under the provisions of the code relating to "swamp and overflowed, salt marsh and tidelands." The title of the act amending section 3455, in addition to making specific reference to the number of the code section, incorporates as a part of its title the language last above placed within quotation points. We think the title was expressive of the subject of the act if the term "reclamation" can be said to be sufficiently comprehensive to include irrigation. Certainly every landowner within district No. 108 and every person interested in reclamation in the state was, by the title of the act, put upon notice that the reclamation laws of the state were the subject of amendment by the state Legislature. Owners of land within the district subject to reclamation could not have read the title of the proposed act without understanding that a change was to be made in the law. Upon reading the act the proposed change becomes manifest. And this is so whether the term "reclamation" should be deemed not ordinarily sufficiently broad as to include "irrigation." What we mean to say is that the nature, purpose, and scope of the amendment of 1917 could not have escaped the attention of the owners of reclamation lands which were to be made subject to irrigation. There is authority holding that an irrigation district possesses independent powers necessary to drain its overflowed lands and to protect its landowners from seepage and overflow waters as well as to supply water to the dry and arid lands of the district. Pioneer Irrigation District v. Stone, 23 Idaho, 344, 130 P. 382; Nampa, etc., Irrigation District v. Petrie, 28 Idaho, 227, 153 P. 425; United States v. Ide (C. C. A.) 277 F. 373. The conclusion reached in the above-cited cases must rest upon the theory that the two methods employed to reclaim land are germane to a general purpose and in accord with the policy of the government. If the conclusion in the above-cited cases be correct, there appears to be no reason why the converse of the situation is not true and that it may with equal soundness of reason be argued that the more ancient method adopted by the individual or the state for the enlargement of cultivable areas, to wit, "reclamation," is sufficiently broad and comprehensive to include the irrigation of lands which are rendered excessively dry and arid in the summer seasons by reason of the shutting out of the storm and flood waters of winter. Reclamation includes irrigation in its general, ordinary sense, and, as a matter of fact, the term is quite generally applied to the reclaiming of arid lands as well as the shutting out of overflow waters. The primary purpose in each case is to regulate or control waters to the extent that lands may be brought into a state suitable for cultivation. Reclamation and irrigation of lands are cognate subjects and in many instances one would be futile and useless without the other. The same principle of law which sanctions the construction of drainage works as a necessary adjunct to an irrigation system is at least persuasive here in addition to other features of the case which have received consideration.

On July 27, 1917, said reclamation district was reorganized and the area was increased by adding 3180 acres, making a total of 57,280 acres. The plans as prepared and adopted include an irrigation system. The estimated cost of said works was $1,231,255 and as summarized consisted of a back levee, without maintenance; irrigation, without maintenance; drainage and irrigation, and drainage laterals, without maintenance; incidental expenditures of the district; total estimated cost, without maintenance; maintenance of back levee; maintenance and operation of irrigation system. The estimated cost and expense of each item was set out. In 1919 the district was again reorganized and enlarged so as to include an additional 700 acres of land. The plans were unaffected by reorganization. On August 19, 1920, a report of the engineer covering "amended, new, supplemental and additional plans of reclamation and estimates of cost" was adopted by the trustees as the plan of the district. This plan provided primarily for modification of the irrigation project as included in the report of 1917. It also contained revised estimates of costs of all necessary reclamation works. The estimated costs were segregated into seven groups or branches of improvement, to wit, back levee, drainage works, irrigation works, bridges and culverts, power plant, rights of way, and incidental expenses. The estimated cost of construction, maintenance, and operation was set opposite each group. The total estimated cost was $1,951,644.87. On September 21, 1921, the board of trustees rescinded the plan adopted in 1917 and the plan adopted in 1921 and adopted an "amendatory and additional plan of reclamation" which included an enlarged irrigation project and new estimates of cost. It contains the same items of expense as the plan of 1920, but with a material increase in the estimates of cost; the total being $3,137,336.54. The report, plans, and estimates which are assailed by the plaintiffs and are known as "new, supplemental, and amendatory plans," were filed March 3, 1923. Said report and plans and estimates make a comprehensive recital of all the proceedings taken by the district since its reorganization in 1917 and set forth the history of the district from a much earlier date.

The summary of the totals as computed and estimated by the trustees and officers in the estimates of 1923 is as follows: For construction, $2,338,490.75; maintenance, $438,929.43; drainage operation, $185,802.98; irrigation operation, $100,583.66; incidentals, $343,993.87; total, $3,407,800.69.

[11] Necessarily the subjects dealt with had to be grouped or classified to some extent, keeping in mind a substantial compliance with the statute, if the reports, plans, and estimates were to be held within reasonable limits. It could not be expected that each item considered in forming the estimates would be set out in minute detail.

[12, 13] Plaintiffs complain bitterly of the lack of itemization of certain interest-bearing periods with respect to dates and the rate of interest charged. In this respect it is contended that, if interest on past expenses is claimed, the basis for the charge should be stated in the plans and estimates; if future interest on past expense is a legitimate charge, then the amount and rate of interest should be stated in the plans and estimates so that the landowner may know whether the charge is fair. The amount of the future interest on past expense is not stated, and if interest on past expense is a permissible item there is no way of segregating it from unstated future interest. In short, it is claimed that the plans and estimates are poorly prepared and leave the question of interest in a state of utter confusion. On the question of charges of interest, as well as all other charges or expenses or things or matters about which appellants were entitled to be informed, the officers of the district were called as witnesses and examined thereon. The questions whether or not the items upon which interest was computed are set out in commendable detail and whether or not specific sums of interest were included as items of charges could have been gone into fully at the hearing had before the board of supervisors and again at the trial. As a matter of fact, the commissioners, who are engineers, were examined as to the interest expenditures and charges, and it was not made to appear to the trial court that a want of segregation or itemization in the particulars raised by the objections was inexplicable to a fatal degree, or was a mystifying method employed by the officers of the district to perpetrate wrongs upon certain of the landowners of the district. The officers gave their theory as to what they believed to be the fairest plan of arriving at estimates, which were, after all, except in cases where interest has accrued, or where the situation presents some fixed basis of computation, but an approximation.

[14-16] It may be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the officers did their duty and computed interest on a basis not exceeding its legal rate. But this was a matter easily ascertainable. The trial court having heard the evidence addressed to the issues before it and having made its finding thereon, we are not permitted to interfere with its judgment unless as a matter of law it appears to be erroneous. This does not so appear. We have also given consideration to other objections made on the ground that there was not a proper segregation of expenditures on account of cost of construction and maintenance and other matters of expense. It was the purpose and effort of the commissioners to classify under general headings cost, maintenance and operation expenses. As a rule they were not segregated or itemized in the manner pointed out by plaintiffs. But as we observed above, the trial court found no sufficient reason because of such failure to invalidate the assessment. The plans and estimates are complicated and brought into the calculations a large number of problems difficult of solution. Many of the problems which confronted the commissioners were not capable of exact results even by the application of the rules of the most exact of sciences, mathematics. We think the work of the commissioners, however, is the result of at least a reasonable, fair and intelligent consideration of a difficult problem. The question of benefits conferred was passed upon and fixed by the commissioners and finally by the trial court. The contention that the main canal is about nine miles from the nearest point of plaintiffs' lands is not determinative of the question of benefits. The land is within the district, and it has a right to the use of the waters which are brought into the district from the Sacramento river. The benefits that are thereby derived, as compared to other lands within the district, were questions of fact to be determined by the district in the first instance and by the trial court finally. As an abstract proposition lands located more distantly from a watercourse may be benefited in a greater degree than lands which are adjacent to the stream. So with respect to lands of high elevation compared with low lands. The Wilkins Slough pumping plant, constructed at a considerable cost and rendered useless by reason of the fall of the water level to a point below the intake of the canal, was a contingency, it would seem, that could not ordinarily be foreseen. Large quantities of water taken from the river for irrigation purposes and excessive dry seasons were responsible for its failure. The Knight's Landing, Howell Point, Rough and Ready, and Steiner Bend pumping and drainage losses were questions submitted to the court upon the theory of their invalidating effect as to plaintiffs' entire assessment. The sound judgment of the court, even though we may question certain of the expenditures and transactions, cannot, under the rule of decision, be disturbed. A comprehensive plan or scheme of reclamation involving many problems, such as we have before us, must fail or disappoint in some respects, and in the absence of proof of bad faith upon the part of its officers, courts will not exact such a rigid stewardship of those charged with a public duty as to completely ignore the complexities and uncertainties that attend the problem.

We are of the opinion, in view of the procedure taken by the district and the legislative treatment of the subject-matter, that the supplemental plans and estimates which succeeded the 1917 reorganizing act and the subsequent acts heretofore mentioned give warrant for including the costs and expenses incurred after the passage of the 1917 act and prior to the adoption of the 1923 plans and estimates.

The rulings of the court on the admissibility of evidence in the two instances complained of are not sufficient to justify a reversal in view of the record contents.

Judgment affirmed.

J. W. BROWNING, Plaintiff and Appellant, v. RECLAMATION DISTRICT NO. 108, Defendant and Respondent. (Sac. 3867.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 28, 1927.)

In Bank. Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court of Colusa County, George H. Thompson, Judge, in an action contesting assessment for reclamation and irrigation purposes. Affirmed.

Seth Millington, of Gridley, for appellant.
Devlin & Devlin, of Sacramento, and Thos. Rutledge, of Colusa, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The sufficiency of the identical plans and estimates and the validity of the assessment levied upon plaintiff's lands thereunder are attacked upon this appeal by appellant herein upon substantially the same grounds as were urged in Ella L. Hershey et al. v. Reclamation District No. 108 et al., Sac. No. 3866 (Cal. Sup.) 254 P. 542, this day decided. The main questions presented by this appeal were specifically disposed of in the case of Ella L. Hershey et al. v. Reclamation District 108 et al., supra.

In appellant's opening brief he concedes the legality of the assessment levied upon all the lands within the district "for drains, levees, pumps and other matters incident to reclamation as the same had always been known and recognized prior to the amendment of section 3455, Political Code, as amended by the Legislature of 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 1197) and under the new section added to the Political Code by the Legislature of 1921 * * * (Stats. 1921, p. 1590)." The objection specifically urged is to "that part of the assessment that has to do with the strictly irrigation features." No other questions not decided in the case above referred to are raised in appellant's opening brief. In the reply brief appellant questions the correctness of two findings upon minor matters which could not in any event affect the result of the decision.

Upon the grounds heretofore stated the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Seth Millington, of Gridley, for appellants.

PER CURIAM. Upon the grounds stated, and for the reasons set forth in Ella L. Hershey et al. v. Reclamation District No. 108 et al., Sac. No. 3866 (Cal. Sup.) 254 P. 542, and in Browning v. Reclamation District No. 108, Sac. No. 3867 (Cal. Sup.) 254 P. 551, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

PERKINS MFG. CO. v. JORDAN, Secretary of State. (S. F. 12047.)

1. Courts 🔑97(5)—Supreme Court must mold rulings to conform to decisions of federal Supreme Court on question whether federal Constitution is violated.

Supreme Court must mold rulings to conform with decisions of United States Supreme Court on question whether federal Constitution is violated by state statute, though such conformity requires overruling of precedent set by previous decision.

2. Commerce 🔑69(1)—Constitutional law 🔑230(1)—Corporations 🔑648—License tax on foreign corporations doing intrastate business, based solely on authorized capital stock, held to burden interstate commerce, tax property outside state, and deny equal protection (Deering's Gen. Laws Cal. 1923, Act 1743, p. 548, § 3; Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, cl. 3, and Amend. 14).

Deering's Gen. Laws Cal. 1923, Act 1743, p. 548, § 3, providing for license fee to be paid by foreign corporation doing intrastate business, based solely on authorized capital stock of such corporation, held invalid as violating commerce clause and Fourteenth Amendment to United States Constitution by laying unwarranted burden on interstate commerce, taxing property outside state, and denying equal protection of laws.

3. Commerce ⚷=69(1)—Constitutional law ⚷=230(1)—Whether tax on foreign corporations doing intrastate business is filing fee or privilege tax held immaterial on question whether federal Constitution is violated (Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, cl. 3, and Amend. 14).

In determining whether license fee to be paid by foreign corporation doing intrastate business violates commerce clause and Fourteenth Amendment to federal Constitution, it is immaterial whether it is filing fee or privilege tax, since effect rather than name or aim of tax is controlling.

4. Corporations ⚷=648—Authorized capital of foreign corporation cannot be measure of fee for doing intrastate business.

Authorized capital of foreign corporation cannot be used as measure of tax against such corporation for excise or privilege tax to do intrastate business.

5. Mandamus ⚷=87—Mandamus to compel issuance of certificate to foreign corporation held proper remedy for corporation alleging invalidity of severable section of statute levying tax for intrastate business (Deering's Gen. Laws Cal. 1923, Act 1743, p. 548, § 3; Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, cl. 3, and Amend. 14).

Mandamus to compel issuance of certificate to foreign corporation held proper remedy for corporation alleging invalidity of Deering's Gen. Laws Cal. 1923, Act 1743, p. 548, § 3, providing for fee to be paid by foreign corporation doing intrastate business, as violating commerce clause and Fourteenth Amendment to United States Constitution, since such section and provisions dependent thereon are severable from remainder of act.

In Bank.

Application by the Perkins Manufacturing Company for a writ of mandate, prayed to be directed to Frank C. Jordan, as Secretary of State, to compel the issuance to a foreign corporation of a certificate to do business in California without payment of license tax. Writ granted.

Willard P. Smith and Reuben G. Hunt, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank L. Guerena, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

Dunne, Dunne & Cook, of San Francisco, amici curiæ.

PRESTON, J. The state of California by the act of May 10, 1915 (St. 1915, p. 422), and several subsequent acts amendatory and supplementary thereto (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 1743, p. 548), put into effect a comprehensive plan regulating and governing the right of foreign corporations to transact intrastate business therein.

The act requires the filing with the secretary of state by the corporation of an authenticated copy of its charter, together with payment of a certain filing fee therefor; also the filing of an affidavit showing the authorized capital stock of said corporation on January 1st of the current year; also the designation of a resident agent in said state upon whom service of process may be had. The act then further provides for the payment of an annual license tax or fee as follows:

"Sec. 3. Except those corporations hereinafter specified, every corporation incorporated under the laws of this state, and every corporation incorporated under the laws of any other state, territory, or foreign country now doing intrastate business within this state, or which shall hereafter engage in intrastate business in this state, shall procure annually from the secretary of state a license authorizing the transaction of such business in this state, and pay therefor the license tax prescribed herein.

"For the purpose of measuring said tax the secretary of state shall examine all articles of incorporation and all documents on file in his office relating to an increase or decrease in the authorized capital stock of corporations which are subject to said tax, and determine the amount due from each corporation by the following rule:

"When the authorized capital stock of the corporation does not exceed ten thousand dollars, the tax shall be ten dollars; when the authorized capital stock exceeds ten thousand dollars, but does not exceed twenty thousand dollars, the tax shall be fifteen dollars; when the authorized capital stock exceeds twenty thousand dollars but does not exceed fifty thousand dollars, the tax shall be twenty dollars; when the authorized capital stock exceeds fifty thousand dollars but does not exceed one hundred thousand dollars, the tax shall be twenty-five dollars; when the authorized capital stock exceeds one hundred thousand dollars but does not exceed two hundred fifty thousand dollars, the tax shall be fifty dollars; when the authorized capital stock exceeds two hundred fifty thousand dollars but does not exceed five hundred thousand dollars, the tax shall be seventy-five dollars; when the authorized capital stock exceeds five hundred thousand dollars but does not exceed one million dollars, the tax shall be one hundred dollars; when the authorized capital stock exceeds one million dollars but does not exceed three million dollars, the tax shall be two hundred dollars; when the authorized capital stock exceeds three million dollars but does not exceed five million dollars, the tax shall be three hundred fifty dollars; when the authorized capital stock exceeds five million dollars but does not exceed seven million five hundred thousand dollars, the tax shall be five hundred fifty dollars; when the authorized capital stock exceeds seven million five hundred thousand dollars but does not exceed ten million dollars, the tax shall be eight hundred dollars; when the authorized capital stock exceeds ten million dollars, the tax shall be one thousand dollars; when the capital stock of any corporation has no par value the tax shall be one hundred dollars; when part of the capital stock of any corporation has a par value and a part of such stock has no par value, the tax shall be computed upon such par value stock in accordance with the admeasurement schedule herein established, to which sum shall be added the sum of fifty dollars. Building and loan companies and associations shall pay an annual license tax of ten dollars.

"All corporations having no capital stock, but organized for profit, shall pay an annual tax of ten dollars. Said license tax shall be due and payable to the secretary of state on the 1st day of January of each and every year. Such license tax shall be paid on or before the hour of 6 o'clock p. m. of the 1st Monday of February of each year and if not so paid shall at said hour become delinquent and there shall thereupon be added thereto as a penalty for such delinquency the sum of ten dollars."

The act also provides penalties for failure to pay the license fee within the time prescribed by law and for persistent failure provides for a forfeiture of its right to transact business within the state. It also makes it a misdemeanor to carry on business within the state after such right has been forfeited and perhaps some other penalties.

The proceeding before us involves the validity of said above-quoted provision requiring the payment of the annual license fee. It will be noted that this fee is in no wise regulated by either the amount of property owned, capital employed, or business done within the state. Indeed, it bears no relation whatever to the property owned, capital employed, or business volume of the corporation either in or out of the state or at all. The tax is predicated solely upon the authorized capital stock of the corporation and is wholly without relation to any other standard. Again, the corporation thus taxed may never issue the amount of stock authorized, and, if it does, it may employ the whole thereof in its business elsewhere than in California. A corporation with a small amount of authorized capital stock may be doing an immense business in California and be required to pay only a small privilege tax, whereas, on the other hand, a corporation with a large authorized capital stock may be doing an insignificant amount of business in California, and under this act be required to pay a larger privilege tax. Further, two corporations may be doing an equal amount of business in California; one with an authorized capital of $100,000 would be required to pay a tax of $25, while the other with an authorized capital of $1,000,000 would be required to pay a tax of $100 for no greater privilege.

Petitioner asserts the invalidity of that portion of said act above quoted, in an original proceeding in mandate against respondent as secretary of state, alleging substantially as follows:

(a) That it is a foreign corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the state of Minnesota, with its principal place of business at St. Paul therein.

(b) That it is engaged in the business of manufacturing, selling, and installing wood and metal doors, ornamental iron, wire goods, structural steel and sheet metal products, including especially steel rolling doors, tin clad doors and similar products, and in carrying on such trade in both interstate and intrastate commerce throughout the country.

(c) That it has an authorized capital stock of $50,000, with, however, only $20,000 thereof issued and outstanding, which said latter amount represents the total investment in said business.

(d) That as a part of its interstate business it is advisable and financially advantageous to it to carry on in several states intrastate business as well as interstate business, which said intrastate business is inseparably and inextricably interwoven with its interstate business.

(e) That the amount of capital employed in California does not exceed one-half of 1 per cent. of its total invested capital.

(f) That, desiring to qualify for the transaction of intrastate business in the state of California, it did on April 1, 1926, offer to comply with said above-mentioned act, known as the Corporation License Act, by tendering to the secretary of state a certified copy of its charter, with regular filing fee therefor, affidavit as to authorized capital stock, and designation of a resident agent, and offered to comply with all other provisions of said act applicable thereto, save and alone the payment of the sum of $15 claimed by said respondent as such secretary of state as a license fee under the above-quoted provision of said act.

Respondent by admission or insufficient denial conceded the existence of the foregoing facts, but refused to accept said copy of charter and other documents tendered or to allow same to be filed or to otherwise allow petitioner to qualify for intrastate business unless and until it paid the said license tax. The pleadings, proof, and admission of facts above noted bring squarely before us the validity of said provision requiring an annual license fee when tested by the commerce clause of and the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

[1] Of course, it requires no debate nor review of authorities to hold that the plain duty of this court is to speedily mold its rulings in conformity with the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States upon these subjects. The strength and stability of our federation of states lie in our noninterference with the constitutional powers which have been specially ceded to the central government. It was upon this very point that the Articles of Confederation were weak and the condition was remedied by the commerce clause, the Fourteenth Amendment and other powers which have been reposed by the Constitution exclusively in the federal government.

Unfortunately for respondent in this case, the Supreme Court of the United States has squarely and plainly spoken on the subject before us and has promulgated the following canons of interpretation:

> "In cases involving the validity of laws of a state imposing license fees or excise taxes on corporations organized in another state, this court has decided:
> " '1. The power of a state to regulate the transaction of a local business within its borders by a foreign corporation—meaning a corporation of a sister state—is not unrestricted or absolute, but must be exerted in subordination to the limitations which the Constitution places on state action.
> " '2. Under the commerce clause exclusive power to regulate interstate commerce rests in Congress, and a state statute which either directly or by its necessary operation burdens such commerce is invalid, regardless of the purpose with which it was enacted.
> " '3. Consistently with the due-process clause, a state cannot tax property belonging to a foreign corporation and neither located nor used within the confines of the state.
> " '4. That a foreign corporation is partly, or even chiefly, engaged in interstate commerce does not prevent a state in which it has property and is doing a local business from taxing that property and imposing a license fee or excise in respect of that business, but the state cannot require the corporation as a condition of the right to do a local business therein to submit to a tax on its interstate business or on its property outside the state.
> " '5. A license fee or excise of a given per cent. of the entire authorized capital of a foreign corporation doing both a local and interstate business in several states, although declared by the state imposing it to be merely a charge for the privilege of conducting a local business therein, is essentially and for every practical purpose a tax on the entire business of the corporation, including that which is interstate, and on its entire property, including that in other states; and this because the capital stock of the corporation represents all its business of every class and all its property wherever located.' " International Paper Co. v. Massachusetts, 246 U. S. 135, 141, 38 S. Ct. 292, 294 (62 L. Ed. 624, Ann. Cas. 1918C, 617); Air-Way Elec. Appliance Cor. v. Day, 266 U. S. 71, 45 S. Ct. 12, 69 L. Ed. 169.

[2] Petitioner insists that the provision of the Corporation License Act in question is clearly violative under the above specifications of both the commerce clause and the Fourteenth Amendment in that it lays an unwarranted burden upon interstate commerce, taxes property outside the state over which the state of California has no jurisdiction, and denies to persons within the jurisdiction of California the equal protection of the laws. Clearly, there is no escape from this conclusion. Indeed, the case of Air-Way, etc., Cor. v. Day, supra, seems squarely to decide these very questions. There a law of the state of Ohio was under test, the germane provisions of which were as follows:

> "Section 5503 (enacted May 31, 1911) imposes an annual fee required of foreign corporations having capital stock with par value as follows: 'On or before October 15th, the auditor of state shall charge for collection, as herein provided, annually, from such company, in addition to the initial fees otherwise provided for by law, for the privilege of exercising its franchises in this state, a fee of three-twentieths of 1 per cent. upon the proportion of the authorized capital stock of the corporation represented by the property owned and used and business transacted in this state. * * *'
> "An Act of May 17 [14], 1921 (sec. 8728—11, General Code of Ohio), provides: '* * * The amount of fees payable by a foreign corporation having common stock without par value * * * under section 5503 shall be three-twentieths of 1 per cent. upon the proportion of the authorized preferred stock represented by property owned and used and business transacted in this state and 5 cents per share upon the proportion of the number of shares of authorized common stock, represented by property owned and used and business transacted in this state. * * *" Air-Way, etc., Cor. v. Day, supra, pages 78, 79 (45 S. Ct. 13).

It will be noted that this Ohio statute makes a pretense at least of setting up a standard bearing some relation to property owned and used and business done within said state. In the case before us we have not even this consolation for, as above noted, the act has as its only measure the authorized capital stock of the corporation, regardless of the property owned and used or business done within the state of California.

The facts in the Ohio Case were as follows: Plaintiff was incorporated under the laws of Delaware, with an authorized capital stock of 400,000 shares without par value, one half of which was common stock and the other half founders' stock. The only difference between the two classes of stock was the voting power thereof. The corporation obtained from the secretary of the state of Ohio, in conformity with its laws, a certificate of admission to do business in that state, and it also paid the initial fee for the privilege of there exercising its franchise. It also had a certificate from the commissioner of securities of said state authorizing it to sell its stock therein. It acquired two large manufacturing plants at Toledo and commenced the business of manufacturing electrical household appliances and selling them in intrastate and interstate commerce. It had issued only 50,485 shares of stock, of which 10,010 shares were common and 40,475 were founders' stock. All of its property, valued at $458,278.56, was located in Ohio, and the amount of business transacted the preceding year was $250,954.58. The admitted value of the stock was $7 per share. An annual license fee of $20,000 was demanded, and by reason of the intrastate business as distinguished from the entire business transacted, it was reduced to $14,926. In other words, instead of being calculated on 400,000 shares, it was calculated on 298,520 shares, the first charge being about eight times the issued capital stock, and the latter amount being six times the issued capital stock.

The Supreme Court of the United States, without dissent on the part of any member thereof, declared this law invalid, using in part the following language:

> "All plaintiff's business, intrastate and interstate, and all its property wherever located were represented by the 50,485 shares of stock outstanding. The annual fee demanded by the state officers is five cents per share on 400,000 shares, and that fixed by the lower court is based on 298,520 shares. The inevitable effect of the act is to tax and directly burden interstate commerce of foreign corporations permitted to do business in Ohio, and engaged in interstate commerce, wherever the number of shares authorized, subject to the charge of five cents each, exceeds the number of outstanding shares attributable to or represented by the corporation's property and business in that state. In this case, the fee fixed by the commission was based on nearly eight times the number of outstanding shares and that determined by the court on nearly six times that number. As some of the outstanding shares are represented by plaintiff's interstate business, the application of the rate to all the shares, or to a number greater than the total outstanding, necessarily amounts to a tax and direct burden upon all the property and business including the interstate commerce of the plaintiff. International Paper Co. v. Massachusetts, supra, 142 (38 S. Ct. 292, 62 L. Ed. 624, Ann. Cas. 1918C, 617). We hold that the act violates the commerce clause.
> "The fee determined by the lower court, as well as that fixed by the state officers, is arbitrary. Without holding that such a charge must be measured by the value of the privilege for which it is imposed, it may be said that some relation to such value is a reasonable requirement. * * * The number of nonpar value shares of the corporation is not an indication of, and does not purport to be a representation as to, the amount of its capital. Each outstanding share represents merely an aliquot part of its assets. The number of shares not subscribed or issued has no relation to the privilege held by plaintiff in Ohio, and it is not a reasonable measure of such a fee. Such shares may never be subscribed or issued, or additional shares may be issued to acquire property or do business in other states or to carry on interstate commerce. Plainly the fee, to the extent that it is based on a number of shares in excess of those outstanding, has no relation to what was paid in for the stock or to its value or to the amount of plaintiff's capital, its property or its business, intrastate in Ohio or interstate. The act in its practical operation does not require like fees for equal privileges held by foreign corporations in Ohio under the same circumstances. Unless, under the laws of the states where organized they chance to be authorized to issue the same number of nonpar value shares, the annual franchise fees imposed on foreign corporations having the same amount of property and business, and exercising the same privileges in Ohio will not be the same; and the charge imposed on one may be many times that made against another. * * * Again, compare two corporations organized in a sister state having the same number of authorized nonpar value shares, one having property and business of little value, all in Ohio, and the other having much more property and business in that state, and also much property and business in other states. The act would require the former to pay five cents per share on all its shares, but would require the latter to pay a fee based only on the proportion of its shares representing its property owned and used and business transacted in Ohio.
> "It is clear that the mere number of authorized nonpar value shares is not a reasonable basis for the classification of foreign corporations for the purpose of determining the amount of such annual fees. Such a classification is not based on anything having relation to the purpose for which it is made. Southern Ry. Co. v. Greene, 216 U. S. 400, 417 (30 S. Ct. 287, 54 L. Ed. 536, 17 Ann. Cas. 1247); Royster Guano Co. v. Virginia, 253 U. S. 412, 415 (40 S. Ct. 560, 64 L. Ed. 989). The act has no tendency to produce equality; and it is of such a character that there is no reasonable presumption that substantial equality will result from its application. Martin v. District of Columbia, 205 U. S. 135, 139 (27 S. Ct. 440, 51 L. Ed. 743); Gast Realty Co. v. Schneider Granite Co., 240 U. S. 55, 58 (36 S. Ct. 254, 60 L. Ed. 523); Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v. Road Improvement District, 256 U. S. 658, 660 (41 S. Ct. 604, 65 L. Ed. 1151). The act violates the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment." Air-Way, etc., Cor. v. Day, supra, pages 82–85 (45 S. Ct. 14).
> "It must now be regarded as settled that a state may not burden interstate commerce or tax property beyond her borders under the guise of regulating or taxing intrastate business. So to burden interstate commerce is prohibited by the commerce clause; and the Fourteenth Amendment does not permit taxation of property beyond the state's jurisdiction. The amount demanded is unimportant when there is no legitimate basis for the tax. So far as the language of Baltic Mining Company v. Massachusetts, 231 U. S. 68, 87 (34 S. Ct. 15, 58 L. Ed. 127, 134), tends to support a different view, it conflicts with conclusions reached in later opinions and is now definitely disapproved." (Alpha Portland Cement Co. v. Mass., 268 U. S. 203, 218, 45 S. Ct. 477, 481 [69 L. Ed. 916, 44 A. L. R. 1219]).

These decisions realign the court in accord with such previous decisions as Western Union Tel. Co. v. Kansas, 216 U. S. 1, 30 S. Ct. 190, 54 L. Ed. 355; Pullman Co. v. Kansas, 216 U. S. 56, 30 S. Ct. 232, 54 L. Ed. 378; Ludwig v. Western Union Tel. Co., 216 U. S. 146, 30 S. Ct. Rep. 280, 54 L. Ed. 423; Atchison, etc., Ry. Co. v. O'Connor, 223 U. S. 280, 32 S. Ct. 216, 56 L. Ed. 436, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1050; International Text-Book Co. v. Pigg, 217 U. S. 91, 30 S. Ct. 481, 54 L. Ed. 678, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 493, 18 Ann. Cas. 1103; Buck's

Stove & Range Co. v. Vickers, 226 U. S. 205, 33 S. Ct. 41, 57 L. Ed. 189, and produce harmony between those decisions and the following cases: Looney v. Crane Co., 245 U. S. 178, 38 S. Ct. 85, 62 L. Ed. 230; International Paper Co. v. Mass., 246 U. S. 135, 38 S. Ct. 292, 62 L. Ed. 624, Ann. Cas. 1918C, 617; Air-Way, etc., Cor. v. Day, supra; and Alpha Portland Cement Co. v. Mass., supra.

The so-called Baltic-Dental Case (Baltic Mining Co. and S. S. White Mfg. Co. v. Commonwealth of Mass., 231 U. S. 68, 34 S. Ct. 15, 58 L. Ed. 127) has in some respects been distinguished and in other respects definitely overruled. See Looney v. Crane Co., supra, and Alpha Portland Cement Co. v. Mass., supra.

The effect of this realignment of the Supreme Court of the United States is to necessarily overthrow our holding in the case of Pick & Co. v. Jordan, 169 Cal. 1, 145 P. 506, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 1237, and to revive the doctrine announced in the case of Mulford Co. v. Curry, 163 Cal. 276, 125 P. 236. We accord to the Legislature a sincere effort to frame a law that was just as far as the amount of the charges to foreign corporations desiring to enter our state for intrastate business was concerned, and the Legislature, no doubt, acted in perfect good faith, relying upon the validity of the decision in the case of Pick & Co. v. Jordan, supra, but in view of the holding of the United States Supreme Court above announced, that a law on this subject in order to be valid must bear at least some relation to property owned and used and business carried on or proposed to be carried on within the state of California, we must bow to the supremacy of the federal Constitution in this matter as interpreted by the highest court of our country.

[3] There is no substance in the argument of respondent that a different principle may apply in the case of filing fees graded on authorized capital than in the case of a privilege or excise tax based upon authorized capital. The effect upon interstate commerce and upon equal protection of the law to persons in the several states is the test, and neither the name nor the aim of the state tax can suffice to prevent consideration by the Supreme Court of the United States of the necessary effect and consequences of the state statute.

[4] Respondent contends also that the tax was simply measured by this standard, and, being an excise or privilege tax, there can be no objection to using the authorized capital as a foot rule for such measurement. This point is abundantly answered by the above authorities, and recently the Supreme Court of the United States specially dealt with the question as follows:

"One ground on which the state court put its decision was that, in taxing the transfer of the property which the decedent owned in Pennsylvania, it was admissible to take as a basis for computing the tax the combined value of that property and the property in New York and Massachusetts. Of course, this was but the equivalent of saying that it was admissible to measure the tax by a standard which took no account of the distinction between what the state had power to tax and what it had no power to tax, and which necessarily operated to make the amount of the tax just what it would have been had the state's power included what was excluded by the Constitution. This ground, in our opinion, is not tenable. It would open the way for easily doing indirectly what is forbidden to be done directly, and would render important constitutional limitations of no avail. If Pennsylvania could tax according to such a standard other states could. It would mean, as applied to the Frick estate, that Pennsylvania, New York and Massachusetts could each impose a tax based on the value of the entire estate, although severally having jurisdiction of only parts of it. Without question each state had power to tax the transfer of so much of the estate as was under its jurisdiction, and also had some discretion in respect of the rate; but none could use that power and discretion in accomplishing an unconstitutional end, such as indirectly taxing the transfer of the part of the estate which was under the exclusive jurisdiction of others [citing many cases]." Frick v. Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, 268 U. S. 473, 494, 45 S. Ct. 603, 606 (69 L. Ed. 1058, 42 A. L. R. 316).

There are other attacks made by petitioner and by amici curiæ under the same provisions of the Constitution of the United States upon the statute in question, but the above holding makes it unnecessary to further pursue this branch of the subject.

[5] There is likewise no merit to the contention of respondent that mandate will not lie, because, if this provision is invalid, the whole act must fall with it. We think the provision in question and the provisions dependent thereon are and each of them is clearly severable from the remainder of the act, and that no injury will be done to the integrity of the other provisions by the holding here made. Mandamus is, therefore, the proper remedy. Mulford Co. v. Curry, supra; Pick & Co. v. Jordan, supra; Melville Clark Piano Co. v. Jordan, 169 Cal. 804, 145 P. 516.

We find nothing in the cases of Schwab (Oceanic Steamship Co.) v. Richardson, 188 Cal. 27, 204 P. 396, and 263 U. S. 88, 44 S. Ct. 60, 68 L. Ed. 183, and Pullman Company v. Richardson, 185 Cal. 484, 197 P. 346, and 261 U. S. 330, 43 S. St. 366, 67 L. Ed. 682, which is opposed to the views above announced.

Let the writ of mandate issue as prayed for.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ira F. Thompson, Judge.

Action by Charles M. Mix against F. E. Yoakum and another, as executors of the last will and testament of Finis E. Yoakum, deceased. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Newby & Palmer, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Meserve & Meserve, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHENK, J. This is an appeal from a judgment dismissing an action on a claim against the estate of Finis E. Yoakum, deceased. A demurrer, general and special, to the amended complaint was overruled in one department of the trial court, and the defendants answered. When the cause proceeded to trial in another department, a witness on behalf of the plaintiff having been sworn, counsel for the defendants objected to the introduction of any evidence on the ground that the said amended complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The objection was sustained, the plaintiff declined to amend, and the judgment of dismissal from which this appeal is taken was entered.

Briefly stated, the plaintiff alleges that prior to his death, the decedent was a minister who claimed to be a divine healer; that the plaintiff had an invalid child who the decedent said was possessed of a demon, which he would drive out of the child by prayer; that plaintiff relied on the assurance of the decedent in that respect, was converted to the latter's faith, attended his church, and remained a communicant thereof until the death of the decedent, still having and retaining the greatest confidence in the integrity and benevolence of the decedent; that in May, 1906, the plaintiff was about to return to his old home in an Eastern state because of his inability to obtain employment in California, of which fact, and also of the fact that the plaintiff had some funds on hand, the decedent became aware; that thereupon decedent represented to the plaintiff that, if he would remain in California, he would continue to pray for the plaintiff's daughter, and that, if plaintiff would deliver to the decedent the said funds, the decedent and one D. M. McDonald would hold the funds for plaintiff "as a trust fund," to be by them loaned to various persons such as they should select, and that such funds would earn not less than 12 per cent. per annum; that they would pay the plaintiff such interest as his money would earn from time to time; and that they "would repay to him the principal at such time as he should demand the same"; that the plaintiff, because of the confidential relations existing as aforesaid, believed and relied upon the said representations, and so believing and relying he delivered to said Yoakum and the said McDonald checks, United States bonds, and money aggregating $3,300, to be used by them in making said loans; that the said Yoakum and McDonald paid to the plaintiff interest on said sum of $3,300 at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum, which they reported to the plaintiff was earned by said money, up to and until the 4th day of April, 1915; that there is now due from the said estate the sum of $3,300, with interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum from April 4, 1915, no part of which has been paid, except several items in the aggregate amount of $167.89, the last of which was paid September, 1917. It was further alleged that the said Finis E. Yoakum died testate on the 17th day of August, 1920 leaving an estate in the county of Los Angeles; that his will was admitted to probate, and that letters testamentary were issued on April 4, 1921, to the defendants herein; that notice to creditors was first published on April 7, 1921; and that on the 25th day of the same month the plaintiff presented to the executors his verified claim for $3,300, plus interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from April 4, 1915; and that said claim was never allowed or rejected by said executors. A copy of the claim is then set forth, in which it is stated that the amounts therein specified aggregating the total of $3,300 were delivered to the decedent and said McDonald to be held by them in trust for the claimant, and to be loaned by them for the claimant's use and benefit. No action having been taken on said claim, this suit was commenced on February 20, 1922, wherein it is prayed that judgment be rendered for the sum of $3,300, together with interest from the 4th day of April, 1915, at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum and for general relief.

The defendants attack the complaint on numerous grounds, many of which go to the sufficiency thereof as against a special demurrer, and which do not now require consideration. The only question for determination on this appeal is whether the plaintiff has set forth facts sufficient to entitle him to relief against the estate.

[1, 2] It is well settled that in an action on a rejected claim a claimant can only recover upon the cause of action set forth in his claim. Estate of Dutard, 147 Cal. 253, 81 P. 519, and cases cited. There is a clear distinction between the cause of action of one who claims specific property held and claimed by the estate adversely to the claimant and a cause of action founded upon a claim against the estate. In the one case the claimant is in no sense a creditor of the estate, and in the other he occupies the position of a creditor. Estate of Dutard, supra. It is clear that the foundation of the claim of the plaintiff herein is of the latter class. He does not pursue any specific fund or property, but as a general creditor seeks a money judgment, which, if obtained, would be paid in due course of administration. The allegations of the complaint follow the averments of the claim, and as such are sufficient upon which to establish an express trust. Schroeder v. Jahns, 27 Cal. 274; Orcutt v. Gould, 117 Cal. 315, 49 P. 188.

It is insisted that the complaint is fatally defective because it does not allege that the trust fund or the proceeds thereof cannot be traced to specific money or property in the hands of the defendants. We do not deem such an averment essential. Counsel for the defendants have cited numerous cases to the effect that, when the money or property delivered to the defendant cannot be traced to a specific fund or property in the hands of the personal representative, the claimant is in the position of a general creditor, and cannot recover except by the presentation of a claim against the estate. But we have been cited to no authority in this state or elsewhere to the effect that the claimant is compelled to allege and prove a specific fund or property in the hands of the estate when he is seeking to recover as a general creditor. It would seem to be true that, if the claimant elect to occupy the less advantageous position of a general creditor, he has the option to do so, and it must be assumed, in the absence of an allegation to the effect that the trust fund can be traced to specific money or property, that it is impossible for the claimant to so truthfully aver, and, if he does so aver and prove, he may not then be deemed also a general creditor.

[3-5] It is further insisted that there is no intimation in the complaint that the funds are not in the possession of McDonald. We deem this objection not available to the defendants under the situation here presented, for we cannot now consider the sufficiency of the complaint as against a special demurrer on the ground of a defect or of misjoinder of parties defendant. It is contended that it is not alleged that demand for the money was made prior to the death of the decedent, or that there was any repudiation of the trust during the lifetime of the decedent. Assuming that there was no such demand or repudiation, the plaintiff's cause of action was not affected thereby, for the reason that the said cause of action under such circumstances did not accrue against the testator during his lifetime, but did accrue against the executors of his estate. The statute of limitations would not commence to run until repudiation of the trust or until demand was made. No such repudiation or demand is alleged except the demand upon the executors and their refusal to act. Upon rejection or such refusal the statute would commence to run. Schroeder v. Jahns, supra.

[6] It is contended that the amended complaint is insufficient, for the reason that it does not allege that the plaintiff elected to deem the claim rejected after the expiration of the tenth day following its presentation. Section 1496 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that, if an executor refuse or neglect to indorse an allowance or rejection on the claim for ten days after the same has been presented to him, such refusal or neglect may "at the option of the claimant, be deemed equivalent to a rejection on the tenth day." The complaint alleges that the said claim was presented to the defendants as executors at the place designated in the notice to creditors, and that the claim has never been allowed or rejected by the executors or either of them. We think the filing of the complaint after the expiration of the tenth day and within the statutory period, as was done in this case, constituted an election on the part of the plaintiff to deem the claim rejected. Cowgill v. Dinwiddie, 98 Cal. 481, 33 P. 439; Barclay v. Blackinton, 127 Cal. 189, 59 P. 834.

[7, 8] In the claim the plaintiff demanded interest on the principal sum. In the prayer of the complaint such interest is likewise demanded. It is insisted that interest is not allowable. Whether interest should be allowed under the facts as developed on the trial is a question we need not now decide. The fact that the plaintiff may have demanded more than that to which he was entitled did not render the complaint subject to the general demurrer. Nor do we think that the plaintiff is not entitled to relief by reason of the fact that a money judgment only is demanded without a prayer that the same be paid in due course of administration. If a judgment for any sum be rendered in favor of the plaintiff, it would necessarily be paid in due course of administration, for the plaintiff would take his place as a general creditor.

[9, 10] The defendants insist upon the application of the rule that a pleading must be taken most strongly against the pleader. This rule received recognition in the earlier cases (Chipman v. Emeric, 5 Cal. 49, 63 Am. Dec. 80; Joseph v. Holt, 37 Cal. 250), and the old rule seems to have received some, but we think, ill-considered notice in Silvers v. Grossman, 183 Cal. 696, 192 P. 534, where, on page 702 (192 P. 537), a quotation from Joseph v. Holt, supra, is set forth. Since the enactment of section 452 of the Code of Civil Procedure in 1872, it has been generally recognized that, in the construction of a pleading for the purpose of determining its effect, "its allegations must be liberally construed, with a view to substantial justice between the parties." Estate of Wickersham, 153 Cal. 603, 96 P. 311; Menefee v. Oxnam, 42 Cal. App. 81, 183 P. 379. If it be assumed that there is a presumption against the pleader when the pleading is silent as to an essential averment, such presumption would not go to the length of requiring allegations in anticipation of matters of defense or to negative the existence of defensive matters. 21 Cal. Jur. 51–53.

We conclude that the pleading under attack contains a statement of facts sufficient as against a general demurrer.

The judgment is reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; R. Y. Williams, Judge.

Action by Daniel Norland, by his guardian ad litem, C. Norland, against George B. Gould and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. Donaghy and Loren W. Smith, both of Santa Ana, for appellant.

Joe Crider, Jr., of Los Angeles, and W. F. Menton, of Santa Ana, for respondents.

LANGDON, J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment against him in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff Daniel Norland when he was a minor of the age of ten years. The action was brought by plaintiff by his duly appointed guardian ad litem against the Excelsior Creamery Company, the owner of an automobile truck which injured plaintiff, and George B. Gould, the driver of said truck at the time of the accident.

The plaintiff was injured while attempting to board the automobile truck, which was loaded with hay and was traveling slowly along the highway. Plaintiff's cause of action is based upon the alleged willful and wanton negligence of the defendant Gould in omitting to use due care to avoid the injury to plaintiff.

[1] When the cause came on for trial, the record shows that the attorney for plaintiff said, "What do I understand about the jury this morning?" to which the court replied, "Why, I understand the rule was not complied with and the money was not put up for this jury, and therefore the jury was waived." Counsel attempted to persuade the court to grant a continuance and permit a jury trial, despite the asserted waiver, and the court refused to do so. There is nothing in the record which shows compliance by plaintiff with the following rule of court, which was read into the record:

> "In any case, other than a criminal case, the party desiring a trial by jury must, at least ten days before the day set for trial, or if the order setting the case for trial is made less than ten days before the time fixed for trial, then at the time such order is made, deposit with the clerk the sum of twenty-four dollars for the payment of jury fees. If such sum is not so deposited a trial by jury shall be deemed waived and the court will proceed to trial without a jury."

Section 129 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

> "Every court of record may make rules not inconsistent with the laws of this state, for its own government and the government of its officers. * * *"

The law of this state is:

> "A trial by jury may be waived * * * in civil actions by the consent of the parties, signified in such manner as may be prescribed by law." Article 1, § 7, Const. of Cal.

There is nothing in the record showing a compliance by plaintiff with the foregoing rule of court, and, indeed, it is not contended upon appeal that he did comply therewith; but the contention is that he should be excused from the consequences of noncompliance. The case of Naphtaly v. Rovegno, 130 Cal. 639, 63 P. 66, 621, presents a similar point and it was there held that the appellant was not entitled to a new trial. We find no grounds for disturbing the exercise of the discretion of the trial court with reference to this matter.

[2] The trial court heard the evidence and found that the defendant Gould was operating a truck owned by the Excelsior Creamery Company at the time of the injury to plaintiff, and while driving this truck along the highway he overtook plaintiff and two companions, all under the age of 11 years; that Gould did not invite the boys to get upon his truck, and did not slow down to allow them to do so; that plaintiff's two companions got upon the running board of said truck, and from there climbed upon the seat, and were sitting beside Gould when the accident happened; that plaintiff attempted to follow his companion, and that in said attempt, while he was hanging to the side thereof, without the knowledge or consent of Gould, he fell from said truck, and the rear wheel thereof passed over his foot and leg; that Gould did not discover that plaintiff was attempting to board said truck until approximately the time of the accident, and too late for Gould to give any aid to plaintiff to prevent said accident; that the injury to plaintiff was not caused by the wanton or willfull or any negligence or by entire or any absence of care on the part of Gould.

Appellant insists that these findings are not sustained by the evidence. With this contention we cannot agree. Gould testified that he first saw the boys when they were attempting to catch the truck ahead of the one he was driving; that they, apparently, stepped back to the right-hand side of the road; that he called to them not to attempt to board his truck: that the truck was heavily loaded with hay. The next he saw of the children was when one of the boys was climbing up on the truck. He proceeded to scold him for boarding trucks, and while doing so he caught a glimpse of plaintiff's head as he was falling down from the truck. The plaintiff testified that his two companions jumped upon the moving truck, and he was behind them.

> "I grabbed hold and put my knee on; this knee was on, and this foot here got on a rock and tripped me.
> "Q. Then what happened? A. Then I fell down and they ran over me."

[3] Appellant contends that the findings show a want of care on the part of defendant which would entitle the plaintiff to recover, but it appears to us that, as a matter of fact and of law, the injury was caused by the negligence of plaintiff without any contributing factor from the defendants. A case analogous in principle to the instant case is found in Allred v. Pioneer Truck Co., 179 Cal. 315, 176 P. 455, wherein it is said:

> "At the time of the accident an employee of plaintiff was driving a furniture van, drawn by three horses, along Broadway, in the city of San Diego. As constructed, this van was an inclosed box some twelve or fifteen feet in length, six feet high and five feet in width, with a tail or end gate three feet wide, suspended by chains so that the outer edge was but two feet eight inches above the surface of the street. The van was filled with furniture, by reason of which neither the driver nor the assistant with him, occupying the front seat of the vehicle, could see the end gate upon which, unknown to them, three or four boys were riding. Melvin Allred and another lad were on their way to school, and seeing these boys on the end gate they ran to the vehicle and his companion climbed upon the end gate. Young Allred, however, ran around the side of the wagon and either in attempting to climb on the projecting end of the brake-beam or by slipping upon the wet asphaltum pavement fell in front of the hind wheel, receiving injuries which caused his death. * * *
> "Construing the evidence thus summarized most strongly in favor of plaintiff, we are clearly of the opinion that it is insufficient to establish any neglect of duty on the part of the defendant toward the deceased. * * * Very few vehicles operated on highways are so constructed that boys cannot climb upon them or some parts thereof, and the proposition advanced, carried to its logical conclusion, would mean that the driver of an automobile or other vehicle whose duty requires him to observe the road along which he is traveling and attend to his motive power, must be argus-eyed or accompanied by outriders charged with the duty of seeing that small boys do not find lodgment upon the running boards or other parts of the vehicle or approach a position of danger where they may, as in this case, fall under a wheel. The law does not impose such duty on one lawfully operating a vehicle along a public street."

The foregoing language is very apt in connection with the facts presented upon the record before us.

The judgment is affirmed.

In re HINDE'S ESTATE.

HINDE et al. v. DIEDERICHSEN.

(L. A. 8945.)

1. Wills 🔑327—On motion for nonsuit in will contest, evidence favoring contestant must be taken as true, and contradictory evidence disregarded.

In will contest, all evidence in favor of contestant must, as against motion for nonsuit, be taken as true and contradictory evidence, if any, must be disregarded.

2. Wills 🔑324(3)—Evidence held to justify nonsuit of will contest as to undue influence of one alleged to be in confidential relationship with testator.

Evidence in will contest held to justify nonsuit as to ground that confidential relationship existed between decedent and sole beneficiary, and that latter exerted undue influence over testator.

3. Wills 🔑82—Will cannot be set aside because it is unjust, unreasonable, or cruel.

Testator has right to make unjust or unreasonable or even cruel will, and no will may be legally set aside on mere establishment that it is such a will.

4. Wills 🔑159—Undue influence to justify setting aside of will must result in execution of will not expressing testator's own desires.

To authorize setting aside of will for undue influence it must be shown, not only that undue influence was exercised, but that it produced effect on mind of testator by which will he executed was not expression of his own desires.

5. Wills 🔑163(8)—Presumption of undue influence over testator is not raised by showing interest and opportunity alone.

Presumption of undue influence over testator is not raised by proof of interest and opportunity alone, but there must be substantial proof of pressure actually overpowering volition of testator when will was made.

6. Wills 🔑324(3)—Evidence held to justify nonsuit in will contest as to charge that will was induced by fraudulent statements.

Evidence in will contest held to justify nonsuit as to ground that will was induced by fraudulent statements made by sole beneficiary though record disclosed sufficient opportunity for making such statements.

7. Wills 🔑360—Grounds of will contest apparently abandoned at trial will not be considered on appeal.

On appeal from will contest, it is unnecessary to consider any grounds of contest which were apparently abandoned at trial.

8. Appeal and error 🔑1075—Ruling granting new trial will not be considered on appeal, though notice of appeal therefrom was filed, where brief indicated abandonment of such appeal.

On appeal in will contest it was unnecessary to consider ruling granting new trial, though contestants filed notice of appeal therefrom, in view of statement in brief that they "are not here urging reversible error" in such action, since appeal from such order may be considered as having been abandoned.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. P. Cary, Judge.

Will contest by Lillie Hinde and others against Arthur Diederichsen, sole beneficiary and executor of the will of Alfred Hinde, deceased. After nonsuit as to five grounds of contest there was judgment revoking the probate of the will on the other ground alleged. A new trial was granted, and contestants appeal. Affirmed.

Sweet, Stearns & Forward, of San Diego, for appellants.

Eugene Daney, of San Diego, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal by the above-named contestants from a judgment of nonsuit and from an order granting a new trial.

Alfred Hinde, the decedent, was a resident of, and died in the county of, San Diego on November 14, 1923, at the age of 71 years. He left surviving him as his only heirs at law certain nieces and nephews, the contestants herein. By the terms of an olographic will bearing date October 25, 1923, the decedent bequeathed all of his property to the proponent, Arthur Diederichsen, a friend of some years' standing. The value of the estate is asserted to be in excess of $50,000. Upon the petition of the sole beneficiary, who is also named therein as executor, the said will was duly admitted to probate and letters testamentary issued to him. Thereafter the appellants filed their contest urging several grounds in support of a revocation of probate. As stated in the appellants' brief, the grounds of contest were:

> "(1) That the will was a forgery; (2) that the testator was of unsound mind at the time of the execution of the will; (3) that the will was the result of undue influence of Arthur Diederichsen exercised upon decedent by him when a relation of confidence and trust existed between decedent and said Diederichsen; (4) that the will was the product of a fraud practiced upon decedent by Arthur Diederichsen; (5) that the will was the result of undue influence exercised by Arthur Diederichsen; (6) that the will was mutilated, canceled, and torn by decedent prior to his death, for the purpose of revoking the same."

After issue joined, the cause was tried before a jury. A motion for nonsuit subsequently made on behalf of the respondent herein was granted as to all of the grounds of contest excepting that which had for its purpose an attack on the testamentary capacity of the testator. This latter issue was thereupon submitted to the jury, and it returned a verdict declaring the decedent to have been of unsound mind at the time he executed his will. In conformity with the terms of said verdict judgment was entered revoking the probate of decedent's will. The trial court thereafter made its order granting the respondent's motion for a new trial upon said issue of testamentary capacity.

In support of their appeal from the judgment of nonsuit the appellants contend that evidence had been introduced by them sufficient to warrant the submission to the jury of the issues raised by the grounds of contest numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, and 6. It is asserted by the contestants that the evidence adduced by them established the existence of a confidential relationship between the decedent and the respondent and an activity upon the latter's part in procuring the execution of the will, which, when considered together, were sufficient to place the burden upon the proponent of proving that the will was not induced by undue influence or fraud.

[1, 2] We are in accord with the rule announced in Estate of Newhall, 190 Cal. 709, 719, 214 P. 231, 235 (28 A. L. R. 778) cited by the appellants, which upon a will contest requires that—

> "All of the evidence in favor of the contestant must as against a motion for a nonsuit, be taken as true, and contradictory evidence, if any, must be disregarded. This having been done, if there is any substantial evidence tending to prove the fact necessary to make out the contestant's case, the motion for a nonsuit must be denied and the case given to the jury."

Application of this rule to the instant case, however, clearly indicates the correctness of the trial court's judgment of nonsuit. A painstaking research of the record fails to disclose any evidence tending to show or establish that a confidential relationship existed between the decedent and the respondent, and likewise fails to reveal any evidence which would give credence to the allegations and assertions of undue influence and fraud.

Our survey of the record indicates that the decedent, a retired physician, and the respondent were intimate and warm personal friends for a number of years. On September 9, 1923, the testator became ill as a result of having partaken of tainted fowl, and the respondent, upon learning of his plight, immediately attempted to alleviate his suffering. Conscious of his duty to a friend, the respondent remained with the decedent at the latter's home for several nights ministering to his wants. The respondent thereafter removed the decedent to his (respondent's) home, where he could receive that care required by one so afflicted. Subsequently, and when the circumstances necessitated it, the testator was removed by the respondent to the Paradise Valley Sanitarium, where he also remained with him for several nights. His visits to see the decedent at the hospital were of frequent occurrence, and continued until the decedent passed away on November 14, 1923. At this point it may be remarked that the evidence discloses that all of the contestants, excepting Lillie Hinde, were residents of England. They had not seen the testator for many years, and their communication with him had been confined to an occasional exchange of letters. The contestant Lillie Hinde, however, had come to the United States at the solicitation of the decedent. For a period of time they resided together. It appears from various communications addressed by the decedent to the contestants long prior to his demise that he was grieved at the treatment accorded him by said contestants, and more particularly by Lillie Hinde. In addition to this, the decedent had remarked to several witnesses that he did not want Lillie Hinde near him, as they could not live together amicably. It is also significant to note in this respect that the decedent had, approximately two weeks prior to his death, addressed a letter to the contestant Minnie Eaton, in England, wherein he stated that he was staying with "very dear friends who consider me one of the family & they are doing everything possible for me & are most attentive to my every need & request. I've known them for years and I'm greatly indebted to them for a thousand & one kindnesses done." This same missive likewise indicated that the decedent had "dropped Lillie altogether & will not allow her to come near me," as she was "inconsiderate" and "unkind."

[3] With this picture before us it is easily understood why the testator chose to bestow his worldly accumulations upon the friend who had served him well rather than upon nieces and nephews from whom, for a long period of time, he had been disassociated, if not alienated. When these matters are borne in mind, there would appear to be nothing unnatural about the dispositive provisions of the decedent's will. However, even could it be said to be an unnatural will, and upon this question we express no opinion, it would be sufficient to state that a testator has the right to make an unjust, or an unreasonable, or even a cruel, will, and no will may be legally set aside upon the mere establishment that it is such a will. Estate of Smith (Cal. Sup.) 252 P. 325; Estate of Martin, 170 Cal. 657, 151 P. 138.

[4, 5] We are unable to conclude that the evidence introduced by the contestants is sufficient to warrant an inference that the will in question was the product of, and induced by, undue influence exerted by the respondent upon the testator. There is an utter lack of any proof of pressure brought to bear upon the testator which overpowered his mind and overcame his volition at the very time the will was made. Estate of Perkins, 195 Cal. 699, 235 P. 45; In re Rick's Estate, 160 Cal. 450, 117 P. 532. It is necessary to show, not only that undue influence has been exercised, but also that it has produced an effect upon the mind of the testator by which the will which he executes is not the expression of his own desires. The presumption of undue influence is not raised by proof of interest and opportunity alone. " 'In order to set aside a will for undue influence, there must be substantial proof of a pressure which overpowered the volition of the testator at the time the will was made.' " Estate of Bryson, 191 Cal. 521, 541, 217 P. 525, 533; Estate of Newhall, 190 Cal. 709, 717, 214 P. 231, 28 A. L. R. 778. In the instant case there is not, in our opinion, one iota of evidence tending to show the circumstances prevailing at the very time the will was executed. The contestants merely have shown that the respondent, at a time subsequent to the date appearing on the face of the will, and pursuant to the testator's request, attempted to have a certain attorney at law visit the testator. And that, in compliance with a second request of the decedent, the respondent succeeded in bringing said attorney to the Paradise Valley Sanitarium to see the testator on the day preceding his death. It was on the occasion of this visit that the respondent delivered the olographic will in question to the decedent, who, in turn, delivered it to said attorney for examination. Called on behalf of the contestants under section 2055 of the Code of Civil

Procedure, the respondent disclaimed all knowledge of the existence or whereabouts of the will until the day preceding the testator's death, when, in response to the latter's direction, he removed the will from its resting place under the mattress in the bed occupied by the decedent while staying at the respondent's home. Subsequent to a perusal of the contents of said will by the attorney of the testator's own choosing, the instrument was left by the decedent in the custody of said attorney. This evidence is uncontradicted, and, standing alone, fails to show that the mind of the testator, at the time of making the will, was subjugated to, and dominated by, the desires and designs of the respondent to the point of undue influence.

[6] Nor do we think there is any evidence which tends to support an inference that the will in question was induced by the fraudulent statements charged to the respondent. It may be conceded that the record discloses sufficient opportunity for the making of the alleged false statements. This, however, is not enough. In our opinion, there is a dearth of evidence tending to show that said false and fraudulent statements were in fact made.

[7] The record is also devoid of all evidence that might tend to establish the first and sixth grounds of contest. It therefore becomes unnecessary to consider either of these grounds of contest, inasmuch as they were apparently abandoned upon the trial.

[8] And, though the contestants filed a notice of appeal from the order granting a new trial upon the issue of testamentary capacity presented by the second ground of contest, it likewise becomes unnecessary to consider this phase of the case, for said contestants state in their brief that they "are not here urging reversible error in the action of the trial court in making its order granting a new trial." The appeal from said order may therefore properly be considered as having been abandoned by the contestants.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment of nonsuit and the order granting a new trial appealed from herein are, and each is, hereby affirmed.

ALLYNE et al. v. MURASKY, Superior Court Judge, et al. (S. F. 11830.)

1. Dismissal and nonsuit 🔑60(1)—Requirement for dismissal unless action brought to trial within five years held inapplicable to retrial after new trial granted (Code Civ. Proc. § 583).

Code Civ. Proc. § 583, providing that action shall be dismissed unless brought to trial within five years after answer is filed, except where parties have stipulated for extension of time, is not applicable to retrial of causes after new trial has been granted.

2. Dismissal and nonsuit 🔑60(1)—Where action was brought to trial within less than three years after filing of answer, defendants could not have dismissal thereof as of right (Code Civ. Proc. § 583).

Where action was brought to trial within less than three years after filing of answer, defendants were not entitled to have case dismissed as of right under Code Civ. Proc. § 583.

3. Dismissal and nonsuit 🔑60(1)—Court cannot read into statute providing for dismissal of action not tried within five years words compelling dismissal of actions not retried (Code Civ. Proc. § 583).

Since Code Civ. Proc. § 583, does not lay down rule of cases in which action has not been brought to trial within five years following order granting new trial, court cannot read therein words compelling dismissal of action not retried within five years after new trial was granted.

4. Statutes 🔑188—Words of a statute must be interpreted according to common acceptation.

The words in a statute are to be interpreted according to their common acceptation.

5. Dismissal and nonsuit 🔑67—Petition to dismiss action because not retried for nine years after motion for new trial granted held not to allege abuse of discretion.

Petition for mandamus to compel dismissal of action because there was no retrial for approximately nine years after granting of motion for new trial held not to allege breach of trial court's discretion in refusal to dismiss.

6. Mandamus 🔑154(2)—Petition for mandamus must state specific facts and make prima facie case to warrant alternative writ.

The petition for a writ of mandate must state specific facts sufficiently to justify granting of relief and make clear prima facie case to warrant alternative writ.

Petition by Lucy H. Allyne and others for a writ of mandate to be directed to Frank J. Murasky, Judge of the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of San Francisco, Department No. 2, and another, directing the dismissal of an action pending in said court. Writ denied.

Leicester & Leicester, of San Francisco, for petitioners.

Garret W. McEnerney and Andrew F. Burke, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

SEAWELL, J. [1] Petition for writ of mandate to be directed to the respondent superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco and to the honorable Frank J. Murasky, judge in department No. 2 of said respondent court, commanding a dismissal of a certain action heretofore commenced in said court. The principal question involved is whether the mandatory provisions of section 583, Code of Civil Procedure, require the dismissal of an action which has not been brought to trial within five years after the granting of a motion for a new trial. We are of the opinion that neither section 583 nor any other section of the Code compels a trial judge to dismiss an action under such circumstances.

The facts of the case, as they appear in the petition for the writ, are: Petitioners and one Mary J. Kelly were named as defendants in an action commenced in the court below on December 31, 1910, to quiet title to certain real property described in the complaint against all persons claiming any interest therein. Defendants Lucy H. Allyne, Edith W. Allyne and Agnes M. McGuire answered, admitting plaintiff's ownership and right to possession of all lands described in the complaint with the exception of a certain parcel known as Emmet place. As to said parcel, they alleged that they and each of them had a private right of way over it to and from adjoining lands owned by them, and that it was, and for more than forty years prior thereto had been, a public highway or street. Defendant Mary J. Kelly, since deceased, whose representative did not join in the petition herein, filed an answer of similar import. Defendant and petitioner city and county of San Francisco also filed an answer in which it alleged that the property in question constituted an open public street or highway. The case was tried on July 17, 1913, and a decree entered on November 29, 1913, adjudging plaintiff to be the owner and entitled to the possession of all lands described in the complaint with the exception of Emmet place. As to said Emmet place it was adjudged that plaintiff was the owner of the westerly 39 feet; that the entire parcel was a public street or alley, and that the public and said defendants had the right to pass over and use the same as and for a public street or alley.

Thereafter plaintiff made a motion for a new trial, which was granted on October 18, 1916. No further action was taken until September 24, 1925, almost nine years later, when those of defendants who are petitioners herein gave notice that they would move the court to dismiss the action upon the ground that plaintiff had failed to bring the action to trial within five years after the entry of the order granting a new trial. Plaintiff thereupon filed a notice of motion to set the cause for trial and also an affidavit in opposition to defendants' motion to dismiss, setting forth therein purported grounds for failure to bring the action to a second trial. The motion of plaintiff was granted and that of defendants denied.

Section 583, Code of Civil Procedure, provides:

> "Dismissal of Actions. The court may in its discretion dismiss any action for want of prosecution on motion of the defendant and after due notice to the plaintiff, whenever plaintiff has failed for two years after answer filed to bring such action to trial. Any action heretofore or hereafter commenced shall be dismissed by the court in which the same shall have been commenced or to which it may be transferred on motion of the defendant, after due notice to plaintiff or by the court on its own motion, unless such action is brought to trial within five years after the defendant has filed his answer, except where the parties have stipulated in writing that the time may be extended."

[2] The plain and obvious purpose of the foregoing section is to regulate the matter of compulsory dismissals only under one set of circumstances, to wit, where an answer has been filed and the action has not been brought to trial within five years thereafter. Other sections in the same chapter of the Code provide for dismissals under other circumstances, and if none of said sections pertaining to dismissals cover the situation in the instant case, where more than five years have elapsed since the entry of the order granting a new trial, it must be held that it is the duty of the trial judge to determine the question as to the reasonableness of the delay, and his determination cannot be disturbed by an appellate court unless it is made to appear that he has abused his discretion. Impliedly the court below held that it was satisfied that there was a reasonable excuse for the delay. In the case at bar the stage in the proceedings to which section 583 applied has passed, inasmuch as the action was brought to trial within slightly less than three years after the filing of the answer. For this delay the defendants were not entitled to have the case dismissed as a mandatory right (Romero v. Snyder, 167 Cal. 216, 138 P. 1002), but the court in the exercise of the discretion given it by said section 583, might have dismissed the action upon motion of the defendants. But a motion for dismissal was not made, and, inasmuch as the action was brought to trial within the five-year period of limitation, the requirements of the statute were satisfied.

[3, 4] Section 583 does not purport to lay down a rule governing cases in which an action has not been brought to trial within a period of five years immediately following the entry of an order granting a new trial. We are asked by the petitioners to do more than indulge in a liberal construction of a statute. We are asked here to extend a statute's operation by implication to a subject which, in the absence of a statutory regulation, was concededly within the discretion of the trial court. Section 583 was intended, no doubt, to compel expedition in the trial and disposition of causes. While this is admittedly so, we find no warrant in its language that would justify us in reading into the section words which would clearly compel a dismissal if an action be not retried within five years after a new trial has been granted. The words in the section are to be interpreted according to their common acceptation. Perrin v. Miller, 35 Cal. App. 129, 169 P. 426.

The case of Romero v. Snyder, 167 Cal. 216, 138 P. 1002, in which an attempt was made to extend the section to cover cases without its purview, while not conclusive on the point raised here, is persuasive, inasmuch as it refused to depart from the express language of the statute. In that case a motion to dismiss made within less than two years after demurrer filed was granted. The proceeding thereafter came before this court on appeal from the judgment of dismissal. It was there contended that the provision of section 583 authorizing the court in its discretion to "dismiss any action for want of prosecution on motion of the defendant and after due notice to the plaintiff, whenever plaintiff has failed for two years after answer filed to bring such action to trial" impliedly prohibited the court from dismissing within less than two years after answer filed, and that a demurrer was an answer within the meaning of the section. The court held that appellant was correct in the contention that an action could not be dismissed within less than two years after answer filed, but further held that a demurrer was not an answer, and where only a demurrer had been filed a dismissal might be made on the ground that a delay of less than two years was unreasonable. The statements made by the court in this case to the effect that said section 583 purports to cover the entire subject of dismissals after answer filed can fairly be interpreted to mean only after answer filed and before an action has been once brought to trial. If the five-year limitation was to be held to apply in the case at bar, it would necessarily follow that the two-year limitation would also apply, and that a trial judge would be powerless to determine that a delay of less than two years was unreasonable and warranted a dismissal. We cannot hold that the Legislature has indicated an intention to accomplish such a result by the enactment of section 583.

[5, 6] It was the evident theory of petitioners, as shown by the notice of motion to dismiss the action, that it was the mandatory duty of the court to dismiss said cause, it not having been brought to trial within five years after the granting of the motion for a new trial. The notice specifically mentions the failure of plaintiff to bring the cause to trial within that period. The question of the abuse of discretion seems not to have been seriously urged by petitioners on the motion for a dismissal. The petition as framed does not plead facts sufficient to show that the court below committed an abuse of discretion. We are not able to say as a matter of law that the long delay in bringing the case to a retrial was not excusable under the state of facts shown to exist upon the hearing of the motion, which was presumptively deemed sufficient to justify the court in exercising its discretion in the manner complained of. The facts are not before us. All that is presented in this respect is an affidavit made by the plaintiff in which he avers that certain negotiations were pending between some of the parties litigant, which, it was believed, would put an end to the litigation if consummated. If the affidavit above referred to was the only ground relied upon by the court to support its action we would incline to the view that it did not furnish a valid reason to warrant a denial of the motion. But we cannot presume that there were not other valid reasons which justified the court in making its order. There is nothing in the petition which would in any way tend to dispute the presumption that evidence was adduced fully supporting the court in the exercise of its discretion. "The petition for a writ of mandate must state specific facts sufficient to justify the granting of relief sought, and make a clear prima facie case to warrant the alternative writ." 16 Cal. Jur. 859.

We therefore conclude that the portion of section 583 which makes it the mandatory duty of a court to dismiss an action which is not brought to trial within five years after answer filed has no application to the retrial of causes, and, as to the second ground, that an abuse of the discretionary power of the court to dismiss the action has not been sufficiently alleged in the petition. While nine years is a long period for an action to lie in repose, we cannot say that there may not, conceivably, be rare cases in which it would not be an abuse of discretion to refuse to dismiss. The demurrer to the petition is well taken.

The writ is denied.

In re SMITH'S ESTATE.

SMITH v. SMITH et al.

(L. A. 9421.)

1. Infants 🔑90 — Where no exception was taken to appearance of minor whose mother appeared with her, contest of probate proceeding may be considered as properly made by minor's mother.

Notwithstanding minor child was without right to appear in contest of proceeding to have estate of decedent set aside to his second wife as widow, both on account of her minority and fact that order for her support ran in favor of her mother, where no exception was made to her appearance, since mother's appearance jointly with her was sufficient to protect her interests, reviewing court will consider contest as properly made and presented by the mother.

2. Divorce 🔑308—Order directing bank to hold trust deed to secure payment of support for child held to create lien against property therefor (Civ. Code, §§ 140, 2872).

Order of superior court, after wife's successful suit for divorce, directing bank to hold trust deed deposited with it to secure payment for support of minor child, held, in view of Civ. Code, §§ 140, 2872, to create lien against property in bank's hands to secure payment as against petition of second wife to have trust deed set aside to her under Code Civ. Proc. § 1469, as sole estate of deceased husband.

3. Divorce 🔑308—Order directing bank to pay proceeds from collection of trust deed to support of minor child held to continue after husband's death.

Where husband deposited trust deed with bank with instructions to pay proceeds of collection thereof in monthly installments for minor child, order of superior court directing that bank hold deed to secure such payment held to continue after husband's death, notwithstanding custody of child had been awarded to wife in her divorce action.

Probate court having no jurisdiction of divorce proceedings is without power to modify order or decree rendered in divorce action.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Sidney N. Reeve, Judge.

In the matter of the Estate of Elmer Leon Smith, deceased. Petition by Edith Smith to have estate set aside to her, opposed by Ella P. Smith and another. From a judgment for petitioner, respondents appeal. Reversed, with directions.

Walters & Mauk, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Wood, Janeway & Pratt and Roland T. Kinney, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CURTIS, J. On June 26, 1924, an interlocutory decree of divorce was entered in favor of Ella P. Smith and against Elmer L. Smith in the superior court of the county of Los Angeles. In this interlocutory decree it was provided that the defendant Elmer L. Smith should pay to plaintiff for the support of their minor child, Rhea Smith, the sum of $50 per month. Thereafter, the defendant being in arrears in said payments, the plaintiff in said divorce action filed an application in said superior court by which, we assume from the brief reference thereto in the record herein, plaintiff sought to have the defendant adjudged guilty of contempt of court for failure to comply with said order directing him to pay said sum of $50 per month towards the support of his minor child. Upon the hearing of this application, it was found that defendant was in arrears in said payments in the sum of $181. The court also found that some time prior thereto the defendant had deposited with the Walnut Park Bank in said county a trust deed executed by Gilbert Patterson to said defendant; that said trust deed "called for the sum of $1,200, payable $30 a month, together with interest"; and that said defendant had deposited said trust deed in said bank and said bank held the same for the defendant with an order signed by the defendant to pay to the said Rhea Smith the monthly payments thereof with interest. Thereupon the court made an order as follows:

> "That in order to secure the payments of said installments, as provided for in said interlocutory decree, the court do order that the said Walnut Park Bank aforesaid, be and they are hereby required to hold said trust deed for the security and payment of said support for the said child, Rhea Smith, and that said bank is ordered not to deliver over the said trust deed to the defendant Elmer L. Smith, or any person for him, but to hold the same and receive the payments together with interest thereon from time to time and pay the same to the said Rhea Smith, taking her receipt therefor, and to hold said trust deed until the further order of the court."

The date of this order was April 6, 1925. On September 30, 1925, the defendant died without said order ever having been revoked or modified. Thereafter Edith Smith, with whom said defendant had contracted a second marriage, after being divorced from the said Ella P. Smith, was, by the probate court of said county of Los Angeles, appointed executrix of his last will, and on June 18, 1926, she filed in said probate court her petition under section 1469 of the Code of Civil Procedure to have the whole of the estate of said deceased set aside to her upon the ground that the value thereof did not exceed the sum of $2,500. In this petition it was alleged that the only property left by said decedent was said trust deed, upon which there was then left unpaid the sum of $1,000, payable at the rate of $30 per month. The said Ella P. Smith and her minor daughter, Rhea Smith, appeared in said proceeding and filed written objections to the granting of said petition on the ground that by virtue of the order of court of date April 6, 1925, made in the divorce action, there was created a lien against said property in their favor to secure the amounts ordered by the court to be paid by the defendant for the support of said minor child. It appears from said written objections that there was due and unpaid from decedent at the date of his death something over $400 for the support of said minor; that said minor would be 16 years of age on March 26, 1926; and that the whole amount of indebtedness secured by said trust deed would be required to meet the payments then due and which would become due for the support of said Rhea Smith during her minority. The matter was submitted to the trial court on an agreed statement of facts in which it was stipulated that the amount due for the support of said minor was at the death of decedent the sum of $426; that said minor would be 16 years of age on March 26, 1926; that the $1,000 indebtedness secured by the trust deed then in the possession of the Walnut Park Bank constituted all the assets of the estate of Elmer L. Smith, deceased, otherwise known as Elmer Leon Smith; "that the moneys and assets sought to be set apart to the widow in said application are the moneys and assets of the trust deed and notes set forth in said order" of April 6, 1925; and that the decree directing said Elmer L. Smith to pay for the support of his minor child, Rhea Smith, the sum of $50 per month had never been modified. Upon this state of facts the probate court made its decree setting aside to the said Edith Smith, as the surviving widow of said deceased, all the property of said estate and directed the said bank to pay over to her all of the estate of said Elmer Leon Smith, deceased, in its possession, including the indebtedness secured by said deed of trust, and all proceeds thereof in its possession or to be in its possession thereafter. From this order Ella P. Smith and Rhea Smith have appealed.

[1] No exception appears to have been made either in the lower court or in this court to the appearance or participation as a party to this proceeding of Rhea Smith, a minor. It is apparent that said minor is without any right to appear herein, both on account of her minority and for the further reason that the order for her support ran in favor of her mother, Ella P. Smith, and not in favor of the minor. However, as the mother, Ella P. Smith, has appeared jointly with the minor in all matters herein, and as her appearance and participation herein is sufficient to protect all the interests involved, we will consider said contest as properly made and presented by her.

[2] The sole question presented on this appeal is whether a lien was created on the indebtedness secured by the trust deed in the possession of the Walnut Park Bank by the order of court made on the 6th day of April, 1925. Appellant Ella P. Smith, and we will hereafter refer to her as the sole appellant herein, contends that such a lien was created in her favor. The sole contention made by respondent to support the order appealed from is that no lien was created in favor of appellant by said order of court, and therefore the subsequent order of the probate court setting aside this property to the surviving widow was valid and should be sustained. Respondent concedes the power of the court under section 140 of the Civil Code to require the husband to give reasonable security for the payment of money ordered by the court for the support of his minor child and to impose a lien upon his property to secure the payment of the amounts ordered. She further concedes that this may be done in various ways, one of which may be by the appointment of a receiver. She then contends that no receiver was appointed in this instance. It may be conceded that the order of the court cannot be construed as appointing the Walnut Park Bank a receiver for the purpose of holding the trust deed and applying the payments thereon to the support of the minor, but the appointment of a receiver is only one of the methods which the court may employ to compel obedience to its orders. She then insists that the order requiring the bank to hold the trust deed for security and to pay the proceeds therefrom to his minor child created no lien upon the property, but is "merely a personal order in the nature of an injunction and was not an order in rem." We are unable to follow respondent's reasoning.

> "A lien is a charge imposed in some mode other than by a transfer in trust upon specific property by which it is made security for the performance of an act." Civ. Code, § 2872.

The order of court of date April 6, 1925, expressly provides:

> "In order to secure the payments of said installments, as provided for in said interlocutory decree, the court do order that the said Walnut Park Bank aforesaid, be and they are hereby required to hold said trust deed for the security and payment of said support for the said child, Rhea Smith. * * *"

This is a direct charge imposed by order of court upon the property therein described to secure the performance of certain acts enumerated in said order. It was unquestionably within the power of the court under said section 140 of the Civil Code to make said order, and it is just as certain that by such order the court created a lien against the property in the hands of the bank to secure the payment of the amounts due and to become due for the maintenance of the minor. It is true that said order further directed the bank not to deliver the trust deed to Elmer L. Smith, the father of said minor, or to any other person, but to hold the same and to receive payments thereof and to pay them to said Rhea Smith; but this further order, instead of detracting from the previous portion thereof, only confirmed and strengthened it. In our opinion there is no question but that by the order of court a lien was created on the securities in the hands of the bank in favor of said Ella P. Smith.

[3] As to the amount of said lien, as already noted, the court found that at the death of said deceased there was due from him $426 for the support of his said minor child. Respondent, however, concedes that the liability of a father for the support of his minor child is not extinguished by his death, but that his said estate is liable for said support. She contends, however, that by the decree of divorce, in which the minor was awarded to the custody of the mother, the father was under no legal obligation to provide support for said child beyond that which may be directed by the court which has granted the divorce either in its decree or by subsequent modification. Even were this the correct rule, it has no application to the present proceeding, as we have here an order of court directing the father to pay for the support of his minor child during her minority. Had the father lived, this order would have continued in force during the minority of his child unless modified by the court. No modification of the order has been made. The question, therefore, is: Does this order continue in force after his death? This question seems never to have been before the appellate courts of this state. Its solution, however, does not appear difficult. The purpose of the order was to maintain the child during her minority and to compel such maintenance by the father. The necessity for the support of the minor is the same, whether the father be alive or dead. Having made provision for the support of the minor, which is at least partially adequate for her maintenance during her minority, is there any reason whatever why this support should cease on the death of the father, leaving property properly applicable for the payment of said support? No reason has been suggested to us and we know of none. Surely no obligation can exceed in importance that which the father owes to his own offspring. It is true he assumed additional duties upon contracting a second mariage, but these are subordinate to those which he owed prior to his said marriage to support his own children.

In other jurisdictions it has been held that the provision in a decree of divorce directing the father to pay certain amounts towards the support of his minor child is not discharged by his death. Creyts v. Creyts, 143 Mich. 375, 106 N. W. 1111, 114 Am. St. Rep. 656; Miller v. Miller, 64 Me. 484; Stone v. Boyley, 75 Wash. 184, 134 P. 820, 48 L. R. A. (N. S.) 429; Mansfield v. Hill, 56 Or. 400, 107 P. 471, 108 P. 1007; Murphy v. Moyle, 17 Utah, 113, 53 P. 1010, 70 Am. St. Rep. 767. In the last-mentioned case the facts were somewhat similar to those in the present proceeding. A divorce had been granted to the mother and the custody of the minor awarded to her, with the provision in the decree that the father pay to the mother a certain sum monthly towards the support of the minor. The decree further provided that as security for the payment of said amount for the support of the minor the mother was given a lien upon certain real property owned by the father. The father died while his said child was in her minority. The wife filed a claim against his estate for the child's support up to the time when the child should become of age. The trial court gave judgment in her favor for the full amount prayed for and directed that said amount be paid to the clerk of the court to be by him paid to the mother in accordance with the terms of the decree of divorce. It further directed a sale of the property given as security, and, if the proceeds thereof were not sufficient to pay the amount due under said decree, that the estate of the father should be liable for the balance. Upon appeal the Supreme Court of Utah affirmed the judgment and stated that—

> The decree of divorce "created an obligation to pay and a lien on the property described in the modified decree as security for payment in accordance with the terms of the decrees, which obligation and lien continued in force after the death of the deceased, and bound his estate. Such lien was subject to foreclosure for failure to make payment of the sum stipulated at any time during the minority of the child."

The court further held that—

> "The court had the right to enforce the former decrees, and foreclose the lien upon failure of payment; and its power to do so was not affected by the death of the testate, and, if the proceeds shall be insufficient to satisfy the claim, it may enforce payment of the balance out of the estate."

Replying to appellant's contention for a contrary ruling, the court said:

> "It is unsound, as being at variance not only with the decrees of the court and the law, but also with justice for it is the solemn duty of every husband and father to support his wife during life, and his children during their minority, suitably to their station in life, and, if he fail to do so, every principal of justice demands that they be thus supported out of his estate."

[4] Our conclusion, therefore, is that appellant has a lien upon the funds secured by the trust deed in the possession of the Walnut Park Bank to secure the payment not only of the amount due for the support of the minor at the death of the father, but for such additional amounts as may accrue in accordance with the interlocutory decree during the minority of said Rhea Smith, or until said decree is modified by the court in which it is granted. The further contenton of respondent that the order appealed from may be treated as an order modifying the decree giving a lien upon the trust deed is without merit. The order appealed from was made by the probate court, and such court has no jurisdiction over divorce proceedings, and, consequently, was without power to modify any order or decree rendered in a divorce action.

The order appealed from is reversed, with directions to the probate court to enter its order in accordance with the views expressed herein.

Application by the Los Angeles City School District of Los Angeles County for a writ of mandate to Robert A. Odell and another, as President and Secretary of the Board of Education of the City of Los Angeles. Writ granted.

Everett W. Mattoon, Edward T. Bishop, County Counsel, and J. H. O'Connor, Assistant County Counsel, all of Los Angeles (Hill. Morgan & Bledsoe and Haas & Dunnigan, all of Los Angeles, of counsel), for petitioner.

Robert A. Odell and Frank P. Doherty, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WASTE, C. J. [1] The petitioner, Los Angeles city school district, prays for the issuance of a writ of mandate to compel the respondents, as president and secretary, respectively, of the board of education of the city of Los Angeles, to execute and sign, on behalf of said board, an agreement of sale of the real property hereinafter referred to. The respondents have filed a general demurrer to the petition, and we may therefore accept the averments of the petitioner as true. Petitioner and the Los Angeles city high school district, separate and distinct legal entities, are governed and controlled by the board of education of the city of Los Angeles, as created and provided for in the city charter. Petitioner is the owner of real property situated at the northwest corner of Eighth street and Grand avenue in the city of Los Angeles, commonly known as the "Grand avenue school site." The board of education, by unanimous vote, adopted a resolution authorizing the sale of the property, and the highest bid, that of the Capital Company in the sum of $1,575,539.22, was accepted. An agreement of sale was thereupon prepared and executed by the company, and was presented to the board of education, which, by apt resolution, authorized and directed the respondents, as president and secretary, to sign and execute the contract on behalf of the board. The respondents have refused and decline to sign or execute the agreement of sale, assigning as the reason for such refusal that section 1617½ of the Political Code, purporting to authorize the sale of public school property, is unconstitutional as being special legislation, and on the further ground that the proposed sale is illegal and void for the reason that the Los Angeles city high school district is maintaining a public high school on the property.

[2] In support of their contention that section 1617½ of the Political Code is unconstitutional, respondents assert that the authority given by it to sell public school property is confined to boards of education governing city school and city high school districts having an average daily attendance in excess of 55,000; and that such classification is arbitrary and discriminatory, and, if given effect, would permit but two school boards, namely, those of the cities of Los Angeles and San Francisco, to sell school property. There is no basis for this contention. As now in force, the section contains no limitation based on average daily attendance. Prior to 1917 boards of school trustees and city boards of education had power to purchase or sell school lands only when directed by a vote of their districts. In that year section 1617½ of the Political Code was enacted. By its terms boards of education or other governing boards in cities and having jurisdiction over both the elementary and high school districts embracing such cities, in which the total number of units of average daily attendance in both such school districts, as shown by the annual report of the county superintendent of schools to the state superintendent of public instruction for the preceding school year, exceeded 55,000, were authorized to sell or lease for a term not exceeding 99 years any real property belonging to their respective school districts, or high school districts upon which no public school was being maintained. Stats. 1917, p. 1645. At the next session of the Legislature the section was amended to read, so far as is pertinent here:

> "1617½. Boards of education, or other governing boards, in cities and having jurisdiction over both the elementary and high school districts embracing such cities, and boards of trustees of any school district and boards of trustees of union high school or joint union high school districts, are hereby authorized to sell or lease for a term not exceeding ninety-nine years, any real property belonging to their respective school districts, or high school districts upon which no public school is being maintained. * * *" Stats. 1919, p. 399.

By the amendment, the Legislature not only made the section apply to boards of trustees of any school district, and boards of trustees of union high school or joint union high school districts, as well as to city boards of education, but struck from its provisions all reference to a daily average attendance. There is therefore nothing in the section itself on which respondents can base their objection that it is unconstitutional as being special legislation, and provides for an arbitrary and discriminatory classification of school districts.

[3-5] However, the title of the act amending the section affords some basis for the contention of the respondents, in that it retains the reference to "a total average daily attendance execeeding fifty-five thousand." We have carefully examined the legislative history of Assembly Bill No. 298, introduced January 20, 1919, purporting "to amend section one thousand six hundred seventeen and one-half of the Political Code." Other than extending its provisions to "boards of trustees of union high school districts," the bill was in the identical language of section 1617½ as originally enacted. It was twice amended in the Assembly and once in the Senate. By one of these amendments the requirement of, and all reference to, the "total number of units of average daily attendance" was stricken from the body of the act, but, apparently through inadvertence, was not eliminated from the title. It is therefore quite clear that the Legislature intended that the provisions of the amendatory act should extend to and include all city school and city high school districts, without regard to the average daily attendance therein. The language in the body of the act being clear and unambiguous, it should not be controlled and restrained by the title thereto. The authorities are numerous to the effect that the title of an act may be relied on in ascertaining the intention of the Legislature, where the act itself is ambiguous; but the title "cannot be used for the purpose of restraining or controlling any positive provision of the act." Flynn v. Abbott, 16 Cal. 359, 366; Barnes v. Jones, 51 Cal. 303, 306; In the Matter of the Boston M. & M. Co., 51 Cal. 624, 626. There is no ambiguity in the amendatory act of 1919, and the title thereto may not, therefore, be employed to control the plain provisions thereof. It is also settled that a revised act must be construed as a new and original piece of legislation and, if possible, effect must be given to every part thereof. Donlon v. Jewett, 88 Cal. 530, 26 P. 370. It follows that the "arbitrary classification" complained of by the respondents does not in fact exist, and cannot, therefore, form the basis of a constitutional attack on the statute.

[6-10] Nor do we think it can be successfully maintained that the amendatory act of 1919 violates section 24 of article 4 of the Constitution by referring to certain subjects apparently not included nor mentioned in its title. It has been held that numerous provisions having one general object fairly indicated by the title to the act may be united. Ex parte Liddell, 93 Cal. 633, 636, 29 P. 251; Estate of Wellings, 192 Cal. 506, 519, 221 P. 628; McClure v. Riley, 198 Cal. 23, 26, 243 P. 429. The statute in question was intended to authorize and sanction the sale and leasing of public school property by the enumerated boards, and this purpose is fairly discernible from the title to the act, and, in our opinion, all of the provisions need not have been set forth in the title. It is not necessary that the title of an act should embrace an abstract of its contents. Abeel v. Clark, 84 Cal. 226, 24 P. 383. Moreover, it has been held that an act entitled an act to amend a particular section of one of the Codes sufficiently states the subject of the act. People v. Oates, 142 Cal. 12, 14, 75 P. 337; Estate of Elliott, 165 Cal. 339, 345, 132 P. 439. The almost universal custom of the Legislature in making amendments to the Codes has been to put into the title of the amendatory act, after the number of the section amended and the name of the Code, additional words expressing the subject of the act; and it is well settled that such amendatory act complies with the constitutional requirement. 23 Cal. Jur. p. 661, § 54. That portion of the title of the amendatory act of 1919 which reads, "An act to amend section one thousand six hundred seventeen and one-half of the Political Code," adequately expresses the intention of the Legislature, which was to supersede the previous legislation upon the subject. It cannot be said that the provisions of the act are in excess of the title. From the foregoing it follows that section 1617½ of the Political Code, as amended in 1919, is not subject to any of the constitutional objections urged.

[11-13] The further objection of the respondents to authenticating the agreement of sale is based on the contention that, at the time its execution was directed by the board of education, a public school was being maintained on the property. The fact is that although no elementary school was being conducted on the Grand avenue school site by the petitioner, it had been occupied by the Los Angeles city high school district for more than three years for high school purposes, under an annual rental agreement with petitioner, and, at the time of the negotiations between petitioner and the Capital Company a public high school was being maintained on the property. The section (1617½, supra) authorizes the sale of property belonging to school districts "upon which no public school is being maintained." It is contended by respondents that the maintenance of any public school on the real property sought to be transferred is sufficient to preclude a sale thereof under the code section, and that, inasmuch as the Los Angeles city high school district is maintaining a public school on the property under the lease from the petitioner, the contemplated sale is illegal. In reply to this contention, petitioner urges that it has abandoned the property as a school site, and is not now using it for such purpose; and, furthermore, that the provisions of section 1617½ preclude a sale of public school property only when the district which owns the same is maintaining a public school thereon.

The language "upon which no public school is being maintained" is broad enough to include a public high school. Const. art. 9, § 6; Pol. Code, §§ 1663, 1720; Chico High School Board v. Board of Supervisors, 118 Cal. 115, 50 P. 275. The decision in Richey v. Corralitos Union School Dist., 67 Cal. App. 708, 228 P. 348, lends support to the contention of the petitioner that it has abandoned the school site for school purposes, and as the occupancy for high school purposes was by another school district, it cannot be said that the property is being used for school purposes within the intent of section 1617½, supra; but we deem it unnecessary to pursue that subject further, for the admitted fact is that the lease of the property by petitioner to the Los Angeles city high school district expired and terminated prior to the date contemplated in the agreement of sale on which title to and possession of the property was to be delivered to the purchaser. At the time contemplated for such delivery of title and possession the school site was not used or occupied by either the Los Angeles city school district or the Los Angeles city high school district for any school purpose whatever. The respondents contend that notwithstanding the deferred date for the delivery of title and possession, the entire equitable title to the property would have vested in the purchasers upon the execution and delivery of the agreement of sale, and that the Los Angeles city school district would thereafter possess nothing more than the legal title to the property. That is no doubt true. Keese v. Beardsley, 190 Cal. 465, 473, 213 P. 500, 26 A. L. R. 1538; Orange Cove Water Co. v. Sampson (Cal. App.) 248 P. 526. But no authorities have been cited to us which would tend to support the theory of the respondents that the school district may not enter into negotiations for the sale of the property as was done in the present case, the delivery of title and possession to take place at some deferred date. It is not contended here that the proceedings looking to the sale of the Grand avenue school site were in any way irregular, or that the price agreed to be paid by the purchasers of the property was in any way inadequate, or that any colorable circumstance attached to the sale of the property.

We are therefore of the view that no sufficient reason has been shown by the respondents why they should not execute the agreement of sale as directed and authorized by the resolution of the board of education acting for the Los Angeles city school district, the owner of the property.

Let a writ of mandate issue directing the respondents to execute and deliver the agreement of sale as prayed for.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. H. Valentine and F. C. Collier, Judges.

Action by C. Sheridan Bailes against J. L. Keck, L. J. Gillespie, and another. From a judgment dismissing the action, upon an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion to vacate the order of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Judgment and orders affirmed.

Louis N. Whealton, of Long Beach, for appellant.

Hill & Morgan and Kenneth K. Wright, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SEAWELL, J. This appeal is taken from a judgment dismissing the action upon an order made sustaining a demurrer to the complaint interposed by defendant Keck with leave to amend and also from an order denying plaintiff's motion to vacate said order dismissing the action. Defendants Gillespie and Brittain made no appearance. It appears from the judgment that the demurrer was sustained on or about July 10, 1924, with leave to amend said complaint within 10 days after service of notice of the court's ruling upon plaintiff's counsel. Notice was accordingly served upon said counsel for plaintiff, who, for a period of more than 10 days thereafter, failed, refused, and neglected to amend said complaint. A judgment of dismissal of the action was accordingly made and entered. The facts relied upon as being sufficient to support plaintiff's demand are pleaded as two separate and distinct causes of action. The first alleges that on or about January 23, 1923, at Long Beach, Cal., for a valuable consideration, defendants J. L. Keck, L. J. Gillespie, and F. E. Brittain executed and delivered to Farmers' & Merchants' Bank, a corporation, located at Long Beach, Cal., their joint and several promissory note. Omitting therefrom the provisions for the payment of an attorney's fee and the acknowledgment by defendants of a pledge of undescribed property with said bank as collateral security for the payment of said note, with full authority given to said bank to collect and sell said securities in order to protect itself against depreciation of the value of the same, it is as follows:

"$20,000.00. Long Beach, Cal., January 23, 1923.

"Sixty days after date, for value received, we, or either of us, promise to pay Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Long Beach, Cal., or order, at said bank in Long Beach, the sum of twenty thousand and no/100 dollars with interest at the rate of eight per cent. per annum from date until paid, to be compounded quarterly and bear the same rate of interest as the principal; and should the interest not be paid when due, then the whole sum of principal and interest shall become immediately due and payable, and may be charged to the account in said bank of either the principal maker, or sureties on said note, at the option of the holder of this note. * * * Principal and interest payable in gold coin of the United States."

The order in which the note was signed and the indorsements made thereon follows:

"Due —— J. L. Keck.
"No. 18782 —— L. J. Gillespie.
"Address —— F. E. Brittain."
"$4.00 revenue stamps attached."
[Indorsement of payments of interest omitted.]
Indorsement:
"Pay to the order of L. J. Gillespie and F. E. Brittain without recourse.
"Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Long Beach.
"By C. J. Walker, President."

It is next alleged that prior to the filing of the complaint said Farmers' & Merchants' Bank indorsed said promissory note without recourse to the order of the defendants L. J. Gillespie and F. E. Brittain, as set forth in the preceding paragraph, and for a valuable consideration delivered said promissory note to said Gillespie and Brittain, and thereafter and prior to the filing of the complaint they, and each of them, for a valuable consideration, indorsed and delivered said promissory note to plaintiff, Bailes, who is the owner and holder thereof. It is alleged that there has been paid upon said principal sum of $20,000 the sum of $15,000, leaving the sum of $5,000 due, owing, and unpaid from defendants on account of principal, together with interest thereon and the sum of $500 as a reasonable sum as attorney's fees. A demand made upon each of said defendants for payment of said sums is also alleged.

The second cause of action is based upon a joint and several 60-day promissory note, bearing date February 28, 1923, in the sum of $7,500, made, executed, and delivered to said Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Long Beach by the defendants, makers of the promissory note set forth in the first cause of action. The two notes sued upon are identical in form and substance except as to minor and unimportant details. The methods of assignment and the assignees in both causes are identical. Allegations similar in legal effect are set forth in each cause of action. There was paid on account of principal on the $7,500 note, $3,500, leaving due and unpaid on account of the principal, $4,000. A general demurrer was interposed by defendant Keck to both causes of action upon the ground that neither stated a cause of action. The other defendants did not join him in the demurrer or appear in any way. Judgment on the order sustaining the demurrer, upon the failure, refusal, and neglect of the plaintiff to amend his complaint, was filed November 21, 1924. The judgment recites as a fact the sustaining of the demurrer on or about July 10, 1924.

Plaintiff's attorney, on July 31, 1924, in a paper properly entitled and filed, directed the county clerk to "enter the dismissal of the above-entitled action as to all defendants." On October 11 plaintiff gave notice that on October 17 he would move the court for an order vacating the dismissal of the action and for permission to file an amended complaint and for general relief, the motion to be based upon the affidavit of defendant F. E. Brittain and the accompanying amended complaint. No appeal was taken from the order sustaining the demurrer. The dates of the indorsements of said notes by the bank to Gillespie and Brittain are omitted from the complaint. All that is alleged is that "prior to the filing of the complaint herein" said notes were indorsed to Gillespie and Brittain. This was long after the notes had matured. From an inspection of the indorsements and allegations of the complaint the inference is irresistible that the notes were indorsed or assigned long after maturity.

[1] There can be no doubt that the obligations evidenced by the two promissory notes, as shown upon the face of the complaint, became extinguished by the indorsement and delivery of the same, for a valuable consideration, by the payee, Farmers' & Merchants' Bank, to Keck's comakers, Gillespie and Brittain. Gordon v. Wansey, 21 Cal. 77; James v. Yaeger, 86 Cal. 184, 24 P. 1005; Yule v. Bishop, 133 Cal. 574, 62 P. 68, 65 P. 1094; Dodds v. Spring, 174 Cal. 412, 163 P. 351; 19 Cal. Jur. 920–922; 8 C. J. 342. Gordon v. Wansey, supra, early declared the law of this state to be that the payment of the obligation by one of the comakers or sureties of a joint and several note and the surrender of the same to such comaker or surety extinguishes the obligation so far as the note is concerned. The doctrine laid down in that case has since been followed consistently by this court and seems to be firmly established as the law. There, for a valuable consideration, the payee assigned several promissory notes to one of the joint and several comakers. The latter, in turn, assigned said notes to Gordon, the plaintiff in said action, who brought suit upon them against Wansey, a comaker with Gordon's assignor. This court held upon the appeal that the transaction amounted to payment and the notes became functus officio and were not revived by the assignment to the plaintiff. It is said that if the rights of the plaintiff had attached before maturity and his position been that of an innocent holder, he would be entitled to protection, but under the circumstances of that case, the action was not maintainable. The court said that it was clear that the notes could not have been enforced by plaintiff's assignor, and having taken them with a knowledge of that fact (as in the instant case) they were equally unavailable in the hands of plaintiff. What the rights of plaintiff might be in an action for contribution, the court observed, it was unnecessary to decide, inasmuch as the action was based on the notes. Again, in James v. Yaeger, supra, the court, addressing itself to the same principle of law announced in Gordon v. Wansey, said:

> "It is contended by the appellant that the findings of the court do not sustain the judgment. In this contention we fully agree with counsel for appellant. By the payment to the payee the note became extinct, and ceased to be a binding obligation. (Code Civ. Proc. § 1473; Wright v. Mix, 76 Cal. 465 [18 P. 645].) And a purchaser of the note after maturity—or in this instance, the note being nonnegotiable, whether the purchase was before or after maturity—took it subject to the defense of payment. (Elgin v. Hill, 27 Cal. 373.) Having been paid, it became functus officio, and no action could be maintained upon it. (Gordon v. Wansey, 21 Cal. 79.) If the respondent had been an innocent purchaser, it would have been different. But here, not only was the note nonnegotiable and the purchase by the respondent after maturity, but his purchase was from one of the makers of the note. This was sufficient to put him upon inquiry. But it must be presumed, in this case, that the respondent took the note with full knowledge of all the facts."

There is nothing in the cases cited by appellant which tends to shake the doctrine announced in the above-cited cases, which is unquestionably applicable to the instant case. The case of Erkenbrecher v. Grant, 187 Cal. 7, 200 P. 641, cited by appellant, is not an authority announcing a doctrine contrary to that adopted by the cases heretofore cited, but, in reality, is a reaffirmation of the principle announced by this court since its earliest consideration of the question. Enscoe v. Fletcher, 1 Cal. App. 659, 82 P. 1075, cited by appellant as an authority here, is clearly distinguishable from Gordon v. Wansey and the line of cases in harmony with it. In Enscoe v. Fletcher certain notes were distributed to one of the joint makers as an heir at law of the payee upon the latter's death. It was held that if the obligation was extinguished it was solely by operation of law brought about by the death of the payee and the distribution of his estate, including the notes, to his heir, who was a joint maker of said notes. The court held that the notes were not and did not purport to be paid in full. Indeed, there was no voluntary assignment or surrender of the notes by the payee to any one. The payee died, leaving the notes as a part of his estate. That case cannot be accepted as authority for changing the well-recognized rule of law.

[2-4] The court properly sustained the demurrer, as the notes and indorsements gave actual notice to the assignee that they were assigned by the two comakers, Gillespie and Brittain, for a valuable consideration. The cause of action was bottomed solely upon the obligations evidenced by said notes. No attempt was made to state a cause of action in assumpsit upon an implied promise of the makers for a contribution, or upon any theory upon which relief could have been granted. The demurrer was sustained after argument and plaintiff either refused or failed to amend the complaint within the time allowed by the court. About two months thereafter plaintiff noticed a motion for an order setting aside the order sustaining the demurrer and for leave to file a proposed amended complaint, which was in all respects identical with the original complaint except that the allegation set forth in subdivision 2, paragraph 1 of the original complaint, whereby it was alleged that upon the indorsement and delivery of said notes to plaintiff for a valuable consideration plaintiff became and had ever since been and still was the owner and holder of said notes, was omitted from the proposed amended complaint. In this connection, and in contradiction of the preceding allegations of the proposed amended complaint and the whole of the original complaint, it was alleged that said notes were acquired by Gillespie and Brittain for the sole purpose of transferring the same to plaintiff, and that neither Gillespie nor Brittain became the holder of said notes in his own right; that said notes were not, at the time of the transfer thereof by said Farmers' & Merchants' Bank to Gillespie and Brittain, paid, nor have said notes at any time since said transfer by said bank been paid and neither Gillespie nor Brittain were released from the obligations upon said notes at any time by said bank, and that each of them is liable thereon as a maker of said notes, and "plaintiff ever since has been and still is the owner and holder thereof for the purpose of collection." The allegations by which plaintiff seeks to avoid the rule of law as to the extinguishment of obligations by the acts of comakers of a note and to hold Keck liable on the obligations which he jointly executed to the bank are nothing more than conclusions of law which cannot be permitted to supply essential allegations of fact. The allegation as to whether the bank payee was actually paid a valuable consideration for said notes by Gillespie and Brittain, as previously alleged, is equivocal and evasive. There is no positive or direct allegation in the proposed amended pleading to the effect that the obligation owing to said bank upon said notes was not in fact and truth paid and discharged before the bank surrendered its evidence of debt to said comakers of the notes. Prior allegations therein aver that the notes were indorsed by said bank and delivered to the makers Gillespie and Brittain for a valuable consideration and thereafter assigned to plaintiff for a valuable consideration. Eliminating inconsistent and contradictory averments and the failure of a positive allegation as to the extinguishment of the obligations by payment from a consideration of the question, any other theory than that the obligation to the bank payee was discharged is highly improbable.

[5] In support of the motion to set aside the order dismissing the action, plaintiff produced an affidavit of defendant Brittain, who averred that at the time of the making of the notes he was a cotrustee with defendant Keck of one or more of the Keck syndicates; that said notes were given to procure a loan of moneys to be used for the benefit of said syndicates and not for the benefit of deponent or of said Keck or any one of the trustees of said syndicates; that when said notes became due deponent caused a demand to be made upon said Keck for a payment of his proportion thereof and that said Keck refused to pay any portion thereof; that said Keck syndicates, of which deponent and Keck were trustees, were, on June 12, 1924, the date on which the complaint was filed, indebted to plaintiff, C. Sheridan Bailes, in the sum of approximately $15,000; that deponent, before filing the complaint herein, entered into an agreement with plaintiff "to cause said promissory note to be transferred to plaintiff in order that he might collect the same and in consideration thereof plaintiff agreed to credit upon his claim against said Keck syndicates any moneys received by plaintiff as the proceeds of said note"; that after the filing of the complaint deponent (Brittain), pursuant to an agreement made with counsel for plaintiff and counsel for deponent Brittain, caused a dismissal of the action to be executed and delivered to Keck's counsel; that the condition under which said dismissal was delivered was that Keck would contribute at least the sum of $3,000, or his pro rata share, toward the payment of certain indebtedness of said syndicates; that said payment was to be made out of a certain escrow then pending in Security Trust & Savings Bank, City of Los Angeles, and upon payment of said sum the attachment issued in the action would be dismissed without any claims or further demands upon either party by reason of the action or at all; that upon receiving said dismissal of the action Keck caused the same to be filed on August 11, 1924, and he thereafter refused to contribute anything toward the payment of said indebtedness of $9,000 out of said escrow or at all and refused to keep and perform the terms and conditions under which said dismissal was delivered and had deponent (Brittain) known or believed that Keck would not have kept his agreement to pay said sum of $3,000 he would not have executed or delivered said dismissal authorization to him.

We fail to find anything in the affidavit used in the motion to set aside the order of dismissal that helps the pleading or tends to excuse plaintiff's refusal to amend the pleading within the time allowed by law. The demurrer seems to have been sustained at least a month before the transaction related by deponent took place and the time in which to amend had expired. The order of dismissal, so far as we can see, had nothing whatever to do with the legal question as to the sufficiency of the complaint.

[6, 7] The matters set up in the affidavit seem to be in conformity with Keck's claim that Brittain had not parted with his interest in the notes and that the action, so far as the complaint shows, should have been one in contribution, rather than upon the notes. Keck filed a counter affidavit setting up the trusteeship of himself, Brittain, Gillespie, and another of the Keck syndicates in which Brittain seemed to have had the greatest interest. Keck's affidavit avers the relationship of all the parties named in a rather complicated business proposition involving the development of oil lands and the mutual agreements entered into and breaches thereof committed by Brittain. From the recitals in the affidavits it would seem that the relations and rights of the parties therein are too complex to be determined in a simple action upon a promissory note. We do not deem it necessary to go into details as to the rights of the parties, as we have concluded that the averments and counter averments do not present a sufficient reason to warrant us in holding that the trial court abused its discretion by refusing to set aside the order of dismissal after demurrer sustained. The court granted leave to amend in the first instance. Plaintiff declined the offer. No question of excusable neglect could therefore be raised. The proposed amended complaint is framed upon the same theory as the original complaint, except in the few particulars above pointed out.

The judgment and orders appealed from are affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. H. Valentine and F. C. Collier, Judges.

Action by C. Sheridan Bailes against J. L. Keck, E. E. Millican, and others. From a judgment of dismissal upon an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion to vacate the order of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Judgment and orders affirmed.

Louis N. Whealton, of Long Beach, for appellant.

Hill & Morgan and Kenneth K. Wright, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SEAWELL, J. This appeal is, with respect to the main legal question presented, a counterpart of Bailes v. Keck, Gillespie, and Brittain (L. A. 8525) 254 P. 573, this day filed, except that in the instant case defendants Keck and Millican are shown upon the face of the promissory note sued on to be guarantors rather than makers thereof. In this respect only the case differs from L. A. 8525. The transaction out of which the note sprang, so far as a gleam of light is shed upon the former interrelated business connections of the parties to this and the companion action, appear not from the pleadings, but are referred to in affidavits, pro and contra, used upon a hearing of the motion to vacate the order dismissing the action after demurrer sustained upon refusal on the part of plaintiff to amend his complaint within the time allowed by the court.

The note was joint and several and was dated December 11, 1923, and was for the sum of $5,000, payable upon demand to the California National Bank of Long Beach. F. E. Brittain and Mary J. Brittain were the makers and J. L. Keck and E. E. Millican guarantors. Thereafter, it is alleged, said bank indorsed said note without recourse to one of its makers, to wit, F. E. Brittain, for a valuable consideration, and delivered said note into his possession. He, in turn, according to the allegations of the complaint, for a valuable consideration, indorsed and delivered said note to plaintiff, who became and is the owner and holder thereof. Interest has been paid thereon to the amount of $1,431.96 by some one not named. Judgment for the principal, interest, and counsel fees against guarantor Keck is demanded.

The motion to vacate the order or judgment dismissing the action after demurrer sustained, the proffered amended pleading and the affidavits offered in support of and in opposition to appellant's motion are in substance and effect identical with the proceedings reviewed in case No. 8525. It is therefore unnecessary to restate the grounds upon which the judgment and order in that case were affirmed, and it is sufficient to say that the rule therein declared is applicable to and must rule our decision in the instant case.

Judgment and orders appealed from are affirmed.

MORLOCK v. FINK. (Civ. 5553.) ★

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. March 11, 1927. Rehearing Denied April 8, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 9, 1927.)

1. Money received 🔑6(4)—Lender may sue, as for money had and received, one retaining money loaned and refusing security as agreed.

Where one received money under a loan agreement, by which he promised to give security if he retained the money without giving security, lender held to have action for money had and received, even though entire amount agreed upon had not been advanced.

2. Contracts 🔑297—Failure to lend entire amount promised breaches contract.

Where one, agreeing to lend a certain entire amount, fails to lend whole sum agreed, promisee may claim damages for breach of contract.

3. Pleading 🔑253—Refusal of court to allow new answer, after plaintiff's amendment to conform to proof, held no error, amendment being deemed denied.

An amendment to conform to proof is deemed denied, and trial court did not err in allowing such amendment without permitting defendant to file a new answer.

4. Money received 🔑6(4)—Where loan agreement was terminated, judgment against one receiving money thereunder and refusing security as agreed held based on promise to repay implied by law.

Judgment against one receiving money under a loan agreement, which had been abandoned or could not be carried out, and refusing to furnish security as agreed, held not based on express contract but upon contract implied by law, since money was in his possession only for purpose of performing the agreement.

5. Money received 🔑19(3)—Finding of express promise to repay money held surplusage where judgment was based on promise implied by law.

Where the court gave judgment in an action for money had and received, based on promise implied by law, an additional finding of an express promise to repay was regarded as surplusage.

6. Pleading 🔑35—Surplus allegations added to count for money had and received may be disregarded.

Where judgment is given on a count for money had and received, surplus allegations added to that count may be disregarded.

7. Money received 🔑19(3)—Where judgment given on implied promise to repay money, finding of money lent held surplusage.

In an action for money had and received, where the judgment given was based on a promise implied by law, finding on count for money lent may be disregarded as surplusage.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Edmund P. Mogan, Judge.

Action by Lester E. Morlock against Paul Martin Fink, also known as P. M. Fink and M. Fink. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Philip C. Boardman, Louis P. Dunkley, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

James M. Thomas, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KOFORD, P. J. The assignor of the plaintiff, Mrs. Vierhus, together with a Mrs. Tisney agreed to lend the defendant $5,000. Each was to contribute $2,500. Mrs. Tisney expressed doubt of her ability to raise her share, but the appellant claims the agreement was that the full sum of $5,000 was to be lent. Defendant agreed to give security for the loan by executing a mortgage on a certain paint factory and machinery in Alameda. The mortgage was not executed, but Mrs. Vierhus advanced $2,500, and later, when Mrs. Tisney proved unable to raise her share, Mrs. Vierhus, upon the importunities of appellant, advanced the further sums of $1,000 and $350, making a total of $3,850. This action was to recover that sum. The defendant paid $1,000 after the action was commenced. Plaintiff was given judgment for the remainder, or $2,850. Defendant appeals from the judgment.

[1] Mrs. Vierhus demanded of appellant (defendant) that he execute a note or give the security mentioned above for so much as had been advanced to him by her, she being unable to advance more. This he refused to do. Appellant's attitude at the trial was that, under the verbal understanding had between the parties to the transaction, he was not obliged to give such note or security because the entire amount agreed upon had not been advanced. It is a disputed point in the evidence as to just what the exact verbal agreement was. The matter was carried on in an unbusinesslike way. But, accepting appellant's interpretation of the transaction as the correct one, he was obliged either to give security for as much money as he had received or return it. Mrs. Vierhus had stated she was unable to raise more money, and Mrs. Tisney had proved unable to lend more than $150 of her share. If appellant would not go through with the agreement for as much as had been advanced, he could not keep the money in his possession indefinitely, but was bound in equity and good conscience to return it. The facts make a clear case in favor of plaintiff for money had and received.

A somewhat similar state of facts was said to present a case of money had and received in Whyte v. Rosencrantz, 123 Cal. 634, 56 P. 436, 69 Am. St. Rep. 90 The facts are also similar to a case where money has been advanced upon an executory contract, and where a failure to perform is a failure of consideration. This, also, has been held to present a proper case of money had and received. Richter v. Union Land, etc., Co., 129 Cal. 367, 62 P. 39.

[2] It would be true, also, that for the breach of the agreement to lend a certain entire amount appellant could claim damages for breach of contract. We cannot see how he could make such a claim under the evidence here as against Mrs. Vierhus, because she advanced more than she agreed. But, at any rate, there is no offset pleaded or claimed in the case.

[3] The complain set forth two counts, but for only the one sum of money. One was for money had and received, and one was for money lent. In each count it was alleged that defendant (appellant) agreed to repay the sum upon demand. At the close of plaintiff's case the court allowed an amendment to the complaint to conform to proof as it was stated. This amendment changed the clause alleging that defendant agreed to repay on demand to an allegation that defendant agreed to repay in eight months. It is one of appellant's contentions on this appeal that the trial court erred in allowing this amendment to the complaint without permitting defendant to file a new answer. The court, in ruling, stated that an amendment to conform to proof is deemed denied. This is correct. Glougie v. Glougie, 174 Cal. 126, 131, 162 P. 118. Furthermore, plaintiff's counsel stipulated that it might be deemed denied. Morton v. Bartning, 68 Cal. 306, 9 P. 146, cited by appellant, is not in point here. That case held it error to refuse defendant permission to plead the statute of limitations, where plaintiff was permitted to amend his complaint in such a way as to call for that plea. But in this trial appellant made no offer of proof nor suggestion of any defense which was not available to him without amending his answer, although the permission to amend the complaint was granted before defendant put on his defense.

Conformably to the amendment the court found as follows:

> "That within two years last past at, ——, the above-named defendant became indebted to one M. M. Vierhus in the sum of $3,850, for and on account of moneys had and received from said M. M. Vierhus by the said defendant, for his (her) benefit and use, as follows:
> "On July 5, 1923, $2,500, on July 27, 1923, $1,000, on August 14, 1923, $50, on August 15, 1923, $300, and for which said amounts said defendant agreed to pay the same to M. M. Vierhus eight months after the dates thereinbefore mentioned; that since the commencement of this action there has been paid thereon the sum of $1,000 on account."

[4] Of the amount advanced, $350 was lent only seven and one-half months prior to the date the action was commenced, to wit, March 31, 1924. If the action were dependent upon an express promise to repay in a certain time the $350 would not have been due at the time the original complaint was filed. From what we have said above, however, it follows that this judgment is not based upon an express contract, but upon the contract implied by law, that the defendant should return the money which is in his possession only for the purpose of performing an agreement which has been abandoned or cannot be carried out through no fault of plaintiff's assignor.

[5] Notwithstanding the finding of the trial court that defendant agreed to repay in eight months, the law implied a promise to repay sooner than eight months. The court's findings of fact upon this implied promise are to be found in that part which follows the essential parts of the money had and received count. The additional finding of the express promise to repay will be regarded as surplusage, under the facts of this case.

It is said in Fox v. Monahan, 8 Cal. App. 707, 709, 97 P. 765:

> "The approved and usual form for this count is very simple, consisting simply in stating that the defendant is indebted to the plaintiff in a certain sum 'for money had and received by the defendant to and for the use of plaintiff.'"

[6] Surplus allegations added to the count for money had and received may be disregarded like surplusage in other forms of pleading. Sidebottom v. Sidebottom, 215 Mo. App. 513, 255 S. W. 353; Lindskog v. Schouweiler, 12 S. D. 176, 80 N. W. 190.

[7] The allegation and finding of defendant's express promise to repay being surplusage, so also is the finding on the second count for money lent. Each being for the same sum of money and the one growing out of the other, there is no fatal inconsistency in the findings.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. KELLER. (Cr. 1353.)★

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. March 4, 1927. Rehearing Granted April 1, 1927.)

1. Criminal law ⇐543(2)—Evidence held not to show due diligence to secure attendance of complaining witness for second trial, and testimony at former trial was improperly admitted (Pen. Code, § 686).

Where second trial was set 15 days away but nothing was done to insure attendance of complaining witness until day case was set for trial, when continuance was granted and bench warrant issued but there was no showing as to what was done under process, held that there was no showing of due diligence, within Pen. Code, § 686, to secure attendance of witness, and testimony given at former trial was improperly admitted.

2. Criminal law ⇐334—Burden is upon prosecution to show due diligence to secure witness before testimony of former trial is admissible (Pen. Code, § 686).

Before testimony for people, given on a former trial, may be admitted in criminal action, burden is upon prosecution to show exercise of due diligence to secure attendance of witness, under Pen. Code, § 686.

3. Criminal law ⇐1186(4)—Conviction based on testimony given at former trial, with no showing of due diligence to find witness, held "miscarriage of justice" (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Conviction for grand larceny, based on testimony of complaining witness given at former trial, where there was no showing that due diligence was exercised to secure witness' attendance for second trial, held miscarriage of justice, within Const. art. 6, § 4½.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; L. D. Jennings, Judge.

Agnes Keller was convicted for grand larceny, and she appeals. Reversed.

WORKS, P. J. Defendant was informed against for the crime of grand larceny and was convicted. She appeals from the judgment.

Appellant was convicted upon a second trial. At the first trial the jury disagreed. The complaining witness was not present at the second trial, but the trial judge, over the objection of appellant, permitted the district attorney to read to the jury his testimony given at the earlier hearing. The objection of appellant was that the prosecution had not shown due diligence in an attempt to produce the absent witness, and the same point is now made here. Section 686 of the Penal Code provides, in part, that a defendant in a criminal action—

> "is entitled: * * * to be confronted with the witnesses against him, * * * except that * * * the testimony on behalf of the people * * * of a witness * * * who cannot, with due diligence, be found within the state, given on a former trial of the action in the presence of the defendant who has, either in person or by counsel, cross-examined or had an opportunity to cross-examine the witness, may be admitted."

On July 6, 1925, appellant entered her plea, and the action was set down for trial on July 22. On August 31, the cause having been tried and the jury having failed to agree upon a verdict, it was set for a second trial on September 15. When that date arrived the complaining witness was not present in court, and on motion of the district attorney the court ordered a bench warrant to issue forthwith for him, and the trial was continued to September 21. On the last-mentioned date a further continuance was granted to September 29, upon motion of the district attorney, supported by affidavit. It is not shown by the record what the affidavit contained or who made it. On September 29 the trial was continued to the next day, but upon what showing or for what reason does not appear from the minutes of the trial court. On September 30 a continuance was again had for one day, no reason being shown for the order. On October 1 the trial was commenced.

Immediately at the close of the district attorney's opening statement to the jury that officer requested leave to read the testimony of the complaining witness taken at the first trial, whereupon the court asked for a showing of due diligence. The district attorney then put a witness on the stand, who testified that he was a detective sergeant in the San Diego police department; that he had made an investigation to determine whether the complaining witness could be located in the city of Los Angeles; that he went to that city on September 16 for the purpose, but that he began his investigation at a certain hotel in San Diego, where he ascertained from the register that the witness had checked out on the afternoon of September 3 and had left as a forwarding address the name of a certain hotel in Los Angeles; that he, the investigator, then went to Los Angeles, arriving there on the evening of the day he had examined the San Diego hotel register; that he immediately went to the hotel mentioned on the San Diego register and found from it that the prosecuting witness had registered there on the evening of September 3 and had checked out on September 5, leaving no forwarding address; that he remained in Los Angeles four days, being engaged all that time in his investigation; that while he was there he went "to the newspaper offices in Los Angeles" and to the post office, but that he found no trace of the witness in that city except that he got some information, without stating the nature of it or from whom it was obtained, to the effect that the witness might be in Long Beach; that he then went there and "just made a search of the city," for he "had no specific place to go there outside of checking the post office"; that he did not go to the "newspaper offices at Long Beach"; and that he found no forwarding address at the post offices at Long Beach and Los Angeles. This is the only formal showing of due diligence made by the record, but we think we may state some further facts bearing upon the question, because of statements made during a colloquy between the trial judge and counsel, including the counsel for appellant, and assented to by the latter. A subpœna was issued to the sheriff of San Diego county for the complaining witness, and also to the sheriffs of San Luis Obispo, Santa Barbara, Ventura, Kern, Los Angeles, Riverside, Orange, and Imperial counties, but none of them was served and return was made upon each that the complaining witness could not be found in the county of the officer to whom it was sent. Counsel for appellant stated during the colloquy that:

> "No subpœna was issued in this [San Diego] county until the 15th day of September of this year."

A little later he said, also, that:

> "There was no subpœna issued for the witness until the 15th of September, and the trial was set for the 16th, if I remember rightly."

There was no dissent from the two statements. Each of these remarks was made after the following is shown by the record to have occurred:

> "The Court: Have you seen the various returns made by the sheriffs from the southern part of the state?
> "Mr. Wright (counsel for appellant): I have not, your honor. [The Court hands papers to Mr. Wright.]"

We think this chain of circumstances amounts to nothing more than a stipulation that no subpœnas were issued to any sheriff before September 15, the very day for which the second trial of the action was first set, as appellant's counsel was in error in his recollection that the trial date was the 16th. A statement of the district attorney showed that the return of the sheriff of San Diego county was made on October 1, the day the trial actually commenced. There was no showing as to when the return of any of the other sheriffs was made.

[1] The most striking feature involved in this showing appears at the very outset, in point of time. On August 31 the action was set down for a second trial on September 15, but in the interim no subpœna for the complaining witness was issued, not even one for service in the county in which the cause was pending. There may be instances in criminal cases in which such a course would be proper, although we do not decide that it ever would be. It is possible that, under special circumstances, a district attorney might be justified in concluding from a private understanding with a witness that he would be present at a trial, and still be able, without ever having issued a subpœna for the witness, to make a showing of due diligence if he should fail to appear. There was no showing here, however, of any such understanding. We have the bare facts that the trial was set 15 days away and that during that time absolutely nothing was done to insure the attendance of the most important witness for the prosecution. Moreover, if an attempt had been made to serve a subpœna upon the witness 12 days before the date set for the trial, he could have been located at a hotel in San Diego. Ten days before the day set he could have been served at a hotel in Los Angeles. These facts appear from the testimony of the investigator, who was the only witness offered to show due diligence.

If any escape from this chain of circumstances is possible, there is more to follow. When September 15 was reached, the district attorney secured a continuance of the trial because of the absence of the prosecuting witness, and a bench warrant was issued for his apprehension. There was no showing as to what was done under this process, nor was it proved what, if anything, was ascertained concerning the whereabouts of the absentee, in an attempt to serve it. On September 16, the next day after that on which the trial should have been commenced, the investigator began a belated search for the witness. The testimony read to the jury showed that the witness was a newspaper reporter by occupation, and that at the time of the first trial, which had occurred as late as July or August, he was employed by a certain San Diego newspaper, and that he had been with the publication for three years. It was not shown that the investigator, or any one else, ever visited the office of the newspaper for the purpose of ascertaining whether the witness had resigned from his position or had been discharged, and, if either, where he had gone; or whether he still retained the position and was away temporarily on vacation or otherwise. The investigator did go to "the newspapers" in Los Angeles, but after he got from some person whose identity is not disclosed some information, the character of which is not divulged, that the witness might be in Long Beach, he failed to visit the offices of the newspapers there. He knew, so he said, of no place to go except to the post office. After four days of ceaseless search—the efforts actually expended in making it are meagerly stated in the record—the investigator returned to San Diego. This was about September 20. From that time until October 1, when the trial actually commenced, nothing was done by the district attorney's office to locate the complaining witness except to await returns upon the subpœnas which had been issued, not earlier than September 15, to the sheriffs of nine of the counties of Southern California, including San Diego. It has been decided in many cases that when there is evidence that an absent witness has actually left the state, due diligence in attempting to locate him within the state requires what would be but a perfunctory search under other circumstances. There was, however, no such evidence here. The search in the present instance was not what it should have been, and, above and beyond all, it was commenced too late. There was a lack of due diligence, and the trial judge abused the discretion reposed in him by permitting the district attorney to read to the jury the former testimony of the witness. Some of the points presented by this appeal were considered in People v. Hayes, 72 Cal. App. 292, 237 P. 390, where many cases on the subject are cited.

[2] Questions under section 686 of the Penal Code arise too frequently in the courts of review of the state. The right of a defendant in a criminal case to be confronted by the witnesses against him is a most valuable one. Indeed, in some states, although not here, it is guaranteed by direct constitutional provision. The right, as secured by the statute in this state, is stated in broad and general language. Exceptions, under certain special circumstances, are allowed by the statute, and the burden, of course, is upon the prosecution in each instance to show that the exception and not the rule prevails. It is to be feared that this burden often is too lightly assumed by district attorneys. It will not do to count too much upon the fact that the determination whether an exception to the general rule exists is confided to the discretion of trial courts. It is true that in a vast majority of the cases the courts of review have upheld the exercise of discretion permitting the reading of former testimony, but their work has been increased by the mere presentation of the question with such frequency. When a criminal case is set for trial one of the first, as well as one of the most important, duties of the district attorney is to assemble the witnesses for the prosecution. If this duty is strictly regarded in every case, a right of defendants which is sometimes lost will sometimes be saved, and the labors of courts of appeal will be lessened. If a witness is not then found, due diligence easily can be shown.

[3] Appellant presents other points, but it is not necessary to consider them.

Section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution does not save the situation here presented. There has been a miscarriage of justice in the case. In truth, with the former testimony of the complaining witness out of the record, no case remains.

Judgment reversed.

Certiorari to Industrial Accident Commission.

Proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act by E. E. Walters, employee, against the North Elk Oil Company, employer, and the Zurich General Accident & Liability Insurance Company, Limited, insurer. Award of the Industrial Accident Commission in the employee's favor, and the employer and insurer bring certiorari. Award affirmed.

Verge, Cooney & Kearney, of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

WORKS, P. J. E. E. Walters was employed by North Elk Oil Company. In the course of his employment he and a fellow employee were engaged in some operations which required the handling of a certain sand line, as it is termed. This line was a wire rope, and, at the end and some distance from and below where Walters and his companion were working, it was wound round the drum of a donkey engine. At a time when the engine, temporarily, was not in operation, the two men had the sand line in their hands. In some manner a loop or kink in the line caught one of the hands of Walters' companion, and while the two men were attempting, by pulling on the line, to disengage the member, the engine was started and began to draw in the rope and wind it on the drum. Fearing serious injury to the imprisoned hand, Walters and his companion pulled and strained at the rope, at the same time calling to the operator of the engine to stop it. This was finally done, but not until Walters, as a result of his tugging at the line, according to testimony before the Industrial Accident Commission, felt a severe pain in his right groin. The nature of the injuries claimed to have been suffered by him will be described in detail below. He made application for compensation because of them, and an award was made in his favor. Petitioners asked for a rehearing before the Industrial Accident Commission, which was denied. They then applied to this court for the writ of review, and a writ issued.

There was ample evidence before the commission to justify the finding that after the occurrences above related Walters was found to be afflicted with a right orchitis and epididymitis; that is, these afflictions were found to be present on the right side of the applicant. Orchitis is an inflammation of a testicle. Epididymitis is an inflammation of the epididymis, an oblong organ attached to the testicle.

[1] Two experts gave evidence which tended to show that the injuries of Walters did not arise out of his employment. Dr. R. W. Harbaugh made a written statement which contained the following:

> "In my opinion the strain and exertion were a minor factor in reactivating an old quiescent infection. I believe, then, that we are dealing with a case in which pre-existing disease is the primary factor, the strain incidental to his [Walters'] occupation acting as an exacerbating factor."

The record contains several written statements by Dr. Gustav F. Boehme. The first of these is dated February 15, 1926, the occurrence out of which Walters' application arose having taken place on December 28, 1925. The statement is based upon an examination of the applicant on February 13, and reads, in part:

> "At the present time this man has a receding epididymitis. This condition in my opinion is due to infection of some sort and is not attributable to injury. You will notice that this man sustained no blow or injury in this region, and therefore I feel that all injury can be excluded as a causative factor. * * * There is no disability due to injury. There will be no permanent disability."

In a second statement, dated April 17, 1926, the same expert says:

> "This condition, as I see it, at this time and as I saw it previously, leaves no question of doubt in my mind but that we are dealing with an infectious process involving the epididymi. * * * This case, in my opinion, presents nothing which was occasioned by injury or industry, and I do not feel that any disability is to be attributed to any occupational cause."

It is contended that these opinions relate to matters which are exclusively for experts, and that therefore certain lay evidence which is to be found in the record cannot be considered as affecting the opinions of the experts from whose statements we have quoted, and, legally, could not have been considered by respondent commission as a foundation for the award it made. Before we come to that particular question, however, several others are to be examined. In the first place, the opinion of one of the two experts was not given without qualification. The portion of the statement of Dr. Harbaugh which is above set forth was preceded immediately by this remark: "Medical opinion is divided upon the subject as to just what relationship strain and exertion have on this type of case." Again, a third expert, Dr. A. B. Edgerton, gave his views upon the question as to the cause which produced the condition of Walters. He testified before the commission:

> "Q. Have you known of those conditions developing from strain? A. No; I never have known of a case developing from strain.
> "Q. Have you any opinion whether or not such a strain as he described, or a very severe strain, could cause it, or precipitate it? A. It is very hard to say; I never have seen a case in my experience that has happened, although it might happen.
> "Q. You say it might happen? A. It might."

Further, Dr. Boehme, in his statement dated April 17, gave the reasons for the conclusion reached by him. They were:

> "(1) That the man in no way claims any local injury to the scrotum. (2) The fact that the epididymis alone is involved and that there is involvement on both sides. It is usual for injuries in this region to involve not alone the epididymis but also the testicle, and the involvement of the epididymis alone, especially bilaterally, leads to the conclusion that there must have been some infection in the past. You will note that the patient himself also admits that there was some discharge present a few days before admission to the hospital. (3) The fact that his condition did not come on until a considerable time after the alleged accident, and that he worked for the rest of the day following the alleged injury, and two days thereafter, and then was laid off, not because of injury, but because there was no work. (4) The fact that it is practically anatomically impossible to produce an injury in this region without direct violence on the part. Had there been any torsion or any other serious injury this man would have had immediate pain, and would within a very short period of time thereafter have been forced to quit. This was not the fact in this case."

The first reason assigned was a proper subject of consideration by the expert, for it was in strict accordance with the evidence, that is, if by "local injury" he intended to refer to a traumatic injury, as he apparently did. Several things are to be mentioned in connection with the second reason. Take first the statement, "The epididymis alone is involved." Dr. Boehme never examined Walters until February 13, a month and a half after the occurrences from which his claim for compensation arises. Moreover, the expert's statement as to the involvement of the epididymis alone is in the present tense, was made on April 17, and is given as a reason for an opinion expressed on the same day. There was evidence from which a finding could have been made that the reason given was not a proper subject for the consideration of the expert. Walters testified that immediately after the accident and before he left the spot at which it occurred his testicle was painful: "It was painful then; for a while I couldn't hardly do anything." He said he first saw a doctor a week or ten days after he was hurt, and that in the interim his testicle had swollen so that a suspensory which he had bought would not contain it. When he went to the physician the latter "noticed the condition I was in; my right testicle was as long as your finger, and it had gotten so it was about, pretty near, I should say between 5 and 6 inches long, and swollen up and very painful." Some time after he was seen by this physician, and after he had consulted another, he went to a hospital where he remained in bed for a week. At the end of his sojourn there, as he testified, "the swelling left me, practically all of it, and they called me up and asked me if I was able to travel, to go to Los Angeles," his injuries having been incurred at Taft. This trip to Los Angeles was taken, and seems to have been requested by petitioner Zurich Company. Dr. Boehme examined Walters in his office in that city on February 13, 1926, and on behalf of the petitioner last named. In stating the second reason for his conclusions Dr. Boehme refers to an involvement of the epididymi on both sides, and gives this circumstance, together with the fact that the epididymi alone were affected, as a ground for concluding that "there must have been some infection in the past." As we have already pointed out, there was evidence that the epididymi were not alone affected, but also, at first, the right testicle. Moreover, while the expert states that a bilateral affection of the epididymi is characteristic of gonorrheal infection—for the context of his several statements shows that he referred to that species of infection—he does not say that such a condition might not result from a unilateral strain, if it be granted that orchitis or epididymitis may be superinduced at all by a nontraumatic force. Again, in the statement of his second reason the expert refers to the fact that "there was some discharge present a few days before admission to the hospital." This, however, was some time after the accident, and he does not say that a discharge might not have resulted without previous infection and solely from the condition in which the right testicle was at that time, as shown by the testimony of Walters, with which condition the expert was apparently unfamiliar. The third reason given does violence to much of the evidence in the record. There was abundant testimony that the "condition" came on immediately after the accident. Also, while it is true that the particular work of the crew with which Walters was employed was continued for but three days, the undisputed evidence is that he did not work during that period. Immediately following the accident he was taken to a tent, where, as he testified, he lay down for the entire three days, except that, as further testified by him, he "watched the pot, firing the boilers." He said further, "I didn't do any work; there wasn't any work to it." The head man on the job corroborated Walters' testimony as to his lying in the tent, for at least a part of the time. He testified, further: "There is no work to firing the boiler with the exception of a little gauge valve." This statement undoubtedly means that the boiler was "fired" by means of oil, the flow being regulated by the mere turning of a valve. The fourth reason given by the expert is likewise in defiance of a portion of the evidence. There was abundant testimony that Walters suffered extreme pain at the moment of the accident and continuously for a long time thereafter, and that he was immediately "forced to quit." The conclusions of Dr. Boehme, based, as they were, upon an improper hypothetical case, were practically of no value.

[2, 3] Walters testified that he had never been ill in his life. He said, specifically, that he had never had a venereal disease of any kind. This is the lay evidence to which petitioners refer, as stated above, as not being proper for consideration in opposition to the testimony of the experts. The testimony given by Walters was not upon a subject which is for experts alone. 22 C. J. 618. Without the citation of authority, it would seem that a witness may testify whether he has had a particular disease as a matter of fact known to himself, and not as a matter of opinion.

[4] We can see nothing in this proceeding but a conflict of evidence. Under such circumstances, of course, the award made by the respondent commission cannot be disturbed.

Award affirmed.

PEOPLE v. PADILLA. (Crim. No. 1445.)

(District Court of Appeal. Second District, Division 1. California. March 1, 1927.)

1. Criminal law 🔑736(1)—Whether showing warrants admission of testimony at preliminary examination rests in court's discretion (Pen. Code, § 686).

Decision of whether sufficient showing has been made as foundation for admitting in evidence testimony given by witness at preliminary examination of defendant in criminal action, under Pen. Code, § 686, lies within sound discretion of judge of trial court.

2. Criminal law 🔑543(2)—Evidence that witness was outside state, held to warrant reception of his testimony at preliminary examination (Pen. Code, § 686).

Evidence held sufficient to justify judge of trial court in concluding that witness who had testified at preliminary examination of defendant before committing magistrate was outside state at time of trial, so as to make prior testimony admissible under Pen. Code, § 686.

3. Criminal law 🔑543(2)—Prosecution need not show effort to secure attendance of witness outside state to have his testimony at preliminary examination admitted (Pen. Code, § 686).

In prosecution for robbery, where it was shown that witness who testified at preliminary examination of defendant before committing magistrate was outside state, prosecution need not show effort to secure his attendance as witness in order to have his testimony before committing magistrate admitted, under Pen. Code, § 686, since law does not require futile acts.

4. Criminal law 🔑772(6)—Evidence held insufficient to justify instruction to acquit if defendant was incited to commit robbery (Pen. Code, § 211).

In prosecution for robbery evidence held insufficient to justify instruction to acquit if defendant was incited or induced by others to commit such crime, where he robbed witness who had set trap to catch him as unlawful seller of narcotics of marked money with which she intended to pay him, in view of Pen. Code, § 211, defining robbery.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Wm. C. Doran, Judge.

Frank Padilla was convicted of robbery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

M. M. Gordon and Antonio Orfila, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HOUSER, J. [1, 2] Defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction of the crime of robbery and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The first point presented by appellant is made in connection with the introduction in evidence, over defendant's objection, of the testimony given by a certain witness at the preliminary examination of defendant before the committing magistrate.

Section 686 of the Penal Code is authority for the rule that the testimony of a witness taken at a preliminary examination of a defendant may be read at the trial in the superior court upon its being satisfactorily shown to the court that such witness cannot with due diligence be found within the state.

It is contended by appellant that "there was no evidence introduced that showed or tended to show that the witness E. Goldbaum Padilla could not, with due diligence, be found within this state." Specifically, it is urged by appellant that the testimony given by Helen Goldbaum Padilla to the effect that one week before the trial she received a letter postmarked at El Paso, Tex., from the witness whose testimony taken before the committing magistrate was sought to be introduced in evidence, was insufficient to meet the requirements of the statute to which reference has been had; furthermore, that no effort was made on the part of the prosecution to secure the attendance of such absent witness.

In support of such contention appellant cites the case of People v. Lewandowski, 143 Cal. 574, 77 P. 467, where, among other things, it is said that on the trial of a defendant in the superior court, before allowing the deposition of an absent witness taken on the preliminary examination of such defendant to be read in evidence, the trial court should be fully satisfied by the evidence that the absent witness cannot with due diligence be found in the state. Other cases are cited to the same effect.

With reference to the foundation laid by the prosecution for the introduction in evidence of the testimony given by the witness at the preliminary examination, it was shown by the witness Helen Goldbaum Padilla, in substance, that she was the wife of the absent witness; that she and said absent witness lived happily together, and that she was conversant with his affairs; that at the time of the trial he was not at his home in the city of Los Angeles, the place where the trial of defendant was conducted, but that he was in the city of El Paso, Tex.; that he left the state of California with a moving picture concern, and that he had been out of the state of California for some time; that the witness had received letters from the absent witness "from several towns"; and that the last letter which she received from him was from El Paso, Tex., at a time about a week before the time when the witness was testifying; and that she did not know when her husband would return to Los Angeles, as he was in business at El Paso.

The authorities appear to be unanimous in the declaration that the decision of whether in such a matter a sufficient showing has been made as a foundation for admitting in evidence the testimony given by a witness at a preliminary examination of a defendant in a criminal action lies within the sound discretion of the judge of the trial court. As an example, the following appears in the case of People v. Lederer, 17 Cal. App. 369, 374, 119 P. 949, 952:

> "It has been held that under the provisions of this section [686 of the Penal Code] the trial judge has discretion in determining whether or not a sufficient foundation has been laid entitling such testimony to be read in evidence, and that where there is any evidence to support the conclusion affecting that matter, the ruling cannot be disturbed on appeal. People v. Nelson, 85 Cal. 421 (24 P. 1006); People v. Witty, 138 Cal. 576 (72 P. 177); People v. Lewandowski, 143 Cal. 574 (77 P. 467)."

In the case of People v. Lewandowski, 143 Cal. 574, 576, 77 P. 467, 468, it is said:

> "The question, however, as to whether it is satisfactorily shown that such witness cannot with due diligence be found within the state is a question of fact that is addressed to the trial court, to be determined by it from evidence introduced before it (People v. Plyler, 126 Cal. 379 [58 P. 904]), and with the determination of that question of fact by the trial court this court will not interfere, unless the evidence thereon is such as to satisfy the court that the trial court abused the discretion confided to it in holding that due diligence had been used, and that the witness could not be found. (People v. Witty, 138 Cal. 576 [72 P. 177]; People v. Reilly, 106 Cal. 648 [40 P. 13])."

It is clear that the evidence in the instant case was sufficient upon which the judge of the trial court was justified in basing his conclusion that the witness in question was outside the state of California at the time the trial of defendant was conducted.

[3] Regarding the point that no effort was made by the prosecution to secure the attendance of the supposedly absent witness, as was remarked by the trial judge when such question was presented to him, "the law does not require futile acts." It having been made to appear that the witness was outside the state of California, it would have been useless for the prosecution to show what effort had been made by it to secure the attendance of the witness. In the case of People v. Caballero, 41 Cal. App. 146, 151, 182 P. 321, where a similar question was presented, the court said:

> "Counsel for appellant claims that due diligence was not exercised to produce the witness Wiedenbeck at the trial of this case. The obvious reply is that when it was shown that Wiedenbeck was without the state of California, by showing he was at that time at Camp Lewis in the state of Washington, the district attorney was discharged from further obligation to produce the witness at the trial, since there was no legal process by which he could have compelled such attendance. We hold, therefore, that sufficient foundation was established for the introduction in evidence of Wiedenbeck's testimony at the preliminary examination, and that the court did not err in overruling defendant's objection thereto."

[4] The further contention is made by appellant that the trial court erred in refusing to give to the jury, at defendant's request, two certain instructions in effect that if the jury should find from the evidence that defendant was incited or induced by certain persons to commit the crime charged in the information, the defendant should be found not guilty.

The evidence shows in substance that a trap had been set to catch the defendant as an unlawful seller of narcotics. The defendant agreed with a Mrs. Bryant to sell her 14 ounces of morphine for the sum of $1,200. It was arranged between defendant and Mrs. Bryant that the delivery of the morphine should be made at a certain time in a specified room in the Angelus Hotel in the city of Los Angeles. Thereupon Mrs. Bryant arranged with three police officers to be in hiding in a bathroom adjoining the room in which the proposed transaction was to take place in order that defendant might be then and there arrested. Near the appointed time defendant went to the hotel and telephoned to Mrs. Bryant, who was occupying a room therein, to meet him on the mezzanine floor of the hotel, to which suggestion Mrs. Bryant acceded. Before going to meet defendant, however, Mrs. Bryant had obtained the sum of $1,200 in marked currency from one of the officers, which money was placed by Mrs. Bryant in one of the stockings which she was wearing. After some conversation between defendant and Mrs. Bryant, defendant suggested that the "deal" be consummated on the mezzanine floor, which was negatived by Mrs. Bryant, she insisting that the sale take place in her room as previously arranged between them. Defendant then inquired of Mrs. Bryant whether she had the money with which to pay for the morphine; whereupon Mrs. Bryant lifted the edge of her skirt and showed defendant the money in her stocking. What then occurred is well explained by the testimony given by Mrs. Bryant as follows:

> "Q. And what did he say? A. He said all right, he would get the package, for us to walk around the hall a ways, and he would get this package.
> "Q. And did you walk around the hallway? A. We went around the hall and came to a door there. He opened the door and shoved me back, jumped in, came back almost immediately with a package, shoved the package under my arm, and as he did made a grab at me, grabbed me by the arms, and I fought back, and he reached down and took the money from my stocking, and I was fighting all the time to keep him from it. * * *
> "Q. Did he get the money from your stocking? A. He did.
> "Q. You didn't give it to him, did you? A. I did not. * * * Q. You say he struck at you? A. He did.
> "Q. Where did he strike you? A. Over the chest, shoulders, and face. * * *
> "Q. When the defendant got your money what did he do? A. He run down the hall, down the stairs, through the lobby and out the door. I ran after him."

By section 211 of the Penal Code robbery is defined as "the felonious taking of personal property in the possession of another, from his person or immediate presence, and against his will, accomplished by means of force or fear"

Assuming that the jury believed the testimony offered by the prosecution, it is clear that the jury was justified in finding defendant guilty of the crime of which he was charged, to wit, robbery. Although a part of the evidence might seem to warrant the inference that in setting the trap to catch defendant in the unlawful sale of narcotics either Mrs. Bryant or one of the police officers, or all of them, had induced or incited defendant to make such sale, the attention of this court has been attracted to no evidence from which it might be inferred that any one had enticed or induced or incited defendant to commit the crime of robbery. It is manifest that if, in the circumstances under which the crime of which defendant was convicted was committed, the crime of murder had been committed by him, the instructions in question would have been properly refused for the reason, if for none other, that the crime charged against the defendant would have been wholly unrelated to the crime in which he was sought to be entrapped. And so it is with reference to the crime of robbery of which defendant was convicted. The robbery of Mrs. Bryant was not the crime originally contemplated. It was entirely separate and distinct from the crime in the perpetration of which the police officers hoped to ensnare defendant. If defendant abandoned the thought of selling the morphine to Mrs. Bryant and instead thereof, of his own volition, committed the crime of robbery, which was wholly disconnected from the original plan to which reference has been had, even assuming (without conceding) (see People v. Heusers, 58 Cal. App. 103, 207 P. 908; People v. Barkdoll, 36 Cal. App. 25, 171 P. 440; People v. Tomasovich, 56 Cal. App. 520, 206 P. 119; People v. Norcross, 71 Cal. App. 2, 234 P. 438), that the instruction might have been proper had defendant been on trial for the unlawful sale by him of narcotics, it is apparent that, as there was no evidence upon which to base the instruction in question, it had no place on the trial of defendant on the charge of robbery.

No prejudicial error appearing, it is ordered that the judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial be and they are affirmed.

LIERLY et al. v. McEWEN et al. (Civ. 5217.)

Appeal and error 🔑417(1)—Notice stating party desires and intends to appeal from judgment held sufficient to give jurisdiction to hear appeal (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 940, 953a).

Notice in conformity with Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, stating party desires and intends to appeal from judgment, held sufficient under section 940, relating to notice of appeal, to give appellate court jurisdiction to hear appeal; sections relating to appeal being liberally construed.

Action by W. S. Lierly and others against Daniel H. McEwen and others (substituted for the Security Trust Company) and the Security Trust Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant first named appeals. On motion to dismiss the appeal. Motion denied.

Byron Coleman, of San Francisco, James Donovan, of Los Angeles, and John L. McNab, of San Francisco, for appellant.

William W. Kaye, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

TYLER, P. J. Motion to dismiss appeal on the ground of the insufficiency of the notice. The transcript and appellant's brief have been on file for nearly four years, and no brief has been presented by respondents. The language employed by appellant in his notice of appeal states that he "desires and intends to appeal from the judgment." The sole objection to the notice is that it merely conforms to the requirements of section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to a request for the preparation of the transcript and is insufficient as a notice of appeal as required by section 940 of the same Code. In support of the motion we are cited to several decisions of the Supreme and appellate courts. These cases are discussed and reviewed in Anderson v. Standard Lumber Co., 60 Cal. App. 445, 213 P. 65, and we do not deem a further discussion of them necessary. The notice involved in the case last cited read as follows: "You and each of you will please take notice that the plaintiff in the above-entitled action desires and intends to appeal * * * from the judgment. * * *" It is therefore practically the same form of notice as the instant one. It was there held that under the statutes as they now read the notice was sufficient to give the appellate court jurisdiction to hear the appeal, and the motion to dismiss was denied. The court, in disposing of the question, declared that it is the disposition of courts to hear appeals upon their merits, and the sections of the Code relating to the subject should be liberally construed with a view of promoting such purpose.

This decision has been followed with approval in the recent case of Wright & Hogan, Inc., v. Heide, 72 Cal. App. 16, 236 P. 219, where the same doctrine is announced.

The motion to dismiss is denied.

PEOPLE v. DE FEHR. (Cr. 930.)★

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 3, 1927. Rehearing Denied April 2, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 2, 1927.)

1. Infants 🔑16—Commitment of minor to reform school under Juvenile Court Law, after conviction of felony, does not involve criminal prosecution or judgment of sentence.

Where minor falling within purview of the Juvenile Court Law (St. 1915, p 1225), has been arraigned on or convicted of felony, and superior court, concluding to exercise juvenile court powers, suspends trial or pronouncement of judgment of sentence to imprisonment and commits him to reform school, proceeding does not involve criminal prosecution or judgment of sentence.

2. Infants 🔑16—Superior court committing minor convicted of felony to reform school under Juvenile Court Law may recall him for sentence if justified (Juvenile Court Law, §§ 7, 9).

Superior court, having committed minor convicted of felony to reform school under Juvenile Court Law, §§ 7, 9 (St. 1915, pp. 1230, 1232), retains jurisdiction of case, and may recall commitment and impose judgment of sentence on good cause; provisions of section 7 that reform school trustees may return minor for sentence if he is incorrigible not being condition precedent to recall.

3. Infants 🔑16—Recall of minor, committed to reform school under Juvenile Court Law, and sentenced to state prison, held not abuse of discretion (Juvenile Court Law, § 7; Pen. Code, § 1099).

Court held not to abuse discretion in recalling minor from reform school to which he had been committed for felony under St. 1911, p. 10. as amended by St. 1921, p. 96, under Juvenile Court Law, § 7 (St. 1915, p. 1230), and sentencing him to state prison, where he failed to testify in another case as he had promised; especially in view of Pen. Code, § 1099, permitting discharging one defendant to be witness for people where two or more are included in same charge.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Charles O. Busick, Judge.

Barney DeFehr was convicted of pimping and sentenced to the Preston School of Industry. From an order vacating and setting aside the order committing him to the Preston School of Industry, and from judgment of conviction and of sentence to the State Prison, he appeals. Affirmed.

HART, J. On the 16th day of November, 1925, an information was filed by the district attorney of Sacramento county, in the superior court of said county charging the defendant with the crime of pimping, as said crime is defined by an act of the Legislature of 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 10) as amended by the Legislature of 1921 (Stats. 1921, p. 96). On the 17th day of November, 1925, the defendant was arraigned upon said information, entered a plea of not guilty thereto, and his trial for the offense so charged fixed and set for the 28th day of December, 1925, at the hour of 10 o'clock a. m. On the last-mentioned date, the case having been called for trial, the defendant, throught his counsel, asked for and was by the court granted permission to withdraw his plea of not guilty theretofore interposed to the information, and, being thereupon called upon to plead to said information, entered a plea of guilty to the crime therein charged. On the same day (December 28, 1925), the court, having upon investigation found that the age of the accused was between 18 and 21 years, made an order, under authority of section 7 of the Juvenile Court Law (Stats. 1915, pp. 1225, 1230), and with the consent of the accused, committing the latter to the custody of the Preston School of Industry at Ione, state of California, "there to be detained * * * until he shall have attained the age of 21 years." The record shows that, under the authority of said order, the defendant was, within due time after the making thereof, committed to the custody of the above-named state reform school. Thereafter, on the 8th day of March, 1926, the court made the following order, the same being over the signature of the judge:

"To O. H. Close, Superintendent Preston School of Industry, Ione, California:

"You are hereby ordered and directed to produce Barney DeFehr in the superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of Sacramento, in department 1 thereof, at 10 o'clock a. m. on the 22d day of March, 1926, then and there to show cause, if any he has, why the order of this court heretofore made that he be confined in the Preston School of Industry in satisfaction of the judgment and sentence of this court on his plea of guilty to a charge of pimping should not be set aside and made void, and that he be on said judgment and sentence committed to the State Prison at San Quentin, for the term prescribed by law."

That the action of the court in making the above order may be understood, it is proper that there should now be presented a statement of the facts leading to the filing of the information against the accused as well as those occurring subsequently to the making of the order committing the accused to the custody of the reform school. It appears that early in the month of November, 1925, the defendant, accompanied by a girl of about 18 years of age, went to the city of Sacramento from the city of San Francisco, arriving in the first-named city near the hour of 7 o'clock in the evening. The twain took a room at a hotel in Sacramento, and together occupied said room. The record is not clear as to the period of time during which the couple lived together at the hotel referred to, but it is made to appear that, within a very brief period of time after they arrived in Sacramento, the defendant made arrangements with a woman by the name of Mitchell, who, it was and is claimed by the district attorney, was then maintaining a house of prostitution in Sacramento, whereby his young female companion was taken into said house of prostitution for the purpose of carrying on the malodorous business of a prostitute, and that she did for several days following her entrance into the house so occupy herself. These facts became known to the officers, and the young woman was removed from the place, put in proper hands, and both the defendant and the Mitchell woman were arrested, the first named charged, as we have seen, with the crime of pimping, and the last named with the crime of contributing to the delinquency of a minor female. The trial of the case of the Mitchell woman was taken up and proceeded with early in the month of February, 1926. The defendant was subpœnaed by the people to testify in said case, and the superintendent of the reform school, where the accused was then under restraint, returned him to the superior court for the purpose of testifying therein. The district attorney called the defendant to the witness stand in said case and proceeded to question him concerning his knowledge of the character of the house owned and conducted by the Mitchell woman and the circumstances under which the female minor referred to entered said house and her conduct while an inmate thereof. The defendant, in the first instance, stated, in response to his examination as a witness by the district attorney, that he did not know the premises numbered and designated "315-½" J street, in the city of Sacramento (the place where the Mitchell woman is alleged to have conducted a house of prostitution and to which the defendant had taken the female minor mentioned), and, further, that he had never been at said premises. After giving those answers, and at the afternoon session of the court, the defendant, upon resuming his place in the witness chair, stated in open court that he desired to correct the testimony given by him at the forenoon session of the court. Being permitted to do so, he stated that he was familiar with and had been at the premises of the Mitchell woman, at No. 315½ J. street, Sacramento, prior to his arrest upon the charge of pimping. The district attorney then propounded a number of questions pertinent to the Mitchell case, and the defendant in each instance refused to answer the questions, basing his refusal upon the ground that answers thereto would tend to incriminate him or subject him to prosecution for and conviction of offenses other than that to which he had theretofore pleaded guilty and for which he was then being held in custody by the authorities of the reform school. The district attorney made an application to the superior court for an order vacating and setting aside the order suspending the pronouncement of judgment in the case of the defendant, upon his plea of guilty to the crime of pimping, and committing him to the custody of the Preston School of Industry in lieu of imprisonment in the state penitentiary, and in support of said application filed an affidavit setting forth the facts above stated, and further, in substance: That, after the arraignment of the accused on the charge of pimping, his attorney called on the district attorney and assured that officer that the defendant was under the age of 18 years, and that he would change his plea to the crime of pimping, as charged against him if the district attorney would recommend to the judge of the superior court that defendant be sent to the Preston School of Industry "instead of being sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison"; that he (district attorney) replied that the defendant would be called as a witness in the case of the "People v. Vivian Mitchell, charged with the crime of contributing to the dependency of one ———, a girl under the age of 21 years" (referring to the young woman accompanying defendant to Sacramento and by the latter placed in the Mitchell house of prostitution); that "deponent further stated to the said T. A. Farrell that if the said Barney DeFehr, when called to the witness stand, would testify in accordance with a statement he made to deponent after his arrest on said charge of pimping with reference to a conversation had with the said Vivian Mitchell at her place of address, 315½ J street, in the city of Sacramento, which said statement the said Barney DeFehr stated to deponent was true, and which the deponent is informed and believes and therefore avers was true, that said deponent would recommend to said superior court that the said Barney DeFehr be sent to the Preston School of Industry; that thereafter, the said Barney DeFehr promised the said T. A. Farrell (his attorney) and Edwin Nicholas, county detective attached to the district attorney's office, that he would testify in the case of People v. Vivian Mitchell in accordance with said statement made to deponent after his arrest on the charge of pimping, to wit, that he visited the said Vivian Mitchell at 315½ J street, Sacramento, and made preliminary arrangements for said ——— (the minor female referred to), to practice prostitution at said 315½ J street; that on the 28th day of December, 1925, the said Barney DeFehr duly appeared in said superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of Sacramento, with his counsel, T. A. Farrell, and changed his plea of not guilty to guilty, and was by Hon. Charles O. Busick, judge of the superior court of the county of Sacramento, sent to the Preston School of Industry as punishment for the said offense."

The affidavit of the district attorney then proceeds to state facts relative to the conduct of the defendant when under examination as a witness for the people in the Mitchell Case, and which are set forth hereinabove, and in conclusion in effect alleges that the conduct of the defendant as a witness in the Mitchell Case, after being sent to the reform school instead of being sentenced to imprisonment upon the promise and condition that he would testify truthfully as to the facts within his knowledge pertinent to and in support of the charge against Vivian Mitchell, was such as to render "him an unfit person to be confined in the Preston School of Industry, and that his influence and example would be detrimental to the welfare of the inmates thereof."

The district attorney, in the proceeding looking to the annulment of the commitment of defendant to the reform school and the imposition upon him, after such annulment, of a judgment of imprisonment, testified that, upon the arrest of the accused and at some time antedating the order of commitment to said school, he interviewed the latter relative to the crime for which he had been arrested; that defendant admitted taking the young girl in question from San Francisco to Sacramento; that at the latter place the two took a room at a hotel; that they registered as "Mr. and Mrs. Reed"; that they were unmarried; that, while at the hotel, they had sexual relations; and that, well knowing that prostitution was habitually practiced at the house of the Mitchell woman, he called upon the latter and arranged with her for the entrance of the girl into her said house for the purpose of going "to work" there—meaning by the use of the word "work" that the girl was to be taken in by the Mitchell woman to practice prostitution as a business.

The detective connected with the district attorney's office testified in the same proceeding that he visited defendant in the county jail and asked him if he (defendant) was sent to the Preston School instead of the state prison he would testify in the case of Vivian Mitchell; that defendant asked the detective what he "wanted him (defendant) to testify to." In reply, the detective said, "Only the truth," to which defendant answered, "Well; I am willing to do that. The district attorney has my statement in his office (referring to the statement to which the district attorney testified and of which a brief recital is given above), and that is all I know about the case. I am willing to testify to those facts."

T. E. Morrin, assistant superintendent of the Preston School of Industry, who was made a witness by the defendant in this proceeding, testified that the accused was delivered to the custody of the reform school on the 1st day of January, 1926; that he was familiar with the conduct of the defendant during his confinement in said school, and that "it has been very good"; that the accused had, out of the 7,000 credits entitling an inmate of the school to be released from its custody, earned 600 credits, with no marks against him.

In disposing of the motion to set aside and vacate the order committing the defendant to the reform school, the judge by whom said order was made, presiding in the present proceeding, stated that, before making the order, he had knowledge of the fact that the defendant had promised that if sent to the reform school in the place of being sentenced to prison he would testify in the Mitchell Case on behalf of the people.

The defendant has brought the case to this court on an appeal from the order vacating and setting aside the order committing him to the Preston School of Industry and from the judgment of conviction and of sentence to the state prison.

The defendant, for a reversal, contends: (1) "That the court exhausted its power by the judgment and sentence pronounced December 28, 1925, and was thereafter without jurisdiction to impose further sentence;" (2) "that, even though jurisdiction be assumed, the evidence did not warrant the making of the order complained of;" and (3) "that the order is an illegal interference with the parole system at the Preston School of Industry."

The position of the defendant, as indicated by the foregoing enumerated points, requires a consideration of sections 7 and 9 of the Juvenile Court Act (Stats. 1915, pp. 1225, 1230, 1232). It is therein provided that where any person over the age of 18 years and under the age of 21 years is, by indictment or information, accused of a felony or a misdemeanor, except when the crime charged is a capital offense, or an attempt to commit such offense, the judge of the superior court of the county wherein such crime has been committed may, in his discretion, or with or upon the request of the accused, arrest said proceeding at the time of arraignment, or at any time previous to the empanelment of the jury, "and may proceed to investigate the charge against the defendant, and all the facts and circumstances necessary to determine the proper disposition to be made of said person, and shall determine whether such person shall be dealt with as a ward of the juvenile court under the provisions of this act. If the court is satisfied upon such investigation that said person should be declared a ward of the juvenile court and should be dealt with under this act, it may make such order or orders as herein provided for the disposition of such wards. If such person thereafter proves not to be amenable to the discipline of the state school to which he may be committed, and the trustees thereof shall determine that said person should be committed to a state penitentiary, such person shall be returned to the committing court, and thereafter proceedings shall be had upon the indictment or information commencing at the point at which proceedings were arrested," etc.

The second subdivision of section 7 makes like provision relative to a person over 19 and under 21 years of age, after his conviction of a felony or a misdemeanor charged by indictment or information, and also provides that the judge "may from time to time modify said probation orders, as is herein provided in the case of persons adjudged wards of the juvenile court." Said subdivision of section 7 further provides:

> "If such person during the period of his commitment to said state institution, proves to be incorrigible or not amenable to the discipline of such institution, and it shall be deemed advisable in the judgment of the trustees of such institution that said person be sent to a state prison, then said person shall be returned to the superior court in which the verdict was rendered, for sentence, and thereupon the court shall pronounce judgment."

Section 9 of said act reads:

> "Any order made by the court in case of any person subject to the jurisdiction of the court under the provisions of any of subdivisions one to thirteen inclusive of section one of this act may at any time be changed, modified or set aside as to the judge may seem meet and proper; provided, however, that nothing in this act contained shall be deemed to interfere with the system of parole and discharge that is now or may hereafter be provided by law, or by rule of the board of trustees of the Whittier State School, the Preston School of Industry or the California School for Girls, or any similar state institution or institutions, respectively, for the parole and discharge of wards of the juvenile court committed to the said schools or to any similar state institutions hereafter created, or with the management of the said schools, say that the court committing a ward to any of said schools may thereafter change, modify or set aside said order of commitment upon ten days' notice of the hearing of the application therefor being served by United States mail upon the superintendent of the said school to which said person has previously been committed, and providing that the court shall not then change, modify or set aside said order without due consideration of the effect thereof upon the discipline and parole system of said school or institution."

As is to be implied from the points urged for a reversal, as they are above stated, the argument of counsel for the defendant in support of the attack upon the action of the court in annuling its previous order committing the accused to the Preston School of Industry is substantially this: That, the defendant being of the age rendering him eligible in that respect to commitment to the reform school, and having pleaded guilty to the information charging him with a felony, the superior court or judge thereof was vested with the power to impose either one of two judgments of sentence, to wit, judgment of sentence to the state prison, or, if the conditions warranted, judgment of sentence to a reform school maintained by the state for the reform of juvenile offenders against public law and incorrigibles; that, having elected to commit the defendant to the reform school, and made an order accordingly, the court or the judge thereupon lost jurisdiction to set aside such order of commitment and in lieu thereof impose upon him a judgment of imprisonment in the state prison for the identical crime for which he had already been committed to the reform school; that, even if in such case it were in the power of the court or the judge to recall and cancel the order of commitment to the reform school, the court or judge would be without jurisdiction or authority to exercise that power until the trustees of the school to which the juvenile offender had been committed had determined that the person so committed had proved "to be incorrigible or not amenable to the discipline of such institution"; and for that reason it is advisable in the judgment of such trustees that such person be returned to the superior court for sentence, etc.

As is to be observed, the proposition first advanced by counsel for the defendant, namely, that, in making an order committing the accused to the reform school, the court below lost jurisdiction thereafter to pronounce judgment of sentence to the state prison upon the accused, proceeds upon the theory that the order of commitment to the Preston School of Industry involved penal punishment. Under the decisions in this state, as well as decisions of other states, the theory is not supportable. To the contrary, where a minor between the ages designated in the Juvenile Court Law has committed a felony or a misdemeanor of which the superior court has triable jurisdiction, has been committed to one of our schools of reform, the judgment of sentence to a penal institution which the court may impose in such case being suspended for such purpose, the purpose is (and such is the obvious purpose of the law authorizing such a course) not to punish the juvenile offender, but to reform and retrieve him by giving him such training and education as will constitute a foundation that will make him, after he has attained his majority and eligible to be discharged from the school, an upright and useful citizen. One of the first of our own cases to deal with the proposition in hand is that of Ex parte Ah Peen, 51 Cal. 280. In that case a complaint charging the petitioner therein, aged 16 years, with the crime of being a vagrant, was filed in the police court of the city and county of San Francisco. Ah Peen, upon the complaint so filed, could have been prosecuted and punished for the crime therein charged, but the police judge, under authority of a statute then existing, arrested proceedings against the defendant and committed him to an industrial school for the reform and education of incorrigible minors. It was contended by the petitioner in the Supreme Court that the course thus pursued by the judge involved an infringement of his constitutional right to a trial by jury, as guaranteed by certain provisions of the Constitution. The Supreme Court rejected that contention in the following language:

> "It is obvious that these provisions of the Constitution have no application whatever to the case of this minor child. The action of the police judge here in question did not amount to a criminal prosecution, nor to proceedings against the minor according to the course of the common law, in which the right of trial by jury is guaranteed. The purpose in view is not punishment for offenses done, but reformation and training of the child to habits of industry, with a view to his future usefulness when he shall have been reclaimed to society, or shall have attained his majority. Having been abandoned by his parents, the state, as parens patriæ, has succeeded to his control, and stands in loco parentis to him. The restraint imposed upon him by public authority is in its nature and purpose the same which, under other conditions, is habitually imposed by parents, guardians of the person, and others exercising supervision and control over the conduct of those who are by reason of infancy, lunacy, or otherwise, incapable of properly controlling themselves. Ex parte Crouse, 4 Whart. [Pa.] 1 [9]; Prescott v. State of Ohio, 19 Ohio [St.] 184 [2 Am. Rep. 388]."

The case of Matter of O'Connor, 29 Cal. App. 225, 155 P. 115, involves a discussion of the same proposition, and the conclusion arrived at therein was in accord with the conclusion announced in the case of Ah Peen. But the latest discussion of the question is in the case of In re Daedler, 194 Cal. 320, 228 P. 467, in which Mr. Justice Richards considers the question exhaustively. The petitioner, a minor a little over the age of 14 years, was charged with murder. After investigation, and without the usual trial, the superior court committed him to the Preston School of Industry. It was stoutly urged in the habeas corpus proceeding that the commitment of the petitioner was illegal, inasmuch as he was, by said order of commitment and his restraint by the industrial school authorities thereunder, sentenced to be punished and was being punished for a crime without having been convicted thereof. The contention was not sustained. After supporting its position by what we conceive to be unanswerable reasoning and by a reference to the California cases dealing with the question, the court, through Mr. Justice Richards, said:

> "When we turn from these decisions of our own courts dealing with the objects and purpose of juvenile court laws, we find a wealth of learning grouped and still growing around the statutory efforts of nearly every state in the Union to adequately deal with the problem of juvenile dependence and delinquency through the establishment and operation of juvenile courts; and while, as we have stated, there was some disposition in the earlier decisions of the courts of certain states to give strict application of the constitutional safeguards of trial by jury and due process of law to proceedings before the juvenile courts and to hold that the proceedings in the cases of minors brought before such courts were criminal in their nature, the main trend of modern authority has been away from this viewpoint and has been distinctly and almost universally in the direction pointed out by this court in the early case of Ah Peen, supra, and emphasized in its later decisions above noted."

[1-3] It is thus conclusively established that, where a minor falling within the purview of the Juvenile Court Law has been arraigned upon or convicted of a felony, the superior court, concluding to exercise its juvenile court powers in his case, suspends his trial or the pronouncement of judgment of sentence to imprisonment and commits him to a school of reform, the proceeding so adopted does not involve a criminal prosecution or a judgment of sentence. And it is equally clear that the Juvenile Court Law contemplates that, while the minor is in the custody of the reform school authorities and until he has attained the age of majority, the superior court shall retain jurisdiction of his case and may at any time recall the commitment to such school and impose a judgment of sentence upon the minor for the offense with which he was charged. Indeed, sections 7 and 9 of the Juvenile Court Law, as will be observed, expressly so provide. The language of those sections in this particular is not at all characterized by ambiguity. Of course, it is not to be understood from anything that is said herein that we are of the opinion that the superior court may arbitrarily or without just cause recall a commitment of a minor to the reform school ordered under the circumstances such as we have here. To the contrary, we are of the opinion that the court must have substantial reasons for recalling such a commitment and setting it aside and thereupon imposing judgment of sentence to a state prison. In such a case, though, the question would not be so much one of jurisdiction as it would be of whether or not the court had abused its discretion in adopting such a course. In this case it cannot be said that the court abused its discretion in setting aside the commitment to the reform school and sentencing the minor to the state prison. The evidence without contradiction shows that the defendant promised that if he were committed to the reform school rather than imprisoned in the state prison for the felony to which he pleaded guilty he would testify to certain material facts in the case of the People v. Vivian Mitchell, charged, as we have seen, with contributing to the delinquency of the minor female referred to above. At the trial of the case of Mitchell the defendant not only in the first instance falsified his testimony, but later, correcting the same, refused to testify on the ground that his testimony would tend to incriminate him. Under the circumstances of the case the reason for his refusal was not substantial, for while he could have been prosecuted for offenses other than the one to which he had pleaded guilty because of his conduct toward the minor female, it is not to be assumed that the district attorney would have proceeded against him for such other offenses if he had given the testimony as he agreed to. Indeed, the fact that he was committed to the reform school clearly warrants this conclusion and we are satisfied that the defendant must have so understood such to be the case when he was called as a witness. It was by the promise that he would testify to the facts in the Mitchell Case which he had narrated to the district attorney that the court was governed to some extent in committing him to the reform school in the place of sentencing him to the state prison. This course was not improper. Indeed, it was in accord with the principle at the bottom of section 1099 of the Penal Code, which provides that when two or more persons are included in the same charge the court may, at any time before the defendants have gone into their defense, on the application of the district attorney, direct any defendant to be discharged, that he may be a witness for the people. Of course, it is to be assumed that the court had found upon investigation that the defendant was a proper person to be taken into the Preston School of Industry. At any rate, it is true that in refusing to testify, as he agreed to do in the Mitchell Case, the defendant practiced deception upon the court, and the latter was therefore justified, after considering the whole situation, in concluding that he was not a fit person to be retained in a school of reform, the purpose of which is to reform refractory minors and to maintain a discipline that will accomplish such a result.

The provision of section 7 of the Juvenile Court Act to the effect that, when it appears to the satisfaction of the trustees of the reform school, the minor during the period of his commitment to said institution proves to be incorrigible or not amenable to the discipline of said institution, and it shall be deemed advisable in the judgment of the trustees of such institution that such person be sent to a state prison, then he shall be returned to the superior court in which he was convicted for sentence and thereupon the court shall pronounce judgment, was not intended as setting forth a condition precedent to the right of the court to put in operation its superior court jurisdiction to set aside the order of commitment and sentence the minor to prison for the offense charged. That provision, in our opinion, was intended to clothe the trustees of the reform school with the power of getting rid of an inmate whose incorrigibility would tend to disrupt the necessary discipline of the school. In other words, the Legislature intended to clothe the trustees with the power of returning the minor to the superior court when he proved to be incorrigible for sentence, notwithstanding the order of commitment made by the juvenile court. This proposition is mentioned because counsel for the defendant seem to be of the opinion that before the court could exercise its jurisdiction in the matter it was necessary that the minor should be returned to the superior court by the trustees of the reform school with a report of the fact of his incorrigibility and therefore his unfitness to remain as an inmate of the institution.

For the reasons herein given, the judgment and the order are affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Thomas Hunt against L. M. Field, Inc. Judgment for plaintiff, and the defendant appealed. Reversed.

Herbert Chamberlin, of San Francisco, for appellant.

S. T. Hogevoll, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued for the rescission of a written contract for the sale and lease of an automobile truck. Plaintiff had judgment, from which the defendant has appealed upon a typewritten transcript.

The complaint alleges that on February 28, 1922, the defendant represented to the plaintiff: (1) That it had for sale a certain motortruck and trailer having the power to transport a load of at least four tons of lumber four times each day over the public roads from the lumber mill of the La Honda Mill Company, a distance of approximately 21½ miles, at a compensation of 15 cents per ton per mile for a period of 8 months each year for 5 consecutive years, commencing on the 1st day of April, 1922; (2) that said truck and trailer were then and there in good mechanical condition for immediate delivery; (3) that said truck and trailer carried with its sale the manufacturer's warranty that the truck and trailer, and each of them, were properly constructed and that they were guaranteed against mechanical imperfection; (4) that if the plaintiff purchased said truck and trailer the said La Honda Mill Company would employ him to transport each day at least three truck loads of lumber, over four tons to each truck load, from their said mill at La Honda to said points of distribution in San Mateo county for a period of eight months each year, for a period of five consecutive years, commencing on the 1st day of April, 1922, for the said compensation of 15 cents per ton per mile. It was further alleged that all said representations were false and untrue; that the truck and trailer did not have the power and capacity alleged; that the defendant did not have any agreement with the La Honda Mill Company that it would employ the purchaser of said truck to transport said lumber from its mill; that the truck was not in good mechanical condition or ready for immediate delivery; that it did not carry the manufacturer's warranty that it was properly constructed or that it was in proper mechanical condition; that defendant knew said representations were false; and that they were made with the intention of defrauding plaintiff and with the intention of inducing him to enter into the contract which was executed on March 1, 1922; that plaintiff did not discover that said representations were untrue until April 14, 1922, and that he rescinded the contract and gave notice thereof to the defendant on April 29, 1922. One thousand dollars having been paid upon the purchase price of the truck, the plaintiff demanded the cancellation of the contract and judgment for return of the money paid under it.

The defendant denied all the material allegations of the complaint, and the cause went to trial before the court with the jury sitting in an advisory capacity. The jury having returned its verdict in favor of the plaintiff, the court made its finding of fact that all the allegations of the complaint were true, and entered judgment thereon as stated.

On this appeal the appellant stresses two points which he insists are covered by well-established rules of law relating to the rescission of contracts of this character: (1) That where a party to a contract seeks to rescind it upon the grounds of false representations or fraud, it is incumbent upon him to show that he relied upon such false representations or fraud to his injury; and (2) that a party who is himself in default in such a contract may not rescind.

As pointed out in the statement of the pleadings, the respondent pleaded four specifications of false representations inducing him to enter into the contract. As to the power or capacity of the truck and trailer, it was alleged that the appellant had represented that it was capable of transporting a load of at least four tons of lumber at least three times each day from the La Honda mill for a distance of 21½ miles to points of distribution in San Mateo county at a compensation of 15 cents per ton per mile for a period of eight months each year for five consecutive years. The trial court found this allegation to be true in its entirety, though the only proof offered in support of it was that it had been represented that the truck could haul 2,000 feet of lumber from the mill to San Francisco or to Redwood City and way points. Nothing was shown as to the mileage between these points nor as to the compensation which might be received therefrom or for the period of use of the truck. Manifestly, evidence of representations that the truck was capable of making two trips a day was not proof of the allegation that it had been falsely represented to the respondent that it would make three trips a day. But aside from this the record fails to show that the respondent believed or acted upon any representation as to the power or capacity of the truck to his injury.

[1] It was alleged that the truck and trailer were represented to be in good mechanical condition and fit for immediate delivery. This allegation was also found to be true, but the only evidence in support of it was that coming from the respondent as a witness in his own behalf to the effect that the agent of the appellant stated to him that he thought the truck was in good mechanical condition but that it would be given a general overhauling; that he, the respondent, went on numerous occasions to the appellant's place of business and directed the making of certain repairs; that he brought his own mechanic to examine the truck, and that he specified a list of repairs to be made, and that these were undertaken by the appellant. With reference to the mechanical condition of the truck, the evidence falls far short of meeting the demands in an action of this kind that the false representations must be shown by clear and convincing proof. There is no conflict in the evidence that at the time of the execution of the contract the appellant agreed to give the truck a general overhauling—to make such repairs as were found to be necessary—that thereafter the appellant agreed to and did make other repairs at the request and under the direction of the respondent.

In reference to the representation as to a factory warranty, the only evidence in the record is found in the written contract, which reads:

> "There is no warranty with this property except warranty in writing and delivered herewith, and further except the warranty of the manufacturer on a new car, which is hereby extended to lessee through lessor without obligation on the lessor's part." (Emphasis ours.)

[2] In reference to each of the three foregoing specifications of false representations the record fails to show any evidence tending to prove that the respondent believed any one of them or that he relied upon them to his injury. The only answer which the respondent makes to this contention of the appellant is an incorrect quotation of testimony purporting to be found on pages 35 and 36 of the transcript. Reference to the transcript, however, discloses that the testimony there found related solely to the question of the representation relating to the employment of the respondent by the La Honda Mill Company. Having failed to bring forth any proof of reliance by the respondent on any of the representations referred to in the three specifications above mentioned, the case, as to them, comes squarely within the rule found in Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, § 890, and reading:

> "Another element of a fraudulent misrepresentation without which there can be no remedy, legal or equitable, is, that it must be relied upon by the party to whom it is made, and must be an immediate cause of his conduct which alters his legal relations. Unless an untrue statement is believed and acted upon it can occasion no legal injury. It is essential, therefore, that the party addressed should trust the representation, and be so thoroughly induced by it, that, judging from the ordinary experience of mankind, in the absence of it he would not, in all reasonable probability, have entered into the contract or other transaction." Spinks v. Clark, 147 Cal. 439, 444, 82 P. 45; Maxon-Nowlin Co. v. Norswing, 166 Cal. 509, 511, 137 P. 240, and other authorities too numerous to mention.

[3] As to the alleged representation of employment of respondent by the mill company, the uncontradicted evidence is that though the appellant represented that it had the privilege of placing the owner of one of its trucks in a hauling job for the mill company, the respondent was notified by the appellant's agents to get in touch with the mill company before the execution of the contract and to see if the job could be had. There is no evidence of any kind tending to prove the allegations of the complaint relating to the character of the work to be done for the mill company, or the compensation to be paid for the period of employment, as alleged in the complaint and found to be true by the trial court. It is in the evidence that the respondent believed the representations contained in a sign placed in the office window of the appellant to the effect that the appellant had the privilege of placing hauling jobs for the mill company to a man who would buy one of the appellant's trucks and drive it upon the job. No other evidence was offered that the appellant believed or relied upon any other representation contained in the complaint. If the representation contained in this sign was the same as that alleged in the complaint and found to be true, the rule heretofore cited from Pomeroy would not be applicable. but it is not necessary to analyze all the evidence relating to this specification, as the case must fall upon an equally well-established rule of law in rescission that when the fraud or deceit has been discovered by a party he loses the right to rescind when he elects to stand upon the contract, to ask additional favors of the other party, to demand and receive the performance of additional conditions by the other party, or to demand full performance of the contract as executed. Schmidt v. Mesmer, 116 Cal. 267, 271, 272, 48 P. 54; Monahan v. Watson, 61 Cal. App. 417, 420, 214 P. 1001; Tucker v. Beneke, 180 Cal. 588, 594, 182 P. 299.

Here the uncontradicted evidence is that the contract was executed on March 1, 1922; that the respondent talked with the mill people on March 12; that thereafter he ordered additional repairs to be made by the appellant upon the truck; that on March 28, 1922, he definitely learned from the mill people that he could not have the hauling job; that thereafter he ordered additional repairs to be made on the truck, and on April 11, 1922, took it out for trial and returned it with instructions to have other repairs made; and that on April 15, 1922, he addressed a letter to the appellant demanding delivery of the truck or the return of the money paid. In view of the allegation in the complaint found to be true by the trial court that the respondent discovered on April 14, 1922, that the representations and warranties were false and fraudulent, his specific demand for performance in accordance with the written contract was an election to stand upon that contract, waiving the alleged oral misrepresentations, and this terminated his right to rescind.

[4] It is conceded that at the time of the attempted rescission the plaintiff was in default as to his obligations under the contract, and the appellant insists that the respondent could not rescind because of the general rule that "the right to rescind a contract rests only with the party who is without default." Fairchild, etc., Co. v. Southern, etc., Co., 158 Cal. 264, 273, 110 P. 951, 955. But, in denying a transfer in De Bairos v. Barlin, 46 Cal. App. 665, 674, 190 P. 188, 192, the Supreme Court said:

> "We know of no case which holds that such rule applies to a case where the vendee in default on payments due on the contract seeks to avoid and rescind it for fraud of the vendor in procuring its execution, or for mistake inducing its execution. Payment by the vendee, after discovery of the fraud or mistake, might tend to show a waiver thereof, and thus defeat an attempted rescission, but a refusal to pay would be entirely consistent with the right of the vendee to rescind for such cause."

Judgment reversed.

Ex parte SCOTT. (Cr. 1454.)

1. Criminal law ⟹576(3)—Sixty-day period, within which accused must be tried, runs from time of determination of mistrial (Pen. Code, § 1382, subd. 2).

Sixty-day period, within which accused must be brought to trial under Pen. Code, § 1382, subd. 2, runs in first instance from filing of information; but another 60-day period starts from time of determination of mistrial.

2. Criminal law ⟹1144(7)—Accused is presumed to consent to trial more than 60 days after filing of information, where he was present and did not object (Pen. Code, § 1382, subd. 2).

Where accused was present and did not object when trial was set for date more than 60 days after filing of information, his consent is presumed, and conviction is valid, notwithstanding Pen. Code, § 1382, subd. 2.

Application by William H. Scott for a writ of habeas corpus prayed to be directed to the Sheriff of Los Angeles County. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded.

Messrs. Light & Lane, of Glendale, for petitioner.

Asa Keyes, Dist. Atty., and Tracy Chatfield Becker, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMPSON, J. This is an application for the release of petitioner on habeas corpus, for the reason that he was not brought to trial within 60 days from the filing of the information, as provided in subdivision 2 of section 1382 of the Penal Code. The petition shows that the information was filed on August 6, 1926; and thereafter, without objection by petitioner, was set for trial for October 6, 1926; that on October 6, 1926, petitioner made a motion to dismiss because he was not brought to trial within the 60-day period, which motion was denied; that, after trial and a verdict of guilty, the court on October 21, 1926, granted a motion for a new trial, and set the cause for retrial on October 28, 1926, and on the last-mentioned day continued the cause until December 8, 1926.

[1] In the case of In re Begerow, 133 Cal. 349, 65 P. 828, 56 L. R. A. 513, 85 Am. St. Rep. 178, it was determined that the 60-day period in the first instance runs from the filing of the information or indictment, but that after a mistrial another 60-day period starts to run from the time of the determination of the mistrial. In this case the time would start to run on October 21, 1926, the date of the order granting the motion for a new trial. In the case just mentioned one of the controlling reasons for the construction adopted was the protection of defendant's right to a speedy trial after the first attempt resulted in a mistrial. The same construction was assumed in the case of Ex parte Ross, 82 Cal. 109, 22 P. 1086. We take such to be the settled law of this state. In this case the new 60-day period did not expire until December 20, 1926, and therefore the defendant's right in this particular was not denied him.

[2] And, in so far as the delay before October 6, 1926, is concerned, his petition shows that he was present and did not object at the time it was set for trial on that date. Under these circumstances consent is presumed. People v. Magee, 60 Cal. App. 459, 213 P. 513; People v. Rongo, 169 Cal. 71, 145 P. 1017; People v. Douglass, 100 Cal. 1, 34 P. 490; Ex parte Apakean, 63 Cal. App. 481, 218 P. 767; Shackleford, Ex parte, 64 Cal. App. 78, 220 P. 430.

Writ discharged and petitioner remanded.

PEOPLE v. COYLE. (Cr. 1443.) ★

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. March 10, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 9, 1927.)

1. Embezzlement ⚿4—Selling agent selling with fraudulent intent to appropriate property or proceeds is guilty of "embezzlement."

An agent authorized to sell or dispose of property who sells it with fraudulent intent to appropriate it or proceeds is guilty of embezzling it as much as if he was unauthorized to sell.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Embezzle—Embezzlement.]

2. Embezzlement ⚿44(2)—Evidence held to show agent made collateral loan on stocks with intent to appropriate proceeds.

In prosecution for embezzlement, evidence held to show that agent intrusted with corporate stock to procure loan thereon did not use it for purpose authorized, but made collateral loan with fraudulent intent to appropriate proceeds.

3. Criminal law ⚿517(4)—Proof of corpus delicti held prima facie and confession properly admitted.

In prosecution for embezzlement, where there was more than prima facie proof of corpus delicti, defendant's confession was properly admitted in evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Arthur Keetch, Judge.

Burr Coyle was convicted of embezzlement, and he appeals. Affirmed.

John F. Groene, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. The information is in eight counts, four of which charged the defendant with the crime of grand larceny of certain stocks, and the other four counts charged the defendant with the crime of embezzlement of the identical stocks mentioned in the larceny counts. The jury returned a verdict acquitting the defendant on the four counts charging grand larceny, and finding the defendant guilty on the four counts charging embezzlement. The trial court pronounced judgment and sentenced the defendant on count VIII, while sentence was suspended on counts II, IV, and VI. Defendant appeals from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Defendant first urges that he is not guilty of the crime of embezzlement as charged in count VIII, and alleges that there is no proof of conversion of the Lincoln Mortgage Company stock as charged in said count, but that the defendant only carried out the instructions of the complaining witness, Mary Dwyer, in securing a loan on the stock used as collateral, for the purpose of buying other stocks as authorized by the complaining witness.

Examination of the record discloses that Mary Dwyer first met the defendant in August, 1925, to whom she delivered 50 units of Lincoln Mortgage Company stock, and authorized the defendant to secure a loan, using the stock as collateral, and to buy Sinclair Consolidated Oil stocks with the proceeds; the defendant stating that in his opinion the market price would rise in two or three months and that "she would make quite a little profit." The complaining witness states that the maturity date of the loan was at no time mentioned by the defendant.

On August 29th the defendant delivered to Mrs. Dwyer the following receipt:

> "Received of Mrs. Mary Dwyer 100 sh. N. Star Mng. Co. 50 units Lincoln Mortg. * * * to be used in the purchase of ten (10) shares Sinclair Cons. Oil Co. to be held in trust by me.
> "Dated Aug. 29, 1925.
> "Accepted Mrs. Mary Dwyer. Burr Coyle."

On the same date the defendant executed a collateral note, payable to J. H. Corbin & Co., in the sum of $200, due twelve months from date thereof, and as collateral delivered to Corbin & Co. the 50 units of Lincoln Mortgage Company stock owned by the prosecuting witness. It nowhere appears that defendant ever purchased the 10 shares of Sinclair Oil Company stocks as instructed, nor were these shares ever delivered to the complaining witness. Neither was the Lincoln Mortgage Company stock ever returned to Mrs. Dwyer. During the month of March, 1926, Mrs. Dwyer, having heard nothing from the defendant, telephoned to him and demanded the return of the Lincoln Mortgage Company stock. Defendant replied that he would see what he could do, but Mrs. Dwyer did not hear from the defendant thereafter.

[1] The prosecution introduced the confession of the defendant, from which it appears that the defendant's plan of operation at this time in this and similar transactions was to secure a collateral loan from Corbin & Co., mingle the proceeds with his own funds, and use a part of the money for his personal expenses, as well as buy and sell Sinclair Consolidated Oil stock, and deposit the proceeds in his personal account. In no instance did the defendant hold the stock "in trust" for his principal.

Defendant cites People v. Borchers (Cal. Sup.) 247 P. 1084, and People v. Hughes (Cal. App.) 250 P. 869, in support of his contention that the defendant cannot be found guilty of embezzlement, because he alleges there can be no conversion of the Lincoln Mortgage Company stock when the defendant merely followed the instructions of his principal in using the stock as collateral to a loan. The answer to this contention is to be found in one of the cases cited by defendant.

In People v. Hughes, supra, the court says, at page 871:

> "At first blush the question as to whether an agent may be said to have converted the property of his trust or the proceeds of a sale thereof frequently will appear difficult of determination, but the consensus of authority consistently holds that the solution of the question depends upon the point in time when criminal intent was first conceived. As said in 20 C. J. p. 431, § 18: 'Authority to do the act relied upon as a conversion is no defense, if it was done with felonious intent.' And in Agar v. State, 176 Ind. 234, 94 N. E. 819, where it appeared that the defendant, in lawful custody of public warrants, passed them to the auditor and received credit for the proceeds, it was said:
> " 'Authority to do the act relied on as conversion is no defense if it was done with felonious intent. The intent with which the act was done was the vital question in the case.
> " 'The rule is that when an agent or employee does with money or property in his possession only what he is authorized to do by the terms of his employment, having no felonious intent, he is not guilty of embezzlement. But the authority to sell property or to otherwise deal with it is no defense to a charge of embezzlement, if the agent or employee converts the same to his own use with a fraudulent intent. Therefore when an agent or employee has authority to sell or otherwise dispose of property, and does sell or otherwise dispose of it, not for the purpose authorized, but with the fraudulent intent to appropriate it or its proceeds to his own use, he is guilty of embezzling the property itself, as much as if he had no authority to sell or otherwise dispose of it, for the sale or disposition of the property with said fraudulent intent is a conversion. Leonard v. State, 7 Tex. App. 417; United States v. Sander, 6 McLean, 598, Fed. Cas. No. 16,219; 98 Am. Dec. 134, note; 2 Bishop's Crim. Law (5th Ed.) § 371; 2 Bishop's Crim. Law (7th Ed.) § 371; 2 Bishop's New Crim. Law, §§ 370, 371; Clark & Marshall on the Law of Crimes (2d Ed.) p. 520; 10 Am. & Eng. Ency. of L. 995, 996.'
> "Again, in State v. Baumhager, 28 Minn. 226, 9 N. W. 704, it is said: 'The distinction must be kept in view between the offense and the evidence of it. The first possession being lawful, the act of embezzlement consists, in a certain sense, in a mere act of the mind, without any outward and visible trespass, as in the case of ordinary larceny. That this mental act of fraudulent appropriation has taken place has to be inferred from the conduct of the defendant. Roscoe's Cr. Ev. 453.' "

[2] In the instant case we are well satisfied after reading the whole record that the defendant did not use the Lincoln Mortgage Company stock for the purpose authorized, but that he made the collateral loan with a fraudulent intent to appropriate the proceeds to his own use. It therefore follows that defendant was guilty of embezzlement of the Lincoln Mortgage Company stock as charged in the information, and that there is no variance between the allegation of the information and the proof.

[3] Appellant next urges that the corpus delicti was not established, and in connection therewith states the familiar rule that admissions of a defendant standing alone are insufficient to establish his guilt. In People v. Selby, 198 Cal. 426, 437, 245 P. 426, 431, it is said:

> "It is apparent from this review of the cases that the general trend of authority has been to hold that upon prima facie proof of the corpus delicti the extrajudicial statements, admissions, or confessions of the accused may be admitted in evidence and having been so properly admitted they may, with the evidence aliunde, be considered by the jury in its determination whether or not all the elements of the crime and the connection therewith of the accused have been established to a moral certainty and beyond all reasonable doubt."

In this case we think there was more than prima facie proof of the corpus delicti, and that the confession was properly admitted in evidence and submitted to the jury for its consideration in determining whether the defendant was guilty beyond a reasonable doubt.

It is ordered that the judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial be affirmed.

SMITH v. CHIN CHEW et al. (Civ. 3155.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 11, 1927.)

1. Landlord and tenant 🔑230(1)—Complaint to recover money for rent, failing to allege amount is unpaid, due, or owing, held not to state cause of action.

Complaint, in action to recover money due from rental of land, failing to show that amount sued for is unpaid, due, or owing, and not asking for amount in prayer, is fatally defective, and fails to state cause of action.

2. Pleading 🔑72—Prayer is not essential part of complaint, where answer is filed.

Where answer is filed, prayer of complaint is no longer essential part thereof.

3. Courts 🔑122—Where amended complaint in superior court showed jurisdiction only in justices' court, motion for dismissal for want of jurisdiction should have been granted.

Where action in superior court for money under defective complaint was dismissed as to one defendant partner on production of receipt of payment, and amended complaint stated cause of action, showing jurisdiction only in justice court, remaining defendants' motion for dismissal for want of jurisdiction should have been granted.

Appeal from Superior Court, Colusa County; Ernest Weyand, Judge.

Action by H. Smith against Chin Chew and Chun Hee Tong. From judgment adverse to plaintiff, the plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

C. D. McComish, of Colusa, for appellant.

Alva A. King, of Colusa, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. The plaintiff began this action by filing a complaint against the defendant Chin Chew. Thereafter a first amended complaint was filed, bringing in the defendant Chun Hee Tong. The amended complaint bringing in the defendant Chun Hee Tong is, after the title, in words and figures following:

"Plaintiff complains of defendants, and alleges:

"I. That defendants became indebted to plaintiff within the four years last past in the sum of $427.55, of which sum $295 was for rent of land furnished to defendant Chun Hee Tong, and $132.55 was for labor and services and wood furnished to defendant, Chin Chew, all at the special request of defendants, who are partners.

"That no part of said sums has been paid except $——, and that the sum of $——, is unpaid, due, and owing.

"Wherefore plaintiff prays judgment against defendants in the sum of $—— and for costs of suit. [Signed] C. D. McComish,
"Attorney for Plaintiff."

Upon the case being called for trial, the plaintiff dismissed his action as against the defendant Chin Chew, and thereupon asked and obtained of the court leave to amend his complaint by inserting the figures $238.35 and $139.30, making the last paragraph of his complaint read as follows:

"That no part of said sums has been paid except $238.35, and that the sum of $139.30 is unpaid, due, and owing."

Thereupon the defendant Chun Hee Tong, through his counsel, moved that the action as against him be dismissed. This motion was denied. Later in the proceedings the motion was renewed on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction. This motion was also denied. During the course of the trial the following exhibit was introduced in evidence:

"Colusa, Cal., Nov. 13, 1925.

"Received of A. A. King the sum of three hundred dollars in full of all claims against Chin Chew and I agree to release the attachment against said Chin Chew's property in the case of H. Smith v. Chin Chew.
"C. D. McComish,
"Attorney for Plaintiff H. Smith."

At the conclusion of the trial the court ordered judgment that the plaintiff take nothing by reason of this action, not on the ground that the court was without jurisdiction, but upon the ground that the sum of $300 was accepted in full settlement of the $427.55 originally sued for in the action begun against the defendant Chin Chew. This appears from the following excerpt taken from the opinion of the trial court:

"Quite aside from this above discussion, I am of the firm opinion that, 'having settled with one partner' as is claimed, no action can now be prosecuted in this court as against another partner when the amount claimed is below the jurisdictional amount for this court. However, the decision herein is placed on the theory that full payment was made of the entire claim."

From the judgment that the plaintiff take nothing this appeal is prosecuted. It is urged upon our consideration that the court erred in holding that the receipt set out herein was any defense to the action as against the defendant Chun Hee Tong, or that the payment of the said sum of $300 constituted full payment of the sum of $427.55 sued for in the original complaint. It may be stated that there is nothing in the pleadings indicating a controversy over the amount due from the defendants to the plaintiff, or that the parties had accounts against each other, or that there was any accord and satisfaction, but we do not need to decide whether the court did or did not err in holding that the receipt of $300 paid by the defendant Chin Chew operated as a release of whatever claim the plaintiff may have had against Chun Hee Tong, for the following reasons:

[1, 2] The amended complaint under which the defendant Chun Hee Tong was made a defendant is manifestly insufficient to state a cause of action. There is nothing in the complaint showing that the amount sued for had not been paid, or that any sum whatever was unpaid, due, or owing. Had no appearance been made by the defendant Chun Hee Tong, no judgment by default could have been entered against him. It is true that, where an answer is filed, the prayer of the complaint is no longer an essential part thereof, as the plaintiff is entitled to the relief shown by his pleadings, but, in this case, the essential elements, to wit, the amount unpaid, the fact that the amount for which the defendant is alleged to have become indebted is not alleged to be unpaid, due, or owing, and no amount is asked for in the prayer. It is manifest that the complaint is fatally defective. "In a complaint upon an obligation to pay money an allegation that the money has not been paid is required, on the theory that a failure to pay constitutes the breach of the contract sued on." 20 Cal. Jur. p. 945, § 27. Likewise, in further considering the subject of an answer and allegations as to payment, the text-writer, in section 28, page 950, same volume, states the rule in this manner:

> "But where the allegation of nonpayment is wholly lacking or is fatally defective, the fact that no demurrer is interposed and that judgment goes by default is immaterial, since the decree goes to the statement of a cause of action."

In Burke v. Dittus, 8 Cal. App. 175, 96 P. 330, we find the following:

> "If there had been no attempt to aver nonpayment, either by an allegation amounting only to a conclusion of law or otherwise, the complaint would not have stated a cause of action; and this could be urged at any time, even without demurrer."

In Richards v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 80 Cal. 505, 22 P. 939, it is said:

> "A complaint in an action to recover a sum of money due under a life insurance policy, which contains no allegation that the policy is unpaid, is fatally defective, and is not cured by a verdict in favor of the plaintiff."

Likewise, in Hurley v. Ryan, 119 Cal. 71, 51 P. 20, it is held:

> "In an action upon contract to recover money, the breach of the contract to pay is of the essence of the cause of action, and must be alleged; and a complaint which does not allege that the debts sued upon have not been paid fails to state a cause of action."

[3] This was the status of the pleadings at the time the action was called for trial, at which time the plaintiff, through his counsel, asked leave to amend his complaint by alleging that there had been paid upon the indebtedness mentioned in the complaint, as having been incurred some time during the four years previous to the beginning of the action, the sum of $238.35, and that the sum of $139.30 is unpaid, due, and owing, thereby presenting to the superior court a complaint in the following language:

> "Plaintiff complains of defendants, and alleges:
> "I. That defendants became indebted to plaintiff within the four years last past in the sum of $427.55, of which sum $295 was for rent of land furnished to defendant Chun Hee Tong and $132.55 was for labor and services and wood furnished to defendant, Chin Chew, all at the special request of defendants, who are partners.
> "That no part of said sums has been paid except $238.35, and that the sum of $139.30, is unpaid, due, and owing.
> "Wherefore plaintiff prays judgment against defendants in the sum of $139.30 and for costs of suit. [Signed] C. D. McComish,
> "Attorney for Plaintiff,"

—which needs only to be read to establish the fact that by amending the complaint, which did not state a cause of action, the plaintiff stated a cause of action showing jurisdiction only in the justices' court.

The motion of the defendant Chun Hee Tong to dismiss should have been granted, but, as the court entered judgment that the plaintiff take nothing against said defendant by reason of his action, it follows that the judgment of the trial court should be, and the same is hereby, affirmed.

Letter from defendant, stating that it was forwarding sign ordered by plaintiff addressee, held not to show agreement to perform in county of latter's residence, where justice court action was brought, so as to authorize service of summons at defendant's domicile in another county under Code Civ. 2. Justices of the peace ⚿81(1)—Justice court action for money paid under contract held not within statute authorizing service of summons in another county (Code Civ. Proc. § 848, subd. 2).

Action in justice court to recover money paid for electric sign, rejected by plaintiff as not of kind or quality ordered, was not on sale contract, but on assumpsit or implied contract for recovery of money paid, and hence not within exception in Code Civ. Proc. § 848, subd. 2, authorizing service of summons in county of defendant's residence, in action on contract to be performed in county of venue.

Original petition by the Turner Hardware & Implement Company, a corporation, for a writ of prohibition to the Justice's Court of Township No. 1, Shasta County, and R. P. Stimmel, Justice thereof. Writ granted.

Carr & Kennedy, of Redding, for petitioner.
Carter & Smith, of Redding, for respondents.

HART, J. This is an original petition for a writ of prohibition, the object of which is to prevent the respondents from proceeding with the trial of a certain action pending in respondent court, and wherein one Clara C. Kise is plaintiff and the petitioner herein is defendant.

It appears that, on the 23d day of September, 1925, said Clara C. Kise and a concern named "the O. F. Mitchell Company," engaged in business in Springfield, Ohio, entered into a written agreement whereby said company agreed to manufacture for and deliver to said Kise an electric sign for a hotel in the city of Redding, Shasta county, and for which said Kise agreed to pay the total sum of $102, of which amount a cash payment of $25 was to be paid on the execution of the agreement and the balance of the agreed price upon the delivery of said sign; that, in the making of said agreement, the O. F. Mitchell Company was represented by its agent, one J. A. Harbert, to whom Kise delivered the cash deposit or payment of $25, as required by the writing. It is further made to appear that, under date of February, 1926, the petitioner, from the city of Modesto, Stanislaus county, its place of business, addressed the following letter to said Clara C. Kise:

"Dear Madam: Mr. J. A. Harbert, formerly of the Mitchell Sign Company of Springfield, Ohio, has turned over to us your order for an electric sign.

"We have built this sign according to the specifications furnished us by Mr. Harbert, and today we are forwarding it to you by express, C. O. D. for $76.50.

"We trust that this sign will reach you in good order, and we know that you will be pleased with the same.

"Very truly yours,
"Turner Hdwe. & Impl. Co.,
"By S. H. Wentz, Credit Manager.
"SHW: AG."

The petitioner shipped the sign to Mrs. Kise, as indicated in said letter, through the American Railway Express Company, C. O. D.; that Mrs. Kise, upon the delivery of the sign to her by said company, paid to the latter for the petitioner and as express charges the sum of $81.75. Upon inspecting the sign Mrs. Kise found, according to her complaint in the action against the petitioner, and to prohibit the trial of which by the respondents is the purpose of the present proceeding, "that said sign was not constructed in accordance with said contract, and not the kind or character of a sign ordered by plaintiff, and was constructed of inferior material, and was smaller and less substantial than the sign ordered by plaintiff; that plaintiff immediately reshipped said sign to said defendant, and demanded that defendant pay to her the amount she was required to pay on account of said sign, to wit, the sum of $107."

The petitioner refused to return to Mrs. Kise the amount she had paid for the sign, and thereafter (on the 19th day of April, 1926) she instituted against the petitioner, in township No. 1 of Shasta county, the action to recover the money so paid, which it is the object of the present proceeding to prevent respondents from trying. On May 10, 1926, and subsequently to the service of the copy of the complaint and summons in said action on the petitioner, the latter filed with the respondents and served upon the attorneys for Mrs. Kise a notice that they intended to, and would, on the 15th day of May, 1926, move the respondent court to quash the summons and the service thereof upon petitioner upon the ground that the action by Mrs. Kise against petitioner does not fall within the class of justice's court actions referred to by section 848 of the Code of Civil Procedure in which summons may be served outside the county wherein such actions are brought.

Said motion was pressed by the petitioner and denied by the respondents.

Section 848 of the Code of Civil Procedure specifically enumerates, in as many subdivisions, five different and distinct exceptions to the general rule that the summons in actions brought in the justice's court cannot be served outside the county wherein the actions are brought. The respondents, however, rely entirely upon the terms of subdivision 2 of said section for the support of their contention that the summons issued in the case of Kise against petitioner herein may properly or legally be served upon the latter at the place of its residence, which, as seen, is in a county other than that in which said action was instituted. It is therefore, unnecessary to pay attention herein to the other subdivisons of section 848.

[1] The exception to the general rule as to the service of summons in justice court actions as set forth in subdivision 2 of said section is applicable in those instances where the action is brought against a party who has contracted in writing to perform the obligation upon which the action is founded at a particular place, and who resides in a different county. In such case, proceeds said subdivision:

> "The summons may be served in the county in which he (the party against whom the action is brought) resides."

[2] The respondents here argue that, even if it be conceded that the Mitchell Company did not in the original agreement between it and Mrs. Kise expressly agree to perform the obligation which was the subject of said agreement in Redding, Shasta county, it is, nevertheless, true that the petitioner, having accepted the transfer to it of said contract, did agree to perform the obligation in Redding by virtue of the letter from it to Mrs. Kise, and which is hereinabove quoted. We see nothing in said letter which sustains the position of the respondents in that particular. If, however, the letter could be so construed, the fact remains that the action brought by Mrs. Kise against the petitioner is not founded either upon the original contract or the letter referred to. Unquestionably, Mrs. Kise disaffirmed the contract, and sued upon an implied contract for the recovery of the money which she paid to the petitioner as for money had and received. See Fitzhugh v. University Realty Co., 46 Cal. App. 198, 200, 188 P. 1023; Hammond v. Ocean Shore Co., 22 Cal. App. 167, 133 P. 978. The contract between her and the Mitchell Company or between her and the petitioner is merely an incident to the action upon which she elected to rely, and, while it is true said contract would perhaps be important in her case as evidence of the price which she agreed to pay for the sign and the character of the sign which it was agreed should be made for her, still, further than that, the writing would be of no importance or significance. Since, therefore, her action is not upon the contract, but necessarily a disaffirmance or rescission thereof, and is upon assumpsit or an implied contract for the recovery of the money which she paid for the sign, it follows that her action does not come within the exception mentioned in subdivision 2 of section 848 of the Code of Civil Procedure, nor within any of the exceptions mentioned in said section, and, consequently, the service or attempted service of summons in said action upon the petitioner was and is void, and is of no force or effect. It results that the respondent court has not acquired, and cannot acquire, jurisdiction in said action of the person of the petitioner, and thus is without jurisdiction to try and determine said action or the issues thereof.

Let the writ issue as prayed for.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Arthur Keetch, Judge.

Paul B. Rabe was convicted of obtaining money and property by false pretenses, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Gretchen Wellman and Frank G. Howe, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and H. H. Linney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

THOMPSON, J. The appellant was charged with the offense of obtaining money and property by false pretenses. The indictment was in four counts, upon all of which the jury returned a verdict of guilty. Judgment was pronounced upon the verdict, the sentence was suspended upon the third and fourth counts, and after denial of appellant's motion for a new trial he instituted this appeal from the judgment and order denying his motion.

The first count charged the obtaining on August 1, 1924, of 200 shares of capital stock of the Moreland Truck Company and 20 shares of the capital stock of the First Federal Securities Company, taken together, of the total value of $4,000, from Elmer E. Owen. The second and third counts charged the obtaining on August 2 and 5, 1924, from Henrietta McGaw, of $1,250 and $4,000, respectively, and the fourth count, of obtaining on August 15, 1924, from the same person, a deed to real property of the value of $11,000. In each instance the money or property was advanced in payment of subscriptions for what was termed preorganization stock of a proposed corporation to be known and styled the Long Beach Dock & Terminal Company, which company was not incorporated upon any of the dates of the subscriptions or subsequently.

[1] The misrepresentations were the same in each instance and were as follows: (1) That defendant was taking preorganization subscriptions for the purchase of capital stock of the Long Beach Dock & Terminal Company; (2) that the company had bought and practically paid for 140 acres of harbor land, upon which to erect docks and warehouses; (3) that a bond issue of $6,000,000 had been "arranged for" to cover the cost of construction; (4) that Gen. George W. Goethals had been secured to act as chairman of the board of directors and as supervisor of construction; (5) that the promoters had secured the consent of Senator Shortridge, Congressman Lineberger, and C. H. Windham, city manager of Long Beach, to act as officers and directors of the company; (6) that the subscriptions were worth the amount charged therefor.

At the opening of the trial defendant objected to the introduction of evidence on the ground that the facts stated did not constitute a public offense; that matters were stated which constituted a justification; and that there was not a compliance with sections 950, 951, and 952 of the Penal Code. He now urges the same objections as insufficiencies of the indictment. His position may be stated as follows: That the indictment shows that the defendant was in fact taking preorganization subscriptions; that there is no allegation that the subscriptions were not of the value charged therefor; and that as to all other representations they relate to future acts, i. e., the organization in the future of a company to take over the land and to be officered by the individuals named. This thought runs all the way through appellant's brief and is the foundation upon which rests most of his argument. Such is not the effect of the allegations. They are very similar to the facts in the case of People v. Ballard (Cal. App.) 241 P. 596. From a bare recital of the allegations one would judge that all that remained to constitute the Long Beach Dock & Terminal Company a corporate entity was to comply with legal formalities; that to all intents and purposes the personnel of its directors had been determined; that its promoters were sufficiently financed to have purchased for it most valuable real property holdings and had arranged very extensive financing. All of these things were representations of past acts and present conditions and not outbursts of the prophet looking with optimistic eye into the distant future. They are all alleged to be false, and we can hardly imagine what might be added to bring it more squarely within the condemnation of the statute. The allegation of falsity not only covers the representation that it was preorganization stock, but also that it was worth the price charged.

[2] Outside of these objections, however, we do not find a serious question concerning the fourth count of the indictment. While appellant pays scant attention to the third and fourth counts by reason of the fact that sentence was suspended, there is sufficient in his brief that we have concluded that we must examine and pass upon them. As has been stated, the indictment shows the obtaining of a deed to real property of the value of $11,000. Counsel says that this count is fatally defective on the authority of People v. Folcey (Cal. App.) 247 P. 916, wherein it is held that no penalty is provided for obtaining real property by false pretenses. While a petition for a hearing of this case in the Supreme Court was denied, we feel that under the authority of People v. Davis, 147 Cal. 346, 81 P. 718, and Bohn v. Bohn, 164 Cal. 532, 129 P. 981, we are not bound to accept the language as precedent, but should give expression to the reasons for our dissent therefrom. The entire history of larceny, it is true, refers to the felonious taking and carrying away of personal property, so that there is no such thing as the larceny of real property. When on account of defects in the common law relative to cheats and expanding commerce it was found necessary to extend the law by statute, the similarity of the offense to larceny operated to confine the statute to personal property, in which condition section 532 of the Penal Code was found when the case of People v. Cummings, 114 Cal. 437, 46 P. 284, came before the Supreme Court. To remedy the deficiency thus existing in the law, and pointed out in this case, the Legislature amended section 532 to read as follows, the amendment being here set forth in italics:

> "Every person who knowingly and designedly, by any false or fraudulent representation or pretense, defrauds any other person of money, labor, or property, whether real or personal, or who causes or procures others to report falsely of his wealth or mercantile character, and by thus imposing upon any person obtains credit, and thereby fraudulently gets possession of money or property, or obtains the labor or service of another, is punishable in the same manner and to the same extent as for larceny of the money or property so obtained." (Italics ours.)

It will be noted, of course, that the concluding language was not changed, so that if there be a penalty for obtaining real property by false pretenses we must insert the words "like value" or some similar expression, after the word property, where it last occurs in the section, in which event the final portion would read as follows: "Is punishable in the same manner and to the same extent as for larceny of the money or property of like value so obtained." If this construction be not adopted the amendment is fruitless and the words "whether real or personal" mean nothing. It is not our understanding of the rules of construction that such should be the case, but that rather effect should be given to each word and phrase if fairly and reasonably possible. Many cases might be cited to support this rule. It has been said (Maguire v. Cunningham, 64 Cal. App. 536, 543, 222 P. 838) that the distinction between real and personal property, so far at least as actions to quiet title are concerned, is purely artificial. This particular artificiality was removed by amendment of section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure in 1921, and in this age of industrial development, where it is almost as easy to defraud one of real property as of personal property, we think the plain intent of the Legislature to remove the artificiality under discussion should govern and that we should hold the fourth count of the indictment to be sufficient.

[3-5] The next assertion of appellant is that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict. We have carefully examined the voluminous transcript and fail to see how the jury could have arrived at any other verdict. Concededly Senator Shortridge, Congressman Lineberger, and Mr. Windham had never consented to become officers and had never consented to the use of their names. The representations were freely made that "they," which "they" must mean the organizers or promoters of the proposed company, had purchased from the Union Pacific and practically paid for 140 acres of harbor land—and it was positively established that they had not purchased from the Union Pacific 140 acres or any other land. If the defendant or any one associated with him had purchased 140 acres of land from any other source not covered by his representation, it was his duty to present such evidence after proof of the falsity of the representation. Shemwell v. People, 62 Colo. 146, 161 P. 157. Instead, on the stand he denied having made the representation. Nor can the defendant avail himself of the claim that the proof shows a false representation that the purchase of 140 acres was made of the Union Pacific and that this proof is at variance with the allegation that they had purchased 140 acres, on this appeal, for the reason that if such amounts to a material variance, and we do not so believe, it was not presented to the trial court. People v. Fraser (Cal. App.) 253 P. 340; People v. Gonzales, 69 Cal. App. 609, 231 P. 1014; People v. Fuski, 49 Cal. App. 4, 192 P. 552. It is sufficient if one material misrepresentation be proved. People v. Fraser, supra; People v. Griesheimer, 176 Cal. 44, 167 P. 521. In this case several misrepresentations were conclusively established.

[6] Nor can it be seriously argued that the subscribers received what they paid for. As has been indicated, every representation of fact, every suggestion, the entire scheme, was based upon the immediate organization of the corporation, which was never done. The subscribers got nothing except a subscription agreement which likewise was so artfully drawn as to leave out a time limit for incorporation, apparently because the actual incorporation was represented to be almost a closed incident. Lured on by the imposing distribution of a supposedly large capital, the subscribers parted with their money and property and received what they paid for only on the theory that they were subscribing for the "hole in the doughnut."

Attack is next launched upon the testimony specially directed toward count one, and it is claimed to be insufficient to show the obtaining from Mrs. McGaw of $1,250 in cash. The testimony shows that she had invested $1,500 with Harry C. Weist Company, with whom the defendant was at the time of investment associated. She executed an assignment of her claim for the return of the money to the defendant. Then when the check was made out to her—Mr. Farrell, an associate of the defendant, brought the check to her—she indorsed it; delivered it to Mr. Farrell, who in turn says he delivered it to the defendant. On August 18 the defendant wrote to Mrs. McGaw, saying that he had received confirmation of her subscription of August 1, which is the subscription in question. Under these circumstances we think the jury were fully justified in believing that the defendant had cashed the check. In the case of People v. Whalen, 154 Cal. 472, 98 P. 194, which was a case of obtaining money by false pretenses, it appeared that Mrs. Martin was induced to buy 100 shares of stock at the price of $1,000 and gave the defendant a check for $1,200 in payment for the 100 shares, plus 20 shares purchased by her sister. "The check was given on May 3, 1905. The defendant remained in Sacramento, where this transaction occurred, for several weeks thereafter, and, while there, hired men to go with him to the mines, which were in the state of Nevada, and for more than six months thereafter he was in charge of the affairs of the mining company, either at the mines or at Sacramento." The court says:

> "There was nothing disclosed by the evidence to indicate that the defendant experienced any difficulty or delay in obtaining payment of the check. The facts concerning the payment of the money were all elicited upon the examination in chief of the two witnesses. There was no cross-examination on that subject, nor any attempt, at any stage of the case, to show that the check had not been paid in the usual course of business. Under the circumstances, the jury were justified in construing the testimony of the prosecuting witness and her sister to mean that the money called for by the check had actually been paid."

While we think that this case is decisive of the question here, we call attention to another case where the charge was obtaining money by false pretenses and the check was drawn bearing a general indorsement the same as in the instant case, and the court says:

> "Before passing this phase of the case it might be well to call attention to the fact that the check bears a general indorsement, and there is nothing in the record inconsistent with the fact that it was paid in due course. The least that can be said, under the circumstances, is that the prosecution made out a prima facie case, and assuming, without deciding, that the defendant might properly make out a defense by showing that the maker was ultimately relieved from payment, the burden to do so, after the prima facie showing on the part of the prosecution, was cast upon him, and, not having done this, he cannot now complain." People v. Steffner, 67 Cal. App. 1, 11, 227 P. 690, 695.

No claim was made by the appellant here that he did not receive the money upon the check and for the reasons stated he cannot be heard to complain. Also, in the case of People v. Hutchings, 56 Cal. App. 397, 205 P. 480, it was held that proof of receipt of check sufficiently supports the charge of obtaining money in the absence of evidence that the check was not cashed.

Counsel argues that there is no causal connection between the false pretenses and the obtaining by defendant of the money and property of complaining witnesses. What has been said heretofore with respect to the immediate organization of the proposed corporation is applicable at this juncture. Furthermore, we think that the case of People v. White, 7 Cal. App. 99, 93 P. 683, is not at all in point for the reason that there is a connection alleged and proved in this case. There was a natural connection between the pretenses and the parting with their money and property by the complaining witnesses. Industrial corporations of the character contemplated in the scheme of the defendant owe their success or failure in many instances to the character, integrity and genius of the men composing the organization and to their ability to finance the organization with large sums of money, such as was proposed here. There can be no doubt that the representations here made were the inducing cause of the investment the complaining witnesses supposed they were making.

[7] The last argument advanced by appellant, that the subscription agreement, having recited that the moneys were paid to the defendant as trustee, that there is a fatal variance between the proof and the allegation that the defendant obtained the money and property is fully answered by the cases of People v. Bryant, 119 Cal. 597, 51 P. 960, and

People v. Griesheimer, supra, in which last case this language is used:

> "The crime charged against this defendant was complete upon his obtaining the money from Muck by false and fraudulent representations, and it was not necessary to show what defendant did with it."

Also, in the case of State v. Balliet, 63 Kan. 707, 66 P. 1005, quoting from an Indiana case:

> " 'The law does not make it an element of the offense of obtaining money or property under false pretenses that it shall be obtained for the person making the pretenses himself, or that it shall be intended to obtain it for another, for it is provided that "whoever shall obtain money or property" by false pretenses shall be guilty of a felony.' "

Judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

HUTCHISON v. RECLAMATION DIST. NO. 1619 et al. (Civ. 5658.) ★

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 21, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 21, 1927.)

1. Appeal and error 🔑662(2)—Statement of court in former action regarding record which it had before it is treated as conclusive, in absence of contrary showing.

Court's statement regarding record in former action will be considered conclusive where court had entire record before it, nothing to contrary being shown.

2. Judgment 🔑654—Money judgment against reclamation district after dismissal of trustees as for misjoinder held not res judicata of subsequent mandamus action to require trustees to issue warrant in payment of judgment (Pol. Code, § 3457, and § 3453, as amended by St. 1899, p. 9; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086).

Money judgment against reclamation district, under Pol. Code, § 3453, as amended by St. 1899, p. 9, after dismissal as for misjoinder as to defendants' trustees, joined with request for mandamus to compel them to issue warrants to pay the judgment, held not res judicata to proceedings, under section 3457, for mandamus to compel trustees to issue warrants to pay judgment, in view of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086.

3. Mandamus 🔑1—Mandamus is extraordinary remedy in nature of equitable interference.

Mandamus is extraordinary remedy in nature of equitable interference, supplementing deficiencies of common law.

4. Mandamus 🔑1—Issuance of mandamus is largely controlled by equitable principles.

Though classed as legal remedy, issuance of mandamus is largely controlled by equitable principles.

5. Mandamus 🔑7—Mandamus is matter for exercise of judicial discretion, not matter of right.

Remedy of mandamus is awarded, not as matter of right, but in exercise of sound judicial discretion.

6. Mandamus 🔑15—Mandamus may be denied where respondent shows willingness to perform act, or where public interest might be injuriously affected.

Mandamus may be denied where respondent shows willingness to perform act required without coercion, where public interest might be injuriously affected, or where party seeking relief does not come into court with clean hands.

7. Mandamus 🔑3(2)—Mandamus will issue only in absence of plain, speedy, and adequate legal remedy (Code Civ. Proc. § 1086).

As general rule, mandamus will issue only where there is no plain, speedy, or adequate remedy in ordinary course of law, in view of Code of Civ. Proc. § 1086, requiring its issuance in such cases.

8. Jury 🔑19(3)—Constitutional right of trial by jury does not apply in proceedings for mandamus (Const. art. I, § 7; Code Civ. Proc. § 1090).

Right of trial by jury, granted by Const. art. 1, § 7, does not apply to mandamus because of its nature as a special proceeding, though court may, in its discretion, under Code of Civ. Proc. § 1090, order question of fact affecting substantial rights of parties to be tried before jury.

9. Drains 🔑20—Allowing direct suit against reclamation district gave creditors new remedy, where former means of redress was proceeding by mandamus to compel issuance of warrant (Pol. Code, § 3457, and § 3453, as amended by St. 1899, p. 9).

Authorization by Legislature of ordinary action of law against reclamation district, by Pol. Code, § 3453, as amended by St. 1899, p. 9, held to provide new remedy to creditor of district where sole means of redress theretofore was suit by mandamus to compel issuance of warrant upon district's funds, under section 3457, under which claimant was not entitled to jury trial and granting of relief, was matter of discretion.

10. Drains 🔑20—Jury 🔑14(2)—Statute giving creditor of reclamation district right to sue district and recover money judgment included jury trial and judgment coextensive with right (Pol. Code, § 3457, and § 3453, as amended by St. 1899, p. 9).

New remedy, provided by Pol. Code, § 3453, as amended by St. 1899, p. 9, whereby creditor could sue reclamation district and recover money judgment, gave creditor right to jury trial and judgment depending on facts involved, not upon discretion of court or jury as under former statute, section 3457, which limited creditor's remedy to mandamus to compel issuance of warrant.

11. Mandamus 🔑14(1)—Mandamus to compel performance of duty imposed by law must be predicated upon prior demand (Code Civ. Proc. § 1085).

Mandamus, which lies only in case of failure to perform duty imposed by law, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1085, must be predicated upon prior demand to perform that duty.

12. Mandamus 🔑2—Statute, permitting suit against reclamation district, reduced former remedy by mandamus to compel issuance of warrant to ordinary action of mandamus (Pol. Code, § 3457, and § 3453, as amended by St. 1899, p. 9; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086).

Pol. Code, § 3453, as amended by St. 1899, p. 9, permitting suits against reclamation district, reduced former remedy of creditor by mandamus to require issuance of warrant, under section 3457, to ordinary action of mandamus, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086, providing writ may issue to compel performance of act which law specially enjoins, and that it must be issued where there is no plain, speedy, or adequate remedy at law.

13. Mandamus 🔑3(4)—On entry of money judgment against reclamation district, court could not properly grant additional remedy of mandamus for issuance of warrant (Pol. Code, § 3453, as amended by St. 1899, p. 9).

Where, in action by creditor against reclamation district, court gave affirmative relief in nature of judgment against district, under Pol. Code, § 3453, as amended by St. 1899, p. 9, authorizing direct action against district, court could not properly grant creditor additional remedy of mandamus.

14. Mandamus 🔑102(1)—Judgment creditor held entitled to mandamus to require trustees of reclamation district to draw warrant in payment of final judgment after demand and refusal (Pol. Code, § 3453, as amended by St. 1899, p. 9).

Where creditor had recovered money judgment against reclamation district, under Pol. Code, § 3453, as amended by St. 1899, p. 9, which judgment had become final but remained unsatisfied, creditor held entitled to mandamus on showing that demand had been made upon trustees to draw warrant in payment of judgment, which trustees refused to do, there being no plain, speedy, or adequate remedy at law to require issuance of warrant.

15. Judgment 🔑585(5)—Judgment is not necessarily conclusive as to right accruing subsequent to former trial not in issue at trial, and not necessary to disposition of trial issues.

Former judgment is not necessarily conclusive of right accruing subsequent to former trial on which issue was not tendered, no determination thereof being necessary to complete disposition of issues tendered, as judgment, while conclusive upon issues tendered by plaintiff's complaint, is not always final as to every matter which might have been litigated in action.

16. Limitation of actions 🔑61—Statute of limitations against judgment creditor's right by mandamus to require trustees of reclamation district to issue warrant in payment of judgment ran from date judgment became final (Code Civ. Proc. § 339).

In action by judgment creditor for mandamus against reclamation district to require trustees to issue warrant in payment of judgment, action held not barred by two-year statute of limitations, under Code Civ. Proc. § 339, where suit was commenced within two years following date upon which judgment became final, it being immaterial as to when claim upon which judgment was based accrued.

17. Judgment 🔑4—Recovery of judgment creates new debt, distinct from original claim.

Recovery of judgment creates new debt or liability, distinct from original claim, which is not merely evidence of claim, but is thereafter the substance of the claim itself.

18. Appeal and error 🔑1191—Judgment appealed from becomes final on filing remittitur.

After appeal, judgment becomes final by filing of remittitur.

19. Limitation of actions 🔑61—Judgment against reclamation district created new debt against district, and limitations, as respects mandamus to compel payment, ran from final judgment (Pol. Code, § 3453, as amended by St. 1899, p. 9).

Judgment against reclamation district, in action under Pol. Code, § 3453, as amended by St. 1899, p. 9, permitting suit against district, created new debt or liability, distinct from creditor's original claim or demand, and statute of limitations, as respects mandamus to compel payment, ran from time judgment became final.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. D. Murphey, Judge.

Action by W. W. Hutchison against Reclamation District No. 1619 and William T. Sesnon and others, trustees, and E. A. Bridgford, Secretary of the Reclamation District. Judgment for defendants, and petitioner appeals. Reversed.

J. E. Rodgers and A. F. Bray, both of Martinez, for appellant.

E. A. Bridgford and Albert Picard, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued in mandamus to compel the defendants to draw and issue to plaintiff their warrant upon the funds of the defendant reclamation district in payment of a judgment in favor of plaintiff and against the district in the sum of $2,116, and interest, rendered on July 10, 1922, and becoming final on July 28, 1924. The defendants answered, pleading the former judgment in bar to plaintiff's right to mandamus, and also pleading the bar of the statute of limitations. Judgment went for the defendants on both issues, and the plaintiff has appealed upon a typewritten record.

In support of the judgment the respondents argue that, inasmuch as the appellant in the former action sought mandamus to compel the issuance of a warrant, and as the court merely gave a money judgment against the district, we must assume that the court in that action found against the respondents' right to mandamus and that the judgment is to that extent "res adjudicata." It is also argued that as the present suit involves the same subject-matter as the former action (compensation for services rendered the district in 1919), this cause is barred by the statute of limitations. The appellant contends that the statute gave him two alternative remedies—to sue the district for a money judgment, or to sue the trustees in mandamus to compel them to issue a warrant; that he chose the former remedy and obtained a judgment against the district which is not a bar to the present suit. It is also argued on appellant's part that the present suit is one to require the issuance of a warrant in payment of an adjudicated claim, and that the statute of limitations runs from the time the former judgment became final rather than from the time when the work upon which the claim was founded was performed. The questions presented on this appeal are questions of law alone—as to whether the trial court correctly concluded that the appellant's action in mandamus was barred by the former judgment and by the statute of limitations.

The controversy arose over the refusal of the trustees of the district to pay appellant's claim for services rendered to the district at the special instance and request of the trustees. In the former action the trustees claimed that the district was not liable because they had not formally contracted with the appellant for the performance of the work. Judgment was rendered against the district, from which it appealed to the district court of the Third district. That court held (67 Cal. App. 488, 227 P. 787) that, the trustees having by resolution declared an intention to have the work done, one of them having by letter engaged appellant to perform it, all the members of the board having acquiesced in this action, the district having received the benefits, and the trustees having drawn their warrants for partial payments for the work as it progressed, a contract to pay for the entire work was implied which was binding upon the district. A petition for a transfer to the Supreme Court was denied, and the remittitur covering the affirmance of the judgment was filed in the superior court on July 28, 1924. In December, 1924, and again in January, 1925, the appellant herein demanded of the trustees that they draw their warrant for payment of the judgment and interest. This demand having been refused, this action was commenced to compel the trustees to draw their warrant as demanded.

The judgment roll in the former case was received in evidence for the purpose of showing that, though the action was commenced against the district and the trustees, the judgment was against the district alone. From this it is argued, that the judgment must be taken as an adjudication in favor of the trustees as to appellant's right to mandamus. From this judgment roll it appears that the complaint was not framed in mandamus. It pleaded two causes of action—one on an express contract and one for the reasonable value of services rendered. Though the complaint prayed for the issuance of a warrant against the funds of the district it did not plead the inadequacy of a legal remedy to entitle the plaintiff to the extraordinary remedy of mandamus. In the judgment we find the recital that the plaintiff had dismissed as to the trustees individually, and that the court "granted the motion of defendant reclamation district No. 1619 for a nonsuit as to the first cause of action." Nothing is said as to the trustees in their capacity as such, but in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal it is recited that:

> "The trustees of the district were included as defendants, but their motion for a nonsuit was sustained by the trial court and the cause of action as against them dismissed."

[1] That court having had the entire record before it, we may take its statement of the record as conclusive, since nothing to the contrary is shown here.

[2] The situation is this: The plaintiff sued the district (a public corporation) for a money judgment and joined the trustees in a prayer asking that they be required to draw a warrant on the district funds for the amount found due. The defendants answered, pleading a misjoinder of parties, and the trustees moved for a nonsuit, which was granted. Findings were made against the district and the judgment went against the district alone. Nothing appears in either findings or judgment favorable to the trustees except the notation of the dismissal as individuals.

Section 3453 of the Political Code, as amended in 1899 (St. 1899, p. 9), authorizes a direct action against the district for a money judgment. This section was thus amended following the decision of the Supreme Court in Hensley v. Reclamation District 556, 121 Cal. 96, 53 P. 401, which held that such an action could not be maintained. The effect of the amendment was recognized by the later decision of the Supreme Court in San Francisco Savings Union v. Reclamation Dist., 144 Cal. 639, 646, 79 P. 374, 376, where this amendment was treated as:

> "A new law giving a new remedy to the creditor, a right to obtain payment by an ordinary action against the district on the debt."

Theretofore the only remedy was to sue, under section 3457 of the Political Code, in mandamus to compel the trustees of the district to issue a warrant for the amount claimed to be due or to levy an assessment to provide necessary funds. In this section it was provided that:

> "In any proceedings for a writ of mandate to compel the trustees to issue a warrant, if a controversy arises as to the amount that may be due to the plaintiff, the court must determine the same in the manner provided for determining controversies in other civil actions."

[3-6] Mandamus is an extraordinary remedy "in the nature of an equitable interference supplementing the deficiencies of the common law." Potomac Oil Co. v. Dye, 10 Cal. App. 534, 537, 102 P. 677, 678. "Although classed as a legal remedy, its issuance is largely controlled by equitable principles." Duncan Town Site Co. v. Lane, 245 U. S. 308, 312, 38 S. Ct. 99, 101 (62 L. Ed. 309); Arant v. Lane, 249 U. S. 367, 371, 39 S. Ct. 293, 63 L. Ed. 650. It is a remedy which is awarded "not as a matter of right, but in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion." Duncan T. Co. v. Lane, supra; Fawkes v. City of Burbank, 188 Cal. 399, 402, 205 P. 675; Wilson v. Blake, 169 Cal. 449, 454, 147 P. 129, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 205; Cal. Highway Com. v. Riley, 192 Cal. 97, 112, 218 P. 579. Cases may arise "where the applicant for relief has an undoubted legal right, for which mandamus is the appropriate remedy, but where the court may, in the exercise of a wise discretion, still refuse the relief." Wiedwald v. Dodson, 95 Cal. 450, 453, 30 P. 580, 581. "One who seeks the aid of the court in obtaining this remedy must come into court with clean hands." 38 Corp. Jur. page 574; Bashore v. Superior Court, 152 Cal. 1, 4, 91 P. 801; Turner v. Fisher, 222 U. S. 204, 209, 32 S. Ct. 37, 56 L. Ed. 165.

[7] The writ may be denied when the respondent shows a willingness to perform the act without coercion (38 Corp. Jur. page 554), or where, in the opinion of the court, its issuance is unnecessary—where it appears that the petitioner will obtain the relief sought without the writ and the public interest would be injuriously affected if a writ should issue (38 Corp. Jur. page 550). As a general rule, the writ will issue only where there is no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law. Code Civ. Proc. § 1086; Turney v. Morrissey, 22 Cal. App. 271, 272, 134 P. 335; Foster v. Traeger, 56 Cal. App. 339, 340, 204 P. 1089; Montgomery v. Neilon, 41 Cal. App. 184, 189, 182 P. 456; Oliver v. Superior Court, 67 Cal. App. 358, 362, 227 P. 647; Spangenberg v. Western, etc., Co., 166 Cal. 284, 285, 135 P. 1127.

[8] Because mandamus is a special proceeding, the constitutional right of trial by jury (Const. art. 1, § 7) does not apply, but by special enactment the Legislature has provided that when the answer to an application for mandamus raises questions of fact affecting the substantial rights of the parties and essential to the determination of the application, the court may, "in its discretion, order the question to be tried before a jury." Section 1090, Code Civ. Proc.).

[9] It is hardly necessary to say that in each particular above noted the special proceeding in mandamus differs from the ordinary action at law, and that when the Legislature, by the amendment of 1899, authorized a direct suit against the district it did, as pointed out by the Supreme Court in San Francisco Savings Union v. Reclamation Dist., 144 Cal. page 646, 79 P. 374, provide a new remedy to the creditor of the district, whereas, prior to the amendment, the creditor's only remedy was to sue the trustees of the district in mandamus to compel them to issue a warrant upon the funds of the district (or to compel the levy of an assessment), in which action he was not entitled to a trial of the issues of fact by a jury as of right, and in which action the granting of relief was a matter of discretion in the court, and not a matter of right.

[10] By the new remedy provided in the amendment to section 3453 of the Political Code, the creditor was entitled as a right to a trial by jury of the issues of fact involved, when the action was at law, and was entitled as of right to a judgment against the district, whether the issue was before the court or the jury, if he established the facts entitling him to that relief, and this right to a judgment did not depend upon the discretion of the court or the jury. When the Legislature gave the creditor this alternative remedy of suing the district for a money judgment, it is of no consequence that it did not expressly provide that in its judgment the court should include the mandate that the judgment should be paid by means of a warrant drawn by the trustees upon the funds of the district if available. In this connection it is fair to assume that, when a creditor had reduced his claim to judgment after a trial wherein the issues of fact in controversy and the questions of law involved had been determined, the warrant would follow as of course and without specific mandate because, as the trustees of the district constitute the only governing body of the district, and the only body which may draw warrants upon the funds of the district, as well as the only body which may defend the district in the action brought against it, all questions of both law and fact determining the action against the district would be res adjudicata and binding upon the trustees of the district as such, in any action brought against them, under section 3457, to compel the issuance of a warrant.

[11] It might be added that it would be difficult to conceive of a case where the trustees could be properly joined as parties defendant with the district in an action of this kind. Mandamus would only lie when the trustees had failed to perform a duty imposed upon them by law, and it must be predicated upon a prior demand to perform that duty. A demand that they draw a warrant to pay a judgment not yet rendered would be an idle act, and a refusal to comply with the demand would be fully justified.

[12] It would seem that, when the Legislature gave the creditor another remedy through the amendment to section 3453, it reduced the remedy, authorized by section 3457, to the ordinary action of mandamus, covered by sections 1085 and 1086 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The plaintiff, in the original action, did not follow either of these remedies alone, but he endeavored to avail himself of both. He joined the trustees as parties defendant with the district itself and pleaded facts sufficient to bring him under section 3453, but he failed to plead facts sufficient to entitle him to any remedy in mandamus. This is so because he not only failed to allege that he had no other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law (an allegation which it is true is merely an allegation of a conclusion of law [Turney v. Morrissey, 22 Cal. App. 271, 272, 134 P. 335]), but failed to plead any facts which would negative the existence of such a remedy. Furthermore, upon the face of the complaint and by the joinder of the district as party defendant, it affirmatively appeared from the complaint itself that another remedy did exist (an action under section 3453), and before the plaintiff could be heard in mandamus it was necessary for him to plead and prove that this other remedy was not a plain, speedy, and adequate one. Turney v. Morrissey, supra.

The issues presented to the trial court in the first action were as to the first cause of action whether an express contract had been executed, and, if so, whether it had been legally executed on the part of the district; and as to the second cause of action, whether the district was legally liable upon an implied contract. Having determined these issues and having come to the conclusion that the plaintiff was entitled to a money judgment against the district, it is fair to assume that the court declined to issue a writ of mandamus against the trustees for any of the following reasons: That the trustees were improperly joined as parties defendant; that judgment against the district was a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy; that all questions of fact having been determined and the legal liability having been adjudicated a warrant would follow as of course in satisfaction of the judgment without a writ of mandamus; or that the defendants satisfied the court that the judgment would be paid without the issuance of a writ. It is impossible to conceive of how mandamus for a warrant could be denied on its merits, where the plaintiff was adjudged to be entitled to the sum of money named in the judgment.

[13] Though the record discloses that the trial court in the first action did not affirmatively pass upon the applicant's right to a writ of mandate, it also discloses that the court did give to the applicant affirmative relief in the nature of a judgment against the district. It follows from what we have heretofore said that, because of that remedy, the court could not have properly granted the additional remedy of mandamus, and whether the action was dismissed as to the trustees, or whether the plaintiff was nonsuited as to them, the court entered the only judgment which would have been proper under the circumstances.

[14] When the cause came before the trial court in the second action, it having been shown to the trial court that the judgment had become final, that it was unsatisfied, that demand had been made upon the trustees to draw a warrant in payment of the judgment as required by law, that the trustees refused to perform this duty, and that because of these facts the legal remedy provided in section 3453 of the Political Code was no longer a plain, speedy, and adequate one, the plaintiff presented a case which in every feature entitled him to the writ prayed for. On that hearing the question of res adjudicata would arise only on the matter of the liquidation of the claim for services and the legal liability of the district to pay for them.

[15] It is unnecessary to analyze the cases cited by respondent which support the general rule that a judgment is conclusive not only as to the subject-matter in controversy, but also as to every other matter that was or might have been litigated in the action. It is sufficient to say that this rule is not always applicable literally, but that:

> "What is really meant by this expression is, that a judgment is conclusive upon the issues tendered by the plaintiff's complaint." Concannon v. Smith, 134 Cal. 14, 18, 66 P. 40, 42; Brown v. Brown, 170 Cal. 1, 6, 147 P. 1168; Lang v. Lang, 182 Cal. 765, 768, 190 P. 181; Linforth v. Montgomery, 195 Cal. 49, 58, 231 P. 735.

Thus, where a right has accrued subsequent to the former trial, and an issue was not tendered or determined in the former trial and was not necessary to a complete disposition of the issues tendered, it could not be said that the former judgment would, in every case, be conclusive as to that issue.

[16] We find no merit in respondents' pleas of the statute of limitations. The action is to compel the trustees to perform a duty imposed upon them by law—to draw a warrant to pay a final judgment. The action was brought within a few months of the time when the judgment became final. It is not based upon the original claim for services rendered—that claim has long since been adjudicated by the judgment in appellant's favor. In support of the pleas respondents advance the argument that as the issue was raised in their answer, the allegations of which the trial court found to be true, that finding is conclusive upon us on this appeal. This is a correct statement of the record so far as it goes, but the question here is really one of law—as to the correctness of the trial court's conclusion of law that the cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations. So far as the issues of fact are concerned, the pleas were based upon the theory that the relief demanded in the former action was the same relief as demanded here, that is to say, that the subject-matter of both actions was the liability of the district to pay for the services rendered to the district. It was stipulated that the subject-matter of the claim against the district was for work performed prior to May, 1920; that no other services were rendered by the appellant to the district since that date; and that the claim now urged against the district was based upon the same services involved in the prior action. These were the facts which the trial court found to be true, and that finding is not attacked. But when the trial court concluded therefrom that the appellant's cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations it overlooked the fact that, though both claims may have originated from the same services, they were really two different causes of action.

> "The recovery of a judgment creates a new debt or liability, distinct from the original claim or demand, and this new liability is not merely evidence if the creditor's claim, but is thereafter the substance of the claim itself." (Emphasis ours.)

Here the original claim was for $2,422 based upon an implied contract to pay the reasonable value of services rendered. Upon trial of that issue the court determined that the reasonable value of the services was $2,116, and judgment for that amount was entered on July 10, 1922, and drew interest at the statutory rate from the date thereof. This judgment became final by the filing of the remittitur on July 28, 1924. On December 11, 1924, demand was made upon the trustees for the payment of the judgment, and a similar demand was made on January 29, 1925. This action was commenced May 11, 1925, demanding payment of the judgment, with interest thereon from the date of its entry—July 10, 1922. The only question of the application of the statute of limitations involved here is, therefore, whether this suit was commenced within the statutory time following the date when the judgment upon which it is based became final. The shortest period of limitation pleaded is that provided in section 339, Code of Civil Procedure, which is two years from the time when the cause of action shall have accrued. Inasmuch as this action was commenced within one year from the accrual of the cause of action, it was manifestly brought within time.

The only authority upon, which the respondents rely in support of their plea is San Francisco Savings Union v. Reclamation District No. 124, 144 Cal. 639, 79 P. 374. In that case the Supreme Court had before it the question of the effect of the amendment to section 3453, Political Code, made in 1899. Actions had been brought in mandamus to compel the trustees to levy an assessment to pay claims against the district, and these had all resulted in judgments favorable to the trustees. When the amendment to section 3453 was enacted in 1899, the claimants commenced an action under that section against the district to adjudicate these claims, all of which had arisen prior to May 10, 1885. In holding that the amendment of 1899 was not retroactive the Supreme Court said that, the right to resort to the remedy of mandamus having been long barred by the statute of limitations:

> "It would be an impossible construction of the amendment of 1899 to hold that it not only gives the right to maintain an action against the district upon these stale claims, but also revives the right to maintain the suit for a writ of mandate to compel an assessment which had been previously barred by the statute of limitations. Such a construction could never be based upon implication merely, but would require express and distinct words to that effect." Page 649 (79 P. 377).

[19] The court did not have before it a case, such as we have here, where the action, under section 3453, was brought within the statutory period and judgment rendered against the district. We must hold that such a judgment follows the general rule of all judgments upon unliquidated claims, and that it created a new debt or liability against the district. Such being the case in any action on that judgment, the statute of limitations would begin to run from the time when the judgment became final, and not from the time when the original debt was created.

Judgment reversed.

PEOPLE v. PARKINSON et al. (Cr. 957.)

1. Criminal law 🔑511(4)—Accomplice's testimony as to burglary held insufficiently corroborated by storekeeper's testimony that store was burglarized, and that clothing found on defendant's person corresponded to his stock (Pen. Code, § 1111).

In prosecution for burglary of store, testimony of accomplice held insufficiently corroborated by storekeeper's testimony that store was burglarized, and that articles of clothing found upon defendant's person were similar to articles he carried at store, in view of Pen. Code, § 1111, providing conviction cannot be had upon testimony of an accomplice unless corroborated by other evidence tending to connect defendant with commission of offense.

2. Criminal law 🔑511(2)—Testimony corroborative of accomplice must tend to connect defendant with crime (Pen. Code, § 1111).

In prosecution for burglary, testimony of accomplice, plus slight additional evidence from other sources, held insufficient to sustain conviction, under Pen. Code, § 1111, requiring that corroboration of accomplice's testimony to sustain conviction must tend to connect defendant with commission of offense, and that corroboration merely showing commission of offense or circumstances thereof is insufficient.

3. Criminal law 🔑742(2)—Where facts are undisputed, question whether witness is accomplice is for court.

Where facts are admitted or undisputed, question whether certain witness is or is not an accomplice is for court's determination.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Charles O. Busick, Judge.

Carlson Parkinson and Oscar Anderson were convicted of burglary, and the defendant first named appeals. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

Arthur H. McCurdy and J. S. Daly, both of Sacramento, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PLUMMER, J. On the 8th day of September, 1926, an information was filed in the superior court of the county of Sacramento, charging the above-named defendants with having, on the 22d day of July, A. D. 1926, in the county of Sacramento, burglarized a certain store owned by one J. E. Holst, situated in the town of Fair Oaks, in said county.

Upon arraignment the defendant Oscar Anderson pleaded guilty. The defendant Calson Parkinson pleaded "not guilty," was tried and convicted, and prosecutes this appeal from the judgment of conviction and the order of the court denying his motion for a new trial.

Two questions are presented for our consideration: (1) That the testimony of the accomplice, upon which the defendant was convicted, was uncorroborated, as required by section 1111 of the Penal Code; and (2) that the court erred in its instructions to the jury.

[1] The defendant Anderson, after pleading guilty and being sentenced to the state prison, went upon the witness stand and testified to the circumstances constituting the alleged burglary. His testimony is to the effect that he and the defendant Parkinson went to the store belonging to the said Holst in an automobile; that Parkinson remained in the automobile while he, Anderson, proceeded to enter the store and took therefrom certain shoes, socks, overalls, shirts, a few knives, cheap watches, and two flash lights; that he brought the things out of the building and put them in the automobile; that he and Parkinson then returned to Sacramento; that he did not know whether Parkinson took any of the articles mentioned. A pair of socks, a pair of overalls, and a pair of shoes, taken from the person of the defendant, were then exhibited to the witness Anderson, and the witness then testified that the socks were somewhat similar to the ones that he took from the Holst store at Fair Oaks; also, that the overalls and shoes were similar. It does not appear from the testimony that any of the other articles mentioned by the witness Anderson were exhibited to the witness, nor does the testimony show what disposition thereof was made by the witness Anderson or any other person

J. E. Holst, the owner of the store, was sworn and examined and testified that his store was burglarized about the time mentioned in the information; that certain articles were taken therefrom; that the socks, shoes, and overalls found upon the person of the defendant were similar to such articles carried by him in his store; that similar shoes and socks were taken from his store on the night in question; that, while he carried similar overalls, he could not swear that any overalls were taken from his store.

There is no other testimony in the transcript relating to the offense charged, or in any wise tending to implicate the defendant Parkinson in the commission thereof. It may be here stated that a witness by the name of Charles Jason, who was sworn and examined on the part of the defense, stated that he was employed during the months of May, June, July, and August of 1926 at the Arcade Clothing Company's store in the city of Sacramento; that said store carried clothing and furnishing goods for men; that said store carried the same kind of socks, shoes, and overalls that were found upon the person of the defendant; and that during said period of time he sold to the defendant similar socks, shoes, and overalls.

This testimony, however, cannot be considered in the determination of this cause further than to say that the testimony adduced by the prosecution to corroborate the testimony of the accomplice, Oscar Anderson, does not rise to the requirement of section 1111 of the Penal Code. That section reads:

> "A conviction cannot be had upon the testimony of an accomplice unless it be corroborated by such other evidence as shall tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense; and the corroboration is not sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the offense or the circumstances thereof."

The testimony of the witness Holst, relied upon by the prosecution as corroborative, shows only the fact that his store was entered and similar wearing apparel taken therefrom. He was unable to identify the articles, or to testify that they came from his store. The testimony that one is wearing similar articles, such as socks, shoes, and overalls, in view of the fact that such articles are made in large quantities, identical in kind and character, demonstrates by the very statement that no corroboration whatever exists in this case. It is not a question of whether the appellant is or is not guilty of the offense charged, or whether the witness Anderson, who pleaded guilty to the offense, did or did not tell the absolute truth. The section of the Penal Code to which we have referred requires that there must be some testimony tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense before a conviction can be had upon the statements of an accomplice. The so-called corroborative testimony in this case scarcely rises to the dignity of a suspicious circumstance, but, assuming that it does, the requirements of section 1111 of the Penal Code are not thereby met. The cases are legion that suspicious circumstances are not sufficient to constitute corroborative testimony tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense charged. We have only to refer to the citations contained in Kerr's Cyclopedic Codes of California, appended to section 1111 of the Penal Code.

[2] As the case must go back for a retrial, it is necessary to consider the objections to an instruction given by the court, and also to a certain instruction requested by the defendant and refused. At the request of the people the court gave the following instruction:

> "You are instructed that while the testimony of an accomplice alone is not sufficient to convict the defendant, you are instructed that the testimony of an accomplice, plus slight additional evidence from other sources, may be sufficient to convict him."

In support of this instruction the case of People v. Kelly, 69 Cal. App. 558, 231 P. 767, is cited. An examination of the authorities cited in that case, however, discloses the fact that no such instruction has been approved. The court in that case follows the provisions of section 1111 of the Penal Code as to the requirements of the corroborative testimony, showing it must tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, and in the course of considering this question it cites other opinions in other cases, where language is used to the effect that such testimony standing alone may not, in itself, be of any great weight, but, nevertheless, that standing alone, unaided by the testimony of the accomplice, it must tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense. The instruction as given does not require that the corroborative testimony must tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, but simply that the testimony of the accomplice, "plus slight additional evidence from other sources, may be sufficient to convict him." While language of this kind might properly appear in the opinion of a court in discussing corroborative testimony, it is not a correct statement of the law to be given to the jury in the form of an instruction, as it omits the essential requirements of the Penal Code governing such testimony.

Upon this appeal it is urged that, as the court gave an instruction in the exact language of section 1111 of the Penal Code, no injury resulted from the giving of the instruction which we have cited. From the fact that the cause must go back for retrial for the reasons which we have hereinbefore stated, the consideration of whether such erroneous instruction is cured by the giving of a correct instruction becomes immaterial further than to state that the instruction which we have set forth herein is erroneous and should not be given. The defendant requested, and the court refused to give the following instruction:

> "You are instructed that the witness Oscar Anderson, is an accomplice as to the crime charged against the defendant Parkinson, and you cannot convict the defendant upon the testimony of the accomplice, Oscar Anderson, unless it be corroborated by such other evidence as shall tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, and the corroboration is not sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the offense or the circumstances thereof."

[3] It appears from the record that in the refusal to give this instruction the court relied upon the case of People v. Allison, 249 P. 881, where this court, in discussing the question of whether a certain person was or was not an accomplice, stated, in substance, that where the facts are in dispute as to whether a certain witness is or is not an accomplice, then and in that case the determination of the facts are for the jury; but where the facts are admitted or undisputed it is a question of law alone. The case of People v. Allison, supra, was before the Supreme Court (see People v. Allison, 253 P. 318), and the court there uses the following language, taken from opinions previously decided by the same court:

> "Whenever the facts themselves are in dispute, that is to say, whenever the question is whether the witness did or did not do certain things, which, admittedly, if he did do them, make him an accomplice, the jury's finding, upon familiar principles, is not disturbed. But where the facts are not in dispute, where the acts and conduct of the witness are admitted, it becomes a question of law for the court to say whether or not those acts and facts make the witness an accomplice."

In the case at bar the fact as to Anderson being an accomplice is undisputed, and the facts set forth in his testimony showing that he is an accomplice are undisputed. There was nothing left for the jury to decide upon this question, and the instruction refused by the court should have been given.

The judgment and order of the trial court are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

PEOPLE v. SPAULDING. (Cr. 1433.)

1. Criminal law ⟹507(4)—Engaging in scheme to detect and punish crime does not constitute one an "accomplice," requiring corroboration.

Merely engaging in a scheme for detecting, exposing, and punishing a crime does not constitute one an "accomplice," whose testimony requires corroboration.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Accomplice.]

2. Criminal law ⟹507½—Evidence held to show that prosecuting witnesses were only feigned accomplices, not requiring corroboration (Pen. Code, § 288a).

Evidence in prosecution for having committed an infamous crime, defined by Pen. Code, § 288a, held to justify conclusion that, if prosecuting witnesses were accomplices, they were only feigned, and hence testimony was not required to be corroborated.

3. Criminal law ⟹742(2)—Question of whether prosecuting witnesses were accomplices is for jury on conflicting evidence.

Where evidence is conflicting, question as to whether or not witnesses were accomplices is one for jury, and, having been determined by them in the negative, their verdict is conclusive.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; J. A. Allen, Judge.

F. J. Spaulding was convicted for having committed an infamous crime, defined by Pen. Code § 288a, and he appeals. Affirmed.

M. F. McCormick, of Fresno, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., Le Roy McCormick, Dist. Atty., of Visalia, for the People.

CRAIG, J. The appellant was charged by information with having committed in the county of Tulare the infamous crime defined by section 288a of the Penal Code. He was convicted by a jury, and appeals from the resultant judgment upon the grounds: (1) That the people's witnesses were accomplices, and that, aside from their testimony, "there was not a particle of evidence to show the commission of the offense charged in the information"; (2) that, assuming them to have entrapped the defendant, if they induced him to commit an offense which he would not otherwise have committed, the conviction cannot be sustained.

It appears that on January 31, 1926, appellant was engaged in conducting an automobile supply store known as Spaulding's Filling Station, on the state highway, northerly from the town of Earlimart, in Tulare county; that on the afternoon of said date two deputy sheriffs of Kings county, named Pefley and Lant, appeared in the latter's automobile at appellant's establishment, and purchased oil for the machine; that Lant retired to a lavatory in the rear of the store, and, while he was absent, Pefley sold the appellant four boxes of candy. Pefley testified that, when he first exhibited samples of the candy to Spaulding, the latter ignored them, making repeated indecent proposals to him, and that the defendant put his hand on the private parts of the witness; that thereafter Pefley told Lant of the occurrence, stating that Spaulding was a moral pervert, to which Lant replied, "I know he is; he tried to approach me." Lant testified that during the same visit the defendant made obscene advances toward him, and, when repulsed, said: "Don't tell your partner anything." "The next time you come through stop in and I will be glad to have you." Each of these witnesses swore that they had previously been deputized for special work by the sheriff of Kings county, and were narcotic and liquor investigators; that, as a result of the experiences above mentioned, they decided to return to Spaulding's auto station on the following day. They directly and positively testified that they did return at about 7:30 p. m. on February 1st, and asked for oil or gasoline; that Lant went to the lavatory, and returned to the car, whereupon Pefley alighted, and proceeded to the outhouse in question; that appellant soon followed, and was in the act of committing the offense with which he was charged in the information when Lant appeared upon the scene, and the defendant was arrested. It appears that Spaulding violently resisted the witnesses; that he fought, bit, and kicked them, and attempted to escape; that the witnesses struck him with an automatic pistol, tripped him, and one of the men held him down while the other held off several persons who collected in response to loud cries of the defendant for "Bryan," who later proved to be his son; and that Spaulding then protested that he was being robbed. During the struggle parts of the latticework about the toilet was torn loose, and the ground was deeply marked by the shoes of the three men. Lant testified that while at the supply station he saw two other automobiles, one of which drove away.

Pefley and Lant were corroborated in all respects, except as to the improper solicitations and the commission of the criminal act charged. Other witnesses testified as to the appearance of the other two machines, the struggle in the rear of the premises, and the loosening of the latticework; one of the defendant's own witnesses testified that Spaulding bore evidences of the fight, although another of his witnesses swore that the defendant did not leave the counter in his store, except to sell the oil for Lant's car. Still other witnesses testified to the footprints, and that "the ground had been scuffed up as though there had been a scuffle from that point to the west end of this latticework, inside of the latticework, and then south entirely outside of the latticework," as described by Pefley and Lant. The defendant took the stand, and denied any wrongdoing. He appears to have made the assertion that he had been robbed of about $30, but it was testified that when first apprehended he made no mention of money.

[1-3] The prosecuting witnesses emphatically stated under oath that their participation in the transaction was for the sole purpose of detecting the defendant in the commission of a criminal act which they had reason to believe he would commit. It is well established that merely engaging in a scheme for the purpose of detecting, exposing, and punishing crime does not constitute one an accomplice whose testimony requires corroboration. People v. Keseling, 35 Cal. App. 501, 170 P. 627; People v. Bolanger, 71 Cal. 17, 11 P. 799. Certain of the testimony amply justifies the conclusion that, if Pefley and Lant were accomplices at all, they were feigned ones only, and hence their testimony need not have been corroborated. People v. Keseling, supra; People v. Farrell, 30 Cal. 316. Where, as here, the evidence is conflicting, the question as to whether or not the witnesses were accomplices is one for the jury, and having been determined by them in the negative, their verdict is conclusive. People v. Demera, 64 Cal. App. 121, 220 P. 673. The jury were instructed upon the rules as to reasonable doubt, conflicting evidence, and the testimony of accomplices, and, as they found the defendant guilty as charged, we must accept as true the evidence offered by the People in this respect.

We do not deem it neccessary nor expedient to discuss at length the remaining ground assigned for reversal, since there is nowhere in the record any evidence tending to show that the defendant was induced to commit the offense. There is strong, positive evidence to the contrary, as we have indicated, and the defendant as positively insisted that no offense was committed. Authorities cited by appellant to this proposition are therefore not in point.

No error appearing, the judgment is affirmed.

Plaintiff sued upon a complaint pleading two causes of action "for breach of contract," one in the form of a common count for money had and received, and the other based upon five written contracts for the purchase and sale of sugar. The defendants' demurrer to the complaint was sustained without leave to amend, and the plaintiff has appealed upon the judgment roll.

[1, 2] The first alleged cause of action pleads that the defendant is indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $613.25 for money had and received by said defendant for the use of plaintiff. This pleading of an indebtedness under the old form known as a common count is sufficient against demurrer under the rule of Pike v. Zadig, 171 Cal. 273, 276, 152 P. 923, and cases there cited. The general demurrer should therefore have been overruled upon the authority of that case, and the special demurrer, inasmuch as it merely raised the point of uncertainty as to how the indebtedness arose, should likewise have been overruled upon the same authority (page 277); the remedy of the defendant being to demand a bill of particulars.

The second cause of action alleged that on June 19, 1924, plaintiff and defendant entered into two contracts designated "A" and "B," wherein the defendant agreed to buy and the plaintiff agreed to sell to defendant a total of 1,000 bags of sugar at the rate of $6.90 per hundred pounds; that on June 23, 1924, the same parties executed the contract designated "C," wherein the defendant also agreed to buy and the plaintiff to sell 1,000 bags of sugar at the price of $4.50 per hundred pounds; that delivery of the sugar mentioned in contracts A and B was to be at San Francisco; that on August 18, 1924, the same parties executed a contract designated "D," wherein the plaintiff agreed to buy and the defendant agreed to sell to plaintiff 1,000 bags of sugar at the price of $6.75 per hundred pounds, the delivery thereof to be at San Francisco; that on the same day the same parties executed contract "E" wherein the plaintiff agreed to buy and the defendant agreed to sell 1,000 bags of sugar at $4.37½ per hundred pounds, delivery thereof to be made at Vancouver, B. C.; that thereafter the date elapsed at which the sugar should have arrived at said ports, and that the time for delivery thereof had long since passed; that thereafter the plaintiff demanded of defendant that it deliver the lots of sugar mentioned in contracts D and E and at the same time informed defendant that plaintiff desired the delivery of said sugar so that it might redeliver to it the sugar agreed to be sold under contracts A, B, and C; that the defendant failed and refused to make delivery of the sugar as demanded; that the tare on said sugar amounted to one pound per bag, and that the net weight of each of said bags was 223 pounds; that plaintiff had demanded of defendant that it pay the difference between the purchase prices of said sugar specified in the five contracts mentioned, but that the same has remained unpaid. The prayer of plaintiff under this cause of action is $613.25, the same amount demanded under the common count.

In support of the judgment, the respondent urges that the appellant has mistaken its remedy and should have sued for the difference between the contract price and the market price of the sugar as provided in sections 3308 and 3354, Civil Code, that the complaint is insufficient because it does not plead any facts showing special damages sustained by the appellant, and that the contracts are void for want of mutuality.

[3-5] The complaint is designated as one for breach of contract. So far as the allegations of the second cause of action are concerned, the only breach alleged refers to contracts D and E, wherein the respondent was obligated to deliver sugar to the appellant upon payment of the purchase price thereof. It is alleged that contracts A, B, and C were executed prior to the date of execution of contracts D and E, but it does not appear but that these contracts were fulfilled prior to the commencement of the action. It is alleged that demand was made upon the respondent to deliver the sugar called for by contracts D and E, but it does not appear that the appellant at that time or at any time prior to the commencement of the action tendered payment as required by those contracts. But, on the other hand, from the allegation that at the time of the demand the appellant informed respondent that it sought delivery merely for the purpose of fulfilling its obligation to deliver under contracts A, B, and C, it may be assumed that no tender of payment was made. Certainly, in an action for breach of contracts D and E, which is all that the complaint pretends to cover, the measure of damages must be that fixed by section 3308 and 3354 of the Civil Code. So far as anything appears from the pleading, the market price of sugar at the place of delivery may have been less than that which the appellant was called upon to pay under the contracts which it claims to have been breached. Manifestly, where special damages only are sought, though the measure of damages is statutory, it is necessary to plead the facts which would show that the pleader had sustained damages of the character for which the remedy is provided. In Judson Manufacturing Co. v. Lutge, 174 Cal. 566, 163 P. 1017, the Supreme Court had before it a pleading seeking damages for delay in delivery under a contract for the sale of material. It was pleaded "that, by reason of plaintiff's said breaches of its said contract with this defendant, this defendant has been damaged in the sum of $4,000." The court said: "The damage for which recovery is here sought is, under every rule of pleading and authority as to damage, one which must be specially and specifically pleaded" (citing cases)—and held that the defendant's failure to specifically plead this special damage justified the court's refusal to receive evidence upon it and demanded a finding and judgment against it. Here the pleading is merely that the appellant demanded of the defendant that it pay the difference between the purchase price of sugar specified in the various contracts, and the complaint closes with a prayer for judgment in the sum of $613.25, but no facts are pleaded to show whether this was the sum demanded or to show upon what basis the amount prayed for was fixed. Thus, though the action is one for special damages for breach of contract, the complainant does not plead damage and does not allege any facts upon which a claim for damages could be based.

The demurrer to the second cause of action was properly sustained, and, though the complaint might have been amended to meet the objections raised by the demurrer, it does not appear that leave to amend was asked or refused.

Though we have said that the demurrer to the first cause of action should have been overruled, we find that on this appeal the appellant has frankly stated that this cause of action is predicated upon the transactions set forth in the second cause of action, and that, if there is no recovery to be had in the second cause of action, then there could be no recovery on the first. It is frankly conceded that the entire transaction was a "wash sale," as that term is used in the trade, a transaction whereby the parties agree to settle by one of them paying the other the difference between the contract price and the market price at the time of delivery. Such a transaction has been declared to be merely a speculation upon the rise and fall of the market and as such contrary to public policy and void, at least where the transaction is made with the intention to speculate on the market and not to deliver the commodities contracted for. Though in reviewing the allegations of the complaint the intention of the parties to thus speculate upon the rise and fall of the sugar market is not clear, the defendant in his brief contends that such was the character of the transaction, and that this was within the knowledge of the parties from the beginning. If the cause should go to trial and these facts should appear, judgment would necessarily go for the respondent. On the entire record the appellant has failed to show prejudicial error, but it has presented a case where, though the ruling on demurrer may have been technical error, no harm resulted because, from the concessions in the brief, a trial upon the merits would have come to the same end.

Judgment affirmed.

BOOTH v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.

(Civ. 5776.)

1. Certiorari ⚷28(2)—Court, having jurisdiction of parties and action, did not exceed jurisdiction by ordering case placed on jury calendar (Code Civ. Proc. § 1068).

Where defendant failed to appear in response to petitioner's notice of motion to set case for trial, but subsequently moved for order placing case on jury calendar, held court, having jurisdiction of parties and action, did not exceed jurisdiction by granting such motion as affecting right to writ of review, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1068.

2. Certiorari ⚷5(1)—Order placing case on jury calendar, being reviewable on appeal from final judgment, held not reviewable by writ of review (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 956, 1068).

An order placing case on jury calendar, being one which could be reviewed on appeal from final judgment in the action (Code Civ. Proc. § 956), was not reviewable by writ of review, under section 1068.

Certiorari by H. T. Booth, petitioner, to review an order of the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, Edmund P. Morgan, Judge. Writ denied.

Byrne & Lamson, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

James E. Colston, of San Francisco, for respondent.

CASHIN, J. A proceeding in certiorari to review an order of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, directing that an action pending therein be tried by a jury.

The action in the superior court was brought by petitioner to recover on several assigned claims for money had and received. The defendant therein answered, whereupon petitioner served a notice of motion to set the case for trial. The defendant failed to appear in response to the notice, and the cause was by order of the court placed on the trial calendar and a day fixed for the trial. Subsequently the defendant, upon notice to petitioner, moved the court for an order placing the cause upon the jury calendar for trial, which motion was granted.

Petitioner contends that the defendant, by failing to demand a jury at the time the cause was first placed on the trial calendar, waived his right thereto, and that in making its order therefor the court exceeded its jurisdiction.

A writ of review may be granted when an inferior tribunal has exceeded its jurisdiction and there is no appeal nor, in the judgment of the court, any plain, speedy, and adequate remedy. Code Civ. Proc. § 1068.

[1, 2] In the instant case, the trial court had jurisdiction both of the parties and the subject of the action, and the order in question, as in the case of a denial of a jury trial where a jury might be waived, was an exercise of such jurisdiction. Wittman v. Police Court, 145 Cal. 474, 78 P. 1052; Goodman v. Superior Court, 8 Cal. App. 232, 96 P. 395. Moreover, the order was one which may be reviewed on appeal from the final judgment in the action (Code Civ. Proc. § 956; Dickerson v. Superior Court, 41 Cal. App. 534, 183 P. 235), and the petitioner, if aggrieved, will thus be afforded a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy.

The petition is denied.

PACIFIC BONE, COAL & FERTILIZER CO. v. BLEAKMORE et ux. (Civ. 3111.) ★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 9, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 5, 1927.

1. Appeal and error ⚷694(1)—Finding is conclusive on appeal, where testimony is not brought up.

Where testimony in lower court is not brought up, finding of lower court is conclusive on appeal.

2. Husband and wife ⚷138(9)—Wife held not to have ratified husband's purchase of fertilizer by retaining benefit, in absence of knowledge, until beyond power to restore benefits (Civ. Code, § 2310).

Where it is not shown that wife, owning pear orchard, had any knowledge concerning purchase of fertilizer by her husband, or that foreman employed by wife knew anything about purchase, or conveyed information to owner, she cannot be held liable therefor under Civ. Code, § 2310, on theory of ratification by accepting or retaining benefit of purchase until after use of fertilizer had placed it beyond her power to return or restore benefits received.

3. Principal and agent ⚷103(2)—To charge owner with foreman's act in using fertilizer on pear orchard, irrespective of knowledge of purchase, use must be shown as usual practice.

In order to raise inference that foreman of pear orchard, by reason of his employment, had general authority to purchase and use fertilizer so as to charge owner for any act that foreman might have taken in relation to such use, irrespective of knowledge as to its purchase, it must be shown that use of fertilizer was in accordance with usual practice in pear culture, and that giving foreman authority to purchase and use same was within contemplation of owner in employing him.

4. Principal and agent ⚷171(1)—Principal does not ratify agent's act, where it is beyond his power to restore benefits after knowledge.

There is no ratification if, at time it becomes known agent exceeded his authority, principal had put it beyond his power to return or restore benefits received.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lake County; M. S. Sayre, Judge.

Action by the Pacific Bone, Coal & Fertilizer Company against Lea Bleakmore and Helen Bleakmore. Judgment for plaintiff against defendant first named and for defendant last named against plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion to vacate judgment in favor of defendant last named, and from such judgment plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court; RICHARDS, CURTIS and PRESTON, JJ., dissenting.

Lovett K. Fraser and Arthur J. Dannenbaum, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Herbert V. Keeling, of Lakeport, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. Plaintiff had judgment against the defendant Lea Bleakmore, and the defendant Helen Bleakmore had judgment against the plaintiff. Plaintiff thereupon moved the trial court to vacate the judgment in favor of the defendant Helen Bleakmore, and to enter judgment against said defendant in favor of the plaintiff. This motion was denied. From this order and from the judgment in favor of the defendant Helen Bleakmore the plaintiff appeals.

Lea Bleakmore and Helen Bleakmore are husband and wife, residing in Lake county, state of California. Helen Bleakmore owns a pear orchard situate in the county of Lake. Her husband, Lea Bleakmore, owns no interest in said orchard. During the times mentioned in these proceedings the orchard was in charge of one Ed Stewart, as foreman, employed and paid by the defendant Helen Bleakmore. Ed Stewart had full charge of the pear orchard in question.

On or about the 14th day of March, 1923, the defendant Lea Bleakmore went to Los Angeles, and, while there, purchased from the plaintiff 15 tons of lupine No. 1 fertilizer, at the agreed price of $42.50 per ton, and requested that the fertilizer be shipped to Ed Stewart by way of Hopland. At the time of the purchase the defendant Helen Bleakmore was not present. Lea Bleakmore stated to the plaintiff that the fertilizing material was for his pear orchard. The fertilizer was shipped to Hopland at the request of Lea Bleakmore, and a teamster hired by the said Ed Stewart hauled the fertilizer from Hopland to the pear orchard belonging to Helen Bleakmore. The fertilizer was first dumped in a barn situated on the pear orchard premises, after which 14 tons of the fertilizer were by the said Ed Stewart, and a workman employed by him, hauled out and distributed so as to place a portion thereof around each pear tree of the orchard belonging to the defendant Helen Bleakmore. One ton of the fertilizer was left in the barn for over a year, and then subsequently used. The expense of hauling and distributing the fertilizer was paid by the defendant Helen Bleakmore in connection with other ranch work performed by the said Ed Stewart and the person employed by him. Whether there was any segregation or specification of the particular time spent in hauling and distributing the fertilizer, or wages charged and paid for such services, does not appear in the transcript. There is nothing in the transcript to show that Helen Bleakmore knew anything about the purchase of the fertilizer in question, nor is there anything in the transcript showing that Lea Bleakmore ever conveyed any information concerning his purchase of the fertilizer or of the manner in which it was purchased to Ed Stewart, the foreman of the defendant Helen Bleakmore. No demand was ever made by the plaintiff upon the defendant Helen Bleakmore for payment until the beginning of this action, nor does the record disclose that Helen Bleakmore ever had any information from any source relative to the purchase and use of the fertilizer until she was joined as a defendant in this action to recover the purchase price thereof.

The record shows that Helen Bleakmore was a resident of the county of Lake, and while the appellant, in his brief, states that Helen Bleakmore resided upon the pear orchard in question, there is nothing in the record before this court upon which such a conclusion can be predicated. The cause is before us upon an appeal upon the judgment roll, and there is nothing in the findings indicating where Helen Bleakmore resided other than that she was a resident of Lake county in the state of California.

At the conclusion of the trial the court made certain findings, and it is now urged upon appeal that upon these findings judgment should be ordered against the defendant Helen Bleakmore. The findings referred to are as follows:

"VI. That, at the time of said purchase by said Lea Bleakmore of said fertilizer, the defendant Helen Bleakmore was not present, and it was unknown to plaintiff at the time of sale that said fertilizer was purchased by Lea Blackmore to be placed around the pear trees owned by defendant Helen Bleakmore. That said Lea Bleakmore stated that he was purchasing the fertilizer for his pear orchard. That said Lea Bleakmore owned no pear orchard at that time nor since. That more than 90 days have elapsed since the delivery of said fertilizer to Helen Bleakmore's pear ranch.

"VII. The court finds that Lea Bleakmore purchased 15 tons of lupine No. 1 fertilizer at the price of $637.50, with instructions to ship said fertilizer to Ed Stewart at Lakeport, via Hopland. That Ed Stewart was instructed by Lea Bleakmore to place said fertilizer around each pear tree. That said 15 tons of fertilizer were hauled from Hopland to Helen Bleakmore's barn, and dumped in the barn by the teamster. That Ed Stewart, manager for Helen Bleakmore, and Robert Hudson, hired man, thereafter hauled 14 tons of said fertilizer from Helen Bleakmore's barn and placed it around each of her pear trees in her 30-acre orchard. That Lea Bleakmore owned no pear orchard, and no interest in Helen Bleakmore's orchard. That Helen Bleakmore was not present at the time Lea Bleakmore purchased said fertilizer, and said Lea Bleakmore never disclosed to defendant Helen Bleakmore that the fertilizer was to be placed on Helen Bleakmore's pear orchard. That Ed Stewart, Helen Bleakmore's foreman, has full charge over her said pear orchard, and defendant Helen Bleakmore gave no instructions in regard to her pear orchard. That defendant Helen Bleakmore paid Ed Stewart and Robert Hudson for the hauling of said 14 tons of fertilizer from her barn and placing it around her pear trees in connection with other ranch work. That one ton of fertilizer was kept in defendant Helen Bleakmore's barn for one year, and then placed around the pear trees in her orchard by her foreman, Ed Stewart, and she paid Ed Stewart for placing the one ton of fertilizer around her pear trees in connection with other ranch work.

"VIII. The court finds that defendant Lea Bleakmore was not authorized at any time to purchase fertilizer from plaintiff for defendant Helen Bleakmore. That defendant Lea Bleakmore did not purchase said fertilizer as an agent for or on behalf of said defendant Helen Bleakmore. That defendant Helen Bleakmore did not purchase any fertilizer from plaintiff."

[1-3] By finding No. 8 all inquiry as to whether Lea Bleakmore was authorized at any time to purchase fertilizer for the use and benefit of the defendant Helen Bleak-more is foreclosed. The finding of the court is that he was not so authorized, and, the testimony not being brought up, the finding is conclusive upon this appeal. The finding is also to the effect that Helen Bleakmore did not purchase any fertilizer from the plaintiff. The plaintiff, however, relies upon section 2310 of the Civil Code, which reads:

> "A ratification can be made only in the manner that would have been necessary to confer an original authority for the act ratified, or where an oral authorization would suffice, by accepting or retaining the benefit of the act, with notice thereof."

It is upon the latter portion of said section that the appellant relies, to wit, "accepting or retaining the benefit of the act" of the defendant Lea Bleakmore. There is nothing in the record which indicates that the defendant Lea Bleakmore ever claimed or gave to any one the impression that he was acting for anybody but himself. There is nothing in the record which indicates, or tends to indicate, that the defendant Lea Bleakmore ever conveyed to the defendant Helen Bleakmore any knowledge or information concerning his purchase of the fertilizer in question. Likewise there is no finding, nor anything in the record, to indicate that Ed Stewart, the foreman of the defendant Helen Bleakmore, knew anything about how the fertilizer was purchased, or ever said anything to the defendant Helen Bleakmore about the same. It is argued that information to Ed Stewart, the foreman for Helen Bleakmore, constituted knowledge or information on the part of the defendant Helen Bleakmore, but there is nothing in the record, as we have said, showing any information or knowledge on the part of Ed Stewart. The fact that he hauled and distributed the fertilizer is all that appears in the transcript. Furthermore, there is nothing in the record indicating that the use of such fertilizer was or is in accordance with the usual and customary practice prevailing in that or in other localities relating to pear orchard culture, and therefore there is nothing in the record from which it could be implied or inferred that the foreman had authority to purchase and use such fertilizer arising from his position as general foreman in charge of the orchard. In order to raise the inference that the foreman, by reason of his employment, had general authority to purchase and use such fertilizer, and, therefore, that the defendant Helen Bleakmore should be charged for any act that her foreman might have taken in relation to the use of such fertilizer, irrespective of the knowledge as to its purchase, it must be shown that the use of such fertilizer was in accordance with the usual practice in pear culture, and that the giving of authority to the foreman to purchase and use the same was within the contemplation of the defendant Helen Bleakmore, in the employment of Ed Stewart as her foreman. As we have said, the record before us is silent as to all these matters. Again, there is an entire absence of any finding on the part of the court, or of any mention in the record, that the defendant Helen Bleakmore had any knowledge of either the purchase or of the use of the fertilizer in question, before rejection of the use of the fertilizer became impossible.

[4] As stated in 2 C. J. p. 496, § 116:

> "There is no ratification if, at the time it becomes known that the agent exceeded his authority, the principal has put it beyond his power to return or restore the benefits received, or if without his fault conditions are such that he cannot be placed in statu quo or repudiate the entire transaction without loss, or if the continued enjoyment of the benefits by the principal is unavoidable."

Again, as stated in said section, the rule of ratification by the acceptance of benefits implies the power of agents to accept or reject what has been received.

The finding by the court that the defendant Helen Bleakmore paid for the work of hauling and distributing the fertilizer in connection with other ranch work, if it be assumed therefrom that the defendant Helen Bleakmore then and at that time acquired information or knowledge of the purchase of the fertilizer, shows only the possibility of Helen Bleakmore having acquired such knowledge at a time when rejection of the transaction had become impossible, and therefore ratification could not be predicated upon any such assumed acquirement of knowledge. As stated in Puget Sound Lumber Co. v. Krug, 89 Cal. 237, 26 P. 902 (one of the cases relied upon by appellant):

> "In order to constitute a 'subsequent ratification' of the act by the principal, it seems there must be evidence of previous knowledge on the part of the principal of all the material facts (McClelland v. Whiteley [C. C.] 15 F. 322; 2 Greenl. 66); and it would seem that a ratification is only effectual when the act is done by a person professedly acting as the agent of the party sought to be charged as principal."

In so far as the defendant Lea Bleakmore is concerned, the finding is conclusive that he was not acting as the agent of the defendant Helen Bleakmore, but was acting upon his own individual responsibility. If the plaintiff is to prevail against the defendant Helen Bleakmore, the case must rest simply upon the act of her foreman in hauling and distributing the fertilizer, but, as we have shown, there must have been previous knowledge on her part prior to the time when rejection of the benefits on her part became impossible. The case of Duerr v. Sloan, 40 Cal. App. 653, 181 P. 407, cited by appellant to the effect that knowledge on the part of an agent is knowledge on the part of the principal, and the fact that an agent fails to communicate certain knowledge to his principal, cannot change the rule of law that the knowledge of the agent is imputed to the principal, does not relieve the omission in the findings in this case that the agent of the defendant Helen Bleakmore, if such her foreman, Ed Stewart, may be held, had no knowledge in relation to the purchase of the fertilizer. To carry home to the principal, there must be some showing that the agent of the principal had knowledge. Upon the record before us, we have simply the unauthorized act of the defendant Lea Bleakmore going to Los Angeles and ordering the fertilizer upon his own responsibility, without anything in the findings whatever to indicate that he was acting as agent for an undisclosed principal. Were there anything in the findings or in the judgment roll showing that the defendant Helen Bleakmore was residing upon the pear orchard during the time the fertilizer was being hauled and placed in the barn situate on the premises, and thereafter taken therefrom and distributed around the several trees in the orchard, then and in that case there would be acts and circumstances from which the court could very properly draw the conclusion that the defendant Helen Bleakmore was aware of all the facts, possessed full knowledge of the transaction, and ratified the same. All this, however, is wanting from the record. A portion of it is contained in appellant's brief, but the judgment roll, including the findings and the judgment, fails to support such contention. That one lives in the same county in which a pear orchard is situated furnishes no basis for holding that one lives on the premises where the pear orchard is situated. In the note appended to section 2310 of the Civil Code, in Kerr's Cyclopedic Codes, is found an unbroken line of authorities holding that knowledge of circumstances and acquiescence with character of unauthorized acts are essential to ratification. Likewise, it is held that means of knowledge, of which the principal has negligently deprived himself, makes him chargeable with knowledge of all provisions of contract entered into by his agent. But, as we have said, it is here that plaintiff has failed. There is no finding that Helen Bleakmore has ever ratified any of the acts referred to, and whether the testimony at the trial was such as to have warranted a finding of ratification is immaterial, as the findings do not support the contentions of the plaintiff, and we are bound by the findings. The general rule on the question of knowledge is stated in 2 C. J. 495, § 115:

> "The mere fact that the principal has received or enjoyed the benefits of the unauthorized act will not amount to a ratification of the agent's acts, if he did so in ignorance of the facts."

Conversely, as stated in section 114, same volume, page 493, if the principal, with full knowledge of all the facts, takes and accepts the benefits, he cannot avoid the burden; that is, he cannot accept the benefits without paying therefor. We may also cite 1 Cal. Jur. § 61 et seq., on the subject of agency dealing with ratification, which supports what we have herein stated on the subject of knowledge, benefits, and the prerequisites necessary to support a finding of ratification.

The authorities are likewise uniform that the mere fact of showing the relationship of husband and wife does not establish the relationship of principal and agent, even though it is also held that less evidence is required in such cases than is ordinarily required. Rauer's Law & Collection Co. v. Berthiaume, 21 Cal. App. 670, 132 P. 596, 833. That case also holds that the relationship of principal and agent between husband and wife may be established by circumstantial evidence, and so justify a finding to that effect. This, however, does not aid the appellant, as we have no testimony before us. That knowledge must be had by the principal in time to enable the principal to reject the transaction and escape liability is further held in the case of Lindow v. Cohn, 5 Cal. App. 388, 391, 90 P. 485.

Our attention is called to the case of Gay v. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co., 32 Ga. App. 720, 124 S. E. 364, as supporting the contention of the plaintiff, and as being a case involving the purchase and use of a shipment of fertilizer. In that case, however, it appears that the husband in purchasing the fertilizing material had it shipped to his wife, as consignee, and by the husband used upon the land belonging to his wife. Only the syllabus is found in that case. The report of the case itself includes only the words "judgment affirmed." There is no statement of the facts, but it would appear from what is said in the syllabus that the trial court held in that case that the facts established the husband as the agent of his wife, as undisclosed principal, and that the wife had full knowledge of all facts and circumstances from which the conclusion could be drawn that she had ratified either the act of her husband or that he was authorized to so act as her agent in the first instance. In order to justify the conclusion in that case, there must have appeared in the facts what this court, in the case of Hall v. E. W. Wells & Son, 24 Cal. App. 238, 141 P. 53, speaking through Mr. Justice Chipman, has said is essential:

> " 'The essence of either an election or ratification is that it was done advisedly with full knowledge of the party's rights' (King v. Lagrange, 50 Cal. 328); the party to be charged 'must have fully known what he was doing' (Brown v. Rouse, 104 Cal. 672 [38 P. 507]). We can discover no intention of defendant to ratify the contract relied upon, either in the correspondence or anything that took place between the parties."

This applies to the case at bar. We can discover nothing in the findings urged upon us by the appellant showing the requisite previous knowledge establishing either prior authorization or subsequent ratification. While the record shows that the defendant Lea Bleakmore had no pear orchard, there is nothing in the record indicating that he is not financially responsible, or was not financially responsible at the time of the purchase of the fertilizer in question, and amply able to purchase the same on his own responsibility. To raise a contrary inference, it must have been shown that he was wanting in such financial ability. The mere fact that he did not own a pear orchard was, and is, wholly insufficient.

The judgment and order of the trial court are hereby affirmed.

Randall, Bartlett & White and Thos. P. White, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CRAIG, J. The plaintiffs and respondents instituted an action in the superior court of Los Angeles county upon an alleged verbal contract of the defendant and appellant to pay the plaintiff John MacFadden a portion of the proceeds of sale for disposing of certain personal property, and of certain insurance premiums refunded. The transaction appears to have been wholly founded upon services claimed to have been rendered by John MacFadden for the defendant. We shall therefore designate him herein as the respondent.

The complaint alleged that the defendant employed the plaintiff John MacFadden to sell certain moving picture films, and to secure the return of certain unearned insurance premiums thereon, the property of the defendant, for which the latter agreed to pay him one-half of the proceeds of such sale, and of the preimums, which she might receive through such transaction. The defendant denied by answer the existence of any contract in the premises, and affirmatively alleged that, although the sale and collection mentioned were consummated, the services were performed by the plaintiffs as employees, for which they were paid wages, in the regular course of employment.

The respondent testified that he was appellant's cashier and bookkeeper at a salary of $75 per week, at the time he performed the services for which compensation was claimed; that appellant voluntarily agreed to allow him 50 per cent. of any amount for which he might be able to sell certain films, and of the unearned insurance premiums thereon if he could secure their refund; that the defendant departed for New York, leaving instructions that MacFadden be retained in his regular position as bookkeeper and cashier during her absence; that previously to her return he sold the films and collected the premiums, the proceeds of which aggregated $3,000, which he delivered to Miss Compson upon her arrival; that a few days thereafter he made demand for his share of the moneys, whereupon the defendant informed him that she had purchased a new automobile, had no funds left, and was unable to pay him, but that she later denied any knowledge of having agreed to compensate him for extra services, and refused to pay him therefor. One Grasso, the defendant's general manager, testified to various conversations between the plaintiff and defendant, and corroborated MacFadden's testimony as to the sale of the films and collection of the insurance premiums. This witness also admitted having seen the defendant receive two envelopes from the plaintiff, but averred that he did not see the money, although he heard Miss Compson mention that she would "fix it up." Mrs. MacFadden testified that she heard her husband state to the defendant over the telephone that he would perform the services for 50 per cent. of the amount to be realized from the films and insurance. The defendant testified that she was positive that she had never at any time promised to pay MacFadden for such services. She also denied all knowledge as to the entries in her books, and swore that she did not know where the books were at the time of the trial.

The case was tried before the superior court, without a jury, and judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiffs for the sum of $1,500. The trial court found that the defendant employed the plaintiff John MacFadden "for and during the times referred to in the complaint herein, under a weekly salary or wage," but that the services upon which the suit was based were not performed as an employee of the defendant, and that he had not been paid therefor. The defendant appeals from the judgment upon the alleged grounds that it is not supported by the evidence; that the testimony of the respondent was inherently improbable; and that, if there was any agreement such as alleged and found by the court below, it was without consideration.

[1-3] We must resolve all intendments in favor of the judgment, and where, as here, the evidence is directly contradictory, the decision of the trial court will not be disturbed. Teresi v. Cavala, 64 Cal. App. 148, 220 P. 686. We do not concur in the contention of the apellant that the respondent's testimony was inherently improbable, nor that the evidence was insufficient to justify the court in finding and rendering judgment for the plaintiffs.

[4, 5] Appellant cites authority to the effect that an employee will be presumed to have performed services within the scope of his regular employment, and that he may not recover extra compensation unless the additional services be such as the servant is under no obligation to perform. We think the mere statement of these propositions suggests the obvious answer that under the conditions evidenced by the facts presented the trial court may well have concluded that the sale of surplus stock was not a service contemplated by the employment of respondent as bookkeeper and cashier. We are cited to no authority, nor are we aware of any, which holds that a salaried employee may not be engaged in and compensated for the performance of services foreign to his regular employment. Again, the presumption above mentioned may be rebutted, and is overcome by evidence showing an express agreement inconsistent therewith.

[6] The only remaining point of sufficient importance to require attention consists of the contention that one of the findings is inconsistent and vague, in that it recites that the services alleged were not performed by the plaintiff as an employee, and that he had not been paid therefor. It seems plain that this was an express finding that the services sued upon were outside of those for which respondent received a weekly salary, and that he was entitled to the compensation demanded in his complaint.

No error appearing, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

NOLL v. BAIDA. (Civ. 4835.) ★

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. March 7, 1927. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court May 5, 1927.)

1. Contracts ⚷270(2)—Rescission for fraud depends on prompt action after knowledge of fraud, or of facts putting prudent man on inquiry (Civ. Code, § 1691).

Under Civ. Code, § 1691, right to rescind contract for fraud in its procurement depends primarily on promptness with which injured party acts in essentials of remedy after having obtained either actual knowledge of facts from which fraud will be inferred, or knowledge sufficient to put prudent man on inquiry.

2. Contracts ⚷270(2)—Rescinding party must have knowledge of fraud or means of obtaining knowledge to be required to take appropriate action (Civ. Code, § 19).

Under Civ. Code, § 19, party desiring to rescind contract for fraud to be required to take appropriate action must have either personal knowledge of facts constituting fraud, or have ready means of obtaining such facts.

★Superseded by opinion of Supreme Court, 259 P. 433.

3. Sales 🔑126(2)—Buyer, consulting expert, who confirmed misgivings as to quality of rugs purchased, had actual notice of facts putting prudent man on inquiry of seller's fraud.

Where buyer of rugs consulted rug expert, who confirmed his misgivings from seeing color fading; that rugs were not as seller had represented them to be, buyer had actual notice of circumstances sufficient to put prudent man on inquiry as to whether he had been defrauded.

4. Sales 🔑126(1)—Buyer's delay of 7 months after being put on inquiry concerning seller's fraud in sale of rugs barred suit for rescission.

Delay of 7 months after discovery of facts putting buyer on inquiry as to seller's fraudulent representations in sale of rugs before action for rescission was commenced, barred right to rescind.

5. Contracts 🔑352(6)—Conclusion of promptness in rescinding contract for fraud may be one of law or fact, or of both law and fact.

Conclusion of promptness in taking action to rescind contract, after discovery of fraud, may be either one of law or of fact, or of both law and fact.

6. Appeal and error 🔑842(7)—Question of promptness in rescinding contract for fraud is for trial court if facts are conflicting, but, if not conflicting, question is one of law, reviewable on appeal.

If facts are in dispute respecting question whether prompt action was taken to rescind contract for fraud, decision on which conclusion of promptness depends is matter resting exclusively with trial court; but, if facts are not controverted or are stipulated by parties, conclusion as to whether they constitute promptness is purely one of law, which, if made by trial court, cannot be binding on appellate tribunal.

7. Contracts 🔑350(3)—Trial 🔑404(2)—Finding that contract was promptly rescinded after discovery of fraud held mere conclusion of law, or, if one of fact, unsupported by evidence.

Finding by trial court that plaintiff rescinded contract promptly on discovery of falsity of representations was conclusion of law, rather than determination of ultimate fact, but, even if considered as finding of fact, was not supported by evidence showing 7 months' delay in filing suit after discovery of facts constituting fraud.

8. Evidence 🔑97—Person seeking to enforce statutory right or remedy has burden of showing compliance with statute.

In enforcing either right or remedy provided by statute, person seeking relief should have burden of showing that he has complied with statute.

9. Contracts 🔑270(2)—Prompt action after discovering facts is condition precedent to right to rescission (Civ. Code, § 1691).

Under Civ. Code, § 1691, promptness by plaintiff in taking action to rescind contract after discovery of facts authorizing rescission is condition precedent to right to maintain action.

10. Cancellation of instruments 🔑45—Plaintiff, seeking rescission, has burden of proving prompt action after discovering facts entitling him to rescission (Civ. Code, § 1691).

Plaintiff, suing to rescind contract for fraud, has burden of establishing fact that he complied with Civ. Code, § 1691, requiring prompt action after discovery of facts entitling him to rescind.

11. Pleading 🔑48, 374—Every allegation necessary to maintenance of action must be pleaded and proved by plaintiff.

Plaintiff must plead and prove respectively every allegation necessary to maintenance of his action.

12. Cancellation of instruments 🔑43—Prompt action after discovery of facts entitling plaintiff to rescind contract must be pleaded and proved by plaintiff (Civ. Code, § 1691).

Under Civ. Code, § 1691, plaintiff, seeking to rescind contract for fraud, must plead and prove promptness in taking action after discovery of facts entitling him to rescind.

13. Contracts 🔑270(2)—Defendant, in action to rescind contract, is not affected by statute requiring plaintiff to act promptly after discovery of facts entitling him to rescission (Civ. Code, § 1691).

Civ. Code, § 1691, requiring plaintiff, seeking rescission of contract, to bring action promptly after discovery of facts entitling him to rescission, does not affect defendant in action.

14. Appeal and error 🔑842(7)—Appellate court had authority to pass on question of promptness in bringing action to rescind contract for fraud, where facts thereon were not in dispute.

Where no controversy existed as to fact whether plaintiff rescinded contract promptly after discovering facts entitling him to rescind, appellate court had authority to pass on question as to what constitutes promptness, and whether finding thereon is supported by evidence.

Action by G. E. Noll against Nich. G. Baida. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

HOUSER, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in a suit for rescission of a sale of certain Oriental rugs, whereby defendant was ordered to take back the rugs sold by him to plaintiff and to repay to plaintiff the purchase price thereof.

From the evidence it appears that some 5 or 6 months after the rugs were purchased by plaintiff he began to suspect the truth of certain material representations which had been made to him by defendant in inducing the sale and upon which representations plaintiff had implicitly relied. Thereupon he obtained the advice of an expert on Oriental rugs and was by him informed in effect that the suspicions entertained by plaintiff were well founded and that the representations made to him by defendant were false and untrue; which fact plaintiff immediately reported to defendant and requested of him that he take back the rugs and return to plaintiff the consideration paid by him to defendant therefor. After considerable conversation between the parties, plaintiff concluded that, at least temporarily, he would let matters stand as they were. Plaintiff's testimony on the subject of such conversation was that—

> "A. I told him that this large rug had faded, was fading, and he assured me it wasn't, and I told him that it was getting lighter all the time. He told me that wasn't fading; it was, I think he said it was dirty, or something like that, I don't just—but he tried to assure me that it was not fading. I told him that I was dissatisfied with the rugs on account of that reason; I wasn't going to do any more business with him. He told me at that time, he says, rather than have you dissatisfied, we will do what I said and take the rugs back and give you your money back. I said I wished him to do that, particularly with some of them, and then he cajoled me along until he got me believing he was honest about it. I says: 'I am going to find out about this; I will let it go, but if I find they are wrong, then, I will call on you again, for I believe that I am right about the rugs fading."

So far as may be ascertained, that conversation took place about 7 months before plaintiff commenced the present action. Following such conversation, and up to the date of the trial of the action, plaintiff used the rugs in his home in the same manner as he had done before the conversation occurred. After the expiration of 7 months from the date of the first examination of the rugs, plaintiff had the rugs re-examined by a second rug expert, who also assured plaintiff that he had been deceived and defrauded by defendant in the sale of the rugs. Thereupon plaintiff served on defendant a notice of rescission of the sale and again demanded the return of the purchase price, which being refused, plaintiff commenced the action which resulted in his favor as hereinbefore set forth.

For the purposes of this decision only, it may be assumed that the evidence satisfactorily established the fraud committed by defendant on plaintiff—leaving for the consideration of this court the main contention made by appellant that through the delay of plaintiff in the commencement of the suit he was precluded from obtaining any equitable relief.

[1] The right to rescind a contract for fraud in its procurement depends primarily upon the promptness with which the injured party acts in the essentials of the remedy after having obtained either actual knowledge of the facts from which the fraud will be inferred, or knowledge of facts and circumstances sufficient to put a prudent man on inquiry with reference thereto. Section 1691 of the Civil Code, among other things, provides as follows:

> "Rescission, when not effected by consent, can be accomplished only by the use, on the part of the party rescinding, of reasonable diligence to comply with the following rules: (1) He must rescind promptly, upon discovering the facts which entitle him to rescind. * * *"

Under the provisions of section 19 of the Civil Code:

> "Every person who has had actual notice of circumstances sufficient to put a prudent man upon inquiry as to a particular fact, has constructive notice of the fact itself in all cases in which, by prosecuting such inquiry, he might have learned such fact."

[2] It is therefore apparent that the foundational prerequisite of the law requiring that appropriate action be taken on the part of the party to the contract desiring to rescind it is that he have either personal knowledge of the facts constituting the fraud that has been practiced upon him, or that he have the ready means of obtaining such facts.

[3] With reference to the fraud of defendant, the evidence herein shows that after the suspicions of plaintiff had been aroused he consulted a rug expert, who confirmed plaintiff in his misgivings that the rugs were not as defendant had represented them to be. It is therefore manifest that from his own knowledge of facts with reference to the fading of the color of the rugs to which plaintiff gave testimony, together with the assurance by a man fully qualified in the business, plaintiff had "actual notice of circumstances sufficient to put a prudent man upon inquiry" as to whether he had been defrauded. The time of acquiring such constructive knowledge of the actual facts relating to the quality and manufacture of the rugs was at least 7 months before suit was commenced for the rescission of the contract. The first question, then, is as to whether the suit was commenced with sufficient promptness after discovery of the facts constituting the fraud in order that the requirement of the law in that regard be satisfied.

[4] Authorities in this state are not lacking to the effect that too great a time elapsed between the date of the constructive discovery of the facts constituting the fraud and the time when the suit for rescission was commenced. Without narrating the details of the several cases, it may suffice to state that in Bailey v. Fox, 78 Cal. 389, 20 P. 868, a delay of 4 months was held too great; in Marten v. Burns Wine Co., 99 Cal. 355, 33 P. 1107, 3 months' delay was held too long; in Gamble v.

Tripp, 99 Cal. 223, 33 P. 851, in the absence of some excuse therefor, 4½ months' delay was held fatal. In the case of Schneider v. Henley, 61 Cal. App. 758, 215 P. 1036, the delay was for a period of about 6 months; held too long. In the course of the opinion, it is said:

> "From an examination of authorities, it would appear that 30 days is about the utmost length of time which the courts are disposed to allow to the purchaser for rescission unless there are unusual circumstances in the case excusing longer delay."

See, also, Delano v. Jacoby, 96 Cal. 275, 282, 31 P. 290, 31 Am. St. Rep. 201.

In connection with the issue of promptness, the trial court found:

> "That promptly on the discovery of the falsity of said representations which, as aforesaid, had induced plaintiff to make the purchase of said eight Oriental rugs, plaintiff rescinded said contract of purchase of the said eight rugs. * * *"

It is contended by respondent that such a finding is conclusive on the point, and in support thereof he has cited French v. Freeman, 191 Cal. 579, 589, 217 P. 515, 519, where it is stated by the court that—

> "Whether or not the defrauded party has rescinded 'promptly' will depend upon all the circumstances of the particular case, and is, of course, a question primarily for the trial court."

The Supreme Court, however, thereupon proceeds to discuss the evidence relating to the promptness with which the plaintiff in that case acted on discovery of the alleged fraud, and from such evidence concludes that the trial court was justified in holding that the plaintiff offered to rescind within a reasonable time after the discovery of the facts which entitled him to rescind; from which circumstances it may be inferred that the Supreme Court did not consider itself concluded by the decision reached by the trial court with reference to the matter.

[5, 6] It is clear that the conclusion of promptness may be either one of law or of fact, or of both law and fact. If the facts respecting the determination of whether promptness has been exercised are in dispute—that is to say, that the evidence relating thereto is conflicting—without doubt the decision as to the truth upon which the conclusion of promptness depends is a matter which rests exclusively with the trial court. But if it appear that the facts are not controverted, or that they are covered by stipulation of the parties to the action, under such circumstances the conclusion as to whether they constitute promptness is purely one of law, which, if made by the trial court, cannot be binding upon the appellate tribunal. That such is the case, or at least that the question has been so considered, is made manifest by the numerous decisions (to some of which attention has been directed herein) which hold that the several delays respectively in those cases did not constitute promptness within the law relating thereto. Were the question of promptness always one for the conclusion of the jury or the trial court, it would be difficult, if not impossible, to ever obtain a ruling in an appellate court as to whether promptness had been exercised in any case. In the instant case no controversy exists as to the facts having to do with the determination of whether plaintiff rescinded the contract promptly upon discovering the facts which entitled him to rescind. His own testimony was:

> That it occurred "probably in January. * * * I am not even sure that it wasn't the last part of 1921. It was during the winter, during the winter. * * * It might be February; I wouldn't say that it was either one of those two months.
> "Q. Not later than February, 1922? A. I don't think so, but it might have been March, but I don't think so; I think Mr. Baida could tell you just when it was, because it was at the time when he was negotiating an exchange for a rug that time, and he might know when it is."

[7] And Mr. Baida, who, plaintiff said, could tell "just when it was," fixed the time as not later than the month of November preceding the date about which plaintiff was so uncertain and which date, thus determined, was at least 7 months before the suit was commenced. The trial court found no facts upon which to base its conclusion, its determination being merely, as hereinbefore stated:

> "That promptly on the discovery of the falsity of such representations, * * * plaintiff rescinded said contract. * * *"

In the premises, such finding was more in the nature of a conclusion of law, rather than a determination of an ultimate fact. But even if it may be considered as a finding of fact, in view of the state of the record herein, it may be subjected to the criticism that it is not supported by the evidence.

[8, 9] It is clear that in enforcing either a right or a remedy provided by statute the person seeking such relief should have the burden of showing that he has complied with the terms of such statute. One of the statutory requirements which must be met by one who seeks the rescission of a contract is that he act "promptly upon discovering the facts which entitled him to rescind." Section 1691, Civ. Code. In other words, after a discovery of the facts, promptness on the part of the plaintiff in bringing his action is a condition precedent to his right to maintain it.

[10] The authorities construing the statute are numerous. On the point that the burden is on the plaintiff to establish the fact that he has complied with the terms of the statute, rather than that proof of his failure to do so rests with the defendant, the following authorities appear to be pertinent:

In the case of Bancroft v. Bancroft, 110

Cal. 374, 42 P. 896, the plaintiff sought damages for fraud arising through the undue influence of the defendant in inducing the plaintiff to enter into a certain contract for the sale of stock in a corporation. A demurrer to the complaint in the action was sustained, and, the plaintiff having declined to amend the complaint, judgment was rendered for the defendant and the plaintiff appealed therefrom. It appears that the complaint was filed 19 months after the alleged cause of action accrued. No offer to rescind was ever made by the plaintiff. In affirming the judgment, among other things, the court said:

> "But, in addition to this negative [other] authority, it is clear upon principle that this present action should not be maintained, because to maintain it would be to violate the wholesome and fundamental doctrine that in such a case the party claiming to be aggrieved must promptly rescind, or offer to rescind, so as to put the other party in statu quo. * * *"

Chief Justice Beatty, in a concurring opinion, said, in part:

> "He [the plaintiff] had the choice to affirm it or to rescind it, and it appears that he affirmed it by failing to rescind promptly when freed from the undue influence by which his consent was obtained."

The case of McDougall v. Roberts, 43 Cal. App. 553, 185 P. 483, was one for rescission on the ground that undue influence had been exercised by the defendant in inducing the plaintiff to enter into a contract. The trial court sustained a demurrer and denied plaintiff leave to amend the complaint. The defendant had judgment and the plaintiff appealed. An opinion written by the judge of the superior court (later Chief Justice of the Supreme Court) was adopted by the Court of Appeal as its opinion on the appeal. Having to do with the question of promptness of the plaintiff in rescinding the transaction, the following language appears therein:

> "Prompt rescission and offer of restitution are essential to a recovery on the ground of undue influence. Neither is alleged in the complaint, and hence the complaint fails to state a cause of action for undue influence. * * *"

In the case of Brown v. Domestic Utilities Mfg. Co., 172 Cal. 733, 737, 159 P. 163, 164, the court quotes with approval from McGue v. Rommel, 148 Cal. 539, 547, 83 P. 1000, 1003, where it is said:

> "While it is true that, where a rescission in pais under section 1691 is relied on, the party rescinding need not show that he has restored that which is worthless, yet he must always show that he has complied with the requirement to rescind promptly, and this implies some notice to the other party of such determination to extinguish the contract"—citing cases.

[11-13] It is a cardinal rule of both pleading and trial that the plaintiff is obliged to plead and prove respectively every allegation necessary to the maintenance of his action. By judicial construction of the statute the element of promptness on the part of the plaintiff is made an essential, not only in the matter of allegation of the complaint, but, as inevitably flowing therefrom, in the evidence adduced by the plaintiff in support of such allegation. Before he has a right to maintain an action for rescission of a contract or ultimately to succeed therein, it must at least affirmatively appear that he has acted with that promptness which is demanded by the statute. No express duty is incumbent upon the defendant in the action in connection with such requirement on the part of the plaintiff. So far as the statutory requirement is concerned, the defendant has no more immediate concern with the proper averment of the plaintiff regarding promptness upon the discovery of the facts than he has with any other essential allegation contained therein. He may either admit it or deny it; and, if he deny it, the burden necessarily devolves upon the plaintiff to prove it.

In the instant case, that plaintiff assumed the burden thus cast upon him is made manifest in his pleading, to wit:

> "That promptly on the discovery of the falsity of said representations which, as aforesaid, had induced plaintiff to make the purchase of said eight Oriental rugs, plaintiff rescinded said contract of purchase of the said eight rugs and notified the defendant that plaintiff had rescinded the same. * * *"

And that defendant recognized the true position of the plaintiff in the matter is shown by his allegation in the answer in which he denied "that plantiff, promptly or otherwise, on the alleged discovery of the alleged falsity of said alleged representations, rescinded said contract. * * *"

The issue of "promptness" on the part of plaintiff was thus clearly drawn, and the finding (or conclusion of law) by the trial court thereon, as hereinbefore set forth, was in the exact language of plaintiff's allegation with reference thereto.

[14] Based upon the decisions of the courts of this state, to which reference has been had, we conclude that it is competent and proper that this court pass upon the question of what constitutes "promptness," and whether the finding thereon is supported by the evidence. From what has heretofore appeared herein it is apparent that the proof failed: that the finding in effect that plaintiff had rescinded promptly on discovering the facts was not supported by the evidence; and that no sufficient excuse was shown for the delay in bringing the action.

Several other questions of importance are presented in the briefs filed herein by respective counsel for the appellant or respondent; but, as the question which has been discussed herein is determinative of the rights of the parties to the litigation, it becomes unnecessary to devote further attention to the appeal.

It is the order of this court that the judgment be and it is reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

81 Cal. App. 648

PEOPLE v. BEALEY. (Cr. 1412.)

1. Lewdness ⟹7—Evidence that defendant lived in adultery held for jury (Pen. Code, § 269a).

Evidence that defendant and woman were found in a living room attached to a private garage, that they had lived there three weeks and were often seen together, and that defendant admitted intercourse, held for jury on question whether defendant was living and cohabiting with woman in violation of Pen. Code, § 269a.

2. Lewdness ⟹1—"Living in state of cohabitation and adultery" means dwelling together and exercising rights and duties pertaining to marriage relation (Pen. Code, § 269a).

As used in Pen. Code, § 269a, "living in a state of cohabitation and adultery" means the living and dwelling together as husband and wife and exercising the sexual rights and duties implied by such relation when legally created; in other words, a counterfeit of the marriage relation.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Living in State of Cohabitation and Adultery.]

3. Criminal law ⟹1168(4)—In adultery case, refusal to strike out witness' conclusion as to where defendant lived was harmless error under facts.

Refusing to strike out witness' conclusion, in adultery case, that defendant lived "part of time in a house 200 feet away and rest of time in garage 50 feet away" from wife's residence, was harmless error under evidence of facts leading to the conclusion.

4. Lewdness ⟹7—In adultery case, testimony respecting silhouettes seen by witness who knew defendant held admissible without positive identification.

In adultery case, refusal to strike out testimony of witness who knew defendant that he saw silhouettes of persons similar to defendant and woman was not error; the question whether silhouettes were of defendant and woman being for the jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Charles L. Allison, Judge.

C. R. Bealey was convicted of living in a state of cohabitation and adultery in violation of Pen. Code, § 269a, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Arthur C. Webb, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank Richards, Dep. Atty. Gen., for the People.

HOUSER, J. Under the provisions of section 269a of the Penal Code, a jury found defendant guilty of the offense of living in "a state of cohabitation and adultery" with a woman who was not the wife of defendant. From the judgment and the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, defendant appeals to this court.

While the evidence was somewhat conflicting, the jury was authorized to conclude therefrom that the following facts were established: That about a "quarter to 11" o'clock on the night of March 23, 1926, under authority of a search warrant for intoxicating liquor, two deputy sheriffs went to a private garage, which, in addition to housing an automobile, had a living room attached thereto and in which defendant and the woman in question were at least temporarily sojourning; that on arriving at the garage one of the deputy sheriffs several times demanded of defendant admittance into the room at that time occupied by defendant and the woman, to which demand the defendant responded, "What is your hurry; wait a minute; give me some time," all of which was repeated by defendant several times; that after waiting two or three minutes the deputy sheriff kicked in the door, and upon entering the room, which contained a bed, a dresser, an oil stove, a few dishes, and a lot of men's and women's clothing, he found defendant standing beside the bed putting on his coat and vest, and the woman was in the bed, with the bed covering and pillow next to the wall in a disordered condition, while the bed covering over the woman was pulled over her very smoothly; that defendant and the woman had been living in the garage for more than three weeks; that during such time it was the custom of defendant to leave the garage in the morning between 7 and 7:30 o'clock, return about noon, leave again about 1 o'clock p. m., and again return at about 5 o'clock in the afternoon; following which defendant and the woman would dress and go out together, and thereafter return to the garage at about 8:30 or 9 o'clock p. m., after which the lights in the garage would be extinguished; that on several occasions both defendant and the woman were seen in the garage dressing and undressing, and particularly that defendant was seen therein putting on his nightshirt, and that defendant had admitted that he had had sexual intercourse with the woman.

The principal contention of appellant is that the evidence was insufficient to support the judgment.

Section 269a of the Penal Code provides, in part, that—

> "Every person who lives in a state of cohabitation and adultery is guilty of a misdemeanor. * * *"

[1] It is therefore necessary to determine whether the evidence to which reference heretofore has been had was sufficient to support the charge that defendant did willfully and unlawfully live and cohabit with the woman whose name is specified in the information.

[2] In the case of People v. Breeding, 19 Cal. App. 359, 362, 126 P. 179, 181, it is said:

> "As used in the statute, the words 'living in a state of cohabitation and adultery,' mean the living or dwelling together as husband and wife and exercising the sexual rights and duties implied by such relation when legally created—in other words, a counterfeit of the marriage relation. Hence, to justify the conviction of defendants it should appear from the evidence that there existed between them an adulterous cohabitation. * * *"

See, also, to the same effect, People v. King, 26 Cal. App. 94, 95, 146 P. 51.

In the case of People v. Scarpa, 32 Cal. App. 453, 163 P. 882, 883, a judgment of conviction was upheld by the District Court of Appeal and a petition for rehearing in the Supreme Court denied on facts which possibly were less convincing than those presented by the evidence in the instant case. In the Scarpa Case it appeared that each of the guilty parties was married, and that during all the time in question Scarpa was actually living with his wife, and the woman with whom he sustained the adulterous relation was also living with her husband; that Scarpa and the woman were "often seen riding or driving together, and on several occasions were observed in attitudes and actions which were strongly suggestive of an undue and illicit intimacy"; that on a number of occasions the defendant took the woman to his home during his wife's absence and there remained with the woman overnight; that on one of such occasions, in the morning the woman went to a butcher shop and bought meat for breakfast, having it charged to the defendant; that on one occasion the defendant boasted to a friend that he "had a chicken up at his ranch"; that finally the defendant and the woman visited a nearby city, called at several stores and eating places, walked arm in arm down the street, and thereafter went to a hotel where the defendant registered himself and his companion as "J. Jones and wife, Mountain View," and secured a single room, which the pair occupied together for about three days, at the end of which time their apartment was entered by detectives, who found them in a state of undress and apparently occupying the same bed. Concerning the sufficiency of the evidence in the Scarpa Case, the court, in part, said:

> "We are of the opinion that section 269b of the Penal Code, as amended in 1911, was intended by the legislature working its amendment through the elimination from the former section of the words 'open and notorious,' to have application to those persons who, while each was simulating continence in their marital relations, were at the same time maintaining such a course of illicit and adulterous conduct with another of the opposite sex as would constitute a counterfeit of the marriage relation. We think that such a state of cohabitation and adultery would not only be possible, but that the evidence in the case before us was amply sufficient to have justified the jury in finding that such a condition existed between the defendant and the woman in the case * * * and we think that * * * such a continuous course of illicit conduct had existed as would amount to their living together in a state of cohabitation and adultery, and as thus sufficing to satisfy the terms of the Penal Code rendering such conduct criminal."

From the law as announced in the foregoing authorities, and considering that the jury had a right to assume that the facts in the instant case were as hereinbefore have been set forth, it is clear that the verdict was fully justified and that it was supported by the evidence.

[3] Appellant also specifies error in that the trial court denied defendant's motion to strike out as a conclusion the answer of a witness in substance that defendant "lived a part of the time in a house 200 feet away, and the rest of the time in a garage 50 feet away" from the house in which the wife of defendant resided. While in a sense the answer was a conclusion, not only did the particular witness testify to facts from which such conclusion would follow, but several other witnesses did likewise. It is therefore apparent that no harm resulted to defendant by reason of the ruling to which exception was taken.

[4] Appellant urges additional error committed by the trial court in denying defendant's motion to strike out a portion of the testimony of another witness relating to what he saw through a window of the garage. The alleged objectionable testimony, in effect, was that at night the witness could see silhouettes of persons very similar to defendant and the woman "dressing and undressing, combing their hair and washing, whatever they were doing, cooking." The basis of the motion made by defendant was that the persons whose silhouettes were seen by the witness were not identified as the defendant and the woman in question. While the identification was not absolute in that the witness stated, in effect, that he could not determine from what he saw through the window "whether or not it was the defendant," the witness did testify "that they were very similar to the two persons themselves"; that he had known the defendant for about four years, knew that he was living in the garage, which was located about 100 feet from the home of the witness; that before the time the witness saw the silhouettes he "had seen Mr. Bealey and the woman go to the garage and not come out"; and that he had thus observed the defendant through the window "practically every night; * * * that he (defendant) was there during the month of March or previous * * * several nights."

It thus becomes manifest that the question of whether defendant and the woman were the persons whose silhouettes were seen by the witness was a proper one for the consideration of the jury, and that no error was committed by the trial court in refusing to strike out the testimony to which exception was taken.

No prejudicial error appearing in the record, it is ordered that the judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial be and they are affirmed.

81 Cal. App. 506

PEOPLE v. O'CONNOR et al. (Cr. 952.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 28, 1927.)

1. Criminal law 🔑620(2)—Court cannot order joint trials of defendants, not jointly charged by information or indictments (Pen. Code, §§ 954, 1098).

Court has no power to order joint or simultaneous trials of defendants, not jointly charged by informations or indictments, either under Pen. Code, § 954, or section 1098.

2. Criminal law 🔑619—Indictments cannot be consolidated when against different defendants; "consolidation of indictments;" "joint trials."

Indictments cannot be consolidated when against different defendants, though offense was joint and they might have been jointly indicted; though after proper consolidation there is but one complaint, information, or indictment, as distinguished from "joint trials," where identity of each case is maintained.

3. Criminal law 🔑622(½)—In determining rights of parties to separate trials, court can look no further than language of informations.

In determining rights of parties to separate trials and correlative rights which pertain thereto, trial court can look no further than language of informations.

4. Criminal law 🔑1186(4)—In joint trial of defendants not jointly charged, refusal to allow each as many peremptory challenges as he would have had if tried alone held prejudicial error (Const. art. 6, § 4½); "substitution of procedure;" "mistake in procedure."

In joint trial of defendants not jointly charged, refusal to allow each as many peremptory challenges as he would have had if tried alone was denial of right of trial by jury and prejudicial error, under Const. art. 6, § 4½, since it was "substitution of procedure," rather than "mistake in procedure."

5. Criminal law 🔑1186(4)—It is reversible error for court to disregard usual procedure and adopt new and entirely different manner from that recognized by law (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Under Const. art. 6, § 4½, providing that no judgment shall be set aside for error as to matter of procedure, in absence of miscarriage of justice, court cannot disregard usual procedure and adopt new and entirely different manner from that recognized by law.

6. Criminal law 🔑422(1)—Information against codefendant, his plea of guilty, sentence, and statements to officers in defendant's absence held inadmissible.

Where two persons were jointly indicted and one pleaded guilty, no testimony as to information against him, his plea, sentence, or statements to officers in codefendant's absence is admissible against codefendant.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yolo County; W. A. Anderson, Judge.

James O'Connor and others were convicted of burglary and robbery, and they appeal. Reversed, and new trials ordered.

J. H. Laugenour, J. G. Bruton, Neal Chalmers, Percy Napton and A. C. Huston, Jr., all of Woodland, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PLUMMER, J. Appellants were convicted in the trial court and prosecute appeals from the orders denying new trials and from the judgments of conviction.

On the 24th day of March, 1926, an information was presented to the trial court and thereafter filed with the clerk thereof jointly charging the defendants Herbert Fitzgibbons and James O'Connor with two offenses, to wit, the crime of burglary alleged to have been committed by the said Herbert Fitzgibbons and James O'Connor on or about the 28th day of February, A. D. 1926, in that in the county of Yolo, in the state of California, said defendants did then and there feloniously, etc., enter a certain dwelling house owned and occupied by one W. A. Lillard; and, for a second offense in the second count, the said Herbert Fitzgibbons and James O'Connor were charged with having on the 28th day of February, 1926, in the county of Yolo, forcibly and feloniously taken from the possession and immediate presence of W. A. Lillard, Mrs. W. A. Lillard, and Tom Lillard certain personal property, to wit, jewelry, United States money, personal effects, firearms, and other personal property, then and there of the value of $100; that said taking was accomplished by said defendants by means of force, violence, intimidation, etc.

On the 5th day of April, 1926, the said James O'Connor and Herbert Fitzgibbons were arraigned, attorneys appointed to defend the respective defendants, and, upon being arraigned, the said defendants, respectively, pleaded "not guilty," and the court then set said case for trial for June 2, 1926, at 10 o'clock a. m.

Thereafter, and on the 20th day of April, 1926, an information was filed in the superior court of Yolo county against the defendants John Franks and Edward Brock, in which information said defendants were jointly charged first with the crime of burglary, in that the said John Franks and said Edward Brock did, on or about the 28th day of February, in said county of Yolo, unlawfully, feloniously, etc., enter a certain dwelling house of W. A. Lillard, with intent to commit the crime of larceny, and, in the second count in the same information, said John Franks and Edward Brock were accused by the district attorney of Yolo county of the crime of robbery, in that the said John Franks and Edward Brock, on or about the 28th day of February, A. D. 1926, in the county of Yolo, did then and there willfully, unlawfully, forcibly, etc., take from the possession and immediate presence of W. A. Lillard, Mrs. W. A. Lillard, and Tom Lillard certain personal property, to wit, jewelry, United States money, personal effects, firearms, and other personal property, then and there of the value of $100; that said taking was accomplished by means of force, violence, and intimidation.

On the 26th day of April, 1926, the said defendants John Frank and Edward Brock were arraigned upon the information jointly charging them with the offenses herein named, and, upon being arraigned, the defendant John Franks pleaded guilty and the defendant Edward Brock pleaded not guilty. The court thereupon set the trial of the defendant Edward Brock for June 2, 1926, at 10 o'clock a. m., "to be tried jointly with the defendants O'Connor and Fitzgibbons."

Upon the 2d day of June, 1926, Herbert Fitzgibbons and James O'Connor, jointly charged, as aforesaid, appeared with their counsel and objected to the trial of said defendants with the defendant Edward Brock, jointly charged with the defendant John Franks. The defendant Edward Brock, jointly charged with John Franks, likewise objected to being tried jointly, or at the same time with the defendants James O'Connor and Herbert Fitzgibbons, jointly charged in the first information herein referred to. The court overruled the objections of the respective defendants, and also denied the motions of each one of said defendants for separate trials. The defendants were each, respectively, found guilty of burglary, and also of robbery, and, following their convictions they entered motions in arrest of judgment and motions for new trials, all of which were denied. From these orders and the judgments of conviction, appeals are prosecuted.

[1] The record shows that the two informations referred to, to wit, the one jointly charging O'Connor and Fitzgibbons and the one jointly charging Franks and Brock, were read to the jury, and separate verdicts as to each one of the defendants submitted to and found by the jury, and separate judgments entered against each one of the defendants. Whether the trial court has power to order joint or simultaneous trials of defendants not jointly charged by informations or indictments is the vital question involved in this appeal.

On the part of the people it is urged that section 954 of the Penal Code, while not expressly permitting such a course, is sufficiently broad and comprehensive in its terms to justify the trial court in directing a joint, or from what appears in this case to be a simultaneous, trial of defendants charged in different informations or indictments. On the part of the appellants it is argued that section 954, supra, authorizes no such procedure. It is further contended by the appellants that section 1098 of the Penal Code is the only provision of the Code referring to the trial of defendants jointly charged, and that defendants not jointly charged cannot be jointly or simultaneously tried against their objections.

Section 954 of the Penal Code referred to reads as follows:

> "The indictment or information may charge two or more different offenses connected together in their commission, or different statements of the same offense, or two or more different offenses of the same class of crimes or offenses, under separate counts, and if two or more indictments or informations are filed in such cases the court may order them to be consolidated. The prosecution is not required to elect between the different offenses or counts set forth in the indictment or information, but the defendant may be convicted of any number of the offenses charged, and each offense upon which the defendant is convicted must be stated in the verdict; provided, that the court, in the interest of justice and for good cause shown, may, in its discretion, order that the different offenses or counts set forth in the indictment or information be tried separately, or divided into two or more groups and each of said groups tried separately."

In the construction of this section, section 7 of the same Code, wherein it specifies that the singular number includes the plural, must be read in connection therewith, in so far as the word "defendant" is used, i. e., the word "defendant" in section 954 includes the plural "defendants," as well as the singular number "defendant," and therefore relates to informations or indictments, which charge one or more persons with the commission of certain offenses. Thus, in the case at bar, take the information wherein the defendants O'Connor and Fitzgibbons are jointly charged with the crime of burglary and the crime of robbery. If separate informations had been filed against said defendants charging them jointly in one information with burglary and in a second information charging them jointly with robbery, the section of the Code referred to authorizes the court to consolidate such informations and thereafter try said informations as one information containing two counts. There is nothing in the language of the section of the Code, unless we read into it an intendment of the Legislature, which authorizes the consolidation of separate informations against separate and distinct defendants. The only section of the Penal Code relating to joint trials is section 1098, which reads as follows:

> "When two or more defendants are jointly charged with any public offense, whether felony or misdemeanor, they must be tried jointly, unless the court order separate trials. In ordering separate trials, the court in its discretion may order a separate trial as to one or more defendants, and a joint trial as to the others, or may order any number of the defendants to be tried at one trial, and any number of the others at different trials, or may order a separate trial for each defendant. If the defendants are tried jointly, the state and the defendants shall be entitled to the number of challenges prescribed by section one thousand seventy of this Code, which challenges on the part of the defendants must be exercised jointly. Each defendant shall also be entitled to five additional challenges which may be exercised separately; the state shall also be entitled to additional challenges equal to one-half the number of all the additional separate challenges allowed the defendants, any fraction to be regarded as an additional challenge."

This section is by its express terms restricted to the joint trial of the defendants jointly charged. It contains no reference whatever to the joint trial or trials of defendants separately charged. Under the terms of section 1098, supra, where defendants are jointly charged and jointly tried, the defendants named in the informations or indictments are entitled first to ten challenges, if the offense is other than that which necessarily carries a sentence of death or life imprisonment, which must be exercised jointly, and, in addition thereto, each defendant is entitled to five challenges to be exercised separately. In support of the theory that the section referred to authorizes joint trials of defendants separately informed against or indicted, our attention is called to the cases of Turner v. United States (C. C. A.) 66 F. 280; Dolan et al. v. United States (C. C. A.) 133 F. 440; Pointer v. United States, 151 U. S. 396, 14 S. Ct. 410, 38 L. Ed. 208; Bennett v. United States, Fed. Case No. 14572; Williams v. United States, 168 U. S. 382, 18 S. Ct. 92, 42 L. Ed. 509. In the case of Turner v. United States, supra, it was held that two indictments may be consolidated under the terms of U. S. Revised Statutes, § 1024 (U. S. Comp. St. § 1690), but an examination of the facts in that case shows that the two indictments were both against the same defendants, and the indictments, being consolidated, were treated as one indictment with four counts against the defendants, who were jointly indicted in both the indictments. In Dolan et al. v. United States, supra, it was again held that section 1024, U. S. Revised Statutes, which authorizes the joinder in one indictment of charges and the consolidation of indictments against the same person for the same act or transaction, or for two or more acts or transactions connected together, or of the same class of crimes or offenses "which may be properly joined," permitted the consolidation of the offenses charged in that case. Here again, however, the indictments were all against the same defendants and were not separate indictments against separate and distinct defendants. In Pointer v. United States, 151 U. S. 396, 14 S. Ct. 410, 38 L. Ed. 208, only one defendant was involved, and he was charged with two murders committed at the same time and by the same means. In the case of Bennett v. United States, Fed. Case No. 14572, supra, the indictment contained separate counts against one person, and it was held that the charges set forth in separate counts were proper to be included in one indictment. In Williams v. United States, 168 U. S. 382, 18 S. Ct. 92, 42 L. Ed. 509, the two indictments involved in that case were against the same defendants, and it was held that the district court committed no error in ordering their consolidation. It is there, however, pointed out that the case under consideration differs from those wherein the indictments are against different persons. In Betts v. United States (C. C. A.) 132 F. 228, we have a case very similar to the one at bar. There it was ordered that the several indictments should be tried together, and upon each indictment separate verdicts were returned. This was held error. The court refers to the section relative to the consolidation of indictments and says:

> "Plainly the indictments were not consolidated, because the record shows that there were separate verdicts and cumulative sentences, so that each proceeding retained its identity. The entire effect of the order was only that the various indictments were tried together by the same jury."

There was no order made in the case at bar for the consolidation of the informations. It was simply an order for the trial of the defendants jointly, which was, in effect, that they were to be tried together before the same jury, the identity of each information was mentioned throughout the trial, separate verdicts, sentences, etc. In view of these circumstances, the court in Betts v.

United States, supra, uses the following language:

> "We have not referred to section 1024 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 720), which relates especially to consolidations of indictments. This section originated in 1853, while section 921 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 685) originated in 1813. So far as we can discover, both sections, under proper rules of construction, have full effect. So far as the topic we are discussing is concerned, section 1024 makes no provision for trying indictments together, but only that the court may order them to be consolidated. If this means anything more than was done in the present case, it certainly could have no just application to the indictments at bar."

The court then cites a number of cases wherein consolidations were permitted, as we have herein stated, and also cases wherein consolidations were not permitted, being cases where the indictments were against different defendants. In McElroy v. United States, 164 U. S. 76, 17 S. Ct. 31, 41 L. Ed. 355, separate indictments against separate defendants were consolidated, and upon appeal such consolidation was held error and the judgment reversed. In considering the consolidation of such indictments, the court there said:

> "It is admitted by the government that the judgments against Stufflebeam and Charles Hook must be reversed, but it is contended that the judgments as to the other three defendants should be affirmed, because there is nothing in the record to show that they were prejudiced or embarrassed in their defense by the course pursued. But we do not concur in this view. While the general rule is that counts for several felonies of the same general nature, requiring the same mode of trial and punishment, may be joined in the same indictment, subject to the power of the court to quash the indictment or to compel an election, such joinder cannot be sustained where the parties are not the same, and where the offenses are in no wise parts of the same transaction, and must depend upon evidence of a different state of facts as to each or some of them. It cannot be said in such case that all the defendants may not have been embarrassed and prejudiced in their defense, or that the attention of the jury may not have been distracted to their injury in passing upon distinct and independent transactions. The order of consolidation was not authorized by statute, and did not rest in mere discretion."

[2] This case goes farther than is warranted by the circumstances of the case at bar, but the general language used therein, to the effect that indictments cannot be consolidated when against different defendants, is pertinent. In United States v. Durkee, Fed. Case No. 15008, we have an exactly parallel case, presenting the same questions which we are here considering. It was there held that, whenever there are several charges against one person or persons for the same act or transaction, the whole may be joined in one indictment in separate counts, and, if two or more indictments shall be found in such cases, the court may consolidate them, but this does not authorize the consolidation of separate indictments against different persons, although the offense was joint and they might have been jointly indicted. For the error of the court in consolidating the indictments the judgment was reversed. In United States v. McConnell (D. C.) 285 F. 164, the same ruling was had as laid down in the Case of Durkee, supra. In De Luca v. United States (C. C. A.) 299 F. 741, the court, on page 744 of the same volume, in relation to consolidation of indictments, states:

> "The statute refers to several charges, which shall be against the same person, and when the charges are against more than one person, there can be no consolidation by the court, unless all the defendants are identical in all the indictments."

The authorities which we have herein referred to are cited in the opinion of that case. It will be noted that the court held that to authorize the consolidation of indictments, the defendants in the several cases must be identical. The rule that the defendants must be identical to warrant consolidation of indictments is also found in section 1042 of Bishop's Criminal Procedure. In the absence of a statute, the question whether a defendant may be tried upon two indictments at the same time, the indictments being consolidated, there is a diversity of opinion. See Lucas v. State, 144 Ala. 63, 39 So. 821, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 412. Where the indictments, however, are against different defendants, there appear to be no cases holding that such indictments may be consolidated or a joint trial on each indictment had against the objections of the defendants. While there appears some loose language as to the meaning of the terms "consolidating indictments and joint trials," they are separate and distinct, as pointed out in the case of Betts v. United States, 132 F. on page 234, supra. Where consolidation is had, there is thereafter but one complaint, information, or indictment, but where joint trials are had, the identity of each case is maintained. This definition is taken in that case from proceedings had in civil cases, but it is there held that the same interpretation applies to criminal trials.

In the case at bar, neither information refers to the other, that is to say, the information jointly charging O'Connor and Fitzgibbons with the commission of the specified offenses makes no reference to any participation therein by either Franks or Brock. Likewise, the information jointly charging Franks and Brock with the commission of said offenses makes no mention of the participation therein of either O'Connor or Fitzgibbons; that is to say, so far as the initiatory proceedings are concerned and the fixing of the rights of the parties to their trials, there is nothing appearing in the record to indicate that the offenses were not entirely separate and distinct. Under such circumstances, it would appear that the reasoning of the court in People v. Degnen, 70 Cal. App. 567, 234 P. 129, applies. It is there said that in determining the effect of an information consisting of two counts, one charging assault with intent to commit murder and the other rape, as against a demurrer on the ground that more than one offense is attempted to be charged in said indictment, except as provided in section 954 of the Penal Code, in this, that the said indictment charges or attempts to charge two different offenses, which do not appear from said indictment to be different statements of the same offense, etc., the appellate court may only look to the face of the pleadings.

[3] In determining the rights of the parties to separate trials and the correlative rights which pertain thereto which we are soon to consider, the trial court can look no further than the language of the informations. It is manifest that the right which the law gives under the informations or indictments cannot be withheld or denied, simply because in the course of the trial evidence may be adduced, which would have authorized the prosecutor to have filed a different information or a grand jury to have presented a different indictment, which would have subjected the defendant to a more limited or different exercise of his rights during the initiatory and preliminary course of the trial.

In Taylor v. State, 20 Ala. App. 133, 101 So. 93, the court, in considering the question of consolidation of indictments in felony cases where the defendants were not the same in each indictment, used this language:

> "We know of no law which authorizes the consolidation of felony cases where the parties are not jointly indicted, and in this case, taking the records of the court as importing verity, it was not done."

For this reason, the judgment of the trial court was reversed.

There is an entire want of decisions in this state where the question has been presented in the form it now comes before us for consideration, but, in the case of People v. Plyler, 121 Cal. 160, 53 P. 553, the opposite side of this issue was presented, and the holding there supports the reasoning which we have herein set forth. In the Plyler Case:

> "The defendant and one Schoedde were together held over for trial. In due time the district attorney filed separate informations against them. This precluded a joint trial, and defendant insists that it was error. The argument advanced is that after the defendants had been jointly held for trial the district attorney had no power other than to file a joint information against them. The defendants were of right entitled to a joint trial, and each to the aid and assistance of the other in his defense. This right was denied them by the course which the prosecuting officer adopted. It is further said that the law gives to defendants jointly charged the privilege of separate trials (Pen. Code, § 1098), but secures no such right to the people. It is true that the law, contemplating the embarrassments which may arise to defendants upon joint trials, and the desire which one may have to make a defense not acceptable to his codefendants, has humanely accorded the privilege of separate trials. But that is aside from the vital question. Is it mandatory upon the district attorney under the indicated circumstances to file a joint information? We are not advised of any law so declaring. It is within his discretion to inform against them either jointly or severally. The state may determine whether it will proceed against defendants accused of the commission of a single crime, either jointly (with the privilege to each of them of securing a separate trial) or separately, as was done in this instance. Unquestionably a grand jury may so return indictments, and the same course should be and is open to the district attorney."

Thus, in that case, the election of the people to file separate informations fixed the rights of the parties and, in the language of the opinion, "precluded a joint trial." The opinion in that case further shows that the defendants jointly participated in the commission of the offense charged, but the rights of the parties separately informed against were fixed and determined according to the Code provisions relating to the trial of separate defendants and the right to a joint trial under such circumstances did not exist. The conclusion seems inescapable that if the right of a joint trial does not exist where the informations or indictments are separate, the court has no power or authority to order a joint trial. The court, in passing upon this question, cites section 1098 of the Penal Code as the one governing the question of joint and separate trials. This section of the Code has been amended since the rendering of the opinion on the Plyler Case, but not as to anything included in that case. The amendment relates only to the elimination of separate trials where the defendants are jointly indicted and providing for the exercise of challenges in such cases.

The status of the rights of the defendants, as fixed by the informations, directly bear upon and determine the challenges that may be exercised by the defendant or defendants upon the impanelment of the jury. There is no Code provision in this state relating to the challenges to be exercised by defendants jointly tried upon separate informations. Section 1098 of the Penal Code relative to challenges relates only to defendants "jointly charged." In such cases, the defendants jointly charged are entitled to exercise ten joint challenges and five separate challenges each, except where the offenses charged allow twenty joint challenges. Thus, O'Connor and Fitzgibbons, being jointly charged, were entitled to exercise ten joint challenges and were then respectively entitled to five separate challenges, aggregating twenty challenges in all. The defendant Brock, being separately charged, was entitled, there being nothing in the Codes to the contrary, to the number of challenges given to him by the Codes, based upon the information filed against him and had separate and distinct right to ten peremptory challenges. Thus, if the law permitted and authorized the joint trial of the defendants, when separately informed against, the number of peremptory challenges allowed by law in this case would have been thirty. The court limited the defendants to twenty-five peremptory challenges in the following manner: Ten challenges to be exercised jointly by all the defendants, five challenges each separately. By the ruling of the court, the defendants O'Connor and Fitzgibbons were limited to seventeen peremptory challenges, three of the challenges of the first ten counted by the court as joint challenges exercised by the attorney for the defendant Brock was counted as against the defendants O'Connor and Fitzgibbons. Defendants O'Connor and Fitzgibbons sought to exercise the challenges which we have just stated that section 1098 of the Penal Code accorded them, but the exercise of this right was denied by the court. It does not appear that the defendant Brock sought to exercise the full number of ten challenges, which, we have stated, he was entitled to, nor that the defendant Brock sought to exercise all the peremptory challenges which the trial court was ready to permit. It does appear, however, that upon the beginning of the impanelment of the jury, and, also, upon the beginning taking of testimony, the defendants O'Connor and Fitzgibbons, jointly charged, objected to any proceedings being taken and had concerning the trial of Brock upon the information upon which he alone was charged, and likewise that the defendant Brock made the same objections.

[4] The rule relating to the number of challenges to which defendants may be entitled when jointly tried, in the absence of a statute relating thereto, is thus stated in 35 C. J. § 472, p. 412:

> "The general rule, in the absence of statute, is that, where several defendants are jointly tried, each may challenge peremptorily the full number of jurors to which he would be entitled if tried alone," —and decisions supporting this statement of the law are there cited and are too numerous to be set forth herein. The common-law rule relating to the right of said challenges, in the absence of a statute providing therefor, is thus stated by Justice Story, in United States v. Marchant, 12 Wheat. 480, 6 L. Ed. 700, reported in the note to People v. Caruso, 170 Mich. 137, 135 N. W 968, and as reported in Ann. Cas. 1914A, at page 860:

> "'Upon a joint trial, each prisoner may challenge his full number, and every juror challenged as to one is withdrawn from the panel as to all the prisoners on the trial. * * * This is the rule clearly laid down by Lord Coke, Lord Hale, and Sergeant Hawkins, and, indeed, by all the elementary writers.' The right of each joint defendant to the full number of peremptory challenges allowed to a defendant tried alone has been sustained in every case decided under the common law or under a statute not plainly indicating an intent to establish a different rule."

See the cases cited on page 860, Ann. Cas. 1914A.

From what has been said, the conclusion necessarily follows that the defendants were compelled to submit to a trial against which they had a legal right to object and against which they did object and, therefore, that the jury was not impaneled in this case as provided by law, and the trial court was not authorized to proceed with the trial with the jury in the impanelment of which the rights of the defendants were not allowed to be exercised. Meeting these objections as to the want of authority to order a joint trial herein and of the limiting of the challenges by the defendants, it is argued that section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution is applicable, wherein it provides that:

> "No judgment shall be set aside, or new trial granted, * * * for any error as to any matter of pleading, or for any error as to any matter of procedure, unless, after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice."

As generally defined, "procedure" includes in its meaning whatever is embraced by the three technical terms, pleading, evidence and practice. 32 Cyc. 405. Had there been no denial of the exercise of any peremptory challenges, we seriously question whether this section has any application to the cause before us. This section must refer to pleading and procedure, as authorized by the Codes. Thus, to make it applicable to the pleadings, had there been any defects in the informations not affecting the substantial rights of the parties, as accorded by law, then, and in that case, the error should be held harmless.

[5] Likewise, if the court omitted to follow the procedure embodied by the Codes for the arraignment and trial of the defendants upon the informations filed against them and had committed some error in so doing, which did not affect the substantial rights of the parties, then such error in procedure would likewise be held harmless, but, it cannot reasonably be held that section 4½ of article

6 is so broad in its meaning as to permit the trial court to disregard the usual and ordinary procedure in the trial of a cause and adopt a new and entirely different manner from that recognized by law. Such a course is not a mistake in procedure, it is a substitution of procedure. What would excuse a mistake in procedure would not and could not be held to allow the creation of a course unprovided for by law. Mistake is one thing; a substitution is an entirely different thing. As we have said, the defendants were deprived of the right of trial by jury, as it should have been constituted by law, in that they were compelled to go to trial before jurors whom they were entitled to reject, which brings it in principle on a parallel basis with decisions of courts relative to the right of trial by jury. In Farrell v. City of Ontario, 39 Cal. App. 351, 178 P. 740, the court, speaking through Justice Myers, touching this right, said:

> "The right to trial by jury thus guaranteed was the right as it existed at common law. Koppikus v. State Capitol Commrs., 16 Cal. 248, 253; Cauhape v. Security Savings Bank, 127 Cal. 197, 202 (59 P. 589). The purpose of the amendment of 1874 to section 592 of the Code of Civil Procedure was to make it conform thereto. Vallejo, etc., R. R. Co. v. Reed Orchard Co., 169 Cal. 545, 556 (147 P. 238). It follows, therefore, that the common-law rule respecting the right to trial by jury as it existed in 1850 is the rule of decision in this state. Pol. Code, § 4468; Martin v. Superior Court, 176 Cal. 289 (168 P. 135, 136 L. R. A. 1918B, 313)."

And, further along in said opinion, the court said:

> "Respondent urges that the decision of the court, as embodied in the findings and conclusions drawn by it, is a just one under the evidence, and that, therefore, its reversal is precluded by section 4½, article 6, of the Constitution. It may be doubted that this section applies to a situation such as is here presented; but assuming that it does, we do not hesitate to hold that the denial of the right of trial by jury to a party entitled thereto is, in itself, a miscarriage of justice."

See, also, 15 Cal. Jur. 328, § 7.

In passing upon the questions here being considered, this court in the case of People v. Wismer, 58 Cal. App. 679, 209 P. 259, has held that:

> The "right of trial by jury is fundamental, a right which came to us from the common law and as such guaranteed by the Constitution—and inseparably connected therewith * * * is the right to a trial by a jury consisting of unbiased and unprejudiced persons."

In that case the trial court had denied a challenge for cause, which should have been allowed, and it was held that where a defendant in a criminal action, notwithstanding he has exercised all his peremptory challenges, is compelled to accept a juror, who is disqualified by reason of actual bias, section 4½ of article 6 of the state Constitution has no application. In other words, to give the section of the Constitution application, the juror impaneled must be such a juror against whom the defendant has no legal objection and against whom he is not deprived of exercising any legal objection or right accorded him by law. Again, in the case of People v. Carmichael, 198 Cal. 534, 246 P. 62, the Supreme Court, quoting from People v. Wismer, supra, followed the ruling had in that case and reaffirmed the statement that section 4½ of article 6 cannot be relied upon to prevent reversal where the defendant has been deprived of a fundamental right in the impanelment of a jury.

[6] The evidence in this case disclosed that five persons were engaged in the commission of the offenses charged; that after the commission of the offenses the defendants escaped in an automobile which was wrecked a few miles distant from the commission of the offense, one of the occupants killed and the others so seriously injured as to render escape impossible. It is argued upon this appeal that the testimony is insufficient to warrant the conviction of the defendant Brock. However, from what we have said, it is unnecessary to go into a consideration of the testimony further than to call attention to one matter, lest error might be committed upon a subsequent trial hereof. The people were allowed to introduce testimony of the clerk of the court and of an officer showing the information against the defendant Franks, his arraignment, plea of guilty, sentence to the penitentiary, and also, statements that were made by Franks to the officer, relative to the number of persons engaged in the commission of the offenses. This testimony appears to have been stricken out by the court, for the reason that one of the Lillards, who recognized Franks during the robbery, was not in court at the time that Franks pleaded guilty and was sentenced, and therefore could not say that it was the same person. Lest this alleged defect in the testimony /be supplied upon a subsequent trial and testimony to which we have referred be again admitted, we deem it necessary to state that no testimony in reference to the information filed against Franks, his plea of guilty, his sentence thereon, and what he might have said to the officers in the absence of other defendants is admissible, whether the alleged missing link were supplied that the Franks, who was recognized at the robbery, was identified as the same Franks who pleaded guilty. As the alleged defects in the instructions will not occur upon trials separately had upon the informations presented against the respective defendants, we deem it unnecessary to consider the objections thereto further than to state that instruction No. 28, while harmless, is not a full and complete statement of the law and should be omitted or redrafted. The orders and judgments appealed from are reversed and new trials ordered of the defendants O'Connor and Fitzgibbons, upon the information jointly charging them with the commission of the offenses therein stated, separately from a trial against the defendant Brock on the information filed against him, and, likewise, a trial of the defendant Brock, separately from the trial of Fitzgibbons and O'Connor.

SCOTT v. BECK. (Civ. 5205.)★

1. Quieting title 🔑44(4) — Plaintiff's title, sought to be quieted, held prima facie established by deed to plaintiff from immediate and remote grantors who were in actual possession at time of transfer.

In action to quiet title, evidence of deeds conveying property to plaintiff's grantor and to plaintiff, and testimony of plaintiff's grantor that it and its grantor were in actual possession of entire tract at time of transfer to plaintiff, was sufficient prima facie to establish ownership in plaintiff.

2. Taxation 🔑615 — Code sections comprise complete plan for selling property for taxes, and must be considered together (Pol. Code, §§ 3764, 3771, 3785b [St. 1913, pp. 556–558]).

Pol. Code, §§ 3764, 3771, 3785b (St. 1913, pp. 556–558), comprise complete plan for sale of property for nonpayment of taxes, and must be considered and construed together.

3. Taxation 🔑658(3)—Published notice of tax sale must name person to whom delinquent taxes were assessed at time of sale (Pol. Code, §§ 3764, 3771, 3785b [St. 1913, pp. 556–558] and § 3786, subd. 5 [St. 1911, p. 1102]).

Under Pol. Code, §§ 3764, 3771, 3785b (St. 1913, pp. 556–558), requiring name of person to whom delinquent taxes were assessed at time of tax sale, and none other, to be recited in deed, which by section 3786, subd. 5 (St. 1911, p. 1102), was made primary evidence of proper sale of property, and specially providing for notice by mail to person to whom property was last assessed next before sale, delinquent person whose name was required to be stated in published notice of tax sale was person to whom delinquent taxes were assessed at time of sale.

4. Taxation 🔑658(2)—Tax collector is not concerned whether notice of tax sale is received, though mailing is necessary to authorize sale.

Though mailing of notice of tax sale to person to whom delinquent taxes were assessed at time of sale is a necessary fact to authorize tax collector to make sale of property, tax collector is not concerned whether person to whom notice is mailed receives it.

5. Taxation 🔑789(1)—Tax deed is admissible to support claim of title under tax sale, and is prima facie evidence that copy of notice of sale was properly mailed.

In action to quiet title to realty, where defendant bases his claim to property on tax sale, tax deed from state is admissible in support of claim of title, and is prima facie evidence of fact that copy of notice of sale was mailed to person to whom property was last assessed.

6. Taxation 🔑789(1)—Defendant, to establish title under tax deed, was not required to produce deed to state as well as deed from state.

In action to quiet title to land claimed by defendant under tax deed, it was not necessary for defendant, to establish his title, to produce in evidence deed to state as well as deed from state.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ralph H. Clock, Judge.

Action by Georgia E. Scott against S. Beck. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

McKenna & McKenna, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Andreani & Haines and John L. Bisher, Jr., all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CASHIN, J. An action to quiet the title to lot 93 in tract No. 909, situated in the city of Los Angeles.

The complaint alleged title in the plaintiff with the right to possession. The averments of the complaint were denied by defendant, who alleged title in himself through a tax deed from the state of California. Neither of the parties to the action was in actual possession of the lot, which was unimproved. Judgment was entered for the plaintiff, from which the defendant appeals on the ground that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the allegations of the complaint and the conclusion of the trial court that defendant had no title to the property.

[1] The plaintiff, in support of her complaint, introduced in evidence a deed dated October 16, 1911, executed by Clara G. Spring et al., which in terms transferred the tract mentioned to Lizzie J. Brent, a deed from the latter and her husband to Brent Investment Company, a corporation, conveying the same property, together with a deed from the corporation to plaintiff of the lot in question, the latter transfer being dated April 3, 1913. The testimony of an officer of the corporation sufficiently shows that Lizzie J. Brent was in actual possession of the entire tract, and that the corporation likewise was in possession at the time of the transfer to the plaintiff. This evidence was sufficient prima facie to establish ownership in the plaintiff. Holthoff v. Freudenthal, 22 N. M. 377, 162 P. 173; Mitchell v. Titus, 33 Colo. 385, 80 P. 1042; Rockey v.

Vieux, 179 Cal. 681, 178 P. 712; Pearson v. Hellman Commercial T. & S. Bank (Cal. Sup.) 249 P. 10; Kilfoil v. Warden, 46 Cal. App. 502, 189 P. 303.

Defendant claims title as grantee under a tax deed dated August 4, 1919, executed by the tax collector of Los Angeles county. The deed recited that the lot described was duly assessed for taxation in the year 1913 to Lizzie J. Brent, and was thereafter, on the 3d day of July, 1919, duly sold to S. Beck by W. O. Welch, tax collector of the county of Los Angeles, for nonpayment of delinquent taxes which had been legally levied in the year 1913 and were a lien thereon; further stating the total amount for which the same was sold and that all taxes levied and assessed against the property prior to the year 1919 had been paid and discharged. The deed was in the form, and contained the recitals, provided by section 3785b of the Political Code (Stats. 1913, p. 558).

It appears from the evidence that the lot was assessed to the plaintiff in the years 1916 to 1920, inclusive, and that the taxes levied thereon after the year 1913, to and including the first installment of the year 1921, were paid by her with the exception of the second installment of 1919, which became delinquent, and the lot was again sold to the state in 1920. Defendant redeemed the property from the latter sale, and, after the year 1920, the taxes levied thereon, with the exception of the first installment of 1921, were paid by him. The proceedings leading to the sale to defendant on July 3, 1919, were conducted under the provisions of sections 3764 and 3771 of the Political Code as amended in 1913 (Stats. 1913, pp. 556, 557). In the addenda attached to the published tax list and notice of sale appeared the name of Lizzie J. Brent, the person to whom the lot which was therein described was assessed for the delinquent taxes of 1913. The name of the plaintiff, who was the record owner in the years 1918 and 1919, and to whom the property was last assessed next before the sale in question, did not appear in the list or in the notice mentioned above. Furthermore, it was not directly shown at the trial that the tax collector complied with the provisions of section 3771 of the Political Code by mailing a copy of the list or publication to the last-known post office address of the plaintiff. It is contended by the plaintiff that it was essential to the validity of the published notice that her name, as the owner and the person to whom the property was last assessed next before the sale, be inserted therein, and that the evidence was insufficient to show a compliance with the statutory requirement of notice by mailing.

It was provided by section 3764 of the Political Code (Stats. 1913, p. 556) that on or before the 5th day of June of each year the tax collector must publish the delinquent list, which must contain, among other things, "the names of persons and a description of the property delinquent," and that before its publication the tax collector and auditor should jointly arrange the list so as to designate in some particular manner the property contained in the list which was sold to the state five years previous under the provisions of section 3771 of the Political Code.

It was provided by section 3771 of the Political Code (Stats. 1913, p. 557) that the property contained in the advertised list, as provided by section 3764 of the Political Code, which had not been redeemed from the previous sale to the state, be sold by the tax collector at public auction, and, further, that within five days after the first publication of the list the tax collector should mail a copy of the list or publication, postage prepaid thereon and registered, to the party to whom the land was last assessed next before such sale at his last-known post office address. It was further provided by section 3785b of the Political Code (Stats. 1913, p. 558) that the tax collector should execute to the purchaser a deed to the property sold, this deed to contain certain recitals, those here material being as follows: That the property was duly assessed for taxation, the year assessed and the name of the person to whom assessed being stated, and was thereafter, on the date of the sale, sold by the tax collector to the grantee named for nonpayment of the delinquent taxes which had been legally levied in the year first mentioned, and were a lien on the property, no provision being made for a recital of the name of the owner or of the person to whom the property was last assessed next before the sale. It was also provided that no matters other than those stated in the section need be recited in the deed, which by subdivision 5 of section 3786 of the Political Code (Stats. 1911, p. 1102) was made primary evidence that "at a proper time and place the property was sold as prescribed by law, and by the proper officer."

[2-5] Sections 3764, 3771, and 3785b of the Political Code comprise a complete plan for the sale of property for the nonpayment of taxes, and must be considered and construed together. Jacoby v. Wolff, 198 Cal. 667, 247 P. 195. It is evident from the provisions of these sections that the delinquent person whose name was required to be stated in the published notice of sale was the person to whom the delinquent taxes were assessed at the time of the sale to the state; this conclusion being supported by the fact that the statute required the name of that person and no other to be recited in the deed, and that special provision was made for a notice by mail to the person to whom the property was last assessed next before the sale. As stated, a compliance with the latter provision was not directly shown, and it was testified by the plaintiff that no such notice was received. While the mailing of the notice is one of the facts necessary to authorize the tax collector to make the sale (Smith v. Furlong, 160 Cal. 522, 117 P. 527), there is no provision in the statute making it any concern of the tax collector whether the person to whom the notice is mailed receives it (Healton v. Morrison, 162 Cal. 668, 674, 124 P. 240); and in an action to quiet title to real property, where the defendant bases his claim to the property on a tax sale, the tax deed from the state is admissible in support of his claim of title, and is prima facie evidence of the fact that a copy of the notice of sale was mailed to the person to whom the property was last assessed (Jacoby v. Wolff, supra).

[6] We find no merit in plaintiff's contentions that the proceedings for the assessment and collection of the taxes involved in the action for the year 1913 were irregular or invalid, nor that it was essential that defendant, in order to establish his claim of title, produce in evidence a deed to the state as well as a deed from the state (Jacoby v. Wolff, supra).

The record sufficiently shows that the tax proceedings were valid and resulted in a transfer of the title to the defendant, and that the findings to the contrary were unsupported.

The judgment is reversed.

PEOPLE v. HALE et al. (Cr. 1344.)

1. Criminal law 🔑404(3)—Pistols found in defendants' rooms five days after robbery held admissible to show availability of means for crime.

Pistols found by police officer five days later in rooms occupied by defendants and companions were properly admitted in evidence, where victims testified they resembled those used by the defendants at time of robbery, for purpose of showing defendants had means available for crime committed.

2. Criminal law 🔑404(1) — Identification, which is sole proof of object's use, distinguished from identification to prove availability of means for act.

Distinction is to be drawn between case where identification of object is the only evidence of its use in an act, and where, its use having been proved by other testimony, it is offered only to show availability of means for committing the act.

3. Witnesses 🔑396(1)—Recross-examination to discredit witness' repudiation of admission on cross-examination was proper though detailing witness' crimes not involving defendants.

Recross-examination of defendants' witness to show his repudiation upon redirect of written statement, admitted on cross-examination, was proper, though it showed witness to be robber of extensive experience, in crimes not involving defendants.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Percy S. King, Judge.

Willard Hale and John Daly were convicted of robbery, and they appeal. Affirmed.

J. W. Ehrlich, of San Francisco, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Wm. F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

KOFORD, P. J. The defendants appeal from a judgment of conviction of the crime of robbery and from an order denying a new trial.

[1] The appellants contend that the court erred in admitting into evidence two automatic pistols. One of the victims of the robbery testified that both of the defendants had guns (pistols), and the other victim testified as to the weapon held by the defendant who handled him at the time of the robbery. On being shown the weapons in court, these witnesses testified that they resembled those used by the defendants at the time of the robbery, and testified further as to the shape, appearance, and general description of the weapons used. Neither could positively identify the pistols. A police officer testified to having taken the weapons immediately after the arrest of defendants from the rooms in which the defendants lived with two women companions. This was five days after the robbery.

It is claimed that the pistols were not admissible because not sufficiently identified by the witnesses, because they were found five days after the robbery not in the presence of the defendants, and because other persons, namely, the two women mentioned, had access to the rooms. Appellants cite no authority except State v. Kehr, 133 Iowa, 35, 110 N. W. 149. In that case it was held that mere possession by the defendant more than two months after the crime, and with no other evidence tending to identify the weapon, was insufficient as a foundation for its admission in evidence. Appellants' objection to the evidence goes more to its weight than its admissibility. The preliminary proof is not required to amount to clear and positive identification. People v. Winters, 29 Cal. 659; People v. Szafcsur, 161 Cal. 636, 119 P. 1083.

[2] A distinction is to be drawn between a case where the identification of the object is the only evidence of its use and where the use of the object has been proved by other testimony. The identification of the object in the latter case is merely for the purpose of showing that the means were available to do the act in the manner independently testified to by witnesses. In this case the discovery of the pistols in the rooms of the defendants, and such identification as was made by the victims of the robbery, do not constitute proof that the defendants used pistols at the time of the robbery. These witnesses had testified to the use of pistols by the defendants in the robbery, and the weapons were admissible for the purpose of showing that the defendants had the means of doing what the witnesses had charged them with doing. It was said in People v. Billings, 34 Cal. App. 549, 168 P. 396, and approved in People v. Mooney, 177 Cal. 654, 171 P. 690:

> "The fact that the cartridges found in the room of the defendant after the commission of the crime were of the same character and caliber of those found in the bodies of the victims of the explosion was admissible, as tending in a measure to show that the defendant had the means at hand to commit the crime charged against him in the manner and by the means which it was shown were employed to commit the crime. 1 Michie on Homicide."

[3] Defendants called a witness from San Quentin State Prison, where he was serving a term for robbery. He testified, on direct examination, that the pistols were his and were placed by himself where found by the police. On cross-examination, he admitted making and signing a written statement, a portion of which was read, containing statements contradictory to his testimony regarding the pistols. On redirect examination, he excused his written statement by saying he was mentally and physically ill at the time on account of being deprived of his customary morphine. On recross-examination, the entire statement as signed by him was read part by part and the witness asked as to each part whether it was true, and when he answered affirmatively, whether there was anything wrong with his mental or physical condition at the time he made the various statements contained in the writing. The statements (there were two made on two successive days) contained a record of the witness' activity as a robber over a considerable period of time. None of the robberies involved the defendants. The direct and legitimate purpose of this recross-examination was to show the witness' repudiation of his written statement to be untrue, but incidentally it proved him to be a robber of extensive experience. Appellants' ground of objection to this testimony was that it was immaterial, the crimes mentioned by the witness not involving the defendants in any way. The testimony was properly admitted.

The prosecution had the right to discredit, on recross-examination, the explanation, given by the witness on redirect, of his inconsistent statement admitted on cross-examination. If, incidentally, this brought in facts immaterial to the main issues in the case, the defendants cannot complain. Even where testimony admitted in this manner has been injurious to the character of the defendants, it has been held proper. People v. Smith, 134 Cal. 453, 66 P. 669; People v. Smallman, 55 Cal. 185.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. PRICE. (Cr. 1345.)★

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 10, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 9, 1927.)

1. Indictment and information ⚷71—Information stating acts constituting offense plainly and concisely, so that person of ordinary understanding would know what was charged, is good.

An indictment or information is sufficient if it gives a statement of the acts constituting the offense in ordinary and concise language and in such a manner as to enable a person of ordinary understanding to know what is intended.

2. Indictment and information ⚷110(13)—Information charging embezzlement in language of statute is sufficient (Pen. Code, § 508).

An information charging embezzlement, under Pen. Code, § 508, is sufficient, where the crime is substantially charged in the language of the statute.

3. Embezzlement ⚷26—Information accusing embezzlement of shares by obtaining same from owner as his agent and appropriating to defendant's use, contrary to trust, held sufficient.

Information charging that defendant, while acting as agent of another, obtained from such person shares of stock for a certain purpose and appropriated same to his own use, in violation of the trust and contrary to statute, held to sufficiently inform defendant of crime charged.

4. Indictment and information ⚷154—Failure of defendant to demur waives indefiniteness of information.

Where defendant makes no objection to information for indefiniteness, such objection must be deemed to have been waived.

5. Embezzlement ⚷44(6)—Evidence that defendant sold and kept proceeds of stock, obtained by him to exchange, held to sustain embezzlement conviction.

Where defendant, charged with embezzlement, was shown to have received certain stock for the purpose of exchanging for other stock and to have sold such stock and appropriated the proceeds to his own use, and there was evidence of defendant's admissions of embezzlement, conviction was sustained.

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

E. L. Price was convicted of embezzlement, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Grant R. Bennett, of San Jose, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Emery F. Mitchell, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

TYLER, P. J. Defendant was charged by information with the crime of embezzlement, it being alleged that by virtue of his employment as an agent there came into his possession and control 10 shares of stock of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company of the value of $1,400, the property of one W. S. Fitch, and that defendant unlawfully embezzled and appropriated the same to his own use. He was found guilty as charged. He appeals from the judgment of conviction and from an order denying a new trial. As grounds for reversal it is claimed that the information is insufficient in that it does not allege the terms and conditions of the trust whereby defendant held possession of the property. It is also claimed that there is a variance between the allegations of the information and the proof, and that the trial court erred in giving certain instructions to the jury.

[1] With reference to the first objection, it is sufficient to say that an indictment or information is good if it gives a statement of the acts constituting the offense in ordinary and concise language and in such a manner as to enable a person of ordinary understanding to know what is intended. Under our practice, the prolixity of the common-law pleading is avoided.

[2-4] It is well established that an information, under section 508 of the Penal Code, is sufficient, where the crime is substantially charged in the language of the statute. Here, in concise language, defendant is accused, while acting as the agent of another, with having obtained from such person certain shares of stock of a described corporation for a certain purpose, and then appropriating and embezzling the same to his own use in violation of the trust, and contrary to the force and effect of the statute. The information therefore sufficiently informed defendant of all the material elements of the crime charged against him. Moreover, no demurrer was interposed by defendant to the information. Under these circumstances, the objection must be deemed to have been waived. People v. Schroeder, 43 Cal. App. 623, 625, 185 P. 507.

[5] Equally without merit is the claim that there is a variance between the information and the proof. In this connection it is urged that defendant has been deprived of two substantial rights. First, the right to be tried in the county of his residence, and where the evidence shows the crime to have been committed; and, second, the right to be charged by the information with such crime as was disclosed by the evidence. The facts as revealed by the evidence, briefly stated, show, in substance, that defendant was a friend of Fitch, the prosecuting witness, and knew that he was the owner of the shares of stock in question. Fitch was employed by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company as a flagman at a street crossing at San Jose, and the stock represented practically his entire life's savings. Defendant, in company with his agent, one Ormand, recommended to Fitch that he exchange his telephone stock for shares in the Monolith Portland Cement Company and finally persuaded him to do so. The stock was indorsed by Fitch, and the defendant instead of procuring the exchange agreed upon, sold the same and embezzled the proceeds. Defendant claims that the evidence shows that he was intrusted with the stock with authority to sell it and with the proceeds of such sale to purchase other stock, and that, under such circumstances, the stock itself was not embezzled, but the crime committed was a misappropriation of the proceeds received from its sale.

While there is some evidence that might tend to support this claim, the evidence fairly construed as a whole, including a written agreement of exchange executed by the parties, shows that the stock was delivered to defendant for the express purpose of making the exchange agreed upon, and not for the purposes of sale. It further shows that defendant admitted to Fitch and to his attorney that he had embezzled the stock. We do not deem a review and analysis of the evidence necessary. There is also ample evidence in the record to show that the offense was committed in Santa Clara county, and that a demand was there made for the return of the stock. Nor is there any merit in the objection that the instructions of the court relative to venue and demand are confusing and misleading. The instructions, as a whole, fully and correctly state the law upon the subject.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

HAVENS v. FOSKETT et al. (Civ. 2994.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 9, 1927.)

1. Bills and notes 🔑343—Knowledge that drawer is not dealer in commodities does not put purchaser on inquiry, though trade acceptance recites purchase of goods.

A recital in a trade acceptance that the obligation arises out of purchase of goods from the drawer does not put purchaser on inquiry, though he knows the drawer to be a dealer in commercial paper and not in commodities.

2. Bills and notes 🔑362—Finance company's assignee, after maturity of trade acceptances, had all rights of company as holder in due course (Civ. Code § 3139).

Assignee, after maturity, taking from finance company, a holder in due course, trade acceptances indorsed in blank by the drawer, had all rights of the finance company, under Civ. Code, § 3139, providing that holder who derives his title through a holder in due course, and is not a party to fraud affecting the instrument, has all rights of the former holder.

3. Bills and notes 🔑338—Finance company, purchasing trade acceptances from dealer in paper for value before maturity without notice of defect, held holder in due course.

Finance company, purchasing trade acceptances from dealer in paper for value before maturity without notice of facts to put it on inquiry, was a holder in due course.

4. Bills and notes 🔑188—Negotiable instrument indorsed in blank is payable to bearer and negotiable by delivery (Civ. Code, § 3115).

A negotiable instrument indorsed in blank is payable to bearer and may be negotiated by delivery, under Civ. Code, § 3115.

5. Bills and notes 🔑155—Recital that acceptance belonged to series, with acceleration clause applicable to entire series on single default, did not destroy negotiability.

A clause in each of six trade acceptances that the instrument was one of a series, and that failure to pay any when due would give the holder option to declare any or all due and payable, did not destroy their negotiability.

6. Bills and notes 🔑155—Acceleration clause does not destroy negotiability of instrument.

An acceleration clause in a promissory note does not destroy its negotiability.

7. Bills and notes 🔑155—Clause accelerating maturity of series of negotiable instruments on default in one does not affect negotiability of each instrument.

Where notes of different maturities, belonging to one transaction, form a series, the negotiability of one is not affected by provision that, on maker's default as to any one, the entire series shall become due and payable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by M. J. Havens against W. L. Foskett and others to recover amount of trade acceptances. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

G. C. Ringole, Samuel Hamburg, and Henry Heidelberg, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Stephen P. Galvin, of Los Banos, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. The plaintiff, as assignee of Central Finance Company, a corporation, brought this action to recover the amount of six trade acceptances drawn by J. B. Vallen, doing business as Cadillac Manufacturing Company, upon defendants and duly accepted by them. They are all of one series, dated February 2, 1923, and payable 65, 70, 75, 80, 85 and 90, days, respectively, after date. They are all identical in amount and in terms except as to time of payment. The first one of the series reads as follows:

"Trade Acceptance.

"$105.00. San Francisco, California, Feby. 2, 1923.
Date of Sale.

"This is one of a series of trade acceptances. Failure to pay any when due gives holder the option to declare any or all of the series due and payable. If action is instituted hereon, the undersigned promise to pay a reasonable attorney's fee in any such action.

"Accepted at Los Banos, Calif., on Feb. 2, 1923.

"Cadillac Mfg. Co.
"Located at Los Banos, Calif.
"Ives Hdw. Co.
Signature of Acceptor or Trade-Name.
"By W. L. Foskett. J. B. Vallen.
Authorized Buyer.

"The obligation of the acceptor hereof arises out of the purchase of goods from the drawer."

All of these acceptances were sold to the Central Finance Company February 6, 1923, for a valuable consideration. They were indorsed on the back thereof:

"Cadillac Mfg. Co., by J. B. Vallen, Mgr. Demand, notice, nonpayment and protest hereby waived. Cadillac Mfg. Co., by J. B. Vallen, Mgr."

All of the instruments, after the maturity thereof, were assigned by the Central Finance Company to the plaintiff for collection. Vallen procured the instruments through fraud and the goods in payment for which they were given were never delivered. The court found:

"That each of said six trade acceptances or bills of exchange provided that, upon the default in the payment of any one of the series, said acceptances setting forth the fact that each was one of a series, all others would become due and payable at the option of the holder of the one whereof default in payment had been made; that said trade acceptance or bills of exchange did not in any way identify any of the others of the series, and the court finds that said trade acceptances or bills of exchange are nonnegotiable, * * * that the plaintiff took each and all of said trade acceptances or bills of exchange after maturity and at a time more than one month after the first one became due; that no consideration therefor was paid by the plaintiff; and that the plaintiff took by an assignment, not made or indorsed upon the original trade acceptance nor upon any paper attached to the same."

Judgment was entered in favor of the defendants and the plaintiff has appealed therefrom.

[1-4] Respondents contend that the fact that the trade acceptances were given for the purchase price of goods "was sufficient notice to put the purchaser, Central Finance Company, on guard to ascertain if in fact goods had been sold by the drawer. The Central Finance Company knew Vallen, and knew him to be a dealer in paper, for it had bought other paper from him prior to this transaction. * * * It knew that Vallen was not a dealer in commodities. Why, then, should he have paper reciting the fact that he sold commodities? With these facts before it, the Central Finance Company cannot truthfully say that it took paper as a bona fide holder for value and without notice." Respondents have not called attention to any evidence to the effect that "Vallen was not a dealer in commodities" and none has been discovered. The purchase of the instruments by the Central Finance Company appears to have been made in the usual course of the business in which it was engaged and the record does not show anything to create a suspicion even which should have put the company on inquiry, it purchased the instruments for their full value, less a discount of 5½ per cent. If the facts were as stated by respondents they would not show that the company is not a holder in due course. 8 C. J. 501; Popp v. Exchange Bank, 189 Cal. 296, 303, 208 P. 113; Goodale v. Thorn (Cal. Sup.) 249 P. 11, 13; Silberschmidt v. Moran (Cal. App.) 250 P. 205, 207. It is further to be observed in this connection that the court did not find that the Central Finance Company was not a holder in due course. The fact that the plaintiff, if he be treated as the owner of the instruments rather than as the assignee thereof for collection, took by assignment without indorsement upon the instruments by the Central Finance Company, is immaterial. The company took by indorsement and became a holder in due course. The indorsement was in blank. "An instrument so indorsed is payable to bearer, and may be negotiated by delivery." Civ. Code, § 3115. "A holder who derives his title through a holder in due course, and who is not himself a party to any fraud or illegality affecting the instrument, has all the rights of such former holder in respect of all parties prior to the latter." Civ. Code, § 3139.

[5] Respondents' main contention is that the acceleration clause in the instruments rendered them nonnegotiable. In support of this contention several California cases, decided before the enactment of the Uniform Negotiable Instrument Law, are cited. In Utah State National Bank v. Smith, 180 Cal. 1, 179 P. 160, the court had under consideration the effect of an acceleration clause in a single promissory note. The court said:

> "The note in question was dated and payable in Utah, and its negotiability must be determined by the law of the place of payment. * * * The terms of the Utah statute are shown in evidence, and, so far as the question here involved is concerned, are substantially the same as the Uniform Negotiable Instrument Law enacted in California in 1917. * * * Before the enactment of this law the great weight of authority was that under the law merchant the clause accelerating the due date did not destroy its negotiability. [Citing cases.] All the decisions based upon the Uniform Negotiable Instrument Law, so far as we are advised, hold that the clause in question does not destroy the negotiability of a promissory note. * * * Nor are we called upon to prophesy what the courts of Utah may do when the same question comes before them under the Uniform Negotiable Instrument Law. The question simply is: What interpretation do we place upon the language of the Utah statute in proof in this case? * * * The note was negotiable under the law of Utah."

This decision is in effect an interpretation of the Uniform Negotiable Instrument Law of California. Respondent relies on the case of Iowa National Bank v. Carter, 144 Iowa, 715, 123 N. W. 237. There were involved in that case three notes, each containing a clause that in case of default in payment thereof the payee "shall have the option to declare any or all other notes given for the purchase price of said property to be at once due and payable," and another clause that, "if at any time the said party of the second part * * * shall deem themselves insecure, then the whole amount of said sum of money in said notes mentioned, which shall not have been paid, * * * shall be immediately due and payable." The section of the Negotiable Instrument Law of Iowa under consideration was identical with section 3085 of the Civil Code of California. The court did not base its decision upon the fact that the accelerating clause related to the three notes and was not limited to the note in which the clause appeared. It is said:

> "Before the adoption of the Negotiable Instruments Law, we had held that these provisions in a note and mortgage rendered it nonnegotiable. * * * Since the general adoption of the Negotiable Instruments Act, the courts have held to the same doctrine."

[6, 7] Respondents also cite Wayne County National Bank v. Cook, 73 Ind. App. 404, 127 N. E. 773. The note involved in that case did not contain an acceleration clause, but it was held to be nonnegotiable by reason of other conditions contained therein. The Iowa case is in conflict with the decision in Utah State National Bank v. Smith, supra, in so far as it seems to hold that an acceleration clause in a promissory note destroys its negotiability. The latter case follows the well-established rule that an acceleration clause in a promissory note does not destroy its negotiability. No reason appears for holding that a different rule should apply to a series of notes, each containing such a clause. "Where several notes maturing at different times belong to a single transaction and form a connective series, the negotiability of one of them is not affected by the provision that, on the failure of the maker to pay any one of the notes of the series to which it belongs, the rest shall become due and payable to the holder." 8 C. J. 140; Chicago Railway Equipment Co. v. Merchants' National Bank, 136 U. S. 268, 10 S. Ct. 999, 34 L. Ed. 349; Commerce Trust Co. v. Guarantee Title & Trust Co., 113 Kan. 311, 214 P. 610; Farmers' Bank & Trust Co. v. Dent, 206 Ky. 405, 267 S. W. 202; Schmidt v. Pegg, 172 Mich. 159, 137 N. W. 524; Walter v. Kilpatrick, 191 N. The judgment is reversed.

THOMSON v. THOMSON. (Civ. 3122.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 10, 1927.)

1. Trial 🔑395(5)—Finding probative facts merely is insufficient, unless ultimate facts are necessary inferences therefrom.

It is not sufficient to find merely probative facts, unless ultimate facts are necessary inferences therefrom.

2. Trial 🔑395(5)—Inference to be drawn from probative facts is finding of fact to be made by trial court.

If different inferences may be drawn from probative facts found to exist, inference to be drawn therefrom is finding of fact to be made by trial court.

3. Husband and wife 🔑43—Wife, using separate funds for family expenses or voluntarily permitting husband to so use them, cannot require husband to reimburse her.

Where wife uses her separate funds in payment of family expenses or voluntarily permits her husband to so use them, without any agreement or understanding as to repayment, she cannot require her husband to reimburse her.

4. Trusts 🔑89(1)—Evidence held to establish that certain moneys turned over to husband by wife were in trust for investment purposes.

In wife's action to establish trust in certain properties held by husband, and for an accounting, evidence held sufficient to sustain finding that certain moneys were turned over to husband in trust, as agent for wife, to be invested by him for her benefit, except such moneys as she voluntarily permitted him to use for family and other expenses.

5. Limitation of actions 🔑103(2)—Wife's cause of action to establish trust in property purchased for her by husband held not barred, where trust was never repudiated.

Where husband had never repudiated trust arising from purchase of property with moneys turned over to him by wife for such purpose, wife's cause of action was not barred by statute of limitations.

6. Trusts 🔑374—Interest on moneys intrusted to husband by wife for investment not traceable into specific property should be in proportion to profits realized.

Where wife, in action to establish trust in property purchased for her by husband, did not charge fraud or mismanagement of moneys and properties intrusted, rate of interest allowable on moneys not traceable into specific property should be in proportion to profits actually realized, if amount thereof can be shown.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Elliot Craig, Judge.

Action by Vera B. Thomson against Presson W. Thomson. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed in part, and in part reversed, with directions.

Minor Moore, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Louis F. Laberere and Hill, Morgan & Bledsoe, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The parties intermarried June 25, 1902, and ever since have been and now are husband and wife. The plaintiff was then of the age of 22 years and the defendant was 31. At the time of the marriage the plaintiff owned securities of the value of $4,000. The defendant's property at that time, together with that acquired by him as his separate property shortly thereafter, was of the approximate value of $4,000. Beginning with the fall of 1907 the defendant attended law school for about 2 years, during which period his earnings were negligible in amount. During the other years since the marriage his average annual earnings, as a teacher prior to 1907 and as a lawyer since 1909, have been approximately $1,200. Subsequent to the marriage the plaintiff received as gifts from her mother and invested in real estate, which is clearly her separate property, the sum of $22,000. Neither this sum nor the property purchased therewith is in serious controversy. In addition to such gifts and in addition to the property owned by the plaintiff at the time of her marriage she has received gifts or legacies as follows: December 31, 1905, $4,000; December 31, 1905, $21,000; July 31, 1912, $250; December 10, 1913, $3,000; December 31, 1916, $2,100.

The complaint alleges that these various sums "were by the plaintiff turned over to the defendant as the agent and trustee of the plaintiff, for the purpose of investment by the defendant for the use and benefit of the plaintiff," and not as gifts to the defendant; that "the plaintiff permitted said defendant to make investments of said sums in his own name, but always upon the distinct agreement * * * that said moneys and all increments and transmutations thereof should be and remain the property of the plaintiff; * * * that said moneys and the increment thereof has been from time to time invested by the defendant for the use and benefit of the plaintiff herein; and that a large portion of said sum and said increment are now invested" in certain properties, describing them. The prayer is that the defendant be adjudged to hold such properties in trust for the plaintiff and that he be required to convey them to the plaintiff; that he be compelled to account to the plaintiff; that she be given judgment for the balance due her on such accounting; and that she have "such other and further relief as shall be meet in the premises."

The defendant's version of the transactions between the parties may be stated in the language of his opening brief as follows:

> "At the time of their marriage each party had some property, and the property of both was placed in a general fund, and from time to time thereafter defendant's earnings, all profits from investments, all income, and all advancements by plaintiff were placed in this general fund. Out of this general fund all expenses of the parties and of their family and of their properties and the purchase price of other properties as acquired were paid. * * * The answer alleges * * * that said properties are community property, except as to those held in joint tenancy, and as to those that they are and should be declared to be held in joint tenancy."

The court found:

> That the "plaintiff turned over to defendant for the purpose of investment by defendant various sums; * * * that said sums * * * were not intended to be, and were not, gifts to defendant; that plaintiff permitted said defendant to make investments of said sums in his own name for the community and mutual benefit of plaintiff and defendant, but without any distinct agreement between plaintiff and defendant as to equitable ownership of the properties acquired therewith, or of the increment and transmutations thereof; that said moneys, and the increment thereof, have been from time to time invested by defendant as the husband and business head of the family for the mutual benefit and use of defendant and plaintiff as husband and wife; * * * that the defendant and plaintiff from time to time discussed generally the various purchases of property before the purchasing thereof, and that plaintiff has at all times had a general knowledge of the investments made by defendant, but that defendant has never rendered to plaintiff a complete accounting for funds received by him from her; * * * that in the year 1902 defendant purchased as his separate property certain real estate in Galesburg, Ill.; * * * that after marriage of the parties hereto defendant sold said property for $2,500 net to him, and the said $2,500 went into what is hereinafter designated as 'general fund,' the same being a fund in the possession and under the control of defendant at all times during the married life of plaintiff and defendant, and into which general fund all receipts and proceeds from plaintiff's (apparently should be defendant's) earnings, sales of property, proceeds from properties, and advancements by plaintiff to defendant, went, from time to time, and out of which fund defendant from time to time paid usual and necessary expenses, and personal expenses of plaintiff and defendant and their family, various business expenses of defendant, and the purchase price of various properties, both real and personal, as hereinafter more fully stated."

Then follows a detailed statement of moneys paid into the general fund from various sources, including the moneys delivered by plaintiff to defendant, and of payments made out of that fund in the purchase of properties, both real and personal. The twelfth finding enumerates the different sums of money delivered by the plaintiff to defendant, and then continues as follows:

> "All of which sums in this paragraph mentioned * * * were, at the times herein respectively mentioned after the several items, delivered by plaintiff to defendant for such expenditures as he might from time to time see fit to make, including payment of family expenses; that said deliveries of funds were not, and were not intended by plaintiff as, a gift to defendant, but were for necessary use by him in connection with family matters as occasion required, and for investment for family benefit."

The court further found, in response to an allegation of the answer, that it is not true that in 1902, or at any other time—

> "plaintiff and defendant agreed that in consideration of the promise of the defendant to contribute his time, energies, and talent, or any of them, to making investments in a home, and in other property, or otherwise thereafter to be acquired * * * or in consideration of defendant investing his property and money, or either of them, then owned, and all properties or money thereafter to be received by him from any source, or otherwise, plaintiff promised to deliver to defendant her said securities of the value of $4,000 or any securities, for the purpose of aiding the defendant to purchase * * * properties as defendant might determine advantageous to both parties, * * * and for the purpose of paying any expenses necessarily to be incurred for the mutual benefit of both parties or otherwise, except as herein otherwise found. And the court further finds that no partnership agreement of any kind or nature was ever entered into between plaintiff and defendant concerning their property or properties, or the property of either party."

The decree adjudges that certain real property, standing of record in the names of the plaintiff and the defendant as joint tenants, is the separate property of the plaintiff, subject, however, to a charge of $3,000, with interest thereon, in favor of the community property of the parties. This is in accordance with the prayer of the answer and it does not appear that the appellant objects thereto. It is adjudged that a certain parcel of land and an automobile belong to the plaintiff as her separate property. The plaintiff's separate funds were used directly to pay for such property and there can be no question as to the correctness of the judgment relative thereto. Certain other property is adjudged to be the separate property of the defendant, and, of course, he makes no complaint in that respect. Of the other properties in controversy, it is adjudged that one parcel of land, standing in the names of the parties as joint tenants, is owned by them in joint tenancy, and that the remainder thereof is community property. This provision of the judgment is in accordance with the rights of the parties as contended for by the defendant. No reason appears for disturbing the judgment in so far as the terms thereof have been set forth. But the court further gave the plaintiff a personal judgment against the defendant for all sums of money delivered by her to him that were not traced into specific property which was purchased therewith, with interest at 6 per cent. per annum on each of said sums from the date of the delivery thereof to the entry of the judgment, regardless of the purposes for which the money was used.

[1, 2] Much of appellant's argument is based upon the contention that the court did not find that the plaintiff delivered the moneys in question to the defendant as her agent and in trust to be invested for her benefit. It must be conceded that the findings are uncertain in this respect. Probative facts are found from which it may be inferred that the moneys were so delivered. The rule is well settled, though sometimes lost sight of, that it is not sufficient to find merely the probative facts unless the ultimate facts are necessary inferences therefrom. Ellis v. Bonebreak, 180 Cal. 168, 170, 179 P. 893; Potts v. Paxton, 171 Cal. 493, 498, 153 P. 957; McCray v. Burr, 125 Cal. 636, 638, 58 P. 203. If different inferences may be drawn from probative facts found to exist, the inference to be drawn therefrom is a finding of fact to be made by the trial court. Estate of Berry, 195 Cal. 354, 361, 233 P. 330. Whether or not the defendant was the agent and trustee of the plaintiff and whether or not the findings in that respect are sufficient need not be decided, because, conceding that the findings are sufficient to show such agency and trusteeship, the personal judgment against the defendant must be reversed on other grounds.

[3] The court found that all sums of money in controversy "were * * * delivered by plaintiff to defendant for such expenditures as he might from time to time see fit to make, including payment of family expenses." In respondent's opening brief it is said:

> "The living expenses of the parties during the two years defendant was in law school were paid partially from the small income from the properties owned in Illinois at that time, and partially from the sums turned over to defendant by plaintiff which were not used by him in investments in properties."

The judgment requires the defendant to repay the full amount so turned over to him, including the part thereof used for family living expenses, with interest. Plaintiff testified that her mother gave her $250 to defray the expenses of a trip and that the money was so used; that at another time her mother gave her $500 which was used in paying household expenses; and that $605 out of a gift of $2,100 from her mother was "used up in expenses." The judgment requires the defendant to repay to plaintiff all of these sums, with interest thereon from the time they were received. It seems clear that when a wife uses her separate funds in payment of family expenses or voluntarily permits her husband to so use them, without any agreement or understanding as to repayment, she cannot require her husband to reimburse her. In Third National Bank v. Guenther, 123 N. Y. 568, 25 N. E. 986, 20 Am. St. Rep. 780, where a wife had agreed to support the family and had permitted her husband to pay the family expenses out of her funds, it is said:

> That so long as her agreement "remained executory it could not be enforced against her, but * * * she had the right to perform it, and having done so could not undo what had been done by recalling what she had paid or requiring the husband to reimburse her for the outlay."

[4-6] The evidence is amply sufficient to sustain a finding that the moneys in question were turned over to the defendant in trust as the agent of the plaintiff, to be invested by him for her benefit, except such moneys as she voluntarily permitted him to use and which he did in fact use for family and other expenses. The fact that some of the trust moneys were by the defendant commingled with his own and with community funds under his control, and that it is impossible to trace the same into any specific community property, does not in any manner destroy the trust, which may still be enforced by a personal judgment against the defendant for the amount of money not so traceable. Under such circumstances, the defendant never having repudiated the trust until the present controversy arose, plaintiff's cause of action is not barred by the statute of limitations. England v. Winslow, 196 Cal. 260, 271, 237 P. 542. Plaintiff does not charge fraud or mismanagement of the moneys and properties intrusted to the defendant. The rate of interest, therefore, to be allowed plaintiff on moneys not traceable into specific property, should be in proportion to the profits actually realized, if the amount thereof can be shown. The case of Title Insurance & Trust Co. v. Ingersoll, 158 Cal. 474, 111 P. 360, furnishes a guide for the determination of the questions under discussion relating to the plaintiff's right to a personal judgment against the defendant. The requirement that the community property of the parties be applied towards the satisfaction of the personal judgment before resorting to defendant's separate property is favorable to him and gives him no cause for complaint.

Those parts of the judgment constituting paragraph XVII thereof, being a personal judgment in favor of plaintiff against the defendant for the recovery of $62,436.20, and interest thereon, is reversed, with direction to the trial court to retry the issues upon which such personal judgment is based. In all other respects the judgment is affirmed, the appellant to recover his costs of appeal.

NAPOLITANO v. SUPERIOR COURT WITHIN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (Civ. 5554.) ★

1. Justices of the peace 🔑166(2)—Where appeal was not brought to trial within year, dismissal for want of prosecution was proper even after trial under one stipulation (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 581a, 581b, 981a).

Where case on appeal from judgment of a justice of the peace was not brought to trial until after expiration of one year, trial court in view of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 581a, 581b, 981a, on plaintiff's motion properly dismissed it for want of prosecution, although trial had been had by oral stipulation of parties after one year and judgment had been rendered for defendant.

On appeal from judgment of a justice of the peace, parties may preserve jurisdiction of the superior court to try appeal after time limited therefor by Code Civ. Proc. § 981a, by written stipulation.

3. Justices of the peace 🔑166(3)—Plaintiff held not estopped by oral agreement for continuance beyond time authorized, to move to dismiss case for want of prosecution (Code Civ. Proc. § 981a).

On appeal of case from judgment of a justice of the peace, plaintiff, although having orally agreed to continuance beyond time which superior court under Code Civ. Original certiorari by J. Napolitano against the Superior Court of the State of California within and for Los Angeles County and another. Writ denied.

E. M. Torchia, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CRAIG, J. We are asked to vacate an order of the superior court of Los Angeles county dismissing an appeal from a judgment of the justice's court, rendered in an action of Agustino Riggio against J. Napolitano, petitioner herein.

[1] It appears without conflict that the case on appeal was not brought to trial until after the expiration of one year from the date of its filing in the superior court. It was set for trial therein on the 6th day of December, 1926. At the time of being set down for trial, counsel for both sides were present in court, and orally stipulated to the date which was fixed; on December 6, 1926, both sides were present, and the case was tried. The petition alleges that judgment was then rendered in favor of the defendant, petitioner. No return was made by respondents, and so this statement must be accepted as true, although the clerk's transcript contains no copy of the judgment. Thereafter counsel for Riggio moved the court to set aside the judgment and to dismiss the appeal. No stipulation in writing extending the time for trial was filed as permitted by section 981a of the Code of Civil Procedure. Nevertheless, the court proceeded to trial without objection from either side, and rendered judgment before its attention was called to the fact that the trial had not taken place within the time allowed. The motion was then made and was granted. In this the superior court only performed its duty.

Smith Mfg Co., 53 Cal. App. 303, 200 P. 53, cited by petitioner, holding that notwithstanding the statute of frauds, under certain circumstances an oral agreement will be upheld on the principle of estoppel. But section 981a prohibits further prosecution of an appeal when the appellant shall not have brought it to trial within one year from the time of its filing in the superior court. This prohibition is substantially the same as that established in sections 581a and 581b of the Code of Civil Procedure, and their language has been construed adversely to petitioner's contention. The question is one of jurisdiction. The prohibition against further action is one which deprives the court of the authority to take any action except to dismiss the appeal. Vrooman v. Li Po Tai, 113 Cal. 302, 45 P. 470; White v. Superior Court, 126 Cal. 245, 58 P. 450; Modoc Land, etc., Co. v. Superior Court, 128 Cal. 255, 60 P. 848; Beal v. Superior Court (Cal. App.) 247 P. 922. The fact that the trial took place and that judgment was rendered does not alter the situation. These steps were in excess of the court's jurisdiction, and void, and this is true because section 981a does not direct that the appeal be dismissed upon motion or when the situation is called to the attention of the court, but it prohibits any further proceedings after the time within which the appeal may be brought to trial shall have expired. Under this enactment but one method is provided through which jurisdiction may be preserved in the superior court to try an appeal from the justice's court after the time limited shall have passed, and that is "by written stipulation of the parties to the action, filed with the clerk of the superior court to which the appeal is taken." There can be no mistake as to the intention of the Legislature. Any other means of expressing consent than that provided in the statute is necessarily ineffective.

[3] The principles of estoppel have no application here, for it is not pretended that the conduct of Riggio in participating in the trial in any way induced Napolitano to neglect to bring the appeal to trial as required by law, and it is obvious that this cannot have been the case; and the mere fact of having agreed orally to a continuance beyond that time does not constitute either an estoppel or a waiver. Sauer v. Superior Court (Cal. App.) 241 P. 570, and cases to which reference is therein made. The opinion in Nolan v. Hentig, 138 Cal. 281, 71 P. 440, cited by petitioner, plainly declares that the objection goes to the manner in which jurisdiction is obtained, rather than to the jurisdiction of the court. Hence that decision is not in point.

The writ is denied.

SLOANE v. HAMMOND, County Auditor.
(Civ. 5512.)

1. Counties 🔑139—Special counsel, appointed to criminally prosecute county district attorney, may resort to fund provided for use of district attorneys (Pol. Code, § 472 and § 4307, subd. 3, and § 4308, as amended by St. 1925, p. 999, § 2).

Special counsel, appointed by Attorney General under Pol. Code, § 472, to criminally prosecute county district attorney, has right to resort to fund contemplated by section 4308, as amended by St. 1925, p. 999, § 2, for use of district attorneys, and is not limited to provisions of Pol. Code, § 4307, subd. 3, making necessary expenses in criminal proceedings county charges.

2. Statutes 🔑89—Law authorizing special counsel, where district attorney is disqualified, held not to violate Constitution, requiring uniformity in county governments (Pol. Code, § 472; Const. art. 11, § 4).

Pol. Code, § 472, authorizing Attorney General to employ special counsel to conduct prosecution in county, where district attorney is disqualified, held not in violation of Const. art. 11, § 4, requiring uniformity in county governments, since such section is uniform in its application to every county in state.

3. Criminal law 🔑639(2)—Law authorizing special counsel when district attorney is disqualified held consistent with laws relative to county powers (Pol. Code, §§ 472, 4000, 4001, 4003, 4005).

Pol. Code, § 472, authorizing Attorney General to employ special counsel to conduct criminal prosecution wherein district attorney is disqualified, held consistent with sections 4000, 4001, 4003, 4005, relative to powers of counties.

4. Criminal law 🔑639(2)—Special counsel, apppointed to prosecute county district attorney, is engaged in exercise of state, and not county, powers (Pol. Code, § 472, and § 470, subd. 5, and § 4153, subd. 1; Pen. Code, § 684).

Special counsel, appointed by Attorney General under Pol. Code, § 472, to prosecute a criminal offense against county district attorney, is engaged in all that he may do under his appointment in the exercise of state, and not county, powers, in view of section 470, subd. 5, requiring Attorney General to exercise supervisory powers over district attorneys, and section 4153, subd. 1, and Pen. Code, § 684, to the effect that criminal actions are prosecuted by the state.

5. Criminal law 🔑639(2)—Law authorizing special counsel when district attorney is disqualified held not in violation of Constitution as emasculating office of district attorney (Pol. Code, § 472; Const. art. 11, § 5).

Pol. Code, § 472, authorizing Attorney General to employ special counsel to conduct criminal prosecution, wherein district attorney is disqualified, held not in violation of Const. art. 11, § 5, as emasculating office required by Constitution to be appointed or elected under system of county governments, since the appointment confers authority only to function as to matters concerning which attorney is disqualified, and does not emasculate office of district attorney.

6. Criminal law 🔑639(2)—Special counsel, employed to prosecute criminal offense, where district attorney is disqualified, held not "county officer," required to give official bond (Pol. Code, §§ 472, 4022; Const. art. 11, § 5).

Special counsel, employed by Attorney General to conduct criminal prosecution, where district attorney is disqualified, in accordance with Pol. Code, § 472, is not a "county officer" within section 4022, enacted pursuant to Const. art. 11, § 5, requiring official bonds by county officers, including district attorneys.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, County Officer.]

7. Constitutional law 🔑62—Special counsel, employed on disqualification of district attorney, held not within constitutional provision forbidding delegating power to control or interfere with county (Pol. Code, § 472; Const. art. 11, § 13).

Special counsel, employed by Attorney General under Pol. Code, § 472, to prosecute criminal offense wherein district attorney was disqualified, held not within the strict letter of Const. art. 11, § 13, forbidding delegation to any individual power to control or in any way interfere with county.

8. Action 🔑6—Right of special counsel prosecuting district attorney to special fund held not moot because of subsequent conviction, where appeal is pending therefrom (Pol. Code, § 472, and § 4308, as amended by St. 1925, p. 999, § 2).

Question of right of special counsel, employed in accordance with Pol. Code, § 472, to criminally prosecute county district attorney, to use special funds contemplated by section 4308, as amended by St. 1925, p. 999, § 2, for use of district attorney, held not moot because of subsequent conviction of district attorney, when appeal is pending therefrom, since appeal may result in reversal, and require another trial, creating necessity for use of fund.

Original application for writ of mandate by W. A. Sloane, directed to C. R. Hammond, County Auditor of San Diego County, to require him to issue a certain warrant. Writ granted.

W. A. Sloane, of San Diego, in pro per.

Albert J. Lee, Deputy Dist. Atty., of San Diego, for respondent.

WORKS, P. J. A criminal offense, claimed to have been committed by the district attorney of the county of San Diego, was under investigation by the grand jury of the county, whereupon the Attorney General "appointed and employed" the petitioner in this proceeding "to represent the people and the prosecution as special counsel * * * in all * * * matters pending in the courts of San Diego county in which the present district attorney of San Diego county is disqualified." The proceedings before the grand jury terminated in the indictment of the district attorney. Under a recital that "it is necessary, in order to provide funds for the further necessary investigation and procuring evidence for the trial" of the charges against the district attorney, "to make use of a portion of the special fund provided and set apart by the board of supervisors" of the county "by section 4308 of Political Code for the use of the district attorney in prosecuting such investigations," petitioner then made requisition upon the county auditor "to draw a warrant in my favor upon said fund for such use in the sum of $1,000." The county auditor declined to honor the requisition, whereupon petitioner presented to this court his petition for the writ of mandate requiring that official, respondent in the proceeding, to issue the warrant demanded by the requisition. Upon stipulation the issuance of an alternative writ, or of an order to show cause, was waived, and the petition was set down for hearing as an application for a peremptory writ. All of the questions presented for our consideration arise upon the face of the petition.

The designation of petitioner as special counsel was made pursuant to the terms of section 472 of the Political Code, which provides, in part:

> "That whenever a district attorney in any county of this state shall, for any reason, become disqualified from conducting any criminal prosecution within such county, the Attorney General may employ special counsel to conduct such prosecution."

The fund to which petitioner referred in his requisition upon respondent is provided for by section 4308 of the Political Code, as amended by St. 1925, p. 999, § 2, in the following language:

> "There is hereby created in each county a fund to be known as the district attorney's special fund. It shall be the duty of the board of supervisors, within thirty days after this act takes effect, and annually thereafter, at the beginning of the fiscal year, to transfer from the general fund to the district attorney's special fund, such sum or sums as may be necessary from time to time so that there shall be in such fund at the beginning of each fiscal year available for use by the district attorney, the following amounts: In counties or cities and counties having a population of ninety thousand or more the sum of five thousand dollars ($5,000); in all other counties such sums as the board of supervisors shall set aside, not to exceed two thousand five hundred dollars ($2,500)."

[1] Speaking now in very general terms, it is contended by petitioner that the expression "to conduct such prosecution," found in section 472, imports the right to assemble and employ the resources whereby to conduct a prosecution, and, therefore, the right to resort to the fund contemplated by section 4308. Respondent, however, by an argument later to be examined, insists that in his preparation for the prosecution of the district attorney petitioner may look forward only to the provisions of subdivision 3 of section 4307 of the Political Code to the effect that "expenses necessarily incurred * * * for * * * services in relation to criminal proceedings for which no specific compensation is prescribed by law" are county charges. If respondent is correct in this attitude, an alarming prospect is opened to view. Under such circumstances petitioner may fail utterly in the performance of the duty for which the Attorney General has drafted him. The action of the Legislature in providing for the fund contemplated by section 4308 presupposes a necessity for money actually in the hands of a district attorney wherewith to prepare for the conduct of criminal litigation. It is also presupposed, necessarily, that the efficiency of a district attorney's office, as an effective agency in the punishment of crime, may be impaired but for the existence of the fund in question. A district attorney is secured against such dangers in the conduct generally of the criminal litigation which it is his duty to prosecute, while petitioner, if the contention of respondent is well founded, faces an impairment, and therefore a possible failure, of his duty to prosecute the district attorney of San Diego county for the commission of the crime with which he stands charged. It is impossible to contemplate with equanimity the existence of such a state of affairs. Moreover, the arguments whereby respondent seeks to deny to petitioner the right to resort to the special fund provided for in section 4308 have as ready an application to his right to incur expenses which may become a county charge under section 4307. This seems obvious. There can be no possible difference, in legal effect, between a power to spend money of the county himself and a power to incur liabilities which will force the board of supervisors and other county officers to spend it. The contention of respondent then, if upheld, practically nullifies the appointment of special counsel by the Attorney General under the provisions of section 472. The exercise of the authority conferred by the section becomes empty and barren, and, in consequence, no less than farcical. The special counsel cannot proceed without funds, and the punishment of the district attorney of San Diego county, if he be guilty of crime, becomes, in theory, impossible. It is to be observed here that there is no room under respondent's contention for the view that the Attorney General himself may assemble or command the funds necessary to the prosecution and himself conduct it. The contention, as will hereafter appear, places that officer and the special counsel appointed by him in the same category and under the same disabilities.

Respondent insists that under the Constitution the Legislature is without authority to empower the Attorney General himself, or a special counsel appointed by him under section 472 of the Political Code, to exercise that control over county funds which was implied by petitioner's requisition on respondent. In truth, it is said that such authority is precluded by sections 4, 5, and 13 of article 11 of the organic law. Section 4 provides in part:

> "The Legislature shall establish a system of county governments, which shall be uniform throughout the state."

This is a portion of section 5:

> "The Legislature, by general and uniform laws, shall provide for the election or appointment, in the several counties, of boards of supervisors," —of various other officers, including "district attorneys, * * * and shall prescribe their duties and fix their term of office. * * * It shall provide for the strict accountability of county * * * officers * * * for all public * * * moneys which may be paid to them, or officially come into their possession." A part of section 13 follows:

> "The Legislature shall not delegate to any special commission, private corporation, company, association or individual any power to make, control, appropriate, supervise or in any way interfere with any county, * * * money, property or effects, whether held in trust or otherwise, * * * or perform any municipal function whatever."

[2, 3] Counsel for respondent presents various points under these sections of article 11 of the Constitution. So far as section 4 is concerned, we can see nothing in section 472 of the Political Code that impinges upon the uniformity which is required in county governments. The section of the Code, whether it be viewed merely as granting an authority to appoint special counsel or in addition as also entitling a special counsel to resort to the fund provided for in section 4308 of the same Code, applies to every county in the state. It is therefore as uniform in its application as any of the enactments of the Legislature relating to county government. Respondent, however, points to several sections of the Political Code which the lawmaking body has enacted pursuant to the mandate of the constitutional provision, and contends that section 472 interferes, or is inconsistent, with them. The sections cited are: 4,000, to the effect that every county "is a body corporate and politic, and as such has the powers specified in this title, and such other powers as are necessarily implied from those expressed"; 4001, designating the agencies by which the powers of counties may be exercised; 4003, enumerating the powers of counties; and 4005, providing that "contracts, authorizations, allowances, payments, and liabilities to pay, made or attempted to be made in violation of law," are void, and cannot form the basis of a claim against a county. When counsel invokes the provisions of these sections, he is entirely beside the mark at which he aims. They are of no greater sanctity than section 472. It is obvious that resort cannot be had to them for the purpose of determining whether section 472 is violative of the Constitution. If, however, we meet counsel upon his own ground, we can see no scheme, under the enactments to which he directs our attention, into which the provisions of section 472 do not fit. The latter section is perfectly consistent with section 4000, especially as the powers "specified in this title," to employ the language of section 4000, and contained in section 4003, do not include any functions whatever incident to the detection or punishment of crime. We shall take further notice of this important omission in the next succeeding paragraph of this opinion. Section 472 does no violence to section 4001, for, according to the latter, powers of a county may be exercised "by agents * * * acting under * * * authority of law"; but let us observe here that we are far from deciding that petitioner, in anything that he may lawfully do under his appointment by the Attorney General, will exercise any of the powers of the county of San Diego. It is manifest from the provisions of section 4003, which in the interest of brevity we do not set out, that section 472 is not inharmonious with it, this especially because of the fact, to which we have already referred, that section 4003 gives to counties no control over the detection or punishment of crime. Section 472 is not out of step with section 4005, for the reason that the contracts, etc., denounced by the latter section are, naturally, only those which are "in violation of law." The question here is, entirely aside from the provisions of section 4005, whether the powers and authority sought to be exercised by petitioner as special counsel are in violation of law. So much for the sections of the Political Code to which our attention is drawn by respondent.

[4] While we have already observed that the sections of the Code to which counsel for respondent refers can furnish no guide toward a solution of the constitutional questions presented to us in this proceeding, it is well thus early to expose a fallacy in the arguments that are submitted in connection with them, particularly for the reason that the same fallacy pervades the entire brief of respondent. We are met with it at every turn. Counsel erroneously supposes, and continually takes for granted, that a district attorney, in his efforts to bring about the punishment of those who are charged with crime, and that petitioner, in all that he may do to procure a conviction of the district attorney of San Diego county, engage in the exercise of the powers of a county. We have already pointed out that section 4003 gives to a county no such powers. Section 472, if we concede for the moment its validity and constitutionality even to a limited extent, was enacted upon the theory that the power in question resides in the state, for special counsel designated under it are to be appointed by a state officer, the Attorney General. Section 470 of the Political Code, prescribing the duties of the Attorney General, was doubtless framed upon the same theory. Subdivision 5 of the enactment provides that the officer named shall "exercise supervisory powers over district attorneys in all matters pertaining to the duties of their offices," and perform any of such duties when, in his judgment, such action is advisable, "and from time to time require of them reports as to the condition of public business intrusted to their charge." In truth, this language is so broad, when taken alone, as to indicate that a district attorney exercises no county functions whatever, not even in advising county officers, although it is necessary to say no more here than that the enactment is at least broad enough to comport with the idea that the prosecution of criminal charges is a state affair. By subdivision 1 of section 4153 of the Political Code it is provided that a district attorney shall "conduct, on behalf of the people, all prosecutions for public offenses." This language also indicates that the conduct of criminal litigation is a state affair, when it is remembered that section 684 of the Penal Code reads in part:

> "A criminal action is prosecuted in the name of the people of the state of California, as a party."

When we turn from these statutory provisions and resort to the law of judicial decision, it becomes evident that matters which require governmental attention, and which are of general concern to the people of the state, must be handled, regulated, and controlled by the state, and not by any agency operating merely within a part or subdivision of the state. This question has frequently arisen over various matters sought to be controlled by charter cities under the "municipal affairs" clause of the Constitution. See, for instance, Pixley v. Saunders, 168 Cal. 152, 141 P. 815; Gadd v. McGuire, 69 Cal. App. 347, 231 P. 754. There are, specifically, several cases based upon the general principle that the punishment of crime is a matter for the state, and not for a city, within the meaning of the phrase "municipal affairs," as employed in the Constitution. See Farmer v. Behmer, 9 Cal. App. 773, 100 P. 901; Nicholl v. Koster, 157 Cal. 416, 108 P. 302. We do not mean to say that any of these cases presents the exact question which is now before us, but they all do illustrate the principle that matters which require an exercise of the activities of government and which are of more than local concern, are to be dealt with by the state, and not by local authorities. Nor do we say that the detection and punishment of crime may not sometimes be a matter of strictly local concern. Thus, the enforcement of penal ordinances passed by city councils and boards of supervisors may involve action which is for a city or for a county and not strictly for the state. It was said in a concurring opinion in Robert v. Police Court, 148 Cal. 131, 136, 82 P. 838, 840:

> "The trial and punishment of offenses defined by the laws of the state is not a municipal affair."

This opinion was signed by two justices only, it is true, but the quoted statement taken from it gives expression to a principle that is behind each of the other cases which we have cited. And it would seem, logically, that the "trial and punishment of offenses defined by the laws of the state" is no more a matter of county concern, or a matter calling for the exercise of the powers of a county, than it is a "municipal affair." Surely, the trial and punishment of crimes, generally, is an activity in which the people of the entire state are interested, and which they may conduct through their own officers. It may be conceded that for some purposes a district attorney is a county officer, and as such exercises some of the "powers" of a county. When, however, he conducts prosecutions for the punishment of crimes denounced by act of the Legislature, he certainly discharges functions which pertain to the state and not to the county, whether or not, technically, he is to be deemed a state officer when he is engaged in the discharge of such functions. Under such circumstances he surely acts as an agent of the state. The reason is therefore apparent why sections 470, 472, 4003, and 4153 of the Political Code and section 684 of the Penal Code are in the form in which we find them. The petitioner in the present proceeding, also, in all that he may do under his appointment as special counsel, will engage in the exercise of state, and not of county, powers. It has already been remarked that the district attorney of San Diego county is to be tried under indictment by the grand jury. The crime with which he is charged is bribery, an offense denounced by the Penal Code. The status of petitioner as special counsel is therefore plain.

[5] We return to a more specific discussion of the constitutional questions presented on behalf of respondent. It is contended that the Legislature has not "the power to emasculate the office of any of the officers required by the Constitution to be appointed or elected under the system of county governments to be established" by that body. It is to be observed that this point strikes at the very authority of the Attorney General to appoint special counsel under the terms of section 472 of the Political Code; that is, the point involves the idea that the portion of the section providing for such appointments is unconstitutional, for respondent cites in support of it a case (Massenburg v. Board of Commissioners, 96 Ga. 614, 23 S. E. 998) which decides that the Legislature is without power to abolish an office recognized by the Constitution. This question runs through the brief of respondent, and the right of petitioner to resort, as special counsel, to the fund contemplated by the provisions of section 4308 of the Political Code is sought to be denied upon the ground that his appointment was void as being in defiance of the Constitution. Laying aside the truth, to which we have already referred, that section 472 is of equal dignity with other sections of the Political Code enacted for the purpose of providing a system of county government, it is to be remarked that the section does not "emasculate" the office of district attorney, nor does an appointment made pursuant to its terms. Such an appointment is intended to confer an authority to function only as to matters concerning which a district attorney is disqualified, and in which, in all conscience, he ought not to act. Section 472 merely transmutes this matter of conscience—this affair of pure morals—into legislation. An appointment made under the section results from a laudable attempt of the Legislature to prevent the perpetration of great wrongs, and it neither affects the "office" of district attorney nor relieves an incumbent of the office from the discharge of its general duties. The enactment is one of a highly remedial character, and its validity cannot be affected by the specific point now under consideration. We shall say more, later, concerning the lengths to which the Legislature may go in preventing the horrible solecism involved in the prosecution by a district attorney of a criminal charge against himself and in providing means for an adequate prosecution of the charge by some other person or officer.

[6] It has been observed that section 5 of article 11 of the Constitution requires that the Legislature "shall provide for the strict accountability of county * * * officers * * * for all public * * * moneys which may be paid to them, or officially come into their possession." Pursuant to this mandate the lawmaking body has provided for the giving of official bonds by county officers, including district attorneys. Pol. Code, § 4022. It is said that petitioner may not make use of the special fund mentioned in section 4308 of the Political Code, for the reason that he is not required by section 472 to give bond. But the constitutional provision requires the Legislature to "provide for the strict accountability" of "county officers" for public moneys to be handled by them, and petitioner, under his appointment as special counsel, is not a county officer. It is unnecessary to decide whether petitioner is an "officer" at all. The authorities are divided on this question. If, however, he were an officer, it is plain from what we have said above that he is not a "county" officer. We know of no rule requiring the Legislature to provide for the giving of bond by one exercising such an office or employment as that provided for by section 472, even if it be conceded that the appointee is to handle county moneys. Such a course might be proper under the dictates of prudence, but it is not required by the Constitution. In later paragraphs of this opinion, devoted to a consideration of the effect of the Constitution, generally, upon the right of petitioner to have access to the special district attorney's fund, we shall say something more upon the point treated in the present paragraph.

[7] It is provided by section 13 of article 11 of the Constitution that the Legislature "shall not delegate to any special * * * individual any power to * * * control, * * * or in any way interfere with any county, * * * money, property, or effects." If it be conceded for the sake of argument, without deciding, that petitioner is within the strict letter of this inhibition, we are satisfied that he is not within the spirit of it, as measured under the general principles of government which it is the purpose of all Constitutions to foster and to protect. We shall now proceed to cover this view by a line of argument which applies as well to inhibitions which respondent sees in each of the sections of the Constitution upon which he relies.

Restrictive provisions of Constitutions, however positive and drastic, cut very little figure in the settlement of such questions as those here presented. If the Constitution of California should be so amended as to contain a provision that the courts of the state should have no further jurisdiction to punish those guilty of crime, or that particular crimes, malum in se, should not be the subject of punishment, or that particular persons should not be punished for the commission of crimes malum in se, and that no part of the public funds should be employed for the purpose of detecting or punishing any of the crimes coming within any inhibition so declared, those provisions could not stand. They would be null, and the courts not only would disregard them, but would resort to their undoubted inherent powers to prevent the evils attempted to be wrought by them. Not only so, but it doubtless would be the duty of the Legislature to pass laws in defiance of them. "Police power is the power inherent in a government to enact laws, within constitutional limits, to promote the order, safety, health, morals, and general welfare of society. As applied to the powers of the states of the American Union, the term is also used to denote those inherent governmental powers which, under the federal system established by the Constitution of the United States, are reserved to the several states." 12 C. J. 904. "No Legislature can bargain away the public health or the public morals. The people themselves cannot do it, much less their servants. The supervision of both these subjects of governmental power is continuing in its nature, and they are to be dealt with as the special exigencies of the moment may require. Government is organized with a view to their preservation, and cannot divest itself of the power to provide for them." Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 814, 25 L. Ed. 1079. "It is the settled doctrine of this court that, as government is organized for the purpose, among others, of preserving the public health and the public morals, it cannot divest itself of the power to provide for those objects. * * *" Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 8 S. Ct. 992, 32 L. Ed. 253. The sound and essential principle stated in these cases has been enunciated in many later decisions of the United States courts. From among these we cite only Butchers' Union Co. v. Crescent City, 111 U. S. 746, 4 S. Ct. 652, 28 L. Ed. 585; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 8 S. Ct. 273, 31 L. Ed. 205; Logan & Bryan v. Postal Tel. & Cable Co. (C. C.) 157 F. 570; Pennsylvania Hospital v. Philadelphia, 245 U. S. 20, 38 S. Ct. 35, 62 L. Ed. 124; Silvey v. Commissioners (D. C.) 273 F. 202. The same salutary rule has been announced several times by the courts of this state, although the utterances of our own tribunals have not related expressly to the inability of the people themselves to abdicate the solemn duty incident to the exercise of the police power. "This power cannot be bargained or contracted away, and all rights and property are held subject to it." Laurel Hill Cemetery v. San Francisco, 152 Cal. 464, 93 P. 70, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 260, 14 Ann. Cas. 1080. In a later case the Supreme Court quoted thus from Mugler v. Kansas, supra:

> "Indeed, as was said in Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 814 [25 L. Ed. 1079], the supervision of the public health and the public morals is a governmental power, continuing in its nature, and 'to be dealt with as the special exigencies of the moment may require,' and that 'for this purpose, the largest legislative discretion is allowed, and the discretion cannot be parted with any more than the power itself.'" Ex parte Young, 154 Cal. 317, 97 P. 822, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 330.

And, again, the court has referred to "the general rule to the effect that the police power 'is a continuous one, reposed somewhere, and one that cannot be barred or suspended by contract or irrepealable law.'" Ex parte Beck, 162 Cal. 713, 124 P. 548. One of the District Courts of Appeal has remarked that "the police power cannot be bartered away even by express contract." Maguire v. Reardon, 41 Cal. App. 596, 183 P. 303.

All these cases have an especial application to the duty inherent in government to be active and vigilant in the detection and punishment of crime. If the security of the citizen and the stability of government may be said to depend more upon any one element of governmental power than upon another, that one is the power, nay, the duty, to see to it, if it be humanly possible, that there be a speedy and never failing imposition of the sanctions annexed to the violation of penal laws. To come to the facts of the present case, it would be an execrable thing if a state of the law could be found that would admit of the failure, cessation, or suspension of the duty of the state to encompass the punishment of the crime with which the district attorney of San Diego county stands charged, if he be guilty, or of the slightest impairment of effort to ascertain whether he be guilty or innocent. No restrictive provisions of the Constitution, if any there be, can be permitted to stand in the way of the exercise of such a power. Similar situations to that with which we are here confronted have arisen in other states, and they have given rise to a line of decisions to which, with profit, we may now refer.

In one case, a district attorney having been disqualified to perform certain duties incident to his office, it appeared that a trial court, acting under statutory provision, had appointed an attorney to act in his stead. Question having been made as to the power of this individual to perform certain of the duties of the district attorney, a higher court said on appeal:

> "If the contention of defendant's counsel is to prevail, then, if a prosecuting attorney should be for any reason disqualified, all the wheels of criminal justice would be brought to a standstill for the reason that there would be no vacancy in the office that the governor could fill, and no power in the court to make a temporary appointee who could in all things discharge the duties pertaining to the office in question. The law does not intend any such absurdity, and will not permit such a failure of justice. And aside from statutory provisions, such as those quoted, the power thus to appoint a temporary representative of the state, one armed with full authority to discharge in full the office he temporarily fills, is of necessity an inherent power in courts of justice." State v. Moxley, 102 Mo. 374, 14 S. W. 969.

A case presenting a somewhat similar question arose in another jurisdiction. It there appeared that a statute of the state provided for the appointment by "the district court" of special counsel to act in the place of disqualified county attorneys. An appointment of such counsel was made by a judge of the district court while sitting in a county other than that of the county attorney who was alleged to be disqualified. It was contended that the appointment was not within the statute, and in disposing of the question raised the higher court said:

> "The * * * statute was intended to give the district court the power and authority to appoint temporarily a county attorney to act in the place and stead of the regular county attorney under the circumstances enumerated in the statute. * * * Independent of the statute, however, the court would have the inherent power to appoint a special county attorney under any of the circumstances therein enumerated. It is essential to the very life of the court that the proper officers be in attendance upon it. The power to appoint such officers is necessary for the protection and existence of the court and absolutely essential to the administration of justice and the enforcement of all our laws. It would be an indefensible reproach upon our institutions if crimes should go unpunished and the public business remained unattended to for want of power in a court of general jurisdiction to appoint some one to supply the place of the regular elected officer when absent from court or disqualified to act. The courts of this state are not powerless to this extent. They have the right and power to preserve their life, and the machinery of the court cannot be kept in motion without its proper officers. It is therefore an inherent power of the presiding judge of the court to supply these officers when there is a temporary vacancy or a disqualification in any particular case. We conceive it our duty therefore to give the foregoing statute a broad, practical, and common-sense construction in order to carry into effect the purposes for which it was enacted, and to give expression to this inherent power of courts of general jurisdiction in this state. We admit that it was intended that the special county attorney should be appointed by the court; but should an irregularity in the appointment destroy its effect and render void all the acts of this special officer where it appears conclusively from the record that with the knowledge and consent of the court the officer proceeded to his duty? In this case, while the original appointment was made by the judge in vacation, yet when the case was called for trial, and objection made to that appointment, the judge in open court before proceeding to the trial of this case announced that the appointment had been made by him, and permitted the special county attorney thus appointed to proceed as the representative of the state in this action. It is admitted also by counsel for the defendant that the regular county attorney was disqualified in this case; that the special county attorney who represented the state was qualified to act, and the very judge who made the appointment in vacation presided at the trial. It is our opinion, therefore, that the action of the trial judge in permitting the special county attorney to act under these circumstances amounted in itself to an appointment made by the court, and was a specific ratification by the court of everything that the presiding judge had done in vacation and at his chambers." Hisaw v. State, 13 Okl. Cr. 484, 165 P. 636.

Extracts from the opinion in this case were quoted, with evident approval, by the Supreme Court of the state in Board v. Fain, 66 Okl. 13, 166 P. 896. Upon the same question see, also, State v. Ellis, 184 Ind. 307, 112 N. E. 98, where many other cases are cited.

The decisions in the four or five adjudications last cited rest naturally upon the principle enunciated by the cases to which we have above referred, and which deal with the duty of government to engage in the uninterrupted exercise of the police power. While the reasoning of them rests, undoubtedly, upon that ground, the occasion for the decisions arose from an equally well-established principle of English and American law, the essentially just principle which early ripened into the maxim that no man shall be a judge in his own case. It is abhorrent to all ideas of natural justice that chancellor or judge shall sit in a cause in which he is interested. The same feeling arises in the mind at the mere suggestion that a prosecutor, or his deputies—for in law the deputies are the arms of their superior, and in fact they are usually the servants of his will—may conduct a criminal cause in which the prosecutor is a defendant. The Legislatures of the various states—our own by section 472 of the Political Code—have taken care that no such anomaly shall exist. The law carefully provides security also against the possibility that another kind of officer may act in matters in which he has an interest. From time immemorial it has been customary to make provision for the appointment of elisors to perform the functions of the shrievalty whenever sheriffs are disqualified to act in the discharge of their duties. 3 Bl. Comm. 355; 20 C. J. 402; 35 Cyc. 1526; 35 C. J. 277; 15 Cal. Jur. 400; 23 Cal. Jur. 295. While section 226 of our Code of Civil Procedure, relating to elisors, does not in terms provide for their appointment upon the disqualification of sheriffs, the Supreme Court has determined that such is the meaning of the enactment (Bruner v. Superior Court, 92 Cal. 239, 28 P. 341; People v. Nakis, 184 Cal. 105, 193 P. 92), partially because of the language employed by the Legislature in section 4192, now section 4173, of the Political Code. Section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides for the appointment of elisors upon the "disability or disqualification" of commissioners designated to conduct sales of real property under foreclosure. It is not strange that the Legislature, by section 472 of the Political Code, has made provision for the appointment of special counsel in case of the disqualification of district attorneys. Indeed, it were strange if no such provision were to be found in our statutory law.

The law is well settled, upon just considerations of public policy, as we have seen, that courts possess the inherent power to name special counsel to act in the place of disqualified public prosecutors. This state of the law is not inconsistent with a power in the Legislature, irrespective of constitutional authorization and apparently in defiance of attempted constitutional inhibition, to make it the duty of the Attorney General to appoint such counsel under proper circumstances. Several of the cases to which we have pointed above are to the effect that the inherent power of the courts to appoint exists irrespective or independent of statute. The cases tacitly concede an authority in the Legislature notwithstanding the inherent power in the courts. It would seem, in truth, that it is primarily the duty of the legislative department to provide for the appointment of special counsel to conduct criminal prosecutions against district attorneys who are charged with crime. It cannot be questioned that it is the duty of the Legislature to enact laws under which district attorneys shall be elected or appointed, and to make it the general duty of those officers to engage in the prosecution of alleged violators of the Criminal Code. It must follow that it is the duty of the lawmaking body to provide for an adequate prosecution of those cases in which district attorneys themselves are charged with crime, or in which those regular prosecutors are disqualified for some other reason. Doubtless, if section 472 of the Political Code had no existence, or if the Attorney General had neglected to discharge the duty thrust upon him by it, the superior court in and for the county of San Diego could have appointed petitioner to conduct the prosecution of the indicted district attorney. This power, resting in particular instances in the superior courts of the various counties, perhaps justly to be termed secondary in the face of legislation upon the subject, cannot interfere with the primary duty of the Legislature to provide for such appointments throughout the state.

We think the lodging of the power of appointment in the Attorney General shows a proper exercise of legislative discretion. The duties of that officer, as specified in section 470 of the Political Code, are such that he is kept in close touch with the conduct of criminal litigation in the various counties. His finger is on the pulse of the patient, and he is the natural physician to prescribe the remedy for such ills of the body politic as are in this proceeding brought to our attention. The functions which petitioner is to discharge under his appointment pertain to the state, and it is proper that the power to appoint him should have been reposed in a state officer. All considerations tend to the view that the Legislature exercised not only a proper but a wise discretion in vesting the appointing power where it did.

Nor do we think that the power and duty of the Legislature, exercised through section 472 of the Political Code, are affected by the fact that the lawmakers, by section 470 of the same Code, have provided that the Attorney General may "when, in his judgment, such action is advisable," perform any of the duties of a district attorney. Section 472 provides, among many things, for the corps of deputies the Attorney General may appoint. The Legislature doubtless considered, and justly so, that it would be impossible to determine what number of deputies must be provided to care for the ordinary duties of the office and conduct criminal prosecutions in the several counties of the state, if the latter duty were expected always to be performed from Sacramento. The legislators doubtless also considered that it would be difficult to foresee the extent to which the discharge of the ordinary duties of the office would be impaired, whatever the number of deputies decided upon, by a conduct of criminal cases throughout the state in which district attorneys might be disqualified. It could easily happen that at one and the same period several of the county prosecutors might be disqualified to conduct particular cases because they had been counsel for the defendants before their election, because they were related by blood or affinity to defendants, or because they themselves were charged with crime. There is another prime consideration which the Legislature must have considered. A district attorney is usually a prominent figure in his county. When he is charged with crime, a certain degree of sympathy among those who are to act as his judges upon the facts will be enlisted in his behalf by the very fact that the charge has been made. If the Attorney General or his deputies shall appear to conduct the prosecution of the case, the friends, neighbors, and adherents of the defendant will regard the intrusion as a species of carpetbagging against him, and the prosecution will have burdens to overcome which are entirely divorced from considerations relating to the evidence to be presented to the jury. The Legislature has acted wisely in the exercise of a discretion which, under all the circumstances of such a situation, rests with its members alone, in so framing the law that a district attorney may be prosecuted by a citizen of his own community, one who is of influence and good repute among the people of the county, and who may enter into a prosecution of the defendant in some degree freed from the burdens to which we have alluded.

The foregoing considerations have advanced us far toward a conclusion that petitioner, in the discharge of his duty as special counsel, may resort to the fund provided for by section 4308 of the Political Code. Counsel have referred us to no adjudication which touches this specific point, and we think no court has decided it, or any question that closely similar to it. We say we have advanced far toward a determination of the question favorable to appellant's claim, because, if the thought is abhorrent that a district attorney charged with crime may prosecute himself, or that he may go unprosecuted, and therefore unpunished, if guilty, it is as well shocking to the senses that he may be inefficiently or inadequately prosecuted, because of lack of funds to conduct a proper prosecution, by one appointed to press a charge against him. A lack of funds might well result in a travesty as disgusting to the citizen or as damaging to the public welfare as if the defendant were not prosecuted at all or as if he were sought to be whipped of justice by the feeble taps of a lash wielded by himself. The broad considerations which justify the appointment of petitioner as special counsel cry out that his attempt to encompass a conviction of the alleged malefactor cannot be stifled for the want of the funds necessary to render the attempt successful if the defendant under charge be in truth guilty. We have already referred to the fact that the Legislature has provided for the fund mentioned in section 4308 in order to insure a proper discharge of duty by district attorneys. The enactment of the section amounts to a legislative finding that the labors of the special counsel who is now a petitioner before us may fail if he is denied access to the same fund. We do not take leave of this question here, for there is some authority which bears more or less directly upon it. In one of the cases we have already cited the court said: "The attorney appointed by the court to prosecute in the place of an absent, sick or disqualified officer has the same power to draw and to sign bills of indictment as the regular official. If this be not true then it must be confessed that there is a very lame place in our criminal practice" (State v. Moxley, supra); and it will be remembered that in the portion of the same opinion which we have quoted on an earlier page the court said that such a special prosecutor is "one armed with full authority to discharge in full the office he temporarily fills. * * *" It was remarked in another case:

> "Such an appointee should be of the court's own selection, and as to the matters for which he is appointed, he becomes vested with all the powers of the district attorney, but independent of that official." People v. District Court, 29 Colo. 5, 66 P. 896.

In yet another case decided in the same jurisdiction the Attorney General of the state, acting under statutory authority, took up the prosecution of a criminal case in the stead of the local prosecutor. The Supreme Court, said in deciding a question which was presented to it:

> "When the act prescribing the duties of the Attorney General became effective, the method for prosecuting felonies was by means of an indictment returned by a grand jury. The law, however, required the indictment to be signed by the district attorney and the latter to appear in the courts of his district and prosecute in behalf of the people. Such being the state of the law, it is clear that when the Legislature empowered the Attorney General to prosecute under certain conditions, that official, when the required conditions existed, could do each and everything the district attorney might have done in the premises. Though the letter of the law required one official alone to do certain things, its spirit permitted another to do and perform the same or similar acts under certain conditions." People v. Gibson, 53 Colo. 231, 125 P. 531, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 138.

We turn again to the law concerning elisors:

> "An elisor appointed to execute process and orders of the court is invested with the powers, duties and responsibilities of the sheriff in the performance of those duties. * * *" Griffith v. Montandon, 4 Idaho, 75, 35 P. 704.

A special feature of the law relating to elisors may be mentioned here, in view of the contention of respondent that the Constitution would be violated if petitioner were allowed access to the fund provided for in section 4308 of the Political Code, for the reason that under the organic law, as executed by the statute, county officers are required to give bond, no such requirement existing as to special counsel appointed under section 472 of the Political Code. It has been decided in at least one state that an elisor may levy an attachment (McFarland v. Tunnel, 51 Mo. 334), and section 4173 of our Political Code seems to import that this substitute for sheriff and coroner may levy both attachments and executions. But there is nothing in our statutes which requires the giving of bond by an elisor, and yet in the taking and retention of personal property under either attachment or execution he may demean himself toward it in a manner which, if it were in the case of the sheriff himself, would create a liability upon that officer's official bond. Does such a circumstance nullify the statute providing for the appointment of elisors to levy attachments and executions? If it does, one who institutes suit against both the sheriff and the coroner of a county is denied the right in its courts to secure by attachment the payment of any judgment he may procure, and the right to enforce payment of the judgment by execution, except through the exercise of a power inherent in the courts. Doubtless, an elisor is liable, both civilly and criminally, for a willful misappropriation of funds or property seized by him under process. The same rule will apply to petitioner here in the matter of his use of the special district attorneys' fund, or any part of it.

We conclude that the petition in this proceeding must be granted because, if for no other reason, it is the irrefragable and inalienable duty of the people to enforce their penal laws. In the case of the charge pending against the district attorney of San Diego county the performance of that duty has been lodged, by competent authority, in petitioner. There is no way known to the law, as it is presented to us by respondent here, by which he can be impeded in a vigorous and adequate attempt to discharge the duty reposed in him by his appointment.

[8] We think it proper to say a few words upon the question whether this proceeding has become moot, although the point has not been suggested to us. In all things relating to the prosecution of the indicted district attorney we have spoken prospectively, and yet we know that a trial under the indictment has been had since the argument in this proceeding, and that a conviction has resulted, and that the cause is now on appeal to this court. Laying aside the question whether we may take judicial notice of these things actually known to us, and, as well, the question whether a cause is moot can be determined only under the law of judicial notice when no formal showing of the facts is made, we think the proceeding is not moot. The appeal may result in a reversal, and the convicted officer may be tried again. The cause against him is still pending, and petitioner may yet require the use of the fund to which he demands access. Nor does the fact that he has secured a conviction without the employment of the fund affect the question here presented. Whether public-spirited citizens have advanced money for the purpose of prosecuting the charge—a thing which sometimes occurs, as we are bound to know—or whether petitioner has been thus far successful in the prosecution despite the handicap caused by an inability to procure funds, is no concern of ours. It is to be observed that no question is here made that petitioner has made requisition upon respondent for an excessive allowance from the special district attorneys' fund, if, indeed, that point could be urged against a discretion apparently exercisable by him alone.

A peremptory writ of mandate will issue as prayed.

CRAIG, J. I concur in the conclusion announced in the foregoing opinion. As to whether or not a restrictive provision contained in a Constitution is void and to be disregarded by the courts if it would divest the government of one of its inherent powers I express no opinion, for, to my mind, that question is not one whose disposition is necessary to a decision of the instant case.

The status of the special prosecutor appointed by the Attorney General is, I think, that of an assistant to the last-named officer.

The mere fact that a special prosecutor appointed under section 472 of the Political Code is not enumerated among those members of the Attorney General's office who are designated as "officers" does not preclude this conclusion, as suggested by counsel for the respondent, under the rule expressio unius est exclusio alterius, since the special prosecutor is in certain respects in an entirely different class from those enumerated on account of his temporary tenure and the exceptional occasion for the use of his services. The conduct of the prosecution of the district attorney of San Diego county in this instance constitutes the exercise of a state function and the discharge of a duty of the state government. It is one which is particularly committed to the Attorney General. Subdivision 5, § 470, Pol. Code. Also, it must be conceded that in this prosecution the petitioner was engaged in the performance of duties and functions and the exercise of powers of a public officer, which in itself strongly indicates that he occupied the same status. Coulter v. Pool, 187 Cal. 181, 201 P. 120. That the Attorney General might personally have taken charge of this prosecution, I have no doubt. Had he done so, no question could have been raised as to his acting in an official capacity, nor of his having all of the authority of the district attorney of San Diego county in the performance of the duties and the exercise of the powers of that office. While so conducting such prosecution to the exclusion of the incumbent, instead of doing this in person, the Attorney General saw fit to appoint the petitioner as his representative and assistant, and in doing so conferred upon the latter all of the jurisdiction of the office which he represented.

Further, I agree with the preceding opinion in holding that, even though it be conceded (which of course it is not) that the special prosecutor is to be so classed as to his status as to be within the letter of section 13, art. 11, of the Constitution, he is not within the spirit of that provision, and hence it cannot be used to bar the conclusion reached herein. It is contrary to the spirit of this section to apply it to one performing the official duties of a duly constituted office while so acting under legal authorization of the holder of such office.

THOMPSON, J. I concur in the opinion, except that I must withhold, at this time, assent to the language which declares that courts would disregard restrictive provisions of constitutions which to the courts might seem to be at variance with the purposes of government. Restrictive provisions of state Constitutions which in operation should fail to accord to citizens equal protection of the law, or to afford a republican form of government, or should be destructive of the purposes of a Republican form of government, would undoubtedly fail by reason of violating section 1 of Amendment 14 or section 4 of article 4 of the United States Constitution. But the courts of this country derive their authority and their being from Constitutions, which are expressions of the will of the people, in whom rests, ultimately, the entire power of government. And, as water can rise no higher than its source, so the courts cannot be superior to their creator.

The authorities cited in support of this enunciation in the main opinion involve legislative action. The Legislature owes its being to the Constitution in the same manner as do the courts. Legislative power is restrained by constitutional limitations. As was said in People v. Central Pacific Ry. Company, 43 Cal. 398–432:

> "The deference we owe to the legislative will is only second to that which we owe to the commands of the Constitution, which both the Legislature and the court are sworn to obey."

We also read in 12 C. J. 753:

> "Courts are never at liberty to question the wisdom or policy of an act of the Legislature, their duty being to enforce such acts as are passed to the extent to which they are found to be constitutional and no further."

As the power of the court to question the wisdom of legislative enactment is limited to whether it contravenes constitutional guaranties, certainly the power of the court to question the wisdom of constitutional restrictions is bounded by similar limits.

Application by Dave Martello for a writ of prohibition to be directed to the Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, R. E. Abbott, formerly a Judge pro tempore thereof and another. Alternative writ vacated, and peremptory writ denied.

Faucett & Ring, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Overton, Lyman & Plumb, of Los Angeles, amici curiæ, for respondents.

Max Schleimer, of Los Angeles, for respondent Abbott and as amicus curiæ for other respondents.

WORKS, P. J. Petitioner was one of several defendants in an action pending in respondent court, in which action one Ranney was the plaintiff. On September 28, 1926, under proper title of court and cause, the defendants and Ranney stipulated:

> "That the said cause may be tried before Robert E. Abbott, a member of the bar, admitted to practice before the Supreme Court of the State of California, and that his action in the trial of said cause shall have the same effect as if he were a judge of this court."

The stipulation also provided: "Fees of judge pro tem. to be taxed as costs." Appended to the stipulation was an order, signed by one of the judges of respondent court, approving "the selection of Robert E. Abbott to try the above entitled cause." Acting pursuant to the stipulation and to the order approving it, respondent Abbott began a trial of the cause, heard all the evidence, took the cause under submission, and on October 19, 1926, directed judgment for the plaintiff. On November 2, 1926, the people of the state adopted certain amendments to the Constitution, and these changes took effect on the same day. Thereafter respondent Abbott was about to sign and to file with respondent Lampton his findings and judgment in the cause which had been submitted to him as a judge pro tempore, when petitioner, believing that the powers of the judge pro tempore had been terminated by the recently adopted constitutional amendments, applied to this court for the writ of prohibition, to prevent further action by respondent Abbott in the cause, and an alternative writ issued. We are now to determine whether petitioner shall have a peremptory writ. All questions in the proceeding arise upon the face of the petition for the writ.

Before the adoption of the amendments of 1926, section 6 of article 6 of the Constitution contained this provision:

> "There may be as many sessions of [the superior] court, at the same time, as there are judges thereof."

This language applied only to the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco. Prior to the amendments of 1926 section 7 of the same article read, in part:

> "In any county, or city and county, other than the city and county of San Francisco, in which there shall be more than one judge of the superior court, the judges of such court may hold as many sessions of said court at the same time as there are judges thereof. * * *

Before the amendments mentioned section 8 of the article stood as follows:

> "A judge of any superior court may hold a superior court in any county, at the request of a judge of the superior court thereof, and upon the request of the governor it shall be his duty so to do. But a cause in the superior court may be tried by a judge pro tempore, who must be a member of the bar, agreed upon in writing by the parties litigant, or their attorneys of record, approved by the court, and sworn to try the cause, and the person so selected shall be empowered to act in such capacity in all further proceedings in any suit or proceedings tried before him until the final determination thereof. There may be as many sessions of a su> perior court at the same time as there are judges thereof, including any judge or judges acting upon request, or any judge or judges pro tempore. The judgments, orders, acts and proceedings of any session of any superior court held by one or more judges acting upon request, or judge or judges pro tempore, shall be equally effective as if the judge or all of the judges of such court presided at such session."

Before the amendments of 1926 sections 6 and 7 had never been altered. Until 1926 they both stood as they were when the Constitution was originally adopted. The text of section 8, as above set forth, represents an amendment adopted by the people at the general election of 1922, although the section had been cast in much the same form by an amendment adopted in 1910.

By the amendments of 1926 the language of section 6 providing for the number of sessions of the superior court was changed to read thus:

> "There may be as many sessions of a superior court, at the same time, as there are judges elected, appointed or assigned thereto."

This language was not applied alone to the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco, but to the superior court generally. At the same time section 7 was so amended as to strike out all reference to the number of sessions which may be held by the superior court, and section 8 was so altered as to eliminate all provision for the number of sessions of the court, and, as well, all reference to judges pro tempore. These three amendments were adopted by the people in a group; that is, they were incorporated in one so-called "constitutional amendment" which was voted upon by the electorate as a whole. By the same "constitutional amendment," that is, in the same group of amendments, and voted upon at the same time and in the same manner, the people added a new section to article 6, to be known as section 1a. This section provides for a judicial council, and it directs the chief justice of the Supreme Court, as chairman of the council, which office is declared by the amendment to rest in him, to "provide for the assignment of any judge to another court of a like or higher jurisdiction to assist a court or judge whose calendar is congested, to act for a judge who is disqualified or unable to act, or to sit and hold court where a vacancy in the office of judge has occurred."

[1] Considering together the various amendments embodied in the single "constitutional amendment" adopted at the election in November, 1926, it is manifest to us that the sentence by one of them incorporated in section 6, and above quoted, must be construed as if it read: "There may be as many sessions of a superior court, at the same time, as there are judges elected [by the people], appointed [by the governor] or assigned [by the chairman of the judicial council] thereto." It is further manifest to us, upon the face of the amendments when considered together, that since November 2, 1926, litigants have not possessed the right to stipulate for judges pro tempore of the superior court to try their actions, nor has the superior court had the power to approve such selections. This result appears from the joint operation of the amendment of section 8, striking out all reference to judges pro tempore, and of the amendment of section 6, in effect providing that no sessions of the superior court may be held by judges pro tempore, but only by judges elected, appointed and assigned in the modes already pointed out. This view disposes of the contention of respondents that section 72 of the Code of Civil Procedure, relating to judges pro tempore of the superior court, is still in operative effect.

[2] We have seen that by the constitutional amendments of 1926 the people wiped out the pre-existing right to select judges pro tempore. The question yet remaining to be determined in the present proceeding is this: Did the amendments operate to terminate the powers of judges pro tempore who had been selected and who had entered upon the discharge of their duties before November 2, 1926, the date upon which the amendments were incorporated in the organic law? Respondents, in addition to the point they make, based upon the assumed continued existence of section 72 of the Code of Civil Procedure, present several contentions upon the question just stated. We think, however, that none of them, except one, presents matter which we need pause to consider. Therefore, without further reference to the others, we shall now address ourselves to that one. It is insisted that the amendments of 1926, if they so operate as to terminate the powers of a judge pro tempore who had been selected and who had entered upon the discharge of his duties before the amendments were adopted, are unconstitutional to that extent, as an infringement of the clause of the Constitution of the United States (article 1, § 10, cl. 1) which forbids the passage of laws impairing the obligation of contracts.

[3, 4] In considering this question it becomes necessary, first, to determine whether the stipulation selecting respondent Abbott as a judge pro tempore is a contract within the meaning of that clause of the national organic law which is above mentioned. The right of parties litigant to "agree" upon a judge pro tempore to try their cases, under section 8 of article 6 of the Constitution as it stood when respondent Abbott was selected to act in that capacity by petitioner and Ranney, was somewhat akin to the right, often conferred by statute, to submit disputed matters to arbitration. The Supreme Court has said:

> "The trial of a cause before a person selected by the parties to act as judge may be likened to an arbitration, in which issues of law and fact are determined by 'one or more persons' designated by the parties in interest." Graziani v. Denny, 174 Cal. 178, 162 P. 397.

If such a trial is like an arbitration it seems not too much to say that a stipulation for the trial is like an agreement for arbitration. It is well settled that such an agreement, when fully executed by the rendition of award, binds the parties to an obedience to the award, even when they have not agreed expressly so to be bound. The mere agreement to submit to arbitration is enough impliedly to obligate the parties to observe the terms of the award. Robinson v. Templar Lodge, 97 Cal. 62, 31 P. 609. And it would seem to follow logically that if two parties agree to submit a dispute to arbitration and enter upon a trial of the controversy before duly selected arbitrators, each of them is bound to go forward with the hearing to the end, or to suffer the consequences of a failure to participate in it. It further follows that petitioner and Ranney were obligated, under the stipulation entered into by them, to proceed to a conclusion of the trial commenced before respondent Abbott.

[5] The view just expressed is based upon the law of arbitration and upon the analogy therewith which springs from the facts of the present case. The view may be reinforced by a consideration of those facts themselves, in the light of the provisions of the Constitution under which the stipulation between the parties was made. Section 8 of article 6, as it stood at the time the stipulation was made and at the time when respondent Abbott had heard the evidence in the cause intrusted to him and had ordered judgment upon it, provided that "a cause * * * may be tried by a judge pro tempore, * * * agreed upon in writing by the parties litigant. * * *" Not only so, but the section provided that "the person so selected shall be empowered to act in such capacity in all further proceedings in any suit or proceedings tried before him until the final determination thereof." Under familiar rules of law these provisions became a part of the stipulation selecting respondent Abbott and must be read with its express language in order to admeasure its legal effect. If the contention of petitioner is to prevail, respondent Abbott is robbed of authority to act as judge pro tempore in the cause confided to his judgment "until the final determination thereof," despite the agreement of the parties to that effect which was impliedly imported into the stipulation from the Constitution. Ranney, then, will be deprived of the fruits of the stipulation—of the judgment which was about to ripen from the exercise of jurisdiction by the judge pro tempore up to the point at which it is sought to halt it. The stipulation provided that the fees of the judge pro tempore were to be taxed as costs. This was doubtless a proper clause in the concord of the parties, but if it was not, we must presume that the charges of the stipulated official must be met by someone, for it cannot be assumed that his services were to be rendered gratuitously. Again, ordinary costs must have been incurred in the hearing before him, or certainly, they may have been incurred, and so far as the question here presented is concerned the result is the same. Yet again, each of the parties, we must assume, become liable for the payment of counsel fees arising from the hearing before the judge pro tempore. If petitioner's contention is to be upheld, all these costs and expenses have been incurred for naught, and the money to meet them has been or will be thrown away, and all because of the exercise by the people of the right to amend the Constitution.

It would seem that the liabilities just mentioned have been incurred because of the stipulation into which Ranney and petitioner entered. When parties commence a trial before an elected or an appointed judge, it is true that they are bound by the law to conclude it. Neither can escape the grind of the wheels of justice. It is true, also, that a judge pro tempore has all the powers, in a cause before him, of the ordinary judge, and that the parties who selected him, because of that fact, are forced by the law to conclude the trial of the cause. Nevertheless, they need not originally have gone before him except upon a meeting of their minds under a free exercise of volition. It is for that reason, doubtless, that the Supreme Court has likened a trial before a judge pro tempore to a trial before an arbitrator. It is not the compulsion of the law, originally, which takes parties before a judge pro tempore, but the compulsion of the stipulation of which he is the creature. A denial of the right to conclude a trial before him is therefore the denial of a right to carry out their stipulation—their contract.

Petitioner says that the stipulation here in question is not a contract because under the Constitution the selection of the judge pro tempore must have been approved by the court in which he was to sit. This requirement, however, affected in no degree the right of the parties to contract. As a judge pro tempore, selected by agreement to sit in a particular case, is nevertheless to engage in the administration of a public trust, government is interested in the selection of a proper person to discharge the trust, and the approval of the court was intended as a safeguard against the selection of improper persons. Such approval affected not the mutual obligations of the parties to the contract here involved, but those obligations became effective and binding only upon the approval. Surely, the stipulation is no less a contract, when it does become effective, even if that state of affairs eventuates only after an approval by the court. The parties have agreed to do a particular thing and by the agreement they have finally become obligated to do it. Petitioner inveighs against the sanctity of the stipulation upon the ground stated in the following quotation:

> "Contracts which have a tendency to obstruct or interfere with the administration of justice are clearly against public policy." 6 Cal. Jur. 130.

This language has no application here. The stipulation did not interfere with the administration of justice, but was in furtherance of it. The question is whether the amendments to the Constitution interfere with the contract, impair its obligation. Petitioner makes other points under his contention that the stipulation was not a contract, but we think they are not of sufficient merit to require a specific consideration.

It would seem that the paper which the parties signed, in the light of the conditions under which it was executed, possessed all the elements of a contract. There were competent parties, of course. There was a subject-matter to be dealt with, in an action to be tried. Consideration was present in the advantage to be derived from an early trial of the cause, and also in a burden contemplated by the parties—the payment of the fees of the judge pro tempore by the defeated party.

[6] The stipulation was a contract, and there is no doubt, coming to the final question, that its obligation is impaired by the amendments to the Constitution, if they be construed as contended by petitioner. A Legislature may not prevent the carrying out of a contract to submit a dispute to arbitration, the contract having been executed pursuant to authority granted by a pre-existing law. State v. McPeak, 31 Neb. 139, 47 N. W. 691; State v. Thayer, 46 Neb. 137, 64 N. W. 700. The Supreme Court has made the following quotation from an opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States:

> "The obligation of a contract 'is the law which binds the parties to perform their agreement.' The prohibition has no reference to the degree of impairment; the largest and the least are alike forbidden." Bates v. Gregory, 89 Cal. 387, 26 P. 891.

The same authority has again been quoted thus:

> "The obligation of a contract includes everything within its obligatory scope. Among these elements nothing is more important than the means of enforcement. This is the breath of its vital existence. Without it, the contract, as such, in the view of the law, ceases to be, and falls into the class of those imperfect obligations, as they are termed, which depend for their fulfillment upon the will and conscience of those upon whom they rest." Welsh v. Cross, 146 Cal. 621, 81 P. 229, 106 Am. St. Rep. 63, 2 Ann. Cas. 905.

The alternative writ of prohibition is vacated and a peremptory writ is denied.

HILLWIG v. BOYER. (Civ. 5315.) ★

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 18, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 16, 1927.)

1. Mortgages 🔑38(1)—Evidence held to support finding that deed was intended merely as additional security.

Evidence held sufficient to support finding that deed absolute on face was not delivered to or received by creditor for purpose of passing absolute title, but was intended merely as additional security.

2. Mortgages 🔑32(3)—Deed given as security is "mortgage" as matter of law, and court's reference to it as "additional security" is not error.

Deed given as security for debt, and not intended to pass title, is as matter of law a mortgage with incidents that attach to mortgages, and court's reference to it as "additional security" is not error.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Mortgage.]

3. Mortgages 🔑38(2)—Proof of parties' intention that deed should be mortgage must be clear.

Where evidence is offered to convert deed absolute in form into mortgage, it ought to be so clear as to leave no doubt that real intention of parties was to execute mortgage.

4. Appeal and error 🔑1011(1)—Clarity of proof of intention of parties that deed should be mortgage is for trial court on conflicting evidence.

Where evidence is conflicting, clarity of proof on issue whether parties to deed absolute on face intended that it should be mortgage is largely matter for trial court to determine.

5. Reference 🔑7(3)—In action for money had and received, brought to have deed absolute on face declared mortgage, reference to referee for accounting held not error.

In action for money had and received, brought to have deed absolute on face declared mortgage, reference to referee for accounting held not error, where judgment could not be accurately figured because itemized statement was not furnished by defendant, since equity acquired jurisdiction for purpose of decreeing deed to have been intended as mortgage.

6. Action 🔑32—Action does not fail because plaintiff mistakes his remedy.

Party cannot be sent out of court unless on his facts he is entitled to no relief either at law or in equity, mistake in remedy being insufficient, since legal and equitable relief are administered in same form and according to same general plan.

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

7. Money received 🔑1—Action for money had and received lies where person possesses money which he ought to pay over to another.

Generally speaking, action for money had and received lies in all cases where one person has in his possession money which in equity and good conscience he ought to pay over to another.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edward F. Hahn, Judge.

Action by George N. Hillwig against J. F. Boyer. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

G. C. De Garmo and H. B. Cornell, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Hyman Schwartz, E. M. Swartz, and Samuel W. Newman, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. In this action judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff and against defendant for $3,864.92, and from this judgment defendant has appealed. He urges two points:

(1) "The evidence does not establish that the deed was intended to be anything other than what on its face it purports to be."

(2) "The ex parte order made by the court sending the case to a referee for hearing was void, and the judgment predicated upon the report of the referee is without support."

The complaint stated an action for money had and received, and the answer controverted the complaint. Without objection, however, the cause was tried by the plaintiff on the theory that he was indebted to the defendant on numerous notes secured by mortgages on his real estate to the amount of $15,000 and accrued interest; that the indebtedness was past due, and that defendant was demanding additional security; that the only additional security he could give the defendant was to deed him all of the mortgaged property to hold until a sale or disposition of the property could be made and the defendant paid; and that plaintiff on December 6, 1918, executed and delivered to defendant a deed, which in effect was nothing more than security to defendant and the control of the properties. The case was tried by defendant on the theory that the deed constituted an absolute sale and conveyance and a full settlement of all indebtedness.

[1] As to the first point urged by appellant, the court found that on December 6, 1918, plaintiff owed defendant $15,000 principal and accumulated interest; that on said date the deed was made and delivered to defendant as security; that no consideration passed for said deed; that under the agreement upon which the transfer was made the defendant was to hold the property and sell the same; that defendant was to collect rents and apply the proceeds on the indebtedness of plaintiff, less the expenses of managing the property and the payment of taxes, water bills, interest, and repairs; that on December 24, 1920, the defendant had realized from the sale of said property $19,500 cash and $2,314.67 in rent, and that the interest on the rent money to that date amounted to $114.99, making the total sum on said date of $21,929.66; that on said date the plaintiff owed the defendant the total sum of $18,438.14, being the principal and accumulated interest on the notes, according to their tenor.

Striking a balance, the court found defendant indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $3,491.52, but further found that defendant was entitled to compensation for his services in collecting some of the rents, and fixed such compensation at $75, and rendered judgment for plaintiff for $3,416.52, with interest at 7 per cent. from December 24, 1920, to date of judgment amounting to $448.40, making the total judgment $3,864.92.

Appellant finds no fault with the amount of the judgment, nor does he find any fault with the correctness of the account returned by the referee, but contents himself with the two points—the sufficiency of the evidence to overcome the deed absolute on its face, and that the court was without jurisdiction to appoint a referee to take an accounting after the court had found the issues in favor of plaintiff.

In support of his contention that the deed was not an absolute transfer of the property described therein, but was given merely as additional security, the plaintiff testified that in December, 1918, he said to defendant: "Mr. Boyer, if you are not satisfied with the security you hold, I will be willing to grant deed you that property and additional property to further secure your claim;" that he afterwards got a blank grant deed and read the description of the property to him and he put it down on the typewriter; Mr. Boyer filled out the grant deed; "I took the deed that evening; the next morning my wife and I appeared before a notary public, signed it; I put the revenue stamps on it, took it to the courthouse and recorded it; I paid for the recording fees and for the revenue stamps; that was all the conversation on December 6, 1918; I was to allow Mr. Boyer to collect the rents; Mr. Boyer said 'If I acquire a deed to the property, allow me to collect the rent, I will audit them to your credit, give you credit for everything above interest, taxes.'" Plaintiff testified that he collected some of the rents and after collecting the same he would either mail Mr. Boyer a check or take the money to him and submitted numerous canceled checks which were introduced in evidence. Plaintiff further testified that he handled the transaction with Brown Bros.; that he prepared the lease, took it to Mr. Boyer, who signed it, and that he delivered it to the Browns, collected the $330 check, and delivered it to the defendant; that he made repairs on the premises and received no compensation therefor, and that he talked to defendant about making certain repairs and defendant told him to have it done and adjust the amount to the rent; that there were continuous attempts made by him to sell the properties and numerous conferences held in regard thereto between himself and the defendant, and that about October, 1920, he had a conversation with Mr. Boyer at the Citizens' Trust & Savings Bank, and that those present were Mr. Waldenfels, Mr. Boyer, the escrow clerk, and himself; that when he showed Mr. Boyer the escrow instructions of the proposed sale to Mr. Waldenfels, Mr. Boyer said: "You have only allowed me $17,000. I will ask now $17,500 to release," and plaintiff said: "Mr. Boyer, you have told me that it was originally $16,500, and you told me a few days ago it was $17,000; now you have raised it to $17,500." That defendant said: "I have changed my mind. I have raised it to $17,500," and he further said: "You can't eat your cake and have it too." Plaintiff further testified that under the agreement with Mr. Boyer at the time the property was sold he was to have all over $17,500 that was realized; that defendant stated in the presence of Mr. Waldenfels and himself:

> "Well, gentlemen, I want to see Hillwig get his equity out of this property. I know he had worked hard for his equity, and all I want is my money. When I get that the balance of it goes back to Hillwig."

W. D. Merickel testified that defendant Boyer stated to him in November, 1920, that Hillwig was owing him $17,000, and when asked "What shape is that in? Is it in a mortgage or what?" that Boyer replied: "He was holding a deed to the property as security."

J. F. Reynolds testified that he met Boyer in company with plaintiff and others about December, 1920, and that Boyer stated that all the interest he had in the property was $17,000, and George C. Fetterman testified that near the end of 1920 he had a conversation with Mr. Boyer in which Boyer said—quoting from Mr. Fetterman's testimony:

> "Mr. Hillwig owed him a lot of money and that if he would pay him back some money that he could have his property, something to that effect—that Mr. Hillwig owed him a lot of money and that he was holding his property as security, something like that."

The defendant testified that he told plaintiff he would have to have additional security, or a settlement, or he would foreclose; that he received the deed on the 6th day of December, 1918, and filed it for record the next day; that no consideration passed; that none of the notes or mortgages were marked paid or satisfied of record until December, 1920, when the sale of the property was made; that he received $19,600 for the property; that he never paid the taxes on lots 111 and 112; that he did not on December 6, 1918, mark the notes covered, mortgage or trust deeds paid, nor give any evidence of payment at any time until the property covered by the mortgage and trust deeds was transferred by him; that he placed them in escrow.

The foregoing evidence in our opinion is ample to support the finding of the trial court that the deed in question was not delivered or received for the purpose of passing absolute title, but was intended merely as "additional security."

[2] Criticism is made by appellant of the term "additional security" used by the court in designating the nature or character of the conveyance made by respondent to appellant, and cites us to Renton v. Gibson, 148 Cal. 650, 84 P 186. That is a case where property was conveyed to the grantee for the purpose of bringing a suit to quiet title. In one complaint it was alleged that the property was conveyed "in trust," and in a subsequent complaint this averment was stricken out and it was alleged that the property was conveyed as "security." There the court says:

> "If the finding of the court, following in this regard as it does the allegation of the complaint, is to be taken as a declaration that the deed from plaintiff to defendant was security in the sense that it was a mortgage merely, then this finding is not only not clearly and convincingly supported by the evidence, as all the authorities require shall be done before a written instrument of such dignity as a deed shall be proved other than what on its face it purports to be."

In that case the complaint also alleges that "up to" a certain date (the date of the deed) plaintiff had title, from which assumption arises that after that date he parted with title, and of course if plaintiff parted with the title on delivery of the deed, such deed could not be construed to be a mortgage.

Further on in the opinion the court in enunciating the law applicable to the situation here presented says:

> "Whatever be the form of an instrument other than a deed of trust, it is of course well settled that if it be intended as security merely, it is a mortgage, title does not pass, and only a lien results in favor of the named grantee, who in law is but the mortgagee," and cites section 2924 of the Civil Code to the same effect.

Much discussion is indulged in by counsel for appellant for the purpose of emphasizing the fact that both counsel for respondent and the court were at a loss to properly characterize the deed given. On examination of the authorities cited, as well as numerous authorities dealing with the question of the effect of deeds absolute on their face but intended as mortgages, there seems to be a lack of uniformity in the mode of expression by our appellate tribunals in the characterization of such instruments. The consideration to be indulged in is not what shall we call a deed absolute on its face but intended as a mortgage, but, rather, is the deed absolute on its face intended as a mortgage or additional security? If either, the characterization given to the instrument is unimportant, the sole question being: Did the parties intend by the instrument granting the properties to absolutely vest title in the grantee, or did the grantor reserve unto himself the right to redeem from the deed absolute on its face, by paying the indebtedness, to secure which the deed was given? The law is clear and well settled and needs no elaboration to the effect that if it were the intention of the parties that the deed should simply be security for a present, antecedent, or future indebtedness, then the deed is nothing more than a mortgage with the incidents that attach to mortgages. It therefore matters not that the trial court found the instrument to be one of "security," for as a matter of law a deed given to secure an indebtedness and not intended to pass title is a mortgage.

[3, 4] Appellant has cited us to many cases holding that when evidence is offered to convert a deed absolute in form into a mortgage the evidence ought to be so clear as to leave no doubt that the real intention of the parties was to execute a mortgage, otherwise the intention appearing on the face of the deed ought to prevail. We recognize this to be the rule, yet the clarity of the proof is largely a matter for the trial court to determine. As was stated in Couts v. Winston, 153 Cal. 686, 96 P. 357:

> "But whether or not the evidence offered to change the ostensible character of the instrument is clear and convincing is a question for the trial court. * * * In such cases, as in others, the determination of that court in favor of either party upon conflicting or contradictory evidence is not open to review in this court. * * * If therefore the evidence offered by plaintiff, taken by itself, was sufficiently 'clear, satisfactory and convincing' to satisfy the trial court that the deed was in fact a mortgage, the finding made cannot be overthrown merely because numerous witnesses, whose character is not impeached, gave positive testimony to the contrary effect."

[5] It is urged under appellant's second assignment of error that this being an action at law, no reference for the purpose of an accounting could be made. Numerous authorities are cited, several of them decided before the adoption of the Codes, and all involving cases where the reference was for the determination of the entire issues involved. In the instant case all questions of fact had been determined by the court prior to the reference, the court withholding the entry of its findings and final judgment pending the furnishing of an itemized statement by appellant of the net receipts from the rentals, the court making the following minute order:

> "Upon examination of the testimony for the purpose of determining the proper amount of credits and debits to be allowed and charged defendant, it appears that an itemized statement of debits and credits which was to be furnished by defendant during the trial was not put in evidence; hence it is impossible to accurately figure the amount of the judgment. The order of submission of the cause will be set aside and Willard Goodwin appointed as referee for the purpose of an accounting," etc.

Upon the reference being made appellant appeared with his counsel and offered his books in evidence for the purpose of determining the rentals received by him.

[6] While the action is one for money had and received, the cause was tried for the purpose of having a deed absolute on its face decreed a mortgage, which is a proceeding in equity, and equity having acquired jurisdiction for the purpose of decreeing the deed to have been intended as a mortgage, even if the matter of accounting is not of itself a subject of concurrent equity, jurisdiction may with propriety be referred. Jones v. Gardner, 57 Cal. 641. Legal and equitable relief are administered in this state in the same form and according to the same general plan. A party cannot be sent out of court merely because his facts do not entitle him to relief at law, nor merely because he is not entitled to relief in equity, as the case may be. He can be sent out of court only when upon his facts he is entitled to no relief either at law or in equity. Consequently, an action does not now, as formerly, fail because a plaintiff has made mistake as to the form of his remedy. Dean et al. v. Shingle et al., 198 Cal. 660, 246 P. 1049, 46 A. L. R. 1156.

[7] The basis for an action for money had and received is that the defendant has money which in equity and good conscience he ought to pay to the plaintiff, and, generally speaking, the action lies in all cases where one person has in his possession money which in equity and good conscience he ought to pay over to another. Sacramento County v. Southern Pacific Co., 127 Cal. 221, 59 P. 568, 825. This action is in the nature of an equitable one. A debt sufficient for such a purpose may arise from the operation of purely equitable principles. Fontaine v. Lacassie, 36 Cal. App. 175, 171 P. 812; Spitzer v. City of Oakland, 32 Cal. App. 748, 136 P. 1044.

This disposes of the errors urged by appellant. From what we have said it follows that there is no merit in the appeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. SHAFFER. (Cr. 1449.)

1. Criminal law ⚷878(1), 984—Where defendant held up occupants of store with revolver, obtaining check, separate verdicts and judgments under counts charging robbery and burglary held not error.

Where defendant held up occupants of store with revolver, obtaining check for $56.88, separate verdicts and judgments under counts charging robbery and burglary held not error, since he committed burglary when he entered with intent to commit crime of larceny, and committed robbery when he took check by force and fear from person of owner.

2. Burglary ⚷41(1)—Robbery ⚷24(1)—Evidence of identity held to sustain conviction for robbery and burglary.

Evidence held sufficient to identify defendant as one who held up occupants of store with revolver obtaining checks and money, in view of partial identification by two witnesses and defendant's confession, and hence sufficient to sustain conviction for robbery and burglary.

3. Robbery ⚷11—Unloaded revolver is "dangerous weapon," within meaning of robbery statute (Pen. Code, § 211a).

Unloaded revolver is "dangerous weapon," within meaning of Pen. Code, § 211a, providing that robbery by person armed with dangerous or deadly weapon is of first degree.

4. Criminal law ⚷517(4)—Admission of confession held not error, in view of testimony that it was given freely and voluntarily.

In prosecution for robbery and burglary, admission of defendant's confession held not error, where witnesses for people testified that it was given freely and voluntarily and was not obtained by use of force, threats, fear, or hope of reward or immunity.

5. Criminal law ⚷531(½)—Refusal to allow accused to retestify as to voluntary character of confession except as part of his own case, after confession was read to jury, held not error.

Refusal to allow defendant to testify as to voluntary character of confession except as part of his own case, after confession had been read to jury and state's witness had been recalled and testified, held not error, where defendant had previously testified that confession was obtained by threats and promise of probation.

6. Criminal law ⚷1170(4)—Refusal to allow accused to retestify as to voluntary character of confession except as part of his own case, after confession was read to jury, if error, held harmless, where defendant's testimony was then given.

Refusal to allow defendant to retestify as to voluntary character of confession except as part of his own case, after confession had been read to jury and state's witness had been recalled, if error, held not prejudicial, where prosecution closed case immediately and defendant's testimony was then given.

7. Criminal law ⚷1144(12)—Testimony concerning confession must be assumed to have been properly admitted on appeal, where evidence was conflicting as to its voluntary character.

Where evidence was conflicting as to voluntary character of confession, it must be assumed, on appeal, that testimony concerning it was properly admitted, since reviewing court cannot say that its admission was error unless such error appears, as matter of law, from record.

8. Larceny ⚷77(4)—Instruction that defendant's unexplained possession of stolen property will not alone justify conviction for larceny, but is circumstance to be considered, held proper.

In prosecution for robbery and burglary, instruction that defendant's mere unexplained possession of stolen property will not justify conviction for larceny, but is circumstance to be considered in determining guilt and must be accompanied by corroborating circumstance, held proper.

9. Criminal law ⚷829(12)—Instruction that possession of stolen property alone would not support conviction for larceny held properly refused, in view of instruction given.

In prosecution for robbery and burglary, refusal of instruction that possession of stolen property alone would not support conviction for larceny held not error, in view of instruction given that unexplained possession would not justify conviction but was circumstance to be considered.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and H. H. Linney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. The defendant was convicted under two counts of the information charging robbery and burglary. Judgment was rendered on each of said counts. Defendant appeals from the judgments and from the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

On July 10, 1926, about the hour of 9:30 p. m., a man wearing a burnt cork mask entered the store of R. C. Welliver, in Los Angeles, drew and cocked a revolver, held up the occupants of the store, thereby obtaining a check for $56.88, together with other checks and money. On July 12th the defendant, having indorsed the above-mentioned check, deposited the same in an account which he opened with the Citizens' Trust & Savings Bank. Welliver and Brownell, two of the occupants of the store, gave testimony tending to identify the defendant. The defendant's landlady testified that the defendant was absent from home between the hours of 7:30 and 10:30 p. m., on July 10th, and that upon his return he washed his face and hands. The officer who searched the defendant's room testified that he found a Colt 45 revolver, loaded with 5 shells, a leather holster and belt with 13 cartridges, and a braided leather strap. The confession of the defendant was admitted in evidence, in which the defendant confessed to the robbery and stated that he used the gun offered in evidence at the time of the commission of the crime, but denied that it was loaded. The only evidence offered by the defendant was his testimony that the confession was obtained from him through a promise by the officers to help the defendant obtain probation and through certain other promises and threats.

[1] Defendant's first point is that the trial court erred in permitting the jury to bring in two verdicts, one under each count, and in pronouncing judgment on each of said verdicts. Defendant is mistaken in his contention. Defendant committed the crime of burglary when he entered the store of R. C. Welliver with the intent to commit the crime of grand larceny. Had defendant taken no further action, he could not have been charged with a further offense, but, when defendant by force and fear took from the possession of R. C. Welliver one check of the value of $56.88, defendant committed the separate crime of robbery. The numerous cases cited by defendant are beside the point. In reply thereto it is only necessary to cite two cases decided by this court. In People v. Sharp, 58 Cal. App. 637, 209 P. 266, where the facts were very similar to those in the instant case, it was held that the defendant was properly convicted of both burglary and robbery. In People v. Snyder (Cal. App.) 239 P. 705, it is said at page 706:

> "It is first contended by appellant that the two offenses charged, being based upon one single act or transaction, constitute only one offense, and although, under section 954 of the Penal Code, the two offenses might be charged in separate counts in the information, the defendant could be found guilty of and punished for but one offense. This question seems to have been definitely settled by the Supreme Court of this state adversely to appellant's contention." People v. Garnett, 29 Cal. 622, 628; People v. Curtis, 76 Cal. 57, 17 P. 941.

In People v. Devlin, 143 Cal. 128, 76 P. 900, the court said:

> "It is evident that one can commit burglary by entering a building with intent to commit any felony, such as rape, robbery, arson, or murder. It is also evident that the crime consists of the entry with the intent set forth in the statute. After one has entered a building with intent to commit any other felony than grand or petit larceny, he has committed burglary, but he may then find that it is impossible, for various reasons, to commit the felony which it was his intention to commit when he entered, and conclude to commit larceny by stealing some article of value in the building. He thus, in rapid succession, commits two crimes. Indeed, after he has committed burglary he might under favorable circumstances commit any felony named in the statute."

[2] Defendant next urges that the verdict is contrary to the evidence by reason of lack of identification of the defendant. We think the evidence as heretofore stated, taken with the partial identification of the defendant by two witnesses and defendant's confession, was sufficient to connect the defendant with the crime as charged.

[3] Appellant's next contention is that the accused was not armed with a deadly weapon because there was no direct proof that the revolver was loaded, and for that reason defendant could not be convicted of robbery in the first degree. We do not believe this point to be well taken. An unloaded revolver is a "dangerous" weapon, within the meaning of section 211a of the Penal Code. In People v. Egan (Cal. App.) 246 P. 337, it is said at page 338:

> "Appellant urges also that the evidence is insufficient to sustain a conviction of first degree robbery because it did not appear that the revolver used in the perpetration of the crime was loaded. In support of this point appellant cites the case of People v. Sylva, 143 Cal. 62, 76 P. 814. That case is not in point, however, because it involved the construction of the term 'deadly weapon' as used in the Code section defining the crime of assault with a deadly weapon (Pen. Code, § 245), which is a different term from the one employed in the Code section defining first degree robbery. The latter section declares that: 'All robbery * * * perpetrated * * * by a person being armed with a dangerous or deadly weapon is robbery in the first degree.' Pen. Code, § 211a. (Italics ours.) It is a matter of common knowledge, that in committing robbery pistols are frequently used as bludgeons rather than as firearms. The fact, therefore, that a person perpetrating such crime is armed with a pistol is enough to justify the conclusion that the pistol used by him is a 'dangerous' weapon within the meaning of said section 211a of the Penal Code, even though it be not loaded."

[4-6] The defendant further urges that defendant's confession should not have been received in evidence. We find no error in the admission of this confession. The witnesses for the people testified that the confession was given freely and voluntarily, and was not obtained by the use of force or threats or fear, or hope of reward or immunity. This testimony was not shaken by cross-examination on the voir dire. Defendant took the witness stand and testified by way of defense that the officers obtained the confession through a promise to help him obtain probation and other promises and threats. This was denied by the officers. Counsel for defendant concluded his cross-examination on voir dire, and the confession was admitted in evidence over appellant's objection.

[7] After the confession was read to the jury, Officer Clark was recalled to the stand for further direct examination and testified that defendant had said the gun offered in evidence was the one he used in the robbery. At this stage, during further cross-examination of Officer Clark, counsel for defendant, after the confession had been received in evidence, offered to have the defendant take the stand and testify concerning the voluntary character of his confession. The trial court then ruled that defendant could not at that time take the stand and so testify, except as a part of his own case. We think the ruling proper, but if this be error the defendant was not prejudiced thereby inasmuch as the prosecution closed its case immediately upon the confession being received in evidence, and the testimony of the defendant was then given. At the most, the testimony of the witnesses for the people and that of the defendant were in conflict as to the voluntary character of the confession. Under such circumstances, it must be assumed that the testimony concerning defendant's confession was properly admitted. As stated in People v. Castello, 194 Cal. 595, 599, 229 P. 855, 856:

> "The rule is well settled that whether or not a confession is free and voluntary is a preliminary question addressed to the trial court. People v. Loper, 159 Cal. 6, 112 P. 720 (37 L. R. A. [N. S.] 934), Ann. Cas. 1912B (1193) 1933; People v. Siemsen, 153 Cal. 387 (95 P. 863); People v. Grafft, 61 Cal. App. 7 (214 P. 273); People v. Middleton, 65 Cal. App. 175 (223 P. 448). A reviewing court cannot say that the trial court committed error in admitting a confession of guilt unless such error appears, as a matter of law, from the record presented. The trial court is clothed with considerable discretion in determining whether or not the confession was free and voluntary. See authorities last above cited. Where the evidence is conflicting on the subject it must be assumed that the testimony concerning defendants' confessions was properly admitted. People v. Tugwell, 28 Cal. App. 348 (152 P. 740)."

[8, 9] Finally, defendant complains of instruction A, given by the court, upon the request of the jury for further instructions after several hours' deliberation, and also of the court's refusal to give defendant's instruction submitted at the same time. Instruction A reads as follows:

> "You are instructed that the mere possession of stolen property, unexplained by the defendant, however soon after taking, is not sufficient to justify a conviction of larceny; it is a circumstance, which taken in connection with other testimony, is to determine the question of guilt. Yet, if you believe from the evidence that the defendant was found in the possession of the property which you are satisfied was stolen from E. C. Welliver, or claiming to be the owner thereof, after the alleged taking, this is a circumstance tending in some degree to show guilt, but not sufficient, standing alone and unsupported by other evidence, to warrant you in finding him guilty. There must be, in addition to proof of possession of stolen property, proof of corroborating circumstances tending of themselves to establish guilt. These corroborating circumstances may consist of acts, or conduct or declarations of the defendant, or any other circumstances tending to show the guilt of the accused.
> "If the jury believe the property was stolen, and was seen in the possession of defendant shortly after being stolen, the failure of the defendant to account for such possession, or to show that such possession was honestly obtained, is a circumstance tending to show his guilt, and the accused is bound to explain the possession, in order to remove the effect of the possession as a circumstance to be considered in connection with other suspicious facts, if the evidence discloses any such."

Defendant's requested instruction is as follows:

> "The court instructs the jury that the possession of stolen property, standing alone, is not sufficient to support a conviction of larceny. And if you find from the evidence that the fact of possession, if you believe that fact, and it is not corroborated by other facts in evidence which you believe beyond a reasonable doubt, then you should acquit the defendant."

We see no error either in giving the requested instruction or in refusing defendant's instruction because included in instruction A.

The judgment and order denying motion for a new trial are affirmed.

DE WITT v. SIDES et al. (Civ. 5694.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 8, 1927.)

1. Mines and minerals 🔑20(1)—Boundaries of mining location must be marked within reasonable time after posting notice and before adverse rights attach (Civ. Code, §§ 1426, 1426a; U. S. Comp. St. § 4620).

To acquire valid title to mining claim, under Civ. Code, §§ 1426, 1426a, and Rev. St. U. S. § 2324 (U. S. Comp. St. § 4620), boundaries of location must be marked or defined within reasonable time after posting notice and before adverse rights attach.

2. Mines and minerals 🔑38(16)—Right to possession of unpatented mining claim shown only by showing actual pedis possessio as against mere wrongdoer, or compliance with legal requirements (Civ. Code, §§ 1426, 1426a; U. S. Comp. St. § 4620).

Party can show right to possession of mining claim, when no patent has issued, only by showing actual pedis possessio as against mere wrongdoer, or by showing compliance with requirements of Civ. Code, §§ 1426, 1426a, and Rev. St. U. S. § 2324 (U. S. Comp. St. § 4620).

3. Mines and minerals 🔑38(16)—Plaintiff in ejectment, not in possession of unpatented mining claim nor marking boundaries, held not to have established prima facie title (Civ. Code, §§ 1426, 1426a; U. S. Comp. St. § 4620).

Where neither plaintiff in ejectment nor his grantor were in possession of unpatented mining claim, and neither marked its boundaries in manner required by Civ. Code, §§ 1426, 1426a, and Rev. St. U. S. § 2324 (U. S. Comp. St. § 4620) before defendants took possession and complied with all legal requirements as to location, plaintiff failed to establish prima facie title and was not entitled to judgment.

4. Mines and minerals 🔑38(25)—Plaintiff in ejectment held not entitled to judgment on ground that defendants, in entering on mining claim, violated quarantine, which prevented plaintiff from marking claim in compliance with law (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 1).

Plaintiff in ejectment held not entitled to judgment on ground that defendants, in taking possession of mining claim, violated hoof and mouth disease quarantine, which prevented his compliance with law, in absence of findings that defendants were not in district when quarantine was proclaimed or did not afterward enter it lawfully or without knowledge of quarantine; presumption being that they were innocent of wrongdoing, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 1.

5. Mines and minerals 🔑38(24)—Findings implying wrongful entry on mining claim by defendants in ejectment cannot supply plaintiff's failure to mark boundaries (Civ. Code, §§ 1426, 1426a; U. S. Comp. St. § 4620).

Findings implying wrongful entry on mining claim by defendants in ejectment in violation of hoof and mouth disease quarantine cannot supply plaintiff's failure to mark boundaries of claim, which is essential element in plaintiff's title, under Civ. Code, §§ 1426, 1426a, and Rev. St. U. S. § 2324 (U. S. Comp. St. § 4620).

6. Ejectment 🔑9(3)—Plaintiff in ejectment must stand on strength of his own title.

Plaintiff must stand on strength of his own title alone, to establish a prima facie case in ejectment.

7. Mines and minerals 🔑27(1)—Wrongful entry on mining claim in violation of quarantine would not invalidate title.

Wrongful entry on mining claim by defendants in ejectment in violation of hoof and mouth disease quarantine would not invalidate their title; existence of such quarantine having no effect on operation of mining laws.

8. Mines and minerals 🔑27(3)—Entry on quarantined mining claim held, at most, offense against health laws, invading no personal or property rights of claimants not complying with legal requirements (Civ. Code, §§ 1426, 1426a; U. S. Comp. St. § 4620).

Entry on mining claim in violation of hoof and mouth disease quarantine was offense against state health laws, if constituting a criminal offense punishable as misdemeanor, and did not amount to invasion of any personal or property right of prior claimant or his grantor, who had not taken possession or complied with requirements of Civ. Code, §§ 1426, 1426a, and Rev. St. U. S. § 2324 (U. S. Comp. St. § 4620), as to location of claim.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; S. L. Strother, Judge.

Ejectment by Aldo De Witt against W. I. Sides and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed, with directions.

Hansen & Jertberg and Gallaher & Jertberg, all of Fresno, for appellants.

Burns & Watkins, of Fresno, for respondent.

KNIGHT, J. This is an action in ejectment, wherein plaintiff obtained judgment for the recovery of the possession of a mining claim. Defendants have appealed on the judgment roll alone, contending that the findings are insufficient to support the judgment.

The facts found were as follows: On March 31, 1924, Oscar De Witt, plaintiff's grantor, posted a notice of location on the mining claim in question, situate on government land in Fresno county, but did not distinctly mark the location on the ground so that its boundaries could be readily traced. On April 2, 1924, he caused said notice of location to be recorded in the county recorder's office in said county, and on April 26, 1924, which was within 30 days after posting the notice of location, accompanied by a man named King, undertook to again go upon said claim for the purpose of staking and monumenting the same, but, upon reaching a point about one-half mile therefrom, "they came to and saw a sign on a closed gate opening into the field embracing said mining claim, giving notice to all people not to enter into or on the territory within the gate" while a provisional quarantine was in effect, which the court found had been proclaimed on March 27, 1924, by the Governor of California on account of the hoof and mouth disease at that time prevalent among the cattle in that part of Fresno county. On the same day of the unsuccessful attempt to reach said claim, De Witt conveyed all of his interest therein by deed to plaintiff.

The day following, and on April 27, 1924, knowing that De Witt had so posted said notice on such claim, "the defendants, persons and citizens of the United States, entered into and upon said mining claim and have ever since remained in possession of the same, and on April 30, 1924, * * * while in possession of said described mining claim, posted on said mining claim a notice in writing whereby they located the said land as a mining claim," describing it, and on the same day "placed on said mining claim rock monuments sufficient to enable a person to readily trace the boundaries described in defendant's location notice." Thereafter they duly recorded said notice of location in the recorder's office of Fresno county. The conclusions of law were:

> "That said location notice so posted * * * by the said Oscar De Witt was and is good and valid; that by reason of the provisional quarantine * * * plaintiff could not lawfully enter into and upon said mining claim to properly monument the same prior to May 1, 1924; that plaintiff was entitled to the possession of said described mining claim. * * *"

Judgment in plaintiff's favor was entered accordingly.

[1] In order to acquire a valid title to a mining claim, under state and federal statutes, it is essential to post notice of location at the point of discovery, and also to distinctly mark and define the boundaries of the claim on the ground so that they may be readily traced. Civ. Code, §§ 1426, 1426a; and Rev. Stats. of U. S., § 2324 (U. S. Comp. St. § 4620). There appears to be no statutory time fixed within which the boundaries of the location shall be marked or defined, after posting notice (Newbill v. Thurston, 65 Cal. 420, 4 P. 409), provided it be done within a reasonable time (Union Mining & Milling Co. v. Leitch, 24 Wash. 585, 64 P. 829, 85 Am. St. Rep. 961; Patterson v. Hitchcock, 3 Colo. 533), and before adverse rights attach (Sharkey v. Candiani, 48 Or. 112, 85 P. 219, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 791; Lindley on Mines [2d Ed.] § 372); and accordingly it has been held that:

> "A subsequent locator cannot object that the first location was not marked in time, provided it was sufficiently marked before his location." Crown Point Gold Min. Co. v. Crismon et al., 39 Or. 364, 65 P. 87.

[2] The authorities further hold, however, as plaintiff concedes, that where notice is properly posted, but the locator does not remain in possession of said claim or distinctly mark the same on the ground so that its boundaries can be readily traced, the location is invalid as against a subsequent locator who complies with the requirements of the statute. Holland v. Mount Auburn G. & Q. Min. Co., 53 Cal. 149; Funk v. Sterrett, 59 Cal. 613; Donahue v. Meister, 88 Cal. 121, 25 P. 1096, 22 Am. St. Rep. 283; Eaton v. Norris, 131 Cal. 561, 63 P. 856; Newbill v. Thurston, supra. In other words, as said in Funk v. Sterrett, supra, a party can show a right to the possession of a mining claim (when no patent has issued) only by showing an actual pedis possessio as against a mere wrongdoer, or by showing a compliance with the requirements of law.

[3] Under the rule last stated, it would clearly appear that plaintiff failed to establish prima facie title to said claim because, as the findings affirmatively show, neither he nor his grantor were in possession of said claim, nor did they mark its boundaries in the manner required by law, prior to the time defendants took possession of the same and complied with all the legal requirements as to its location. Therefore plaintiff was not entitled to judgment.

[4-8] Plaintiff contends, however, that because of the conditions created by the existence of the provisional quarantine he and his grantor were prevented from completing their location, and that when defendants "went into possession of said mining claim * * * they did so in violation of the provisional quarantine then in force"; that consequently the determination of the case is not to be controlled by the general rule hereinabove stated. We are unable to sustain this contention, first, because the trial court did not find, as plaintiff claims, that defendants' entry upon said mining claim was violative of said provisional quarantine, nor in contravention of any law. For aught the findings show, defendants may have been within the restricted district embracing said claim when the quarantine was proclaimed, or may have afterwards entered upon said claim lawfully or by some other route than the one attempted to be taken by plaintiff's grantor, not knowing of the existence of said quarantine; and, in the absence of a finding to the contrary, the presumption is that they were innocent of any crime or wrongdoing. Subd. 1, § 1963, Code Civ. Proc.

Secondly, even though it be assumed that the findings fairly imply a wrongful entry, such fact cannot be made to supply the essential element lacking in plaintiff's title; namely, the failure to mark the boundaries of said claim, for upon the strength of such title alone he must stand in order to establish a prima facie case in ejectment. Neither can such wrongful entry be held to invalidate defendants' title, because the existence of said quarantine had no effect upon the operation of the mining laws under which defendants acquired their title; and, moreover, although such entry may have constituted a criminal offense for which defendants might have been subjected to punishment for misdemeanor, it was an offense against the health laws of the state and did not amount to an invasion of any personal or property right of plaintiff or his grantor in said mining claim, because they had acquired none.

For the reasons herein stated, the judgment is reversed with directions to re-enter the same in defendants' favor upon the facts found, and in accordance with the motion previously made by defendants, under section 663 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

5. Appeal and error 🔑1064(1)—Instruction that negligence of defendant and plaintiff's want of contributory negligence must appear to jury's satisfaction, though error, held not prejudicial.

In action for injuries, instruction that before plaintiff could recover it must first appear defendant was guilty of negligence contributing to accident, and that it must appear plaintiff was without fault which may in any wise have contributed to accident, though improperly worded, held not ground for reversal, in absence of showing of prejudice.

6. Appeal and error 🔑1066—Instruction as to motorist's liability if he failed to keep lookout held not prejudicial as ignoring defense of contributory negligence.

In action for injuries, instruction that defendant driving automobile was under duty to keep lookout, and that failure to do so causing injury would warrant recovery, though containing no reservation regarding defense of contributory negligence, held not ground for reversal, where not relevant to evidence introduced at trial.

7. Trial 🔑253(4)—Instruction that injured child could recover if jury found negligence caused injury held not objectionable as ignoring contributory negligence.

Instruction in action for injuries that, if jury found negligence was proximate cause of injury, plaintiff could recover and that negligence was not to be imputed to infant, to deprive him of verdict, held not objectionable as directing verdict in favor of plaintiff without submitting or ignoring defense of contributory negligence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; F. M. Jamison, Judge.

Action by Thomas Osborne Wright, a minor, by Joseph S. Wright, his guardian ad litem, against Salzberger & Sons, etc., and Robert Salzberger. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant last named appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. M. Abbott, K. W. Cannon, and J. E. Reardon, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Ostrander & Carey, and Philip M. Carey, all of Oakland (Chas. D. Woehr, of Oakland, of counsel), for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action to recover damages for injuries sustained in a collision between a Ford truck operated by the defendant and a coaster operated by the plaintiff and his brother. A trial was had in the lower court, the jury brought in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, and from the judgment entered thereon the defendant has appealed, under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

In his complaint the plaintiff pleaded negligence in general terms, following the form of the complaint in Stein v. United Railroads, 159 Cal. 368, 113 P. 663. The defendant answered, setting up several defenses. By denials he put in issue all of the allegations contained in the plaintiff's complaint, and then he pleaded the contributory negligence of the plaintiff.

The accident occurred on the 19th day of October, 1921, at about 6 o'clock in the evening. It occurred on Milvia street, about 70 or 75 feet north from the intersection of that street with Bancroft way, in the city of Berkeley. That street has a grade of 1.4 per cent. Robert Salzberger was driving a Ford truck, and there was no one riding with him. The plaintiff, Thomas Osborne Wright, a lad 12 years of age, was on the front end of a coaster, and his younger brother, Ronald Wright, 10 years of age, was seated on the rear end of the coaster with his back turned to Thomas. Thomas was pushing with his left foot and Ronald was pushing with both feet. So far as the record discloses, no other person either saw or heard the collision. Robert Salzberger testified that he did not see the Wright boys until he saw them 2 feet in front of his left-hand fender and 6 inches to the left. He testified that he next saw them after the accident, and at that time they were 15 feet to the rear. The plaintiff and his brother testified that, when they were in Milvia street at a point near the "Turner house," they saw the lights of an automobile near an electric pole located on the south side of Bancroft way. The distance between those points does not appear. Except as above stated, neither party saw the other before the accident. Each of the Wright boys testified that they were proceeding on their right-hand side of Milvia street. Robert Salzberger testified on the subject of the position of the Wright boys in the street, of the location of the blood spot, and of the exact place where the impact took place. On the first trial he testified:

> "At the time of the accident I was 4 feet from the right-hand curb."

At the time of the second trial he testified that at the time of the accident he was 10 feet from the curb. Asked why he changed his testimony, he stated:

> "The only reason, the figures must come out right. As I said, figuring it over, if I was 2 feet from the center, if my machine was 6 feet wide, that would make 8 feet, that would leave remaining 10 feet from the curb. * * * I was coming north from Bancroft on the right-hand side there. I could feel something thud on my left wheel; as I felt that I put on my footbrake, and then I automatically turned. I had one foot on the emergency. I turned to see what it was and saw the outline of the children. * * * I generally go straight on the road.
> "Q. If you were over here on the right-hand side, why didn't you stop at the right-hand curb, stop and run back? A. I don't know why I didn't. * * * I should judge about 65 feet north of the intersection, that I judge, I saw this coaster with two boys on it and they were about 2 feet over my left front fender, that is to my left and in front also. They were about a foot and a half in front and, well, about 2 feet in front, a little over on the side about 6 inches over my fender to the left of my machine. I didn't see these boys or that object any time before they were 2 feet in front of me. As I drove along there from Bancroft on Milvia up to the point within 2 feet of these boys, they were not in the rays of my light at all. * * * The blood spot was six inches over on their side to the center of the street. * * * They were tipped from their side of the street, or tipped west. The blood spot was 6 inches over on their side of the center of the street. * * * I would say the actual contact or collision took place on my side of the street within 2 feet of my center of the street."

[1] The photographs show that the middle of the street is not marked on the surface of the ground. Although Robert Salzberger was examined and cross-examined extensively, at no time did he testify that he saw the curb on either side nor did he give any testimony on which the last statement was predicated. It was solely the conclusion of the witness. In the absence of the last sentence quoted, there is not a particle of evidence in the record sustaining the claim of the appellant that the Wright boys were on the wrong side of the street. On the contrary, all of the evidence, direct and indirect, and the conclusions to be drawn therefrom are against the appellant.

On the trial of the case the evidence was conflicting as to the exact time the accident occurred. Robert Salzberger claimed that the accident occurred at 6:10 or 6:12 p. m. The Wright boys claimed that the accident occurred a few minutes before 6. Robert Salzberger claimed that at the point where the accident occurred, in the absence of the lights on his truck, it was pitch dark. The plaintiff claimed that it was not pitch dark, and that it was between daylight and dark. All of the evidence regarding the speed at which Robert Salzberger was driving is contained in his testimony. He testified that he was driving 18 or 20 miles per hour. There was evidence that he stated to others that he was driving 20 to 22 miles per hour. Neither party printed the testimony, and neither states the fact, whether Robert Salzberger did or did not not sound a horn or gong or otherwise give notice of his approach. There was evidence that his machine was equipped with lights and that his lights were burning. There was evidence that the coaster had no lights and that it did not have a horn or gong. In presenting the case for the plaintiff, and in presenting the case for the defense, the witnesses were examined and cross-examined extensively regarding the position in Milvia street of a spot of blood, which indicated where the respondent's head lay after he was knocked over by the truck. Numerous photographs were introduced on the trial for the purpose, as stated by counsel, of showing the location of that spot of blood with reference to the middle line of Milvia street. There was no evidence that it was on the left side of the middle of the street. All of the evidence was to the effect that, before the collision, the coaster was on the right of the blood spot. There was evidence that at the time of the collision the plaintiff fell forward and towards the middle of the street. There was no evidence to the contrary. There was evidence that Milvia street was closely built up, but the record does not show that any signs had been erected bearing thereon the words and figures "20 miles speed limit." See Deering's General Laws [1917-1921] p. 1645, to which all references will be made in citing the statute. Several ordinances of the Berkeley council regarding the operation of motor vehicles and coasters were introduced in evidence. From what we have said, it will be seen that in the trial court the theory on which the respondent presented his case was that Robert Salzberger, at the time of the accident, was driving his truck at an unlawful speed and on the wrong side of the street. It will also be seen it was the theory of the appellant that he controverted both contentions made by the respondent, and that it was his claim that the respondent was at the time of the accident guilty of contributory negligence, and that such contributory negligence consisted in violating the provisions of the said ordinances of the city of Berkeley and provisions of the statute.

The appellant claims that the trial court erred (1) in refusing to give certain instructions which the appellant had requested, and (2) that the trial court gave certain instructions which should not have been given.

[2] Before the first trial was had, the parties entered into a stipulation that this action be consolidated and tried with an action that had been brought by the father. Nevertheless, over the objection of the appellant, the trial court proceeded to try this action separately. Conceding for the purposes of this decision, and for such purposes solely, that in so doing the trial court erred, there is no showing that the error was prejudicial.

[3] The appellant earnestly objects to an instruction which the trial court gave regarding the duty resting on Robert Salzberger to sound his horn as he proceeded to enter the dark zone on Milvia street. For the purpose of this decision, it will be conceded that the instruction was not free from the objections which the appellant urges, but a search of the record discloses that no evidence whatever was introduced by either party as to whether Robert Salzberger did or did not sound his horn. In other words, the instruction was utterly irrelevant to any evidence introduced. It appears to be the settled law in the American jurisdictions that:

> "If an instruction not warranted by the evidence is calculated to mislead the jury and prejudice the objecting party, it is ground for reversal. But an instruction stating a correct proposition of law is not necessarily misleading, or prejudicial, merely because it is inapplicable to the facts in evidence, and where it is not so, there is no ground for reversal." 38 Cyc. 1621, 1622; Thomas v. Northwestern, etc., Ins. Co., 142 Cal. 79, 84, 85, 75 P. 665; Renfro v. Fresno City R. Co., 2 Cal. App. 317, 325, 84 P. 357; Hammond v. Pacific Electric R. Co., 32 Cal. App. 756, 763, 164 P. 50; City of Los Angeles v. Pomeroy, 124 Cal. 597, 644, 57 P. 585.

The instruction complained of in the case last cited dealt with the defendant's right surreptitiously to take certain waters. As there was no evidence whatever of theft, the court held that the instruction was harmless. In People v. Cochran, 61 Cal. 548, the appeal involved a conviction of murder. The instruction complained of was an incorrect statement of law. It did not apply to any facts to be found in the record. The court said:

> "Presumptively, however, an erroneous proposition of law, referring in no way to the evidence in the case submitted to the jury, has not prejudiced the defendant."

In Bosqui v. Sutro R. Co., 131 Cal. 390, 63 P. 682, the plaintiff was injured when one of the defendant's cars left the track and collided with another one of defendant's cars. The defendant claimed that the car was forced off the track by an obstruction. There was evidence of the presence of an obstruction, but not a particle of evidence that the defendant had put the obstruction on the track. The trial court gave an instruction regarding the defendant's liability, which contained the statement:

> "Unless on the whole case, it has been shown by competent evidence that defendant, or its servants, placed the obstruction on the rails. * * *"

The court cited and followed the rule in the Cochran Case. See, also, cases cited Marston v. Pickwick Stages (Cal. App.) 248 P. 930. The instruction complained of in the instant case was far less harmful, if it was harmful at all, than the instructions considered in the cases cited.

[4] The trial court instructed the jury on the subject of damages, among other things, as follows:

> "Of course the law prescribes no definite measure of damages in cases of this kind, but the law leaves the amount of such damages to be fixed by the jury as their discretion and judgment dictates, and as under all the circumstances may be just and proper."

The appellant objects to the instruction and quotes Civil Code sections 3281, 3282, 3333, and 3359. Having done so, he does not make it clear that our law does prescribe a definite measure of damages. Rystinki v. Central California Traction Co., 175 Cal. 336, 345, 165 P. 952.

[5] The trial court instructed the jury:

> "Before the plaintiff can recover in this action, it must first appear to your satisfaction that the defendant was guilty of some act of negligence which directly contributed to the accident. It must also appear to your satisfaction that the plaintiff was without fault or negligence on his part which may in any wise have contributed to the accident."

The instruction was improperly worded. Hutson v. Southern California R. Co., 150 Cal. 701, 705, 89 P. 1093. However, there is nothing in the record to show that the error was prejudicial.

[6] The trial court gave an instruction as follows:

> "I instruct you it was the duty of the defendant, while operating his automobile on Milvia street at and before the happening of the accident herein complained of, to keep such a lookout ahead for other traffic on the street and for pedestrians and for other persons using the street as an ordinarily careful and prudent person would have done, and if the defendant failed to perform his duty and you find that such failure on his part was the proximate cause of the injury herein complained of, then, and in that event, your verdict must be in favor of the plaintiff."

The appellant contends that, because it contains no reservation regarding his defense (plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence), and that the instruction was, in effect, a directed verdict against the appellant. Starr v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp., 187 Cal. 270, 201 P. 599. The negligence mentioned in the instruction objected to in the instant case was not specifically alleged in plaintiff's complaint, was not mentioned by him in his opening statement, nor was it suggested in any question propounded by him to any witness. The record does not disclose whether the instruction was given at the request of the plaintiff or was given by the court of its own motion. As to whether Robert Salzberger was keeping a lookout ahead as he drove north on Milvia street, no witness testified on the subject except Robert Salzberger. In reply to a question propounded by his own counsel, he testified that he was looking straight ahead of him. In view of the distinct issues which were presented during the trial and which were wholly unrelated to the subject-matter of the instruction quoted, it is impossible to say that the jury was confused by any portion of the instruction. To sustain the appellant's position, we must assume that the jury found against the statement of Robert Salzberger and found that he was not keeping "such a lookout ahead for other traffic on the street and for other pedestrians * * *"; and that thereupon the jury took up the second proposition contained in the instruction and proceded to bring in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff without giving any consideration whatever to the question of contributory negligence. There is nothing in the record that justifies us in doing so. Under circumstances not wholly dissimilar, where the same contention was made the Supreme Court ruled that the instruction was harmless. Idemoto v. Scheidecker, 193 Cal. 653, 662, 663, 226 P. 922. As the matter of keeping a lookout ahead was not an issue, no instruction should have been given on the subject. The rights of the litigants are not altered because the instruction complained of was also improperly worded. We think that the instant case, in so far as this point is concerned, is not ruled by the Starr Case, but is ruled by what was said in People v. Cochran, supra.

[7] The trial court instructed the jury regarding the maximum speed permissible. The instruction closed with the words:

> "And if the jury finds that such negligence, if they find that any occurred, is the proximate cause of the injury complained of, then the injured person may recover."

It also instructed the jury regarding imputed negligence and closed with the words:

> "Such negligence is not to be imputed to the child or deprive him of a verdict."

The appellant claims that both of those instructions were subject to the same criticism—directed a verdict in favor of the plaintiff without taking into consideration the defense of the defendant. A most cursory reading of the instructions discloses that neither one purported to direct a verdict. For that reason the attack may not be sustained.

[8] The trial court instructed the jury as follows:

> "Section 22a of the Motor Vehicle Act of this state, at the time of this accident, provided as follows: 'Any person operating or driving a motor or other vehicle on the public highways shall operate or drive the same in a careful and prudent manner and at a rate of speed not greater than is reasonable and proper, having regard to the traffic and use of the highway, and no person shall operate or drive a motor vehicle or other vehicle on a public highway at such rate of speed as to endanger the life or limb of any person or the safety of any property.' [St. 1917, p. 404.] And, further, it is provided that in any event no person shall operate or drive a motor vehicle or other vehicle on any public highway where the territory contiguous thereto is closely built up at a greater rate of speed than 20 miles an hour. And I further instruct you that, if you find from the evidence in this case that the defendant Robert Salzberger violated this provision of the Motor Vehicle Act, then such violation is negligence in itself, and if you further find that such negligence is the proximate cause of the injuries herein complained of by plaintiff and that the plaintiff himself was in the exercise of ordinary care, your verdict must be in favor of the plaintiff."

The appellant quotes from the statute:

> "'Closely built up' shall mean the territory of any * * * city * * * contiguous to a public highway, which is on the line of said highway not mainly devoted to business, where for not less than a quarter of a mile the dwelling houses and business structures on such highway average less than 100 feet apart; provided, that the local authorities having charge of such highway shall have placed conspicuously thereon at the boundary lines of such district, signs of sufficient size to be easily readable by a person using the highway, bearing the words and figures '20 miles speed limit,' which words shall be printed in white letters on a red background. * * *"

Having quoted the above passage, the appellant contends that evidence of "sign posting" is in the nature of indispensable evidence. The question is not new. It has been ruled to the contrary in several cases. Varcoe v. Lee, 180 Cal. 338, 347, 181 P. 223; Sinclair v. Pioneer Truck Co., 51 Cal. App. 174, 178, 196 P. 281; Collom v. Bloch, 70 Cal. App. 33, 38, 232 P. 486; Dewhirst v. Leopold, 194 Cal. 424, 432, 229 P. 30. There is an abundance of evidence in the record showing that in fact the accident occurred in a "closely built up" neighborhood. The trial court committed no error in giving the instruction complained of.

[9] If we are correct in what we have just said regarding the foregoing instruction, it follows that it would not have been proper for the trial court to instruct the jury that, at the time and place of the accident, Robert Salzberger was entitled to drive 30 miles an hour. The trial court did not err in refusing to give the defendant's requested instruction to the effect that 30 miles per hour was the maximum legal speed at said time and place.

Complaint is made regarding an instruction which stated the duty of the driver to keep his motor vehicle under control. The appellant says it was a charge on a question of fact, argumentative, misleading, and unfair. It purports to be based on the instruction approved in Meyers v. Bradford, 54 Cal. App. 157, 201 P. 471. A careful examination does not disclose any feature wherein it differs materially from the instruction approved in that case.

[10] The trial court gave an instruction to the effect that the defense of contributory negligence presupposes the existence of negligence upon the part of the defendant himself. The appellant admits that it states a legal truism, but that it was misleading. However, the appellant cites no part of the record showing that the jury was misled to any extent whatsoever. As addressed to the record in the instant case, we find no error in the instruction.

[11] Appellant earnestly complains because the trial court did not read to the jury, as part of its instructions, certain ordinances and parts of ordinances of the Berkeley Council. Those ordinances and parts of ordinances had been received in evidence and had already been read to the jury. Thereafter, and immediately before respondent's counsel commenced his closing argument, appellant's counsel made the above-mentioned request of the trial court. Apparently the request was made by handing to the trial court copies of ordinance 227 (N. S.), ordinance 232 (N. S.), and sections 1, 2, 4, 10, 34, 41, 42, 44, and 47 of ordinance No. 448 (N. S.) It was one request. No part of the request should have been granted for the reasons which will hereinafter appear. Be that as it may, it cannot be seriously contended that the request should have been granted as made. The trial court did not commit a reversible error by failing to segregate from the mass of material requested any particular part and give that portion. Williamson v. Tobey, 86 Cal. 497, 25 P. 65; Dover v. Archambeault, 57 Cal. App. 659, 664, 208 P. 178.

No part of ordinance 227, or ordinance 232, or of sections 2, 41, and 42 of ordinance 448, deals with a subject-matter which was pertinent to any fact or set of facts introduced in evidence.

As to the application of the provisions of section 44 to the facts of this case, that matter was fully treated in Wright v. Salzberger & Son, 63 Cal. App. 450, 218 P. 785. On the second trial the appellant made no effort to develop the foundation there delineated.

In so far as any portion of section 4, section 10, or section 47 of ordinance 448 was pertinent to any facts introduced in evidence, the subject-matter was fully covered by cognate sections of the Motor Vehicle Act, which were duly read to the jury as part of the instructions of the court.

[12] The appellant calls attention to the last sentence of section 34 of ordinance 448, and then he calls attention to the definition of "vehicle" as contained in section 1, and he argues that, reading both passages together and substituting the definition of "vehicle" wherever that word occurs, then we have a legislative provision which is applicable regarding the duty of the respondent to have lights on his coaster. Making the substitution as requested, it will be seen at once that numerous inconsistencies and absurdities are created. However, the method suggested by the appellant is not the appropriate rule of statutory construction to be followed. It is not even contended that respondent's coaster comes within the provisions of the first sentence, or the second sentence of section 34. The third sentence is:

> "Every motorcycle or vehicle while on the public highway," etc.

That enumeration commences with the particular thing "motorcycle," and is followed by the general expression "vehicle." We think the rule applicable was stated by the court in Pasadena University v. Los Angeles Co., 190 Cal. 786, 790, 214 P. 868, 869, as follows:

> "It is the rule of construction that where general words follow the enumeration of particular classes of persons or things, the general words will be construed as applicable only to persons or things of the same general nature or class as those enumerated. 36 Cyc. 1119; 25 R. C. L. 996, 997; 2 Lewis' Sutherland's Statutory Construction, §§ 803, 804."

As so construed, the sentence may be said to be applicable to motorcycles (that is, bicycles having a motor), motortricycles, and perhaps to some other vehicles operated by motors. As so construed, force and effect is given to every part of the section and no absurdity whatever is created. This view is reinforced by the language used by the legislative body, "Every motorcycle or vehicle. * * *" The expression uses the disjunctive "or." If the class was to be broadened, as appellant contends, the council would have used the conjunctive "and." So construing the ordinance, the respondent's coaster did not come within the things enumerated in the third sentence. It was expressly excepted by the language used in the second sentence:

> "All other vehicles, except motorcycles, bicycles, and horses, and such vehicles that may be propelled by a pedestrian shall carry at the left side thereof a lighted lamp visible front and rear and from the left for a distance of not less than 200 feet."

As respondent's coaster was expressly excepted from the operation of the ordinance, the trial court did not err in refusing to read to the jury the provisions of the ordinance.

The judgment is affirmed.

COLE et al. v. LOW. (Civ. 5497.)

1. Brokers ⟹43(1)—Written promise to pay broker for past services in sale of real estate is not within statute of frauds (Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6).

A written promise to pay a broker for past services in the sale of real estate is not within statute of frauds (Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6), requiring agreements employing an agent to sell real estate on commission to be in writing.

2. Contracts ⟹143—Construction of contract must give effect to every word, unless repugnant to intention of parties or leading to absurdity (Civ. Code, § 1641).

In view of Civ. Code, § 1641, a contract must be construed to give effect to every word in it, so that no clause or word may become redundant, unless such construction would be repugnant to the intention of the parties, or would lead to absurdity.

3. Contracts ⟹153, 154—Contract must receive interpretation making it lawful, reasonable, and effective, if possible, without violating intention of parties (Civ. Code, § 1643; Code Civ. Proc. § 1858).

By provision of Civ. Code, § 1643, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1858, a contract must receive such an interpretation as will make it lawful, operative, definite, reasonable, and capable of being carried into effect, if it can be done without violating the intention of the parties.

4. Brokers ⟹39—Words "commissions of $3,400 to (plaintiffs)" in contract for sale of realty held to imply promise to compensate broker for past services in procuring buyer.

The words "commissions of $3,400 to Cole Bros.," immediately above the signatures on a contract for sale and purchase of real estate, implied a promise to pay for the past services which resulted in bringing about the contract.

5. Brokers ⟹74—Promise in land contract to pay broker commission held enforceable against vendor alone, as joint and several obligation of vendor and purchaser (Civ. Code, § 1659).

The promise implied by the words "commission of $3,400 to Cole Bros.," above signa-

Code, § 1659.

6. Brokers ⟹82(2)—Vendor's failure to plead defense of joint liability, under statute, with purchaser for payment of commissions under land contract, held waiver thereof (Civ. Code, § 1659).

In a broker's suit for commissions due under an implied joint promise contained in a land contract, the vendor must be deemed to have waived defense of joint liability, under Civ. Code, § 1659, with the purchaser by his failure to plead it.

7. Evidence ⟹87—Presumption of joint liability of promisors under statute is not conclusive (Civ. Code, § 1659).

Presumption, under Civ. Code, § 1659, of joint liability of persons uniting in promise, is not conclusive.

8. Brokers ⟹39—Omission to fix time for payment of broker's commissions promised in land contract held not fatal to broker's right.

The promise implied by the words "commission of $3,400 to Cole Bros.," above signatures on a contract for sale and purchase of real estate, was not rendered unenforceable by failure to fix time of payment; the commission being due immediately on execution of the contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Albert Lee Stephens, Judge.

Action by Friend W. Cole, Jr., and another, copartners doing business under the name and style of Cole Bros., against Ollie I. Low, to recover commissions on the sale of real property. From a judgment of the superior court of Los Angeles county for plaintiffs, the defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Walter Gould Lincoln, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

John E. Biby, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

KNIGHT, J. This is defendant's appeal, taken on the judgment roll alone, in an action to recover a sum of money alleged to be due as real estate commissions under the terms of a written agreement entered into between appellant as seller and F. De La Guardia as buyer for the sale of appellant's apartment house in Los Angeles.

A copy of the entire agreement is annexed to the amended complaint, and is made a part of each of the two counts set forth therein, the particular provision of said agreement upon which respondents rely as the basis for the recovery of their commissions being inserted at the end of said agreement, immediately preceding the signatures thereto of the seller and the buyer, and reading as follows: "Commissions of $3.400 to Cole Bros."

[1] Appellant contends that the provision mentioned does not meet the requirements of the sixth subdivision of section 1624 of the Civil Code, which provides that an agreement authorizing or employing an agent or broker to purchase or sell real estate for a commission is invalid, unless the same or some note or memorandum thereof is in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged or by his agent; and that therefore neither count of said amended complaint states a cause of action.

The allegations of the two counts are identical in form with the one exception hereinafter noted, all of which allegations the trial court found to be true. Among the other facts alleged were the following: That appellant verbally employed respondents as a licensed firm of real estate brokers to negotiate the sale of said apartment house for $90,000, and agreed to pay them therefor a commission of 5 per cent. on the selling price; that thereafter respondents produced a purchaser in the person of De La Guardia, with whom appellant entered into said written agreement whereby she agreed to sell, and De La Guardia agreed to buy, said property, under the terms and conditions therein stated, for the sum of $85,000, part of which was to be paid in cash within a specified time, and the balance by the execution of certain incumbrances on the property, to be delivered in escrow; that subsequently appellant refused to consummate said sale or to pay respondents any part of said commission. As to the obligation to pay said commission it was alleged that in and by said written agreement "it was provided that said defendant did thereby promise and agree to pay Cole Bros., plaintiffs herein, a commission in the amount of thirty four hundred ($3,400) dollars for services rendered in her behalf in and about the securing of the execution of said agreement and negotiating for the sale of said property to said F. De La Guardia."

The second count differs from the first count only by the inclusion of the additional allegation that "said instrument in writing or agreement executed by and between Ollie I. Low and with F. De La Guardia, hereunto annexed and marked Exhibit A, was and is an agreement in writing made for the express benefit of plaintiffs herein, and said agreement has not been rescinded by the parties thereto."

The foregoing allegations clearly indicate that in neither count do respondents base their right of recovery upon the theory that the provision mentioned constituted an agreement in writing or any note or memorandum subscribed by appellant or her agent authorizing or employing them as agents or brokers to sell said property; nor was appellant held liable for the payment of said commissions on that ground. The first cause of action, as shown by its allegations, is founded upon the doctrine that, where services have been rendered with the intention that they shall be paid for, but payment therefor is unenforceable because there exists no written contract between the parties, and after rendition of said services the party receiving the benefit thereof promises, in writing, to pay therefor, his moral obligation to pay for what he has previously received furnishes a consideration to support the subsequent promise to pay (Crawford v. Kennedy, 64 Cal. App. 719, 222 P. 644; Carrington v. Smithers, 26 Cal. App. 460, 147 P. 225; Muir v. Kane, 55 Wash. 131, 104 P. 153, 26 L. R. A. [N. S.] 519, 19 Ann. Cas. 180; Mohr v. Rickgauer, 82 Neb. 398, 117 N. W. 950, 26 L. R. A. [N. S.] 533; Bagaeff v. Prokopik, 212 Mich. 265, 180 N. W. 427, 17 A. L. R. 1292); and the second cause of action is grounded upon the theory that the provision of said agreement relating to commissions was made expressly for respondents' benefit, and that, said agreement not having been rescinded, the provision mentioned may be enforced by respondents under section 1559 of the Civil Code, which declares that "a contract, made expressly for the benefit of a third person, may be enforced by him at any time before the parties thereto rescind it." Lundeen v. Nowlin, 20 Cal. App. 415, 129 P. 474; Stanton v. Carnahan, 15 Cal. App. 527, 115 P. 339; Washer v. Independent, etc., Co., 142 Cal. 702, 76 P. 654.

It will therefore be seen that in both counts respondents rely upon an alleged subsequent written promise to pay for past services, and, consequently, that portion of the statute of frauds invoked by appellant is not pertinent; the determinative question being whether said agreement as a whole fairly implies a promise to pay for said past services.

[2, 3] Among the rules given for the interpretation of contracts generally are the following: A contract shall be so construed as to give force and effect, not only to every clause, but to every word in it, so that no clause or word may become redundant, unless such construction would be obviously repugnant to the intention of the parties, to be collected from its terms, or would lead to some absurdity (6 Cal. Jur. p. 259; Civ. Code, § 1641; Code Civ. Proc. § 1858; Hyatt v. Allen, 54 Cal. 353), and, furthermore, "must receive such an interpretation as will make it lawful, operative, definite, reasonable, and capable of being carried into effect, if it can be done without violating the intention of the parties" (Civ. Code, § 1643).

[4] Construing the provision of the agreement relating to said commissions in the light of the foregoing rules, we think the language used therein clearly implies a promise to pay the amount of commissions stated as compensation for past services, which resulted, as the findings show, in bringing about the consummation of a binding agreement for the purchase and sale of appellant's property. The parties to said agreement must have had in mind some useful purpose in inserting said provision in the agreement, and no other meaning than the one just stated can be fairly ascribed to it, if it be made operative and capable of being carried into effect; and obviously such construction is not repugnant to the intention of the parties as expressed by them in said agreement, nor does it lead to absurd results.

[5] The omission to specify therein whether the seller or the buyer or both should pay said commissions is not fatal to its validity. Section 1659 of the Civil Code provides:

> "Where all the parties who unite in a promise receive some benefit from the consideration, whether past or present, their promise is presumed to be joint and several."

[6, 7] Appellant and De La Guardia both signed the agreement in question, thereby uniting in the promise to pay said commissions, and, since respondents' services in negotiating the purchase and sale of said property and in obtaining the execution of a binding written agreement for that purpose were manifestly of "some benefit" to the buyer as well as to the seller, the obligation to pay said commissions must be presumed, in the absence of express or implied language to the contrary, to be a joint and several one, and, consequently, enforceable against the seller alone at the option of the promisee. Such presumption is doubtless a disputable one, but, appellant having failed to plead a joint liability must be deemed to have waived such defense (Russ v. Tuttle, 158 Cal. 226, 110 P. 813), and, the contract of purchase and sale not having been rescinded, as the findings show, a cause of action arose in respondents' favor, upon the default of appellant to carry out its terms (Lundeen v. Nowlin, supra).

[8] Neither does the failure of said provision to fix the time of payment of said commission render it unenforceable, for the reason that appellant accepted the purchaser procured by respondents by entering into a valid contract of sale with him, and, consequently, the commission became due immediately, whether or not the sale was finally consummated. Johnson v. Krier, 59 Cal. App. 330, 210 P. 966; Freeman v. Creelman, 60 Cal. App. 14, 212 P. 56.

The facts of the case of Irwin v. Klimper, 56 Cal. App. 434, 205 P. 714, cited by appellant are materially different from those of the instant case, for there the document considered did not purport to be a subsequent promise to pay commissions, being shown upon its face to be merely an order directed to an escrow holder, and therefore it could not be construed as being a promise to pay commissions without doing violence to the intention of the seller who alone signed the same. Nor does the instrument which was involved in the later case of Crawford v. Kennedy, supra, bear any analogy to the provision of the agreement here in question, because, as the court there remarked in holding said instrument to be fatally indefinite:

> "It does not mention any services nor the nature of any indebtedness; it does not state the amount of the indebtedness nor any method by which it could be computed."

The provision here under attack is not lacking in any of the elements mentioned.

For the reasons hereinabove assigned, we conclude that each count in the amended complaint states a cause of action, and therefore the judgment is affirmed.

KATZ v. T. I. BUTLER CO. (Civ. 5546.)★

1. Municipal corporations ⚷706(5)—Finding of negligence in operating unlighted truck striking pedestrian sustained.

In action for death of pedestrian crossing street intersection when struck by truck, evidence of defendant's operating truck on street about half hour after sunset without lights held sufficient to sustain jury's finding that defendant was negligent.

2. Municipal corporations ⚷705(10)—Pedestrian crossing street is required to act with ordinary care under circumstances.

Test of pedestrian's negligence in crossing street when struck by truck is, not whether he did all that it was possible for him to do, but whether he acted with ordinary care under all the circumstances.

3. Municipal corporations ⚷706(7)—Pedestrian held not negligent as matter of law in failing to see unlighted truck.

A pedestrian, acting with ordinary prudence in crossing street intersection, is not as matter of law guilty of negligence in not seeing an unlighted truck or failing to apprehend that it is a source of danger, at a time when lights are required by law or reasonably necessary.

4. Negligence ⚷136(9)—Contributory negligence is question for jury, where reasonable minds might differ.

Court cannot say as matter of law that contributory negligence is established, the question being for jury, except where no fact is left in doubt, and no deduction or inference other than negligence can be drawn from the evidence.

5. Municipal corporations ⚷706(7)—Contributory negligence of pedestrian injured by unlighted truck held for jury.

Whether pedestrian crossing street intersection when struck by truck without lights when they were reasonably necessary was contributorily negligent held for jury.

6. Evidence ⚷355(5)—Time card of workman held admissible to aid in establishing time of automobile accident.

Time card of workman held properly received in evidence when produced by him in connection with his statement, made without objection, that clock kept accurate time, the evidence being material in fixing time of automobile accident.

7. Negligence ⚷141(8)—Instruction referring to contributory negligence as proximate cause by definite article held not misleading.

An instruction that plaintiff's negligence must be "the" proximate cause of his injury, in order to defeat his claim, was not misleading, although plaintiff's negligence is better referred to with the indefinite article.

8. Municipal corporations ⚷706(8)—Instruction that automobile lights were required during half hour after sunset held not misleading.

Instruction that at "all times during half an hour after sunset to half an hour before sunrise every automobile" should carry lights was not misleading as requiring jury to believe lights must be on during period commencing at sunset.

9. Trial ⚷260(1)—Court properly refused instructions repeating those given.

Defendant's instructions, which constituted repetition of those given at his request, were properly refused.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by Joseph T. Gaughran, for whom was substituted Phil. C. Katz, as administrator of the estate of Joseph T. Gaughran, deceased, against the T. I. Butler Company, a corporation, to recover damages for personal injuries. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Cooley & Gallagher, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Spencer G. Prime, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KOFORD, P. J. [1] This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment in favor of plaintiff for personal injuries. The trial was by jury. The evidence shows that plaintiff was struck and injured by a truck driven by defendant's driver while crossing Mission street at the intersection of Twelfth street in the city of San Francisco. The evidence would support a finding that the accident happened a few minutes after, or perhaps a few minutes before, one-half hour after sunset. The truck did not have its headlights burning, and entered Mission street driving southerly on Twelfth street, and turned westerly into Mission street. The plaintiff was struck by the truck after he had walked but a few feet out from the sidewalk into the street. At the trial witnesses testified to various degrees of darkness and visibility.

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

On the side of plaintiff such expressions as the following were used: About dusk, getting dark, hazy and dark, inclined toward darkness and foggy. One witness testified it was with difficulty that he could see to pick up plaintiff's silver scattered on the pavement.

[1] The evidence shown in the record is sufficient to support the finding of the jury that the defendant's truck driver was negligent in operating the truck without lights at the time and place and in the manner testified to by the witnesses.

[2-4] Plaintiff and another witness testified that he looked to his left before starting to cross the street, but saw no danger. Appellant contends that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. It contends that, if plaintiff looked and did not see, he looked negligently, for the truck was not invisible, and was seen by another witness. On the other hand, if the plaintiff did not look before leaving the sidewalk to cross the pavement, it is claimed he was negligent for not looking. Appellant has cited numerous authorities where this principle has been applied. The facts in the cases referred to, however, are either quite different from those in the case at bar, or are cases where the jury or trial court determined the question as a decision of fact. It is certainly not true that this principle can be applied to every case of a pedestrian struck by a vehicle while attempting to cross the street. The test is, not whether the plaintiff did all that was possible for him to do, such as seeing everything that was possible to see that could be a source of danger to him, but whether he acted with ordinary care and prudence under all the facts and circumstances. A pedestrian acting with ordinary prudence at a time when lights are reasonably necessary or required by law may look with due care, and still fail to see an unlighted truck, or fail to apprehend that it is a source of danger to him. Especially is this so where the truck makes a turn just before coming into the street and bearing upon the pedestrian. At least we cannot say that this is not true as a matter of law. The rule is well settled, as stated in Johnson v. Southern Pacific R. Co., 154 Cal. 295, 97 P. 520, and also in Zibbell v. Southern Pacific R. Co., 160 Cal. 237, 241, 116 P. 513, that it is only where no fact is left in doubt, and no deduction or inference other than negligence can be drawn by the jury from the evidence that a court can say as a matter of law that contributory negligence is established. Even where the facts are undisputed, if reasonable minds might draw different conclusions upon the question of negligence, the question is one for the jury. Seller v. Market Street Ry. Co., 139 Cal. 268, 271, 72 P. 1006.

[5] Under the facts which the jury were entitled to believe from the record in this case, it was entitled to find that the plaintiff was free from contributory negligence, and this finding by the jury will not be disturbed by this court on appeal.

[6] We see no error in the court's rulings on evidence admitted over the objection of appellant. The injuries testified to by the doctor were embraced within the allegations of the complaint. The time card of a workingman was properly received in evidence when produced by him in connection with his statement made without objection that the time clock kept accurate time. This was material to help fix the time of the accident.

[7] Appellant criticizes instruction No. 7 given by the court, in which the following expression is used:

> "The plaintiff's negligence must be the direct or proximate cause of his injuries or it will not defeat his claim for damages in the event his injuries if any were caused by the negligence of the defendant."

Strictly speaking, contributory negligence is not the proximate, but is more properly referred to as a proximate, cause, because it co-operates with another proximate cause, to wit, the negligence of the defendant. But here the instruction as a whole is not even technically wrong, much less misleading. This instruction, in the part quoted, and also in its first part, makes plain that the injuries referred to must have been caused by the negligence of the defendant. It is not capable of a construction meaning that contributory negligence of plaintiff must be the only cause of the injuries in order to bar his recovery.

[8] Another instruction attacked by the appellant reads in part as follows:

> "I instruct you that the requirement of * * * the Motor Vehicle Act, 'that all times during half an hour after sunset to half an hour before sunrise every automobile while on the public highways shall carry at the front at least two lighted lamps,' and if you find from the evidence that the said Kleiber truck operated * * * at the time of the accident to the plaintiff herein was being so operated one-half hour after sunset, etc. * * *"

Appellant claims that the language used by the court in the foregoing quoted portion gave the jury to understand that the law required such headlights during the period of one-half hour commencing at sunset instead of during the period commencing at the expiration of one-half hour after sunset. The criticism is hypercritical, and without merit.

[9] Appellant complains of the court's refusal to give requested instructions 17 and 20, but it has suggested no reason why this refusal constituted error, and we can see no error in the ruling. The other instructions requested and refused were properly refused, either because they constituted a repetition of instructions given at the request of the appellant or because they were based upon the theory that plaintiff in any event was guilty of contributory negligence in putting himself in a place of danger either without looking for or without seeing the approaching danger. We have treated this point above.

For the foregoing reasons, it is ordered that the judgment appealed from be, and the same is hereby, affirmed.

SCHURMAN v. LOS ANGELES CREAMERY CO. (Civ. 5289.)

1. Highways 🔑184(2)—Evidence held to sustain findings of negligence of driver of wagon colliding with plaintiff's automobile.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain findings for plaintiff on question of defendant's negligence, in action for damages resulting from collision between plaintiff's automobile and defendant's milk wagon when latter was on wrong side of road along which plaintiff was driving in opposite direction.

2. Appeal and error 🔑1010(1)—Findings supported by testimony not so inherently weak as to warrant conclusion that, as matter of law, they cannot be upheld, will not be disturbed.

Findings of fact, on which judgment appealed from was predicated, will not be disturbed, if supported by testimony not so inherently weak or wanting in probative force as to warrant conclusion that, as matter of law, they cannot be upheld.

3. Highways 🔑184(2)—Burden was on defendant to establish contributory negligence of automobile driver, unless apparent from plaintiff's case.

In action for damages from collision between plaintiff's automobile and defendant's milk wagon, burden was on defendant to establish defense that plaintiff proximately contributed to accident by his own negligence, unless it clearly appeared from plaintiff's case.

4. Highways 🔑184(3)—Automobile driver held not contributorily negligent as matter of law in not seeing wagon in time to avoid collision.

Automobilist, traveling at 12 to 15 miles per hour, with headlights on at night, held not contributorily negligent as matter of law in failing to see milk wagon moving toward him just over center of highway in time to stop before collision therewith.

5. Appeal and error 🔑1010(1)—Much more is required for appellate court to find respondent contributorily negligent as matter of law than to sustain such fact finding in trial court.

For appellate court to determine, as matter of law, that respondent was guilty of contributory negligence, much more is required than would be sufficient in trial court to sustain a fact finding to same effect.

6. Appeal and error 🔑1010(1)—Undisputed facts must show failure to exercise ordinary care for appellate court to find respondent contributorily negligent as matter of law.

For appellate court to determine, as matter of law, that respondent was guilty of contributory negligence, it must be clearly shown from undisputed facts, judged in light of common knowledge and experience, that he failed to exercise such care as men of common prudence usually exercise in positions of like exposure.

7. Appeal and error 🔑1010(1)—Evidence must leave no room for doubt to justify appellate court in determining as matter of law that respondent was contributorily negligent.

Evidence against plaintiff should be so clear as to leave no room for doubt, and facts such that inference is irresistible, to justify appellate court in determining, as matter of law, that he was guilty of contributory negligence against finding to contrary.

8. New trial 🔑104(1)—New trial for newly discovered cumulative evidence is properly denied.

Refusal of new trial for merely cumulative newly discovered evidence is not error.

9. New trial 🔑102(1)—New trial for newly discovered evidence, not shown to have been unprocurable at trial by reasonable diligence, is properly denied.

Refusal of new trial for newly discovered evidence is not error, in absence of showing that it could not have been secured at trial by exercise of reasonable diligence.

10. New trial 🔑99—New trial for newly discovered evidence, merely establishing conflict in testimony, and showing no probability of different result, is properly denied.

Refusal of new trial for newly discovered evidence, which could have had no greater effect than to establish a conflict in testimony, and does not show slightest probability of different result had it been available, is not error.

11. New trial 🔑100—New trial for newly discovered evidence of unemployment period and reading of X-ray plates held properly denied, where court based damages on pain, suffering, and impaired earning power.

Refusal of new trial of damage suit for newly discovered evidence of plaintiff's period of unemployment and reading of X-ray plates in evidence held not error, where court based damages on pain, suffering, and impaired earning power.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Elliot Craig, Judge.

Action by George Schurman against the Los Angeles Creamery Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Martin E. Geibel, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

C. F. Holland, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PARKER, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment rendered in favor of plaintiff in an action for damages alleged to have been sustained as a result of a collision between an automobile driven by plaintiff and a milk wagon of defendant corporation. Plaintiff recovered judgment for the sum of $719.30, which included $50 as physician's fees and $69.30 for damages to his automobile.

Issue was joined on the question of defendant's negligence and on the amount of damage, and also defendant set up the contributory negligence of plaintiff as an affirmative defense. The case was tried before the court without a jury.

[1] The first contention of appellant is that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the findings of the court on the question of defendant's negligence.

Plaintiff testified as follows:

> "I was traveling in a westerly direction and on the north side of the highway. I was going about twelve or fifteen miles per hour when I struck something. I did not know what it was. I heard two horses jump, and then I saw the wagon. I hit the hind wheel of the wagon because the wagon was standing across the highway. I saw the driver of the wagon laying on the ground. He told me that he was passing a machine that was standing on the right-hand side of the road from him, and that he had passed that, and was going over to his side of the road. I was on the north side of the road going west. He, the driver of the wagon, was on the south side, but the hind part of his wagon was standing crosswise on the boulevard north of the middle of the road. My lights were lit, and it was about an hour and a quarter after sundown. The defendant's wagon had no light, and I was unable to see the wagon before I hit it. As the result of the injury, I suffered much pain, and sustained various injuries."

One Shipman, who was seated in the car of plaintiff, next him, at the time of the accident, testified substantially as did plaintiff. He saw a lantern, but knew it was not lit.

The driver of the wagon testified that it was loaded with full milk cans; about fifteen cans, each containing 200 pounds of milk. He testified that, if he had been on the right-hand side of the road, he would not have been hit, and that his being on the wrong side caused the collision.

[2] It is not necessary to present herein a statement of the testimony submitted by defendant, for, as far as this court is concerned, it is sufficient if there be found in the record—as we find herein—in support of the findings testimony characterized by no such inherent weakness, or upon its face so wanting in probative force, as to warrant the conclusion that as a matter of law it cannot uphold the conclusions of fact upon which the judgment is predicated. Stohlman v. Martin, 28 Cal. App. 339, 152 P. 319. Not only is the evidence adduced by plaintiff sufficient to sustain the findings, but the evidence of the defendant is not in direct conflict as to the facts. Defendant by its witnesses endeavors to demonstrate by argumentative process the fact that the accident could not have happened as plaintiff relates it.

It is always a difficult matter to try and explain an accident. Common experience indicates that many things actually happen that upset all prior ideas of relativity. In accidents the laws of nature seem to suspend themselves for the time, and peculiar and unexplainable results follow. In this case the theories of the defendant were not satisfactory or convincing to the learned trial judge; and there seems nothing so compelling about them to warrant this court in attempting to speculate upon the oddities of an accidental occurrence.

[3-7] Appellant next urges that, even if defendant was negligent, the plaintiff, by his own negligence, proximately contributed to the accident, and that the collision was the result of plaintiff's own carelessness and negligence.

Of course, defendant has the burden of establishing this defense, unless it clearly appears from the case of plaintiff. Appellant urges that respondent was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law from his own statement of the occurrence, and that such contributory negligence was the proximate cause of the injury. It is appellant's claim in this behalf that, if plaintiff was traveling at the rate of 12 to 15 miles per hour with his headlights on, he must have seen the wagon of appellant in ample time to stop before the collision, and that his failure so to do precludes his recovery. The admitted fact, incidentally, is that appellant's wagon was not directly in the course of respondent's lights, but just over the center of the highway, and moving toward respondent. Appellant asks the court to determine, as a matter of law, that a person traveling the highway at night must see every object on his half of the highway in face of the fact that automobile engineers and manufacturers are expending vast sums of money in extensive research to develop lights that will measure up to appellant's requirements, and have so far been but partly successful. In order that this court could determine, as a matter of law, that respondent was guilty of contributory negligence, much more is required than would be sufficient in the trial court to sustain a finding of fact to the same effect. It must be clearly shown from the undisputed facts, judged in the light of common knowledge and experience, that a party has not exercised such care as men of common prudence usually exercise in positions of like exposure. Nehrbas v. Central Pac. R. Co., 62 Cal. 320. The evidence against the plaintiff should be so clear as to leave no room for doubt, and the facts such that the inference is irresistible, to justify this court in determining, as a matter of law, plaintiff guilty of contributory negligence against the finding. Schneider v. Market St. R. Co., 134 Cal. 487, 66 P. 734. In the instant case we will not disturb the trial court's finding on that question.

[8-11] Appellant further claims that the court erred in denying his motion for a new trial. Aside from the sufficiency of the evidence, already passed on herein, appellant urged the ground of newly discovered evidence.

The evidence presented was to a great extent wholly cumulative, and there was absolutely no showing that the same could not have been secured at the trial by the exercise of reasonable diligence. The remaining evidence alleged to have been newly discovered could have had no greater effect than to establish a conflict in the testimony, and there appears therefrom not the slightest probability that, had it been available, the result would have been different. In passing, it might also be said that it is not apparent that the findings of the court were adverse to appellant on the issues to which this newly discovered evidence might be directed. Explanatory of this, the new evidence went mainly to plaintiff's period of unemployment and the reading of certain X-ray plates in evidence. The court in its finding based its damages upon pain and suffering and impaired earning power.

Finding no error, the judgment is affirmed.

ROSS v. ROSS. (Civ. 5468.)

1. Divorce 🔑303(2) — If divorced mother teaches child disrespect of father or shows herself unfit, custody may be changed to father.

If divorced mother were teaching child disrespect of father or conducting herself as unfit person to have care and custody of minor child, court could modify divorce decree by changing custody from mother to father.

2. Divorce 🔑296, 312—Custody and maintenance of children of divorced parents are within discretion of trial court, whose action will not be reversed in absence of clear abuse.

Trial court has extensive discretion in awarding custody of children of divorced parents and providing for their support and maintenance with view of best interests of minors, and its conclusion will not be set aside in absence of clear abuse of discretion.

3. Divorce 🔑298(1)—Court's discretion held not abused in awarding custody of minor child to divorced wife.

In action for divorce, trial court held not to have abused discretion in awarding custody of minor child to the wife.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

Action by Mary Ellen Ross against George Henry Ross. From an order of the superior court denying motion to modify decree of divorce, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Stanley F. Nolan, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Fabian H. Hillebrandt, of San Francisco, for respondent.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from an order denying defendant's motion to modify a decree of divorce. The notice of motion, eliminating that part merely formal, is that defendant will move the court "to modify the decree and orders herein so that defendant shall pay the sum of $15 per month for the support of the minor child of plaintiff and defendant, instead of the sum of $25 per month as previously ordered herein; that said child of said parties shall be known as Aileen Ross; that said child shall be taught respect and love for her father," etc.

During the course of the argument in this court, counsel for appellant waived the question of a reduction of the monthly allowance for the support and maintenance of the minor child and conceded the amount of $25 per month to be a proper allowance, but insists that the trial court should have entered its order directing that the child be known by the name of "Ross" and not "Callahan"—the mother's name by reason of a subsequent marriage—and that the child be taught to respect and love her father.

[1] It is difficult to see how the court could enforce its order in this respect, if made. If the mother were teaching the child disrespect of her father or in any manner so conducting herself that she is not a fit and proper person to have the care and custody of the minor child, the court could modify its decree changing such custody from the mother to the father; but there is no claim that the mother is not a fit and proper person to have the care and custody of such minor.

The evidence contained in the record, however, strongly supports the conclusion that the mother, while not teaching the child to disrespect the father, has encouraged respect and has never denied the right of the father to see the child on all proper and convenient occasions. It is true that the child was registered at school under the name "Aileen Callahan," but the mother notified the school authorities that her name was "Aileen Ross," and the proper correction has been made.

[2, 3] The Code has not provided explicit rules in regard to the exercise of the trial court's discretion in awarding custody of children and providing for their support and maintenance. It is manifest that the Legislature intended to confide to trial courts a very extensive discretion in this respect with a view of the best interest of such minors, and its conclusion will not be set aside in the absence of a clear abuse of that discretion. Bancroft v. Bancroft, 178 Cal. 352, 173 P. 582. In the instant case the action of the trial court was not an abuse of discretion, but, on the contrary, as the record discloses, such discretion was properly exercised.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

BURDICK v. KERKOVECZ et ux.

(Civ. 5331.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 18, 1927.)

1. Vendor and purchaser 🔑110, 334(1)—Vendor's failure to furnish abstract under contract entitles purchaser to disaffirm and recover payment.

Vendor's failure or refusal to furnish an abstract of title, required by the contract of sale, is such breach as entitles purchaser to disaffirm the contract and recover back purchase money paid.

2. Quieting title 🔑49—Court properly refused to quiet title of vendor's defaulting successor in interest except on condition of refunding purchase money.

Court properly imposed condition that vendor's successor in interest, who failed to furnish abstract, must refund purchase money as condition precedent to decree quieting title against purchaser.

3. Escrows 🔑8(2)—After vendor terminated, escrow vendees were not placed in default by refusing to sign additional escrow instructions.

Where vendees kept balance of purchase price in escrow until vendor's successor in interest withdrew deed, thereby terminating escrow, vendees were not thereafter placed in default by refusal to sign additional escrow instructions.

4. Descent and distribution 🔑129—Heir takes real estate, subject to equities of purchaser, under contract (Civ. Code, §§ 1589, 3521).

Heir inherits real estate, subject to the equities of purchaser, under contract with ancestor, under maxim, Civ. Code, § 3521, he who takes the benefit must bear the burden, and Civ. Code, § 1589, providing that voluntary acceptance of benefits of transaction is equivalent to consent to obligations arising from it.

5. Executors and administrators 🔑224—Vendees' claim for refund of purchase money was not barred by failure to file claim against estate of vendor whose heir defaulted.

Failure of vendees to present a claim against estate of deceased vendor did not bar their claim for refund of purchase money paid, upon default in contract by vendor's heir.

6. Vendor and purchaser 🔑337—Where vendor defaults in furnishing abstract, vendee has lien on property for return of purchase money paid, under statute (Civ. Code, § 3050).

Omission of vendor and his successor in interest to furnish abstract of title under contract providing therefor constitutes failure of consideration, entitling purchaser to lien on property for purchase money paid, under Civ. Code, § 3050, providing that purchaser under agreement for sale has special lien on property upon failure of consideration.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Albert Lee Stephens, Judge.

Suit by M. St. Keyna L. Burdick against Charles Kerkovecz and wife, to quiet title. From an interlocutory decree quieting plaintiff's title on condition, plaintiff and defendants appeal. Affirmed as corrected.

Scarborough & Bowen, of Los Angeles, for appellants Kerkovecz.

C. La V. Larzelere, of Long Beach, for respondent Burdick.

KNIGHT, J. Two appeals from a decree in a suit to quiet title are presented herein.

On December 16, 1919, the defendants entered into a written contract with Roland A. Wood-Seys, plaintiff's father, for the purchase and sale of a dwelling situate in the town of Avalon, Santa Catalina Island, for the sum of $3,000 cash, of which sum defendants paid $1,000 at the time the contract was executed, and agreed, as provided in the contract—

"to pay the balance of $2,000 not later than the 31st day of December, 1919. Deed and abstract to be given on full payment. Possession to be given not later than three days after full payment." (Italics ours.)

Five days subsequent to the execution of said contract the vendor died. Shortly afterwards plaintiff was appointed administratrix of his estate, and, being sole heir, succeeded to the property in question, subject to the interest acquired therein by defendants under said contract.

The sale to defendants was not consummated, and on January 14, 1921, plaintiff brought this suit to quiet title, the complaint being in the usual form, alleging ownership and possession of the property in plaintiff, and that defendants claimed an adverse title therein which was without right or foundation. Defendants, besides denying plaintiff's asserted absolute title, alleged in their answer that they acquired an interest in said property by reason of said contract and the payment thereunder of the sum of $1,000; that the sale was not consummated on account of the default of the vendor and his successor in interest in that they failed to furnish the abstract of title as in said contract provided; that after the death of her father, plaintiff took possession of said $1,000, has since retained the same for her own use and benefit, and has refused defendants' demand for the return thereof to them; defendants therefore prayed that plaintiff take nothing by her action, and that it be adjudged and decreed that defendants have a lien on said real property for the sum of $1,000 and interest from December 16, 1919, the date of payment.

The trial court's findings followed substantially the denials and allegations of the answer, and thereupon an interlocutory decree was entered, in accordance with the terms of its conclusions of law, to the effect that:

> "Upon the plaintiff depositing with the court within 90 days, * * * for payment to defendants, the sum of $1,000, together with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from January 1, 1921, a final decree shall be made and entered quieting plaintiff's title. * * *"

—but that upon the failure of plaintiff to so deposit said sum she should take nothing by said action.

Both parties to said decree, being dissatisfied therewith, have appealed, plaintiff contending, among other things, that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding that failure to consummate the sale was due to the default of the vendor and his successor in interest, and defendants claiming that the court should have given them judgment for the recovery of the money paid by them or impressed said property with a lien for the payment thereof.

The evidence upon which the trial court made its finding to the effect that an abstract of title was never furnished or tendered, as in said contract provided, was as follows: On July 6, 1920, which was prior to the distribution of the property to plaintiff, she placed in escrow with a Los Angeles bank a deed signed by her in her individual capacity, accompanied by instructions to continue the certificate of title to the property down to the date of the deed, and in compliance therewith the bank "ordered a search of the property." During the month following, August, 1920, defendants delivered to said bank a draft for the sum of $2,060, payable to the bank's order, with instructions to pay said sum—

> "upon delivery of grant deed in favor of (defendants) Charles Kerkovecz and Betty Kerkovecz, his wife, covering part of lot 38, block 33, city of Avalon (the property in question), together with certificate of title showing title clear, vested in the new owners."

But on November 26, 1920, without having obtained the continuation of the certificate of title, and consequently never having tendered the same, plaintiff terminated the escrow by withdrawing her deed; whereupon, two weeks later, defendants requested the return of their deposit, but the same was not actually refunded until April, 1921. Several weeks after the escrow had been terminated by both parties, plaintiff personally tendered a deed to defendants, but admittedly did not furnish or tender therewith an abstract or a certificate of title. Defendants refused to accept the deed and demanded the return of the initial payment made on the contract. From the foregoing it would appear without dispute that, although plaintiff requested the bank to obtain a continuation of the certificate of title, and that the bank "ordered a search" of the title to the property to be made, no abstract or completed certificate of title, was, in fact, ever obtained, furnished or tendered.

[1] It is well settled that the failure or refusal of a vendor to perform his part of the contract entitles the purchaser, if not in default, to treat the contract as at an end and to recover any money which he has paid thereunder (Chatfield v. Williams, 85 Cal. 518, 24 P. 839; Bertola v. Allred, 46 Cal. App. 593, 189 P. 489), the reason therefor being that it would be inequitable to permit a vendor to retain money paid him if he has failed to keep his contract or to furnish the consideration on his part (Carter v. Fox, 11 Cal. App. 67, 103 P. 910); and the authorities, without conflict, further hold that where an abstract of title is called for, it is incumbent upon the vendor to furnish the same before he can put the vendee in default; and if he fails to furnish the same, the purchaser has the legal right to disaffirm and insist upon a refund of the part purchase money paid (Carter v. Fox, supra; Robben v. Benson, 37 Cal. App. 227, 173 P. 766; Howe v. Hutchinson, 105 Ill. 501; Kane v. Rippey, 24 Or. 338, 33 P. 936; Horn v. Butler, 39 Minn. 515, 40 N. W. 833; Matheson v. C-B Live Stock Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 176 S. W. 734; Maupin on Marketable Titles, p. 169.)

[2] Therefore, in the instant case, since the vendor and his successor in interest defaulted in the performance of the contract by failing to furnish said abstract, the trial court was justified, in the exercise of its equitable powers, in refusing to grant plaintiff a decree in the absolute form prayed for, quieting her title against the claim of defendants accruing under said contract, unless as such successor in interest plaintiff refunded the money previously paid on the purchase price. Chandler v. Chandler, 55 Cal. 267; Benson v. Shotwell, 87 Cal. 49, 25 P. 249, 681.

[3] Plaintiff contends, however, that defendants were first in default because they declined to sign certain additional escrow instructions requested by the bank. The import of those additional instructions is not made clear by the record, but, regardless thereof, there can be no force in plaintiff's contention, for the reason that defendants fully complied with the terms of the contract and with all legal requirements as vendees when they deposited with the bank the full amount of the balance due on the purchase price, accompanied by the plain and definite instructions, hereinabove quoted, to pay over said deposit upon delivery of a grant deed in their favor conveying the property in question, together with a certificate of title; and when plaintiff thereafter failed to perform the contract and terminated the escrow, said contract was at an end, entitling defendants to the return of the purchase money paid. Glock v. Howard, etc., Co., 123 Cal. 10, 55 P. 713, 43 L. R. A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17; Robben v. Benson, supra.

[4] Further contention is made by plaintiff that, in no event, may she be held liable for the payment of said sum of $1,000 because she was not a party to the contract, and as an heir is not liable for the payment of the debts of her deceased father. The point is without merit, because the decree does not purport to be a money judgment against plaintiff personally. It merely makes the payment of said sum optional with her, depending upon her desire to obtain the equitable relief she is asking, and is founded upon the proposition that, having acquired a title through inheritance which was limited by the decree of distribution and made subject to certain equities created by the written obligation of the one from whom she inherited, she was not entitled to have such title quieted against those equities and thus be given greater rights in the property than were possessed by her predecessor at the time of his death, unless she extinguished said equities; in other words, that she was not allowed to accept and enjoy the full benefits of said inheritance without assuming its burdens. Civ. Code, §§ 3521, 1589; Mathews v. Wilson, 38 Cal. App. 148, 175 P. 647.

[5] Plaintiff contends, also, that defendants' right to the return of said money is barred because they failed to present a claim therefor against the estate of her deceased father. The default in the performance of the contract did not occur, however, until after her father's death, from which it follows that defendants had no valid claim against his estate. The other points urged in support of plaintiff's appeal either relate to immaterial matters or do not possess sufficient merit to require discussion.

[6] As to defendants' appeal, section 3050 of the Civil Code reads as follows:

> "One who pays to the owner any part of the price of real property, under an agreement for the sale thereof, has a special lien upon the property, independent of possession, for such part of the amount paid as he may be entitled to recover back, in case of a failure of consideration."

The omission of the vendor and his successor in interest to furnish an abstract of title doubtless constituted a failure of consideration (Benson v. Shotwell, supra), which entitled defendants to a return of the purchase money paid (Glock v. Howard, etc., Co., supra; Robben v. Benson, supra). We therefore believe that, under the Code section quoted, defendants were entitled to have a lien impressed upon the property for the repayment to them of said purchase money, in the event that plaintiff declined to exercise the option granted by the interlocutory decree to deposit said money in court, and that a provision to that effect should have been inserted in the interlocutory decree. In the absence of such provision, the form of final decree to be rendered upon plaintiff's declining to deposit said money in court will obviously afford defendants no relief whatever, for it will decree merely that plaintiff take nothing by her action, thereby leaving the parties where it found them at the commencement of the litigation, and effectually denying to defendants the right to the return of said purchase money.

It is therefore ordered that the decree appealed from be corrected so as to provide therein that, in the event of the failure of plaintiff to deposit said money in court, defendants have a lien upon said property therefor, in accordance with said Code section and the views herein expressed; and, as corrected, said decree will stand affirmed, defendants to recover their costs.

CITY OF LOS ANGELES v. VICKERS et al.

1. Eminent domain 🔑265(3)—Expert's fees not "costs," and their denial not unconstitutional taking of property (Const. art. 1, § 14).

Fees paid for expert testimony in defense of condemnation suit are not "costs" within the meaning of condemnation statute; consequently an order denying such costs is not a violation of Const. art. 1, § 14, prohibiting taking private property for public use without just compensation.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Costs.]

2. Eminent domain 🔑265(3)—Under eminent domain statute, fees of experts held not properly chargeable as "costs" (Code Civ. Proc. § 1255).

Code Civ. Proc. § 1255, providing for allowance of costs in discretion of court in condemnation proceedings, held not to authorize payment of expert witness fees which are not ordinary costs attending trials allowed under statutory provisions.

3. Eminent domain 🔑265(1)—Costs chargeable are ordinary and usual costs attending trials and allowed under statutes (Code Civ. Proc. § 1255).

Costs allowable under Code Civ. Proc. § 1255, in condemnation proceedings, are the ordinary and usual costs attending trials and allowed under statutory provisions.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hugh J. Crawford, Judge.

Action in eminent domain by the City of Los Angeles against Anna C. Vickers and others. From an order denying its motion to tax costs, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Jess E. Stephens, City Atty., and Donald M. Keith, Deputy City Atty., both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Youngworth, McClean & Hartman, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WORKS, P. J. This action involves the exercise of the right of eminent domain. Decree of condemnation having gone for plaintiff, defendant Youngworth filed a memorandum of his costs and disbursements, whereupon plaintiff filed its notice of motion to tax the costs. Upon the motion coming on to be heard the trial court made its order denying it. From this order plaintiff appeals.

[1] The items of the cost bill to which exception was taken showed the payment of fees to certain experts upon the value of real property, in compensation for their time expended in testifying for respondent. These fees were in addition to and much in excess of amounts payable to witnesses under the law as "witness fees," strictly so-called, and for mileage. Respondent contends that the charges of the experts for testifying are collectible as "costs," for the reason that to deny to him a recovery of them would be to lessen the amount awarded to him for his lands by the condemnation decree. The result, so he says, will be a violation of the constitutional inhibition against the taking of private property for public use without just compensation. Appellant contends that the charges are not collectible as costs at all.

We must say at the outset that we cannot agree with the contention of respondent in its fullness. It is the rule as to litigation other than that involving the exercise of the right of eminent domain that the right to recover costs is purely statutory. People v. Feraud, 45 Cal. App. 765, 188 P. 843. And it has been said in a condemnation case:

> "The word 'costs,' when used in relation to the expenses of legal proceedings, means the sum prescribed by law as charges for the services enumerated in the fee-bill." City of St. Louis v. Meintz, 107 Mo. 611, 18 S. W. 30.

Another court has remarked in a proceeding of a similar nature:

> "This claim [for the fees of experts] was disallowed on the ground that the act of Assembly, in providing that in a proceeding such as this all costs shall be paid by the municipal corporation, had in contemplation only such costs as may be legally taxed in the ordinary action, and not those expenses which a party to the cause may have incurred. We entertain no doubt whatever as to the correctness of this conclusion. The word 'costs,' as used in this connection, has a fixed and definite meaning, viz. costs authorized by statutes." In re City of Pittsburgh, 243 Pa. 392, 90 A. 329, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 262.

In a condemnation case which came before our own courts a defendant included in his cost bill items of the counsel fees paid by him in conducting his defense. On a motion to tax the trial court struck out the items in question, and on appeal the very ground was taken which is urged by respondent here. The court, according to the syllabus in the report, which is a fair statement of the effect of a portion of the opinion, decided:

> "The 'just compensation' to which the owner of property is entitled under section 14 of article 1 of the Constitution, in proceedings in eminent domain, does not include reasonable disbursements made by him for attorneys at the trial; it has reference to the value of the property taken and the damage to property not taken, and nothing more."

The court said in the opinion, also:

> "It has frequently been held that costs are recoverable only by virtue of some statute." Pacific Gas & E. Co. v. Chubb, 24 Cal. App. 265, 141 P. 36.

This case appears to be exactly in point upon the question which respondent makes as to his rights under the Constitution. It is true that the decision relates to attorney's fees as costs, but expenditures made to lawyers for the defense of a condemnation suit and fees paid to experts for their testimony stand in the same category in so far as it may be contended that payment of the latter reduces, in effect, the amount to be paid to a defendant under decree of condemnation. We think the point made under the Constitution is without merit.

[2] It yet remains to decide whether, under the statutes of this state, respondent was entitled to judgment for the items of alleged costs which he claimed and which the trial court allowed him; and in determining this question it is to be observed that there is no contention that the experts who testified for respondent were appointed by the court. They were apparently of respondent's own selection.

Section 1022 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "costs are allowed of course, to the plaintiff, upon a judgment in his favor," in certain specified actions, among which are not included those commenced for the purpose of condemning real property under the exercise of the right of eminent domain. It is provided in section 1025 of the same Code that in actions other than those mentioned in section 1022 "costs may be allowed or not, * * * in the discretion of the court. * * *" These two sections are found in a chapter of the Code entitled "Costs." Section 1255 of the same Code, contained in a "title" which is headed "Eminent Domain," so far as its language is material here, is identical with section 1025.

There is no legislative declaration in this state as to the meaning of the word "costs" (7 Cal. Jur. 280), but that word has a generally accepted meaning throughout the country. The import of the word, we think, is not broad enough to include such items as the trial court here allowed to respondent. Our research has uncovered but one case (In re Commissioners of Palisades Park, 83 Misc. Rep. 186, 144 N. Y. S. 782) in which it has been decided that the fees of experts are properly chargeable as costs. The decision was rendered under a ruling of the trial court which had allowed them. The ruling was based, however, upon a special statute relating to proceedings in eminent domain, and which provided that the court should tax and allow as costs "such costs, fees and expenses to the commissioners of appraisal and other persons performing any legal duty in the premises" as the court "shall think equitable and right." It would appear that the appellate court's construction of the special statute, which was different from our legislative enactments in material particulars, was eminently proper. There are decisions from several states to the effect that fees paid to experts in condemnation cases are not included in the word "costs." Some of the cases from these states are City of St. Louis v. Meintz, supra; In re Grade Crossing Commissioners, 19 Misc. Rep. 230, 43 N. Y. S. 1073; In re Rapid Transit Commissioners, 103 App. Div. 530, 93 N. Y. S. 262; In re City of Pittsburgh, supra.

[3] It has been determined in Bathgate v. Irvine, 126 Cal. 135, 58 P. 442, 77 Am. St. Rep. 158, that in an action to quiet title fees paid to experts may not be allowed as costs. The taxation of costs in such actions is regulated by the provisions of section 1025 of the Code of Civil Procedure; but section 1255, relating to condemnation proceedings, is cast in the same language as section 1025. It would seem, therefore, that, as the fees of experts are not allowable under the latter section they cannot be allowable under section 1255. It is said in the opinion in Pacific Gas & E. Co. v. Chubb, supra, that the costs referred to in section 1255 "are the ordinary and usual costs attending trials and allowed under statutory provisions." Respondent insists that this remark was not necessary to a decision of the case. Whether this contention be tenable, we do not say. We think, at any rate, that the remark is a correct statement of the law.

In considering the questions presented by this appeal, we have examined San Diego Land & T. Co. v. Neale, 88 Cal. 50, 25 P. 977, 11 L. R. A. 604, San Francisco v. Collins, 98 Cal. 259, 33 P. 56, and City of Oakland v. Pacific Coast L. & M. Co., 172 Cal. 332, 156 P. 468, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 259.

Order reversed, with directions to the trial court to strike from the cost bill the following items: J. B. Vaille, $25; S. O. Walker, $34.25; R. H. Gast, $160; O. L. Sponsler, $150; W. J. Weir, $150; E. S. Butterworth, $100; W. G. Stewart, $100; G. G. Johnson, $125; Arthur R. Mass, $166.50; Thomson-Slavin Co., $9; Stagg Photo Co., $1.50; Langdon Photopress Co., $12.30.

FORBELL v. PACIFIC ELECTRIC RY. CO. et al. (L. A. 8242.)

Carriers 🔑320(21)—Issue of bus driver's negligence held for jury in action by passenger against electric railway and bus company for injuries.

In action by passenger in bus against electric railway company and bus company for injuries resulting from collision, issue of bus driver's negligence held for jury; instruction that driver was negligent being erroneous.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by Robert E. Forbell against the Pacific Electric Railway Company, and A. B. Watson, doing business under the fictitious name and style of Crown Stages. Judgment for plaintiff, and the defendant last named appeals. Judgment reversed in so far as it affects the last-named defendant.

Sarau & Thompson, of Riverside, Clyde Bishop, of Santa Ana, and B. P. Gibbs, and E. E. Morris, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

E. B. Drake, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This appeal was placed upon a special calendar of this court upon an order to the respondent to show cause why the judgment herein should not be reversed, or that such order be made as might be meet in the premises. At the time of the placing of said cause upon said calendar, and the entry of said order, it appeared that the appellant's brief had been filed herein, but that no brief on behalf of the respondent had been filed, although the time for the filing of such brief under the rules of this court had long since expired. It appears that the respondent has sold and assigned the judgment recovered herein to the First National Bank of Santa Ana, Cal. Upon the calling of said calendar, neither the respondent nor his assignee appeared and the order to show cause was thereupon submitted. This is an appeal by the defendant Watson from a judgment entered by the superior court of the county of Los Angeles in favor of the plaintiff, Robert E. Forbell, in an action instituted to recover damages for personal injuries sustained in a collision between an electric car of the defendant Pacific Electric Railway Company and a bus operated by an employee and servant of said appellant Watson. At the time of the collision, which occurred at a point where the defendant electric company's line intersects a public road or highway, the injured person was a passenger in the bus of the appellant. After trial of the cause the lower court instructed the jury, as matter of law, that—

> The "defendant Watson is liable in the case, because the bus driver was guilty of negligence. * * * So that * * * regardless of whether the Pacific Electric is liable or not, the defendant Watson is."

The court then went on to instruct, however, that it was the province of the jury to determine whether the servants of the defendant electric railway company were also negligent in the operation of its car.

It is contended by the appellant that the trial court erred in giving an instruction that he was "absolutely liable" because of the asserted negligence of the bus driver. We are of the opinion that this contention is meritorious. An examination of the record discloses that there is ample evidence therein tending to show that the driver of the bus stopped a short distance from the tracks of the railway and looked to the right and left before attempting to cross said tracks. The driver of the bus and a passenger sitting directly behind him both testified that they were unable after glancing to the right and left, to see the approaching car of the defendant electric railway company. In fact, the plaintiff himself testified that he was sitting on the second from the rear seat of the bus and that he did not see the approaching car until the position of the bus placed him practically on a direct line therewith, thus tending to indicate that the electric car was not discernible until the bus was well upon the tracks of the defendant railway company. In view of this evidence, we are of the opinion that the question of fact as to the bus driver's negligence should have been submitted to the jury and it was error for the trial court to instruct, as matter of law, that the bus driver was negligent. The instruction complained of finds no support in the case of Billig v. So. Pac. Co., 192 Cal. 357, 219 P. 992, apparently relied on by the trial court in giving the same for the circumstances in that case differed in that the automobile truck driver therein failed to "stop, look and listen" before venturing across the railroad tracks. We are not to be understood as holding, however, that the driver of the bus in the instant case was not negligent. Our conclusion is merely that this question should have been submitted to the jury.

The two other grounds urged by the appellant may not properly be considered on this appeal.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment appealed from in so far as it affects the appellant Watson is hereby reversed.

NEILSON v. HOULE. (L. A. 8062.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 29, 1927.)

1. Municipal corporations 🔑706(5)—Evidence held to sustain finding of negligence of driver of automobile colliding with motorcycle.

In action for injuries resulting from collision between automobile and motorcycle, evidence held to sustain finding of negligence of automobile driver.

2. Appeal and error 🔑1001(1)—Testimony in action for injuries resulting from collision held not so inherently improbable as to require reversal.

In action for injuries resulting from collision between automobile and motorcycle, plaintiff's testimony held not so inherently improbable or impossible as to require reversal.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John Perry Wood, Judge.

Action by James K. Neilson against R. Houle. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

George C. Watson and E. B. Drake, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Bertrand J. Wellman and J. M. Fursee, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. This appeal presents the single issue as to whether or not we will override the judgment of the court below on the verdict of a jury rendered on conflicting evidence in an action for personal injuries.

Plaintiff's testimony showed that at the time of the accident he was proceeding at a lawful speed on the proper or right-hand side of the street, while going south on Santa Fé avenue in Los Angeles; that there were machines parked along the right or west side of said street, which obstructed his view of vehicles entering the street from that side; that the defendant, who had been on the premises of the Good Roads Machinery Company, on the right or west side of said avenue, suddenly entered the street immediately in front of him and was traveling in a northeasterly direction across the 56-foot street at a reasonable rate of speed; that plaintiff, thinking to avoid a collision, swerved to the left about 10 feet, and the machine failing to slow down or stop a collision resulted at a point near the center of the street, leaving the automobile still pointing in a northeasterly direction and diagonally across the street.

[1, 2] The complaint alleged negligence on the part of defendant, and the answer set up negligence on the part of plaintiff, as the sole cause of the accident. The evidence was sufficient to warrant the jury in finding defendant guilty of negligence in entering the street from a private entrance thereon at a point where his presence would be obscured to oncoming traffic by parked machines without taking some precaution to avoid a collision and also in not stopping his car to prevent the collision. No authorities are cited nor is there any contention made of insufficiency of the evidence, but the appeal is prosecuted upon the sole ground of inherent improbability of plaintiff's testimony. In other words, appellant appears to desire to invoke the rule of incredible testimony, which is, as stated in section 381, page 1145, of volume 10, Cal. Jur.:

> "Where testimony, in the light of the undisputed facts, is so inherently improbable and impossible of belief as to, in effect, constitute no evidence at all, the rule that the amount of credit to be given to the positive testimony of any witness is solely a question for the trial tribunal, does not apply. Undoubtedly an appellate court, in reviewing the evidence, is bound to exercise its intelligence, and in doing so must recognize that certain facts are controlled by immutable physical laws. * * * Even if there is a certain degree of improbability about much of the evidence that leaves it unsatisfactory to the mind of the appellate court, if it is not contradicted nor impeached except by its own weakness the decision of the lower court will not be disturbed."

See, also, De Arellanes v. Arellanes, 151 Cal. 443, 90 P. 1059, and Austin v. Newton, 46 Cal. App. 493, 189 P. 471.

The contention of defendant, in the language of his counsel, is as follows:

> "That he had been in a building and that he backed his automobile out on the west side of Santa Fé avenue about 100 feet from where the accident happened and then drove directly across the street and was headed practically due north and that his automobile was standing still on the right side of the center of the street, the way he was headed; that by reason of the roughness of the railroad track plaintiff was crossing, some 30 feet northerly from defendant's automobile and the point of collision, it caused his motorcycle to, and it did, swerve to its left and zigzagged so he struck the right front bumper of defendant's automobile headed northerly on Santa Fé avenue, to east of the center thereof, that is, on plaintiff's wrong side of the street."

There is thus present a direct and sharp conflict in the evidence. There is nothing at all inherently improbable in the story of plaintiff. One or the other party must be disbelieved in a situation of this kind. The jury believed the plaintiff and rendered a verdict accordingly. The court below, being dissatisfied with the amount thereof, caused it to be reduced from $20,000 to $12,000, but no dissatisfaction was expressed as to the proof of negligence; indeed, the conclusion is certain that the court below, after modification as to damages, directly approved the verdict.

This case is well summed up in the language of Austin v. Newton, supra, at pages 497-500 (189 P. 473), as follows:

> "As we understand counsel's argument, what appellant does contend for is that there are certain details of the accident, as described by plaintiff and his witnesses, that are irreconcilably in conflict with certain admitted physical facts. * * * Such inconsistencies, however, would not necessarily prevent a recovery by plaintiff. It is not to be supposed that witnesses to an accident that happens in the twinkling of an eye should accurately observe all the details. Much less is it probable that one who is injured in the accident, and rendered unconscious, should be able to give a correct account of all the quickly happening events. It cannot be laid down as a rule of law that a plaintiff in a personal injury case cannot recover unless the court can see that every detail of the accident, as testified to by the plaintiff and his witnesses, is consistent with admitted physical facts and the laws of science. Undoubtedly where some of the details of an accident, as described by a witness, conflict with admitted physical facts, the whole story of the accident, as given by that witness, may be entirely discredited; but, as an appellate court, we cannot reverse unless we can say that the admitted physical facts are wholly irreconcilable with the negligence alleged in the complaint. To entitle respondent to an affirmance, it is sufficient if it can be said that notwithstanding the admitted physical circumstances, the accident could have been caused by the negligence charged in the complaint. We hold that the reasonableness of plaintiff's version of the accident was a question of fact for the trial court, and that its finding thereon is conclusive here. * * *
> "Undoubtedly an appellate court, in reviewing the evidence, is bound to exercise its intelligence, and in doing so must recognize that certain facts are controlled by immutable physical laws. It cannot permit the verdict of a jury to change such facts, because, as said in Quigley v. Naughton, 100 App. Div. 476 (91 N. Y. S. 491), to do so would, in effect, destroy the intelligence of the court. And when the undisputed circumstances show that the story told by litigant and his witnesses cannot by any possibility be true, or when their testimony is inherently impossible, the appellate court should not hesitate to reverse the judgment, to the end that the cause again may be submitted to the determination of a jury or trial judge.
> "On the other hand, as an appellate court, it is our bounden duty to exercise great care and caution in applying the tests of common sense and common knowledge of physical laws to a given state of facts. Common experience and observation teach us that strange and astonishing things sometimes happen in the world of physical phenomena, and accidents sometimes appear to happen in manner unaccountable. For these reasons an appellate court must be careful not to give to dogmatic and undemonstrated conclusions respecting natural laws precedence over the testimony of apparently credible witnesses; and the mere fact that the admitted circumstances make the story of the witnesses seem improbable will not justify a reversal by an appellate tribunal upon the ground that the verdict is contrary to the evidence. Stokes v. Metropolitan Street Ry. Co., 173 Mo. App. 676 (160 S. W. 46). Unless, therefore, we can say that, under the undisputed physical facts, the accident could not possibly have been due to defendant's negligence as alleged in the complaint, we must affirm the judgment. It is not sufficient that the story told by plaintiff and his witnesses may be improbable. It is for the jury or the trial judge to weigh and balance probabilities. We cannot reverse upon the ground that the finding of negligence is contrary to the evidence unless we can see that the fact as found contravenes recognized physical laws, and that therefore it is impossible that the accident could have been due to the negligence alleged in the complaint.
> "Tested by the foregoing, we cannot say that the finding that defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of the accident is not supported by the evidence."

The judgment is affirmed.

Pierce & Gould, of Ventura, for appellant.

Erle S. Gardner, of Ventura, amicus curiæ.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., H. H. Linney, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Edward Henderson and James C. Hollingsworth, both of Ventura, for the People.

RICHARDS, J. There are in this cause two appeals which are presented upon separate transcripts, but to be considered together. One of these is an appeal from the judgment of conviction of the defendant of the crime of murder in the first degree without recommendation by the jury and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. This appeal was taken by the defendant's regular attorneys of record acting on his behalf. The other appeal is one taken and prosecuted from an order of the trial court, made and entered after final judgment, denying a motion made on behalf of said defendant by certain counsel, appearing in the capacity of amici curiæ for the purpose of presenting said motion on behalf of the defendant and of taking an appeal from the order of the court denying the same.

[1] We shall first in order consider the latter appeal. The facts out of which said appeal arose are these: During the trial of the cause before the superior court in and for the county of Ventura, Mr. E. S. Gardner, a member of the law firm of Drapeau, Orr & Gardner, was present in court and became apparently much moved with sympathy for the unfortunate plight in which the defendant appeared to be, and was impressed with the belief that on account of certain happenings prior to and during the course of said trial the defendant was not being accorded or receiving the full benefit of those rights and privileges to which those who are charged with and being tried for crimes are entitled. Accordingly, after the trial was over, and after the defendant had been convicted of the crime of murder in the first degree without recommendation, and after the motion for a new trial made by his regularly appointed counsel had been denied, and after the defendant had been sentenced to suffer the extreme penalty of the law, Mr. Gardner, acting for his said firm of attorneys, applied to the court for and was granted permission in the capacity of amici curiæ to present orally a motion which he denominated "a motion to set aside the judgment in this case and return the case to the time of arraignment as far as the legal status of the case is concerned." The motion, while thus denominated, was, in effect, an application for a writ coram nobis and was apparently treated as such in the argument and citation of authorities by counsel in presenting the same. It is true that counsel, in presenting his said motion, stated that the remedy which he was seeking thereby was so broad as would, if granted, have enabled the defendant to go back so far in the proceedings against him as to withdraw his original plea of "Not guilty," and to interpose a different plea; but this does not avail to change the essential nature of his motion as being in purpose and effect an application for a writ coram nobis. The trial court, while expressing itself in doubt as to its jurisdiction to entertain such an application, permitted said counsel to make the same and to support it with a full showing of the facts upon which it was asserted to be predicated. These facts were, briefly stated, as follows:

Shortly after the arrest of the defendant for the murder of the woman with whom he was then living as his common-law wife, he stated to the arresting officers that he was "going to plead guilty and take his medicine." On several other occasions between that time and the time of his arraignment he made similar statements as to his intention to plead guilty. At the time of his arraignment the defendant was asked by the court if he had an attorney; he replied that he had not and had no means to employ an attorney, and, if any attorney was to represent him, the court would have to appoint one. The court thereupon appointed the firm of Pierce & Gould to represent the defendant, and a continuance was had until the afternoon at the request of the defendant's said counsel. When the case was again called, both sides answering ready, Mr. Gould of said firm stated on behalf of the defendant that he would waive the reading of the information "and enter a plea of not guilty at this time." He further stated that "we will look into the matter very carefully, and, if it is advisable to change the plea at a later time, we will do so." The court thereupon directed the defendant to stand up and inquired directly of him whether he waived the formal reading of the information, to which the defendant replied in the affirmative; whereupon the court said: "You know, however, that you are charged in this information with the crime of murder, with having killed and murdered one Julia Lopez about the 27th day of June of this year; that is what is charged against you!" The defendant: "Yes sir." The court: "And to this information do you plead guilty or not guilty?" The defendant: "Not guilty for the present." The court thereupon directed the defendant's plea of "Not guilty" to be entered, and set the cause for trial for a date satisfactory to his counsel. At the time of the trial, the defendant and his counsel were in court and answered ready, without any attempt or suggestion of an intent to withdraw said plea. The cause proceeded to a trial before a jury extending over several days, during which the circumstances preceding and attending the homicide were fully gone over, the testimony of an eyewitness to the crime was given with the fully exercised right of cross-examination; the several confessions of the defendant were rehearsed. The defendant himself was sworn and testified on his own behalf. Certain other witnesses also testified for the defense.

The cause was argued by respective counsel, and was finally submitted to the jury for decision after a full set of instructions by the court had been given. In the course of giving said instructions, the court read and explained to the jury five several forms of verdict; that is to say, a verdict of murder in the first degree without recommendation, a verdict of murder in the first degree with recommendation fixing the punishment at life imprisonment, a verdict of murder in the second degree, a verdict of manslaughter, and a verdict of not guilty. These five several forms of verdict when thus read by the court were handed to the jury. In some way not fully explained the signature of the judge had been placed upon two of these forms of verdict on the line affixed for the signature of the foreman of the jury. These two forms of verdict were those relating to the verdict of murder in the second degree and the verdict of not guilty. There is no echo in this record from the jury room as to how that body regarded the matter of the evident misplacing of the name of the trial judge upon these two forms of verdict, but the fact is that the jury returned a verdict of guilty without recommendation and was duly discharged. Thereafter the court fixed the time for pronouncing judgment at several days later, at which time, the defendant and his regular counsel being present in court, the defendant's motion for a new trial was duly presented in writing, setting forth seven separate grounds why such motion should be granted, but setting forth no such ground as that herein urged, viz. that the defendant had mistakenly entered or had entered for him upon his arraignment a plea of not guilty. The motion for a new trial, after being argued by respective counsel, was denied by the court, whereupon the court proceeded to obtain such information as to the defendant's antecedents and his family as is required in certain cases under section 1192a of the Penal Code, and for that purpose placed the defendant upon the witness stand. From the examination which then ensued, it appeared that the defendant, while a Mexican as to his ancestry, was a native-born citizen of the United States of the age of 46 years, born and reared in the county of Ventura, speaking, reading, and writing both the English and Spanish languages, and having attended for a time at least, the public schools of his native place. After these facts had been elicited from the defendant, the court proceeded to pronounce sentence, in the course of which it inquired of the defendant whether he had any legal excuse to offer why the judgment of the court should not then be pronounced. The judge upon making this inquiry understood the defendant to state that he had not, and thereupon proceeded to pass judgment upon him affixing the penalty of death. Counsel of record for the defendant then gave notice of appeal, and the defendant was removed from the courtroom. Shortly thereafter, however, it was made known to the court that it had misunderstood the defendant and that he had something to say why judgment should not be pronounced. The defendant was thereupon returned to court, and, upon inquiry, stated that he had something to say why judgment should not be pronounced; and the court, stating that it had misunderstood him, proceeded to hear his statement. The defendant then made the following statement:

> "Well, when I first came in here before your honor I intended to plead guilty right here, but my attorney advised me not to, so that is the reason I did not, and I hadn't had no chance to explain myself, so that is the reason why I didn't spoke any more. I told Mr. Suytar when he took me up there that I wanted to plead guilty and save the expense of the county. * * * What I mean is that I just wanted to plead guilty as soon as I came before you, and I was advised not to, and that is how I stood trial."

The court upon hearing the foregoing statement replied that it furnished no legal excuse which would give the court authority or power to stay the imposition of the judgment, and that the judgment as pronounced would stand. It then repeated the substantial portion of its former judgment affixing the death penalty, and noted the defendant's appeal to the Supreme Court. At the afternoon session of the court, Mr. Gould, representing his firm, arose in court to ask the court to dismiss his firm from the case upon the ground that, the defendant having at the morning session of court made a statement indicating that he was dissatisfied with his attorneys, it might be possible that he would wish through other attorneys to urge executive clemency on account of their handling of his case. The court stated that he knew of no misconduct on the part of counsel and had no disposition to relieve them of their further duties in or connected with the case, but, on the other hand, suggested that they continue to take every legal step required to perfect an appeal and preserve to the defendant every right of appeal which he might have. Several days later Mr. E. S. Gardner appeared in court to state that, moved by his sympathy for the defendant and under the belief that he had not been accorded all of his rights in the premises, he would ask permission as amicus curiæ and on the defendant's behalf to move to set aside the judgment and restore the cause to the condition in which it stood when the defendant was arraigned, in order that the defendant might withdraw his plea of not guilty and present a plea of guilty as he had at first intended. The court permitted Mr. Gardner, or rather his firm, to act as such amici curiæ in the premises and to present such motion, though doubtful of its jurisdiction to hear and determine the same; whereupon all of the foregoing facts were fully presented to the court, and, the matter being then argued and submitted to the court for its decision, the court rendered its decision as follows:

> "So far as this matter is concerned, I do not see that it affects the defendant one way or the other; and, on the merits of the motion Mr. Gardner has made, I have given it a good deal of consideration, and while I have no doubt in my own mind that the statements of the witnesses as to the declarations made by the defendant with reference to his intention to plead guilty and his desire to plead guilty in this case are true, and that he said he was persuaded or prevented by his counsel from doing so, and that the defendant made those statements or declarations as and when testified to by the witnesses, as a legal proposition I cannot see that the court has any power to interfere with the situation, even if we were to reach the conclusion that the court should so interfere. The defendant was represented by counsel and a trial was had, I believe a fair and impartial trial, and the defendant submitted himself to this tribunal, and I know of no authority in the court at this time to set aside this judgment or to permit now a withdrawal of the plea of not guilty and the interposition of a plea of guilty, and the motion will have to be denied."

[2, 3] It is from the foregoing order that the second appeal herein has been taken. There is no merit either as a matter of law or as a matter of fact upon the record before us in the contentions of counsel acting as amici curiæ upon this second appeal. The case of People v. Perez, 9 Cal. App. 265, 98 P. 870, even if regarded as authority for such a proceeding in cases where no trial of the defendant had been had but a plea had been obtained by some character of duress or the trial was affected by some outside force, has no application to the facts of the instant case wherein no duress of any kind was exercised and where the defendant's trial had been regular in all respects. The very limited class of cases to which the writ of coram nobis would be applicable under our statutory forms of procedure, of which it has never been expressly made a part, was very fully considered by this court in the cases of People v. Mooney, 178 Cal. 525, 174 P. 325, and People v. Reid, 195 Cal. 249, 232 P. 457, 36 A. L. R. 1435, and it is clear that under these authorities the trial court properly denied this application, considered as an application for a writ coram nobis. And, if said application were to be considered as an application for any other or broader remedy than that strictly permissible under coram nobis, it would also have been properly denied upon the ground that the facts were fully known and the remedies fully available to the defendant upon his motion for a new trial and upon his appeal from the order denying such motion. People v. McCoy, 71 Cal. 395, 398, 12 P. 272; Wood v. Moulton, 146 Cal. 317, 322, 80 P. 92. An examination of the record upon the first appeal discloses that the contention that the defendant was injuriously affected by the fact that the name of the trial judge was inadvertently affixed to certain of the forms of verdict above adverted to is fully presented and argued upon that appeal, and will be there given due consideration. For the foregoing reasons the second appeal herein is dismissed.

[4, 5] As to the first or main appeal of the defendant from the judgment of conviction and order denying a new trial herein, it requires but brief attention. There is no merit in the appellant's contention that the evidence in the case was insufficient to sustain the verdict. Aside from the fact that there was an eyewitness to the entire tragedy, whose testimony, notwithstanding certain inconsistencies, the jury was entitled to believe, there was also the confession several times repeated by the defendant that he had slain his common-law wife because of jealousy over her attentions to another man and of her threatened intent to leave him, which confessions were made under circumstances which left little doubt as to their truth. These fully justify the verdict of the jury, even conceding the state of intoxication in which the defendant may have been when he came to the actual moment for the commission of his crime, and which in itself furnishes no excuse for its perpetration. Section 22, Pen. Code; People v. Sainz, 162 Cal. 242, 245, 121 P. 922; People v. Yeager, 194 Cal. 452, 474, 229 P. 40; People v. Casade, 194 Cal. 679, 687, 230 P. 9. As to the final contention of the defendant that he sustained some prejudicial injury from the fact that the judge's signature had been inadvertently misplaced upon two of the forms of verdict furnished to the jury, we are unable to perceive enough of merit therein to justify a reversal of this cause. The jury had already had read and explained to it in the court's instructions the precise form of verdict which it was required to render in the five alternatives presented to it in arriving at its verdict. Having been so explicitly advised, its members as intelligent men could not well have been misled by the presence upon one or more of these forms of verdict of the name of the judge in a place thereon where it had no reasonable business to be. To strike out the misplaced name of the judge and insert the name of the foreman of the jury in case that body had agreed upon either of said forms of verdict would have been the altogether reasonable thing to do; while the substitution instead of the most drastic form of verdict submitted to it would be the altogether unreasonable thing for the jury to do, unless its members were agreed upon that extreme form of verdict, in which event it would be quite immaterial what the rejected forms of verdict contained.

We perceive no error in this record.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

FAY v. DISTRICT COURT OF APPEAL, SECOND APPELLATE DIST., DIVISION 2, et al. (L. A. 9631.)

1. Judges 🔑16(1)—Constitutional amendment, creating judicial council, held intended to apply to entire state judicial system to relieve congestion and expedite business (Judicial Council Amend., adding section 1a to Const. art. 6; section 1a, subds. (1–5).

"Judicial Council Amendment," adding section 1a, to Const. art. 6, creating a judicial council, and providing that chairman shall assign judge to assist a court whose calendar is congested, was intended to apply to entire judicial system of the state, including the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, and to confer on council certain powers enumerated in subdivisions (1–5) thereof, and to confer on chairman certain powers having reference to whatever state of congestion exists in calendars, with a view to speedy relief of congestion and to expedite judicial business.

2. Judges 🔑25(1)—Constitutional amendment relating to judges assigned "to assist a court" whose calendar is congested held to empower such judges to exercise judicial functions (Judicial Council Amend., adding section 1a to Const. art. 6).

Judicial Council Amendment, adding section 1a to Const. art. 6, providing that the several judges assigned "to assist a court whose calendar is congested" are "to sit and hold court as assigned," held to create clear implication that judges thus assigned shall exercise judicial functions while operating under such assignment.

3. Courts 🔑51—Prior to amendment creating judicial council, constitutional provision relating to pro tempore judges did not authorize creation of court pro tempore (Judicial Council Amend., adding section 1a to Const. art. 6, Amendments of 1904 and 1918).

Prior to Judicial Council Amendment, adding section 1a to Const. art. 6, Amendments of 1904 and 1918, relating to pro tempore justices did not create a pro tempore court, so as to authorize members of Supreme Court or District Courts of Appeal to substitute for themselves, acting as a group in performing their judicial function, another body of men, composed of justices pro tempore, and, as such empowered to exercise functions of a Supreme Court or District Court of Appeal.

4. Judges 🔑16(1)—Statutory or constitutional provision transferring direct selection of appellate court membership from people should be plain and unambiguous.

It is right of the people of the state to have their essential rights, liberties, and interests in respect to person and property heard and determined by courts of last resort composed of members of their own selection, and though people may transfer direct exercise of this selection to those whom they have chosen to administer government, text of such transfer, whether embodied in Constitution or statute, should be plain and unambiguous.

5. Constitutional law 🔑16—Statutes 🔑181(1)—Though evil sought to be remedied, and propaganda preceding enactment may be considered, language of enactment controls construction.

Though courts may construe statutory or constitutional provisions in light of evils or defects in administration of justice which they were designed to remedy, and the propaganda accompanyng its proffer for adoption or rejection by the electorate, such aids to interpretation are not controlling, but intent of enactment must be derived from language thereof.

6. Constitutional law 🔑5—Statutes 🔑158—Repeals by implication are not favored.

Repeals of laws, statutory or constitutional, by implication, are not favored.

7. Statutes 🔑230, 232—Express modification or repeal of provisions in former enactment will be held to disclose full extent of intent to modify or repeal.

When an enactment expressly modifies or repeals provisions in a former enactment, such express modification or repeal will be held to disclose the full intent of framers of the later enactment as to how much or what portion of the former it was intended to modify or repeal, in application of the principle "expressio unius, est exclusio alterius."

8. Judges 🔑25(1)—Constitutional amendment providing for assignment of justices to relieve congestion of calendars held not to authorize change in designated number of members of courts (Judicial Council Amend., adding section 1a to Const. art. 6; Const. art. 6, §§ 2, 4).

Judicial Council Amendment, adding section 1a to Const. art. 6, providing that judges assigned "to assist a court whose calendar is congested" are "to sit and hold court as assigned," must be construed in light of existing provisions of article 6, §§ 2, 4, which were not repealed by implication, and, as so construed, justices so assigned can "sit and hold court" only as members of courts to which assigned and can only exercise judicial functions in such relationship to such courts as will not change or increase the designated number of members thereof.

9. Judges 🔑16(1)—Justice, assigned to assist appellate tribunals, has same powers possessed by regularly constituted members (Judicial Council Amend., adding § 1a to Const. art. 6).

In making assignment of justices "to assist" appellate tribunals under "Judicial Council Amendment," adding section 1a to Const. art. 6, chairman of council is empowered to invest persons so assigned with no other or different official relation to such courts than that held by the regularly constituted members thereof, and a judge so assigned occupies substantially same relationship to other members as that occupied by justices pro tempore under article 6 prior to amendment.

10. Judges 🔑14—Assignment of justices pro tempore, though regularly constituted justices are not disqualified nor unable to act held authorized (Judicial Council Amend., adding § 1a to Const. art. 6).

Judicial Council Amendment, adding section 1a to Const. art. 6, authorizing chairman of council to assign a justice to act for a judge who is disqualified or unable to act, was not intended to repeal former provisions of article 6, relating to justices pro tempore, but was intended to broaden former provisions, so as to authorize selection of justices pro tempore to assist courts when their calendars are congested, though regularly constituted justices of said courts, thereby replaced, are neither disqualified nor unable to act.

11. Statutes 🔑206—That interpretation of statute, susceptible of two conflicting constructions, which will give effect to entire language thereof, is preferred (Civ. Code, § 3541).

In view of Civ. Code, § 3541, between two apparently conflicting interpretations of a law equally adaptable, that one is to be preferred which will give effect to the entire language thereof, rather than that which will destroy any portion of it and to that extent defeat legislative intent.

12. Courts 🔑42(1)—Order of division of District Court of Appeal that three superior judges assigned to assist court should sit and act as separate division held invalid (Const. art. 6, § 4, as amended in 1918; Judicial Council Amend., adding section 1a to Const. art. 6).

Const. art. 6, § 4, as amended in 1918, providing that there shall be but two divisions of the District Court of Appeal for the Second Appellate District, was not, by implication, repealed by Judicial Council Amendment, adding section 1a thereto, and an order of a division of said District Court of Appeal that three judges of superior court individually assigned to assist said division sit and act as a new group of justices sitting in effect as a separate division thereof was invalid.

In Bank.

Application by Hugh Fay for certiorari to review an order of the District Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District, Division 2, and others, designating judges of the superior court assigned to assist such court to sit as a separate division thereof. Order annulled, and writ of prohibition ordered.

Lyle Pendegast and W. J. Hunsaker, both of Los Angeles (Daniel M. Hunsaker, of Los Angeles, and F. M. Angellotti and Wm. B. Bosley, both of San Francisco, of counsel), for petitioner.

R. P. Henshall, of San Francisco, amicus curiæ.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., R. W. Harrison and John W. Maltman, Deputy Attys. Gen., for respondents.

John Perry Wood and Thos. C. Ridgway, both of Los Angeles, and Warren Olney and Max Thelen, both of San Francisco, amici curiæ.

RICHARDS, J. The petitioner herein applies for a writ of review whereby he seeks to have reviewed a certain order made by the District Court of Appeal in and for the Second Appellate District, Division 2, purporting to direct that a certain cause pending upon appeal in said court, entitled "The People, etc., Plaintiff and Respondent, v. Fay et al., Defendants and Appellants," be placed upon a calendar of said division of said court for hearing and argument upon a certain date before Hon. Harry R. Archbald, Hon. Elliot Craig, and Hon. C. W. Guerin, judges of the superior court of the state of California in and for the county of Los Angeles, to whom the said cause was by the terms of said order assigned for hearing determination and judgment. The foregoing order of said court purports to be predicated upon another certain order made by Hon. William H. Waste, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of California, but purporting to act in making said order as chairman of the judicial council of the state of California, and which order reads as follows:

> "In the Matter of the Assignment of Judges to Assist the District Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District, Division 2.
> "It having been made to appear to me by Hon. Lewis R. Works, Presiding Justice of the District Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District, Division 2, that the calendar of said court and division is congested: now, therefore, in order to expedite the judicial business of said court, and in accordance with the provisions of that certain amendment to the Constitution of the state (Senate Constitutional Amendment No. 15), ratified and approved by the people of the state at the general election held on November 2, 1926, providing for a judicial council, and authorizing the chairman thereof to assign judges to assist a court or judge whose calendar is congested, it is ordered that Hon. Harry R. Archbald, Hon. Elliot Craig, and Hon. C. W. Guerin, judges of the superior court of the state of California in and for the county of Los Angeles, are hereby assigned to sit and hold court as Justices of the said District Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District, Division 2, for the period of two weeks beginning Monday, December 20, 1926. Dated: San Francisco, California, December 14, 1926. William H. Waste, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of California and Chairman of the Judicial Council."

The petitioner herein also seeks for a writ of prohibition directed to the aforesaid three superior judges, who are also made respondents herein, commanding them and each of them to desist and refrain from acting as Justices of the said District Court of Appeal in the said cause wherein the petitioner is one of the appellants, and for such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

The manifest purport of the foregoing application for these writs is that of presenting to this court for present determination the interpretation of that certain recently adopted amendment to the Constitution of California known as the "Judicial Council Amendment." Said amendment purports to add to article 6 of the Constitution a new section to be numbered 1a, and also to amend sections 6, 7, and 8 of said article 6. Section 1a thereof provides that "there shall be a judicial council," and provides for the constituent members thereof, and that "the Chief Justice or Acting Chief Justice shall be chairman," and that the clerk of the Supreme Court shall act as secretary of the council. It contains certain other provisions to be commented upon in the course of this discussion, but the particular provision requiring present interpretation is that portion of subdivision (6) of said section 1a which reads as follows:

> "The chairman shall seek to expedite judicial business and to equalize the work of the judges, and shall provide for the assignment of any judge to another court of a like or higher jurisdiction to assist a court or judge whose calendar is congested, to act for a judge who is disqualified or unable to act, or to sit and hold court where a vacancy in the office of judge has occurred. * * * The several judges shall co-operate with the council, shall sit and hold court as assigned."

Before entering upon the discussion as to the scope and meaning to be given to that portion of section 1a of said amendment last above quoted as applied to the immediate situation before us, it may be well to take note of the fact that nowhere in the body of said entire amendment are the designations "Supreme Court" or "District Court of Appeal" made use of as conveying the express intendment of its framers that these appellate tribunals, or either or any of them, should come within its terms. The inference that such was in part its purpose is to be drawn, if at all, from two sources: First, from the fact that the constituent membership of the judicial council is to be made up in part by the designation of the chief justice or acting chief justice of the Supreme Court as its head, and by the selection of one associate justice of said court and of three justices of the District Court of Appeal as part of the membership of said body; and, second, from the very general phraseology of the several provisions of said amendment indicating that its purpose was that of "simplifying and improving the administration of justice," "the expedition of business," the adoption or amendment of "rules of practice and procedure for the several courts," and the making and receiving of reports "respecting the condition and manner of disposal of judicial business." Notwithstanding this paucity of direct reference in the body of this amendment to the appellate tribunals of this state, it is urged upon us by certain of the proponents thereof, appearing in aid of the respondents to this application, that the main object and purpose of this amendment to the Constitution was that of its application to these appellate tribunals, with a view to relieving an existing, and, to the minds of some of these, an alarming, state of congestion in the calendars and judicial business of these tribunals, and that for the attainment of these objects and purposes a most liberal, if not revolutionary, interpretation should be given to its terms. It is further to be noted in this immediate connection that the word "congested" in its application to court calendars is employed but once in the body of said amendment and that in the portion thereof above quoted defining the powers and duties of the chairman of the judicial council in his effort "to expedite judicial business." The extent of such congestion, the tribunals wherein it exists, and the precise nature, extent, and duration of such remedial measure as the framers of this amendment intended the judicial council or its chairman to inaugurate are nowhere dealt with therein outside of the brief paragraph above set forth.

[1] Notwithstanding these obvious deficiencies in the way of preciseness of statement as to the tribunals to which its provisions were intended to be applied, and also as to the nature and scope of its remedial procedure for the relief of whatever congestion exists in the disposal of judicial business in the courts of last resort, we have arrived at certain preliminary conclusions. They are, first, that it sufficiently appears from the body of this amendment, when read as a whole, that it was intended to have application to the entire judicial system of the state of California, including the Supreme Court and the several District Courts of Appeal; second, that it was intended to confer upon the judicial council certain powers such as are enumerated in subdivisions (1), (2), (3), (4), and (5) of section 1a of said amendment; third, that it was intended to confer upon the chairman of the judicial council certain powers and duties having reference to whatever state of congestion he may find to exist in the calendars of the courts or judges of this state, with a view to a speedy relief of such congestion, and "to expedite judicial business" by so doing. What is the measure and exercise of these powers and duties by the official to whom they are intrusted is the immediate problem presented in the proceeding before us.

[2] As we have already seen, the language employed in this amendment, "To assist a court or judge whose calendar is congested," because of its generality and absence of specific application and intendment, sheds but little light upon the proper interpretation to be given to this particular provision thereof under review in the instant proceeding. The phrase "to assist a court or judge whose calendar is congested" is, to say the least, an unfortunate expression in view of the meaning which had already been assigned by this court to a similar phrase in a statute having a similar object. In the case of People ex rel. v. Hayne, 83 Cal. 111, 118, 23 P. 1, 7 L. R. A. 348, 17 Am. St. Rep. 211, this court construed the phrase "to assist the court" as conferring no judicial functions upon the commissioners provided for by the act of 1889 (Stats. 1889, p. 13), but merely invested the commissioners to be appointed under said act with power to perform such preliminary service in the way of examining causes, searching libraries, or even drafting such opinions and conclusions as were preparatory to the order or judgment of the court which could only properly be held to constitute the exercise of its judicial power. It is true that in that case the construction put upon said phrase was constrained by the fact that the Legislature had no constitutional power to invest the commissioners provided for in said act with judicial functions, and for that reason the interpretation compelled in that case is not controlling here; but the fact that it was in that earlier case given the foregoing limited interpretation compels us to look beyond its own phrasing for a broader meaning. We find this broader meaning impliable from a succeeding sentence in the same provision, wherein it is declared that the several judges thus assigned "to assist a court or judge whose calendar is congested" are to "sit and hold court as assigned." The implication is thus clear that such judges as are thus assigned shall exercise judicial functions while operating under such assignment.

[3] Having reached this conclusion, we are next brought to the consideration of the tribunal or tribunals wherein the judicial functions of such assigned judges are to be exercised under their said appointment pursuant to the provisions and purposes of this amendment. This brings us to the individual case before us; and while the determination of this cause involves, strictly speaking, only the validity of the order of the chief justice, acting as ex officio chairman of the judicial council, and the further order of the presiding justice of Division 2 of the District Court of Appeal in and for the Second Appellate District, it also involves a consideration of those sections of article 6 of the Constitution which relate to the establishment and constituent nature and powers both of the Supreme Court and of the several District Courts of Appeal and of the membership of each, and for this reason we deem it advisable to deal with the problem before us in its present or possible application to the judicial system of California as a whole. The Supreme Court of California was reorganized by the Constitution of 1879 and by the incorporation therein of article 6 of said Constitution. Section 2 of said article provided that—

> "The Supreme Court shall consist of a chief justice and six associate justices."

The section further provided for the division of the Supreme Court into departments, with power in the chief justice to assign three of the associate justices to each department and to change such assignments from time to time, and that the presence of three justices shall be necessary to transact any business in either of the departments, except such as may be done at chambers, and the concurrence of three justices shall be necessary to pronounce a judgment, any four justices may, either before or after judgment by a department, order a case to be heard in bank. The chief justice may convene the court in bank at any time and shall be the presiding justice of the court when so convened. The concurrence of four justices present at the argument shall be necessary to pronounce a judgment in bank; but, if four justices so present do not concur in a judgment, then all of the justices qualified to sit in the cause shall hear the argument, but to render a judgment the concurrence of four judges shall be necessary. In case of the absence of the chief justice from the place at which the court is held the associate justices shall select one of their own number to perform the duties and exercise the powers of the chief justice during such absence or inability to act.

The foregoing section of article 6 of the Constitution has remained unchanged in form to the present time, and it is to be noted that in said section, and also in section 4 of the same article as originally framed, there was no provision for the selection of justices or judges pro tempore to act in the place of a justice of the Supreme Court disqualified or unable to act in a cause pending before it. Section 4 of article 6 referred originally to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court and remained in its original form until the year 1904, when said section was so revised as to provide for the organization and jurisdiction of District Courts of Appeal. Three District Courts of Appeal were then created and the jurisdiction of these defined. The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court was also therein redefined in view of the creation of these intermediate tribunals. These District Courts of Appeal as to their constituency and method of action were framed upon the model of the Supreme Court. One of the justices elected or appointed as such to each was to be the presiding justice thereof. The presence of three justices in each was made necessary for the transaction of any business by such court, except such as might be done at chambers, and the concurrence of three justices was made necessary to pronounce a judgment.

This amendment to the original section further provided that, whenever any justice of the Supreme Court was for any reason disqualified or unable to act in a cause pending before it, the remaining justices might select one of the justices of a District Court of Appeal to act pro tempore in the place of the justice so disqualified or unable to act. The section as amended also contained the provision that, whenever any justice of the District Court of Appeal was for any reason disqualified or unable to act in any cause pending before it, the Supreme Court might appoint a justice of the District Court of Appeal of another district or a judge of the superior court to act pro tempore in the place of the justice so disqualified or unable to act. This section as amended also provided for the granting of hearings before the Supreme Court in causes heard and determined by District Courts of Appeal. Section 4 of article 6 of the Constitution as thus amended remained in the above form until the year 1918, when it was again amended so as to provide for the creation of two additional divisions to be added to the District Courts of Appeal, similarly constituted as to membership and powers, one of which was to form Division 2 of the District Court of Appeal in and for the First Appellate District and the other of which was to form Division 2 of the District Court of Appeal of the Second Appellate District. This later amendment also provided that, in case of the appointment of a justice or justices pro tempore for the Supreme Court, such justice or judge pro tempore might be selected from among the judges of the superior court, as well as from the District Court of Appeal. The section was further amended so as to provide that the presence of two justices should be necessary for the transaction of business in the District Courts of Appeal and the concurrence of two justices in such courts should be necessary to pronounce a judgment. The foregoing sections of article 6 of the Constitution have since remained in their original or thus amended form up to the time at least of the adoption of the recent amendment to article 6 of the Constitution here under review.

Before proceeding to consider the provisions of the foregoing sections of article 6 of the Constitution in the light of the recent amendment it may be timely to take note of certain decisions of the Supreme Court which have an important bearing upon their interpretation. The first of these is that of the very early case of People v. Wells, 2 Cal. 198, wherein the question arose as to the power of the Legislature to declare that a vacancy existed in the constituent membership of the Supreme Court by reason of the fact that one of its duly elected justices was temporarily absent from the state, and also as to the power of the Governor to appoint a justice to fill such declared vacancy. Chief Justice Murray in a remarkably well-reasoned opinion declared the act of the Legislature to be unconstitutional and the appointment by the Governor to be invalid. In so doing he quoted the language of the Constitution of 1849, which stated that the Supreme Court of California "shall consist of a chief justice and two associate justices," and held that these words "limit the number and ex vi terminorum forbid the possibility of there being more than three."

Another case bearing upon the subject is that of In re Jessup, 81 Cal. 408, 459, 21 P. 976, 22 P. 74, 1028, 6 L. R. A. 594, wherein in certain of the later stages of that somewhat famous case this court had occasion to consider the effect of a clause which had been added to section 45 of the Code of Civil Procedure which provided in substance, that the concurrence of five justices of the Supreme Court should be required in order to the granting of a rehearing after a department decision. Chief Justice Beatty, in delivering the opinion of the court upon this question, declared that this provision of the Code was invalid as an attempt to change the constitutional number of the membership of the Supreme Court required to concur in a judgment or order.

The case of Reeve v. Colusa Gas, etc., Co., 151 Cal. 29, 91 P. 802, has also a bearing upon the subject in hand. In that case the matter of the interpretation of the provision which was added to section 4 of article 6 of the Constitution in 1904, authorizing the substitution of a justice of the District Court of Appeal in the place of a justice of the Supreme Court disqualified or unable to act in a cause pending before it, came up for consideration. The above-entitled case had been decided in department. A rehearing was granted by the court in bank and the cause was placed upon the calendar of the full court for further hearing. In the meantime Justice Sloss had become a member of the court, and, deeming himself disqualified through interest, declined to sit in the case. Justice McFarland was ill and unable to be present at the hearing in bank. Accordingly the court selected Justices Cooper and Harrison of the District Court of Appeal in and for the First Appellate District to act pro tempore, the former in the place of Justice Sloss, and the latter in the place of Justice McFarland. The records of this court disclose that said cause was placed upon the calendar of the court in bank for hearing, and was argued upon the 23d day of February, 1906, before the court thus constituted, and was decided upon June 21, 1906, by a four to three decision, Justices Shaw, Angellotti, Harrison, and Chief Justice Beatty joining in the main opinion, and Justices Henshaw, Lorigan, and Cooper dissenting. A petition for rehearing was filed on July 10, 1906. When such petition came on for judicial action, Justice McFarland, having recovered from his illness, was able to function, and did so by joining the minority in an order granting a rehearing, on July 19, 1906, in which action Justice Harrison did not participate, but Justice Cooper did, Justice Sloss as to that cause being still disqualified. Thereupon the respondents moved the court to set aside its order granting such rehearing upon the ground that Justice Harrison, sitting pro tempore for Justice McFarland as to that cause, should, and Justice McFarland should not, have acted in the premises. The court, without going deeply into the merits of the matter, on April 4, 1907, decided that the order should stand. The case is interesting not so much on account of what was expressly decided, but because of the incidental light which it casts upon the operations of the Supreme Court under the amendment providing for the selection of justices pro tempore when one or more of the regularly constituted members of the court were disqualified or unable to act in respect to any cause or matter requiring the exercise of judicial functions. Our records disclose that between February 23, 1906, when Justices Cooper and Harrison were selected to act as Justices pro tempore in said cause, and April 4, 1907, when the decision of the court upon the motion to set aside its order granting a rehearing was handed down, the Supreme Court functioned as a judicial tribunal frequently with Justices Sloss and McFarland participating in the calling of calendars and decisions of causes other than the Reeves Case, and that, in fact, upon the very day, viz. June 21, 1906, upon which the Reeves Case was originally decided by the four to three decision of the court in bank above referred to, the Supreme Court in bank decided the case of People v. Weber, 149 Cal. 325, 86 P. 671, in which decision Justice Sloss participated and Justice Cooper acted as Justice pro tempore for Justice McFarland, who was still unable to act, but for whom Justice Harrison was still acting in the Reeves Case as a justice pro tempore.

We thus arrive at a contemporaneous interpretation of the scope and effect of the constitutional provisions permitting the selection of justices pro tempore in the Supreme Court and in the District Courts of Appeal prior to the adoption of the most recent amendment here under review. The importance of the foregoing contemporaneous interpretation of the constitutional provisions relating to justices pro tempore becomes apparent when we consider more closely the constituent nature and method of functioning of these two tribunals under the Constitution as it stood prior to its recent amendment. Section 2 of article 6 provided that "the Supreme Court shall consist of a chief justice and six associate justices." Section 4 of the same article as amended in 1918 provides that the Courts of Appeal for the First and Second Appellate Districts shall each consist of two divisions of three justices each. The court of the Third Appellate District shall consist of three justices. Section 2 of said article defines how the Supreme Court shall perform its judicial functions. The court may sit in departments and in bank. When the court sits in its departments each of its said departments shall have three associate justices and each of said departments shall have the power to hear and determine causes. The presence of three justices shall be necessary to transact any business in either of the departments, and the concurrence of three justices therein shall be necessary to pronounce a judgment. When the court sits or acts in bank the concurrence of four justices shall be necessary to order a case, heard and decided in department, to be heard in bank; and the concurrence of four justices shall be necessary to pronounce a judgment, provided that, if a cause is orally argued in bank, the concurrence of four justices who have heard such argument shall be necessary to pronounce a judgment therein. In the creation of the several District Courts of Appeal the same general plan and procedure for the functioning of these courts were followed and the same powers granted with regard to pro tempore justices. It would thus appear that an individual justice of the Supreme Court or of the District Court of Appeal possessed, as such, no power to perform any judicial function other than that to be performed by him as a component member of a group acting either in department or in bank in the Supreme Court or functioning in a like group relation in an appellate court. The persons who were selected to act as justices pro tempore of either court blended into the already constituted entity of which for the time being they were to form a part, and in so doing replaced those individual members of that entity who in relation to particular causes or calendars were disqualified or unable to act. In so doing they "assisted the court"; and it is interesting to note that the plan of calling in pro tempore justices as adopted in 1904 was evidently intended to be one of the ways then devised to relieve "congestions," since the same amendment which created the District Courts of Appeal for that then much-needed relief also provided for the maintenance of the man power of both courts by the selection of justices pro tempore in each as the emergency required.

[4] It has, however, never been considered nor is it now contended, that the power then reposed in the justices of the Supreme Court or of the District Courts of Appeal to make selections of justices or judges to act in the stated emergencies as justices pro tempore, however flexible its operation as disclosed in the Reeves Case, could be so indefinitely expanded as to permit either of these tribunals to so far replace its constituent membership as to create or constitute a Supreme Court or a District Court of Appeal so far composed of justices pro tempore as to exercise the judicial functions of the regularly constituted tribunal. It has never, for example, been considered, nor is it now contended, that, under the terms of the amendments of 1904 or 1918 of the Constitution relating to pro tempore justices, the members of the Supreme Court or District Courts of Appeal were thereby invested with the power to substitute for themselves, acting as a group in the performance of the judicial function, another body of men composed of justices pro tempore, and, as such, empowered to exercise the functions of a Supreme Court or District Court of Appeal; in other words, it was never intended to provide for the creation of a court pro tempore. To so interpret these provisions in said amendments, evidently intended to afford temporary and emergency relief, would be to encourage the violation of a very vital principle of popular government which is none other than that of the right of the people of a commonwealth to have their essential rights, liberties, and interests in respect to person and property heard and determined by courts of last resort, the constituent membership of which is composed of public servants of their own selection. That the people might transfer the direct exercise of this selection to those whom they may have chosen to administer the functions of our representative scheme of government is undoubted, but the text of such transfer, whether embodied in a Constitution or a statute, should be plain and unambiguous.

[5, 6] Having thus far interpreted the several provisions of article 6 of the Constitution as these existed prior to the recent amendment of said article known as the "Judicial Council Amendment," we now arrive at the interpretation of said amendment. In so doing we are to treat said amendment as a whole and are to consider it in the light of our foregoing interpretation of the provisions of said article 6 of the Constitution which it purports to amend. We are, of course, to endeavor to construe it in the light of whatever evils or defects in the administration of justice we shall find it to have been designed to remedy. In this latter effort we have not found ourselves greatly aided by considerations supposed to have preceded or even attended the formulation of this measure, nor by suggestions made to the electors through whatever propaganda accompanied its proffer for adoption or rejection by said electorate. Such aids to the interpretation of a written document, while available to the courts, are not at all to be considered as controlling, since whatever may have been the intent of the proponents of a particular change in a law must at the last analysis be derived from the language of the proposed enactment purporting to effect such change. Tynan v. Walker, 35 Cal. 634, 95 Am. Dec. 152; Estate of Young, 123 Cal. 337, 55 P. 1011, and cases cited. When we examine this amendment as a whole we discover that it embodies two main purposes, the first of which in the order of expression is that portion of section 1a thereof which proceeds to create a judicial council and to invest that body with certain powers and duties chiefly administrative in character, and, in the main, similar to provisions in the statutes of several other states relating to judicial councils. The other purpose disclosed by an inspection of this amendment is that expressed in subdivision (6) thereof which purports to invest the chief justice of the state, acting ex officio as chairman of the judicial council, with certain powers and functions through the exercise of which he is to "seek to expedite judicial business and equalize the work of the judges." It is with the scope and method of the exercise of these powers and functions that we are, in the instant proceeding, chiefly, if not wholly, concerned. In entering upon this inquiry we do not feel ourselves bound to choose between the rules defining the divergent paths of strict and of liberal interpretation; but if we were so bound we would feel constrained to follow the path of liberality in interpreting and applying the terms of this amendment with a view to aiding in the achievement of its avowed object, viz. that of "expediting judicial business," since as a court of last resort we are more vitally concerned than any other official or unofficial organization in this state in achieving that result. We are not, however, for that reason, to neglect or minify those other certain cañons of interpretation which should guide and control the courts in determining the extent and limitations of proposed changes in established laws, and especially in the organic law. One of the most important of these is that relating to repeals by implication. It is a doctrine of universal acceptation that repeals by implication are not favored in the interpretation of laws. No higher authority for this doctrine need be cited than that of Judge Cooley in his great work on Constitutional Limitations, wherein he thus states the rule and outlines its application:

> "Repeals by implication are not favored; and the repugnancy between two statutes should be very clear to warrant a court in holding that the later in time repeals the other when it does not in terms purport to do so." Cooley, Const. Limitations (7th Ed.) pp. 216, 217, and cases cited.

The rule is even more strongly stated by the latest utterance of this court upon the subject wherein it is declared:

> "Repeals by implication are not favored and are recognized only when there is an irreconcilable conflict between two or more existing legislative enactments." Railroad Comm. v. Riley, 192 Cal. 54, 57, 218 P. 415, 417, and cases cited.

[7] The older authorities supporting this rule are fully collated in 23 California Juris. pp. 694, 695. The application of this principle to the instant problem is attended with another principle of interpretation of almost equal importance, which is that, when in any enactment there appears an express modification or repeal of certain provisions in a former enactment, such express modification or repeal of the portions thereof thus affected will be held to disclose the full intent of the framers of the later enactment as to how much or what portion of the former it was intended to modify or repeal. This upon the principle "expressio unius, est exclusio alterius;" and in such a case an implied modification or repeal of such portions of the former law as are not expressly referred to as being repealed or modified is to be all the more avoided in determining the intent and effect of the latter enactment. Crosby v. Patch, 18 Cal. 439, 441.

[8] The application of the foregoing principle to the instant situation is this: By the terms of section 6 of said amendment the previously existing provisions of the Constitution respecting superior courts are expressly modified and to that extent repealed in so far as these related to the number of superior judges who might function in said courts in the several counties of California. This was accomplished by the provision in said section 6 of the amendment stating that—

> "There may be as many sessions of a superior court at the same time as there are judges elected, appointed or assigned thereto."

This express provision read in connection with the language of section 1a of said amendment would expressly authorize the chairman of the judicial council to increase the number of those who could exercise the judicial function in the superior courts; but there is no such express provision with relation to the appellate courts, and the absence thereof renders fully applicable both of the foregoing rules forbidding repeals by implication. Bearing in mind these salutary rules, and bearing in mind, also, the interpretation which has already been given to the several provisions of article 6 of the Constitution as they read prior to the recent amendment, we apply ourselves to the specific language of the amendment itself. Subdivision (6) of section 1a thereof, as we have seen, provides that the chairman of the judicial council in his effort to expedite judicial business—

"shall provide for the assignment of any judge to another court of like or higher jurisdiction to assist a court or judge whose calendar is congested."

The phrase "to assist a court" in the above quotation is the only one with which we are presently concerned, since, as to the Supreme and appellate courts, it is only such courts which, in their group constituency, as distinguished from the judges or justices thereof, have calendars which could be congested. The power with which the chairman of the judicial council is therefore invested by the foregoing clause in said amendment is that of assigning judges or justices "to assist" the Supreme Court or the several District Courts of Appeal as these courts were theretofore constituted under the terms of the Constitution prior to said amendment, whenever the calendars of said tribunals had become congested. It was these courts as thus constituted which were to be thus "assisted," and the assistance thus to be rendered was to be that supplied through the assignment of a justice or judge not already a constituent member of the court to be thus assisted to be and to act as one of the members thereof, and, in the language of a later clause in said section of said amendment, to "sit and hold court as assigned." The authority of the judge or justice thus assigned "to sit and hold court" must, however, be interpreted in the light of the already existing provisions of the Constitution relating to the constituent nature of each of said tribunals; and since section 2 of article 6 had already provided that "the Supreme Court shall consist of a chief justice and six associate justices," and since section 4 of said article had, as amended in 1904 and 1918, similarly provided that the several District Courts of Appeal or their divisions should consist of three justices each, and since, as we have already seen, these respective tribunals under said constitutional provisions could only function in certain defined groups composed of the individual justices thereof, it would result irresistibly that the judge or justice so assigned by the chairman of the judicial council "to sit and hold court as assigned" could only do so as a member of one or the other of such groups and could only exercise a judicial function in such relationship to the already constituted membership of said courts respectively as would not change or increase the designated number of the constituent membership thereof as fixed by the terms of sections 2 and 4 of said article 6 of the Constitution as these read prior to said recent amendment; for, were it otherwise, necessarily these prior sections of the Constitution would to that extent have been by implication repealed.

[9, 10] In obedience to the above-stated rule against repeals by implication we should therefore diligently seek for an interpretation of the foregoing clauses in the recent amendment as would not have such effect; and for the like reason we should earnestly endeavor to so construe the same as not to effect any change in the groupings of either of said tribunals or in the number of the departments or divisions thereof as fixed by the provisions of sections 2 and 4 of said article 6 of the Constitution as these read prior to said recent amendment. From these considerations certain deductions would seem logically to follow. The first of these is that in making the assignment of any justice or judge or of any number of such "to assist" the appellate tribunals the chairman of the judicial council was empowered to invest the persons so selected and assigned with no other or different official relation to such courts than that held by the already regularly constituted members thereof, which, as we have seen, was merely that of blending into the group constituency thereof in order, in that relation, to exercise the judicial function; in other words, the individual justice or judge so assigned was to occupy substantially the same relationship to the already constituted group denominated "the court" as that occupied by justices pro tempore under the terms of article 6 of the Constitution as it stood prior to such amendment. In stating this conclusion we are not, however, to be understood as holding either that the former provisions of article 6 of the Constitution relating to justices pro tempore has been repealed or that the change in the Constitution wrought by this amendment has not broadened the conditions which, under the Constitution as it formerly stood, were a limitation upon the power of appointment of justices pro tempore.

As to the first of these suggestions, it would seem to be apparent that it was the express purpose of the framers of this amendment to retain unchanged in their terms, except in one regard, the former constitutional provisions relating to the appointment of justices pro tempore, since, by the succeeding sentence of the paragraph of section 1a immediately under review, the chairman of the judicial council is given power to assign a justice or judge "to act for a judge who is disqualified, or unable to act." When we read this express transfer of power to the chairman of the judicial council to assign justices and judges pro tempore under the precise conditions which attended their selection prior to said amendment, and when we consider the same in the light of the preceding clause authorizing the assignment of justices or judges "to assist" these courts, we must assume, in order to give effect to both, that it was the intention of the framers of this amendment to so broaden the former provision as to authorize the selection of justices or judges pro tempore to assist said courts when their calendars were congested, although the regularly constituted justices of said courts who were thus, for the purpose of hearing particular causes or calendars, replaced were neither disqualified nor unable to act.

It may be argued against this interpretation that the phrase "to assist a court or judge whose calendar is congested" if given this broader meaning removes the necessity for the succeeding phrase "to act for a judge who is disqualified or unable to act." This argument, it must be conceded, brings us face to face with the following dilemma: If the first above-quoted clause is not to be given the broader meaning above assigned to it, then it becomes merely waste and idle words, since the power to make use of pro tempore judges under the former terms of the Constitution would be in no wise changed; on the other hand, as is argued, if said first-quoted provision is to be given such broader meaning, then the succeeding clause becomes waste and idle, since it is fully covered under the broader meaning of the preceding grant of power. Confronted with this situation, we are reminded that between Scylla and Charybdis the wise Ulysses found safety in a middle course and that we may profit by the ancient example.

[11] Between two apparently conflicting interpretations of a law equally adaptable, that one is to be preferred which will give effect to the entire language thereof rather than that which would destroy any portion of it and to that extent defeat the legislative intent. Civ. Code, § 3541; Cuthbert v. Woodman, 185 Cal. 43, 45, 195 P. 673. It is possible to preserve in its entirety the foregoing paragraph in subdivision 1a of said amendment with the aforesaid broader significance assigned to the first above-mentioned clause thereof by assigning to the succeeding clause thereof an intent on the part of its framers to transfer the pre-existing power of selecting pro tempore judges, to serve in cases of disqualification or inability to act on the part of those whom they were to replace, from the courts formerly invested with the exercise of such power, to the chairman of the judicial council in the interest of the unification of action in that regard, and that, in order to clarify such intent, the particular clause referring to such emergencies and providing for such transfer was inserted in said amendment. Such an interpretation enables us to give effect to the entire provision without the violation of any of the foregoing cañons of interpretation. That such an interpretation of the foregoing provisions of the recent amendment, when read as a whole, would be susceptible of practical application, we entertain no doubt; and that such an interpretation would involve no necessary repeal by implication or otherwise of the former provisions of the Constitution relating to the constituent membership or functioning of either the Supreme Court or District Courts of Appeal we are equally sure. And we would go further and say that such a plan, if put into practical operation, would materially assist said courts in relieving congested calendars, wherever such exist, through increasing the man power of such courts without disturbing either their essential constituency or method of operation in the dispatch of their judicial business. A case and an illustration may make this more clear.

In the matter of People v. Ruef, 14 Cal. App. 576, 114 P. 48, 54, Chief Justice Beatty, in the opinion touching a rehearing in the Supreme Court, referred interestingly to the methods of work and of the activities of the members of such court preparatory to the final exercise of the judicial functions of the court itself. In addition thereto it may be said with reference to both the Supreme Court and the several District Courts of Appeal that only a small portion of the time of the individual membership of each of said courts is, during any period, occupied in such group action as that of hearing calendars or handing down opinions. During the greater portion of the year the individual members of these courts are occupied in chambers; in examining briefs and records; in library research; in preparing opinions or reviewing those of their associates similarly prepared. These essential labors may be, and frequently in the past have been, performed by individual justices in cases in which they were qualified to act while their associates with the aid of justices pro tempore sitting in their places were occupied in calling calendars or hearing arguments in which they were disqualified to act, or in which for one reason or another they were unable to be present in court session. The case of Reeve v. Weber, supra, well illustrates the flexibility of the provisions of the Constitution relating to justices pro tempore prior to the recent amendment; and we can see no serious obstacle in the way of so far enlarging that flexibility as to permit justices or judges, sitting and acting in a pro tempore relation to the regularly constituted courts, performing similar functions when the regularly elected or appointed members thereof were neither disqualified nor unable to act. The putting into operation of such a plan would seem to be merely a matter of routine and as such within the entire control of the members of these courts using the same for the more efficient dispatch of judicial business and the relief of congested calendars, without in any way disturbing the constituent organization of such courts as ordained by the Constitution prior to the adoption of said amendment.

[12] When this much has been concluded it would seem to logically follow that the order made by the chief justice acting ex officio as chairman of the judicial council in assigning Superior Judges Archbald, Craig and Guerin "to assist the District Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District, Division 2," may be upheld as a proper exercise of his powers under the terms of said amendment. It is contended that the use in said order of the phrase to the effect that the judges so assigned "are hereby assigned to sit and hold court as justices of the District Court of Appeal" goes beyond the granted powers of that official under the terms of said amendment as the same has been herein interpreted; but this phrase, if construed to refer to these judges in their individual relation to said court, is subject to no such objection. The difficulty with this proceeding springs not from the order of the chairman of the judicial council above referred to, but from the interpretation sought to be placed thereon by the division of the District Court of Appeal to which these judges have been so assigned. Pursuant to such assignment the said Second Division of said District Court of Appeal made an order that the particular cause wherein the petitioner herein is an appellant be placed on the calendar of said division for hearing and argument before the aforesaid three superior judges, to whom, as said order reads, "the said cause is hereby assigned for hearing, determination, and judgment." It thus appears as the necessary effect of the foregoing order that the three superior judges so individually assigned to assist said division of the District Court of Appeal are to sit and act not in that individual relationship to said court which each of them would otherwise have occupied as justices pro tempore under the terms of the Constitution as it formerly read and as we have herein construed it to mean, but in an entirely different relationship, viz. that of a group of justices pro tempore sitting as a court, performing all of the judicial functions of a court and particularly performing all of the judicial functions of a division of said Court of Appeal. It would seem plain that, in thus setting up what is in effect a new group of justices who are to thus sit and act as a court and in effect as a division of said court, the District Court of Appeal, so attempting to do, could be upheld in such action only upon the theory that the provisions of section 4 of article 6 of the Constitution as amended in 1918 have by implication been repealed in so far as those provisions declare that there shall be but two divisions of said District Court of Appeal.

Again referring to the principle that repeals by implication are not favored and to the special application of such principle to cases wherein the suggested and altogether implied repeal is revolutionary in its character and effect, we have earnestly sought for an interpretation of the provision of section 1a of said amendment which would entail no such extreme consequences, and which would yet enable said provision to be given such operation and effect as would suffice to accomplish the purposes which prompted its adoption. Such an interpretation is the one already herein declared, which involves no material repeal or alteration in the previous provisions of the Constitution, and which, if given operation in the spirit of liberality and flexibility with which the previous changes in the organic law relating to justices pro tempore have been construed and applied, but with the broader scope in one respect which we think this amendment in its application to appellate tribunals permits, would, in our opinion, be productive of the desired result. This result would be to permit assigned justices or judges under the amendment to function as justices or judges pro tempore functioned under the provisions of the Constitution as they existed prior to the amendment, with the added right to so function in causes wherein the regular justices so replaced were neither disqualified nor unable to act. The assistance so afforded would seem to meet the necessity for added man power in such courts as is contended for by counsel for respondents and at the same time not disturb the operations of the regularly constituted court, as contended for by counsel for petitioner.

We therefore hold that the order of Division 2 of the District Court of Appeal in and for the Second Appellate District, in so far as it undertakes to authorize Judges Archbald, Craig, and Guerin to sit and act in the group relation of a court and of a division of said District Court of Appeal, and in such relation and capacity to hear, determine, and adjudge the case of the appellant and petitioner herein pending upon appeal in said District Court of Appeal, is invalid; that such order of said division of said court should upon this application for a writ of review be annulled; and that a writ of prohibition should issue enjoining and prohibiting the respondents Archbald, Craig, and Guerin from exercising the judicial functions of a court and from hearing, determining, and adjudging the cause of the appellant and petitioner herein in that capacity and under the direction of said invalid order.

The said order is annulled and a writ of prohibition is ordered to issue accordingly.

HOMAN v. BOARD OF DENTAL EXAMINERS OF CALIFORNIA et al. (Civ. 5652.)★

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. March 8, 1927. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court May 5, 1927.)

1. Physicians and surgeons 🔑11(2)—Not until judgment charging dentist with major misdemeanors is obtained can license be revoked on such grounds (Dental Act, §§ 12, 13).

Since Dental Act (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, pt. 1, p. 682) §§ 12, 13, declaring that license of dentists may be revoked for major misdemeanors, provides for hearing in superior court, license cannot be revoked on such grounds until judgment is obtained in superior court.

2. Physicians and surgeons 🔑11(3)—Charge dentist "bartered" for nonresident's license to protect illegal practitioner held not to charge unprofessional conduct warranting cancellation of license (Dental Act, § 13).

Charge that licensed dentist "bartered;" i. e., negotiated for, for license of Chicago dentist, to be used by licentiate to protect illegal practitioner in his office, held not to properly charge as ground for cancellation of license unprofessional conduct within Dental Act (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, pt. 1, p. 682) § 13, by aiding unlicensed person to practice dentistry unlawfully.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Barter.]

3. Physicians and surgeons 🔑11(3)—Evidence held not to sustain charge dentist bartered for license to protect unlicensed practitioner.

Evidence held not to sustain charge that licensed dentist bartered for license of Chicago dentist, to be used by licentiate to protect illegal practitioner in his office.

4. Physicians and surgeons 🔑11(2)—"Certificate," within Dental Act prohibiting bartering therefor held to have been used in ordinary meaning of license (Dental Act, § 12).

"Certificate," within Dental Act (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, pt. 1, p. 682) § 12, declaring it to be unprofessional conduct to barter therefor, held to have been used in ordinary meaning of license.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Louis H. Ward, Judge.

Proceeding for writ of review by W. W. Homan to review an order of the Board of Dental Examiners of California and others. From a judgment for respondents, petitioner appeals. Reversed, and judgment ordered granting writ.

Paul F. Fratessa and Stanislaus A. Riley, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Frank J. Burke, of Petaluma, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced a proceeding to obtain a writ of review for the purpose of obtaining a judgment annulling the action of the defendant board, which purported to revoke the license of the plaintiff to practice dentistry. Before proceeding to discuss the attacks made by the plaintiff, it is well to call attention to the fact that, by virtue of the provisions of the statute (Deering's General Laws, 1923, part 1, p. 682), it is made unlawful to practice dentistry without first obtaining a license. The statute applies to college graduates and others. After the application has been approved by the board of dental examiners the statute authorizes the issuance to the applicant of a license. The license so issued continues in force until the 1st day of May following, and thereafter so long as the holder pays the annual tax provided by the statute. However, the statute contains a condition subsequent to the effect that the licentiate must, within six months, register his license with the county clerk of the proper county, and unless he does so the license is forfeited. The statute authorizes the secretary of the board of dental examiners to issue a certified copy of the license. When an applicant asks that his license be registered, the statute requires that he shall exhibit to the county clerk his license or a certified copy of the same. It also requires that the applicant make and file with the county clerk—

> "an affidavit stating his name, age, birthplace, the number of his license and the date of its issue, that he is the identical person named in the license; that before receiving the same he complied with all the preliminary requirements of this statute (and the rules of the board of dental examiners as to the terms and the amount of study and examination); that no money other than the fees prescribed by this statute (and said rules), was paid directly or indirectly for such license, and that no fraud, misrepresentation or mistake in a material regard was practiced, employed or occurred by any person in order that such license should be conferred." Section 8.

The statute requires the county clerk to keep such affidavits in a book. It authorizes the county clerk to issue—

> "a certificate of registration in his county, which shall include a transcript of the registration. Such transcript and license may be offered as primary evidence in all courts of the facts therein stated. A copy of such certificate of registration shall be sent by the county clerk to the secretary of the board within five days after it is made."

Heretofore a complaint was filed before the defendant board which, among other things, alleged as follows:

> "Pursuant to the provisions of section 12 of the Dental Law of the state of California, I do hereby charge W. W. Homan, who is and was, at all of the times mentioned herein, a regularly licensed and practicing dentist in the state of California, with unprofessional conduct as the same is defined in section 12 of said law aforesaid, specifying as the basis of such charge the following facts:
> "That on or about the 26th day of September, 1924, said W. W. Homan did, in writing, barter for the license of one Frank J. Ryan of Chicago, Ill., said license to be used by Homan for the purpose of protecting an illegal practitioner in his office, or in other words, to be used as evidence of the holder's qualification to practice dentistry;
> "That by said acts and consent of W. W. Homan, as herein set out, said W. W. Homan did barter for the license of F. J. Ryan, a legal practitioner; that all of said acts as above set out are contrary to the provisions of said dental law."

The defendant was duly notified, he appeared at the hearing, a hearing was had, and the defendant board entered its judgment revoking the plaintiff's license. In this proceeding the plaintiff contends that the written charge was insufficient and that the evidence was insufficient to support the findings of the defendant board.

[1] Section 12 of the statute enumerates ten or more acts of persons claiming to be licensed dentists, which acts are designated misdemeanors. Section 13 of the statute provides:

> "Any dentist may have his license revoked or suspended by the board of dental examiners for any of the following causes: (1) His conviction of a felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, in which case the record of conviction or a certified copy thereof, certified by the clerk of the court, or by the judge in whose court the conviction is had, shall be conclusive evidence. * * * (3) for unprofessional conduct or for gross ignorance or inefficiency in his profession. Unprofessional conduct is hereby defined to be: * * * Aiding or abetting any unlicensed person to practice dentistry unlawfully. * * *"

The offense last mentioned clearly contemplates an executed act as distinguished from an attempt to commit an act of unprofessional conduct.

Section 12, defining misdemeanors, among others designates the following:

> "Any person * * * shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, * * * who (1) shall sell or barter or offer to sell or barter any dental degree or any certificate or transcript, made or purporting to be made, pursuant to the laws regulating the license and registration of dentists; or (2) shall purchase or procure by barter, any such diploma, certificate or transcript, with intent that the same shall be used as evidence of the holder's qualification to practice dentistry, or in fraud of the laws regulating such practice. * * *"

To constitute the offense last designated it will be observed that it is not necessary that the charge should contain an averment that the improper purpose was actually accomplished. In other words, the charge is similar to the criminal offenses commonly designated as attempts to commit crimes. If the charge last mentioned is made the subject-matter of a criminal proceeding, and if the defendant is found guilty, then by virtue of subdivision 1 of section 13 the judgment of conviction may be conclusive evidence on which the dental board may revoke the license of the alleged practitioner; however, until such judgment is obtained, the alleged purported attempt does not constitute grounds for revoking a license. Section 13.

If it be claimed that many of the acts enumerated in section 12 are clearly acts of unprofessional conduct, as well as the acts enumerated in section 13, and therefore such acts are equally grounds for revoking a license, it is sufficient to say that the Legislature has defined the rights and has provided the remedy. As to the acts first mentioned it has declared that the same are major misdemeanors; that as such they are to be heard and determined by a superior court instead of an administrative board; that, if a judgment is entered against a practitioner, such judgment is a basis for revoking a license; but until such judgment is obtained there is no legislative authority for revoking on such grounds.

[2, 3] The respondent board contends that the charge placed before it constituted a charge of "aiding or abetting any unlicensed person to practice denistry unlawfully. * * *" Section 13. Picking up the charge by its four corners and construing the language as favorably as we may, we are unable to uphold the claim. Moreover, the evidence introduced did not go far enough to sustain the claim. The pleading did not name "any unlicensed person," who, it was claimed, was aided or abetted. The proof did not cover that element. The proof did not show that any person other than Dr. Homan, whether licensed or otherwise, did any act in the office of the petitioner which is defined as practicing dentistry (section 11); or, if such act was done, that it was done while the petitioner unlawfully held the possession of Dr. Ryan's license, and such act was done thereunder. The proof did not show that the man, claiming to be Ryan, did not hold a lawful license. The defendant board claims it was not bound to introduce the proof and it cites and relies on People v. Boo Doo Hong, 122 Cal. 606, 55 P. 402. We are not called upon to decide the point because of the failure of proof on other material elements. However, it may be noted that the statute provides, as we have quoted above, a procedure which makes the records of the defendant board contain legal evidence of the status of the license of each practitioner, and therefore the defendant board is as fully informed as to the status of the license of each practitioner as is the practitioner himself. Under these circumstances it may be doubtful if the rule stated in the Boo Doo Hong Case applies to proceedings maintained under this statute.

The appellant claims that he did not "barter" for the license, and he calls to our attention that one meaning of the word is "to exchange one commodity for another." True, that is one meaning, but another meaning is to "negotiate for." The word "barter" was used by the pleader in the last sense.

[4] The appellant points to the fact that section 12 mentions degree, certificate, and transcript, but does not mention license, and he argues that the statute does not prohibit one from bartering for a license. We cannot say that we agree with him. Every license is ordinarily referred to as a "certificate" or "license certificate." There is nothing on the face of the statute showing that the word "certificate" was not used in section 12 as having that ordinary meaning.

As the pleading under attack appears to us to be an attempt to plead a cause of action under section 12, and not under section 13, other points made by the petitioner do not call for an expression by the court.

The judgment is reversed, and the trial court is directed to enter a judgment granting the writ as prayed.

ROSENBERG et ux. v. SAN FRANCISCO STORAGE CO. (Civ. 5646.)★

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 12, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 10, 1927.)

1. Warehousemen 🔑34(7)—Evidence held to sustain findings as to deposit and value of property converted by warehouseman.

In action against warehouseman for conversion, evidence held to sustain findings as to fact of making deposit claimed and as to value of property, question of credibility of witnesses being for trial court before whom case was tried.

2. Appeal and error 🔑994(3)—Credibility of witness was for trial court in action tried to court.

Question of witness' credibility was for trial court, where action was tried to court.

3. Warehousemen 🔑24(7)—Warehouseman's limitation of liability by contract did not extend to subsequent deposits unless assented to (St. 1909, p. 437).

Fact that warehouseman limited its liability on deposits, in accordance with St. 1909, p. 437, did not, of itself, limit liability as to subsequent deposits of personal property received, in absence of assent, express or implied, of persons making deposits.

4. Warehousemen 🔑24(7) — Where original deposits with warehouseman were under contract limiting liability, subsequent deposits held subject to limitation (St. 1909, p. 437).

Where deposits of personal property were received by warehouse under contract limiting liability to $25 for each package, as provided by St. 1909, p. 437, persons making such deposits held bound by limitation on liability as to subsequent deposits, though no receipts were issued therefor, as persons making deposits impliedly assented to limitation of liability as to subsequent deposits.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by Samuel Rosenberg and wife against the San Francisco Storage Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Modified, and, as modified, affirmed.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court; CURTIS and PRESTON, JJ., dissenting.

Dowd & Reagh, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Brownstone & Goodman, of San Francisco, for respondents.

CASHIN, J. An appeal from a judgment in an action for conversion.

The complaint alleged that appellant corporation, which conducts a storage warehouse, received from respondents for storage certain personal property owned by them which it failed to redeliver on demand.

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

Judgment was entered for the plaintiffs in the sum of $440, the value of the property according to the findings of the trial court, with interest thereon at the legal rate from November 3, 1923, to the date of the judgment, and costs.

Appellant urges as grounds for reversal of the judgment that the findings are unsupported by the evidence, and that its liability, if any, was limited by contract.

Appellant admitted the receipt of several parcels of personal property from respondents, but denied the receipt of four parcels which the latter claimed were deposited and not redelivered. The first deposit of thirteen parcels was made on November 5, 1921, by respondent Lois Rosenberg, then unmarried, the receipt therefor being issued in the name of Miss Alexander. Subsequently, on May 15, 1922, three parcels were deposited and a fourth on August 11, 1922, the number regarding which there is no dispute aggregating seventeen parcels. Respondents intermarried in June, 1922, and, according to the testimony of the husband, the four parcels in dispute were owned by the spouses and were deposited subsequent to the marriage. The date of this deposit was not shown, but it may be inferred from the testimony that it was between the date of the marriage and September 15, 1922, when the seventeen parcels mentioned were redelivered to respondents. It appears that a receipt, which respondents were then requested by appellant to sign, contained, in addition to those redelivered, a description of the four parcels in question. It further appears that following the first deposit a storage receipt and contract containing limitations of liability was received by respondents; that a list of the parcels was contained therein and, according to the testimony of its officer, it was the practice of appellant, as other deposits were made, to add the latter to a duplicate of the receipt and list retained by it. This receipt was inclosed with a letter calling attention to the terms and conditions contained therein, and requesting that if the terms were not satisfactory the corporation be at once notified. No receipts for subsequent deposits were, according to the testimony of the respondents, issued to them.

[1, 2] It is urged by appellant that the testimony of the husband as to the fact and value of the deposit in question was uncertain and contradictory to a degree which destroyed his credibility. While his recollection of events was not clear, and his testimony was vague and uncertain in many particulars, yet the question of his credibility was for the trial court, and we cannot say that the evidence was insufficient to support its findings on these issues.

The material parts of the receipt and contract mentioned were as follows:

> "Received for the account of Miss Alexander the goods enumerated in the schedule annexed for storage upon the following terms and conditions: It is agreed * * *
> "The responsibility of this warehouse for any piece or package or its contents is limited to the sum of $25 unless the value thereof is made known at the time of the storing and receipted for in the schedule, and an additional charge made for the higher valuation.
> "Unless notice be given in writing to the warehouse within five days, the terms will be deemed to be correct and complete."

The receipt made no provision for subsequent deposits, and appellant was not apprised of the value of the parcels then or subsequently received for storage.

[3] As provided by statute (Stats. 1909, p. 437) appellant by contract might, and in the first instance did, limit its liability, but whether such liability was also limited as to the subsequent deposits depended upon the assent, express or implied, of respondents.

The letter containing the receipt and contract was addressed to Miss Alexander and received by Lois Rosenberg, and, according to the testimony of her husband, this receipt was seen and possibly read by him. He further testified that no receipt was demanded for the deposit in question, nor does it appear that appellant was notified that this deposit was made on a separate account. It was further shown that no account with the husband was opened by appellant, but that the storage charges on all the deposits were made in the first instance to the account of Miss Alexander and subsequently to Mrs. S. Rosenberg, and that statements of account were so issued and paid.

[4] It is clear that appellant understood that all subsequent deposits were made under the terms and conditions of the original agreement; and we are of the opinion that the only conclusion reasonably to be drawn from the evidence is that its terms were adopted and assented to by respondents, and that both were bound by the limitation of liability contained therein.

Under this view the conclusion of the trial court that respondents were entitled to judgment for the full value of the property cannot be sustained. It is therefore ordered that the judgment which, including interest, was entered for the sum of $505.97 be modified by deducting therefrom the sum of $390.98; and since, as thus modified, the respondents are not entitled to costs (Code Civ. Proc. § 1025), the award of $22.20 as costs of suit is stricken therefrom. As thus modified, the judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Application for writ of mandate by Harry J. Gray against Harry W. Hall, County Clerk of Sacramento County and ex officio Clerk of the Superior Court in and for Sacramento County. From a judgment denying the writ, petitioner appeals. Reversed.

Chas. A. Bliss, of Sacramento, for appellant.

John R. Connelly and Evan J. Hughes, both of Sacramento, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This is an appeal from the judgment denying petitioner's application for a writ of mandate.

In the year 1921 the petitioner commenced an action against P. L. Yarbrough and Elmer H. Gum, sheriff of Placer county, and recovered judgment therein. The judgment was reversed on appeal. Gray v. Yarbrough, 61 Cal. App. 724, 215 P. 914. Thereafter Gray filed his second amended complaint, to which Yarbrough demurred. His demurrer was overruled September 17, 1923, and he was given ten days within which to answer. Respondent's answer herein admits that Yarbrough, "being then in court and represented by counsel, duly waived notice of such decision and order," and that "respondent, county clerk, did, on * * * 29th day of September, 1923, enter the default of said P. L. Yarbrough." April 1, 1924, judgment was rendered in favor of Gray. In so far as material to the questions raised by this appeal, the judgment in that case is as follows:

"In this action the defendants * * * were regularly served with plaintiff's second amended complaint herein, and defendant P. L. Yarbrough having filed a demurrer thereto, which demurrer was by the court overruled, and said defendant P. L. Yarbrough having failed to answer plaintiff's said second amended complaint within the time allowed therefor, and the defendant Elmer H. Gum, as sheriff of Placer county, Cal., having failed to answer or demur to said second amended complaint, and the legal time for answering having expired, the defaults of said defendants P. L. Yarbrough and Elmer H. Gum, as sheriff of Placer county, Cal., were duly entered according to law.

"Now, on this day, on application of Chas. A. Bliss, Esq., attorney for said plaintiff, and upon legal evidence presented in support of said second amended complaint, the court finds that all of the allegations of plaintiff's second amended complaint are supported by legal evidence and are true; and it is hereby ordered that judgment be entered herein against the said defendant P. L. Yarbrough * * * in accordance with the prayer of said plaintiff's second amended complaint on file herein:

"Wherefore, by reason of the law and the premises aforesaid it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed * * * that the judgment which defendant Yarbrough obtained against * * * F. W. Herbert * * * for the sum of * * * $1,573.37 in the superior court of Placer county, Cal., on the 2d day of May, 1921, as described in plaintiff's second amended complaint, was obtained by defendant Yarbrough as trustee for, and for the benefit of, plaintiff, and said judgment has inured to the benefit of and now belongs to said plaintiff, and that said P. L. Yarbrough never had any interest therein or right thereto; that defendant P. L. Yarbrough be and he is hereby required to make and execute the necessary transfers and assignments to convey and transfer said judgment to plaintiff, and in the event of the neglect or failure of said P. L. Yarbrough to assign and transfer said judgment to plaintiff, the clerk of this court be, and he is hereby, directed to make the necessary transfer and assignment thereof to this plaintiff."

That judgment "has never been appealed from, vacated, or set aside." December 12, 1924, Gray served upon Yarbrough a notice and demand to transfer the judgment against Herbert, as provided in the foregoing judgment in the case of Gray v. Yarbrough, but Yarbrough refused to make the transfer. Due proof of such demand and refusal was filed with the respondent herein, and demand was made upon him to make the transfer as directed by the judgment. Respondent refused to make the transfer and this suit followed.

[1, 2] In respondent's brief it is said:

> "The only point of law involved in this appeal is whether or not the judgment entitled Harry J. Gray, Plaintiff, v. P. L. Yarbrough and Elmer H. Gum, * * * Defendants, * * * is void upon its face. In order to determine the validity of a judgment the courts are limited to an examination of the judgment roll alone."

As applied to the judgment under consideration, the attack being collateral and by one not a party to the action in which the judgment was rendered, respondent's statement is strictly correct. Crouch v. H. L. Miller & Co., 169 Cal. 341, 343, 146 P. 880; People v. Davis, 143 Cal. 673, 675, 77 P. 651; Canadian, etc., Co. v. Clarita, etc., Co., 140 Cal. 672, 674, 74 P. 301; Whitney v. Daggett, 108 Cal. 232, 235, 41 P. 471. It has been said, however, that:

> "If the parties admit the facts which show that the judgment is void, or if they are established without opposition, then, as a question of law upon such facts, we do not see why the case is not like that where the judgment is void upon its face." Akley v. Bassett, 189 Cal. 625, 639, 209 P. 576, 581.

[3] Over petitioner's objection that "it is irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent and is not a part of the judgment roll, and for the further reason that the order is void under rule 26 of this court," the court admitted in evidence an order which, after the entitlement of the court and cause in the case of Gray v. Yarbrough reads as follows:

> "Upon good cause showing, it is hereby ordered that the defendant in the above-entitled action have to and including the 29th day of September, 1923, in which to file his answer in the above-entitled action.
> "Dated this 27th day of September, 1923.
> "Peter J. Shields,
> "Judge of the Superior Court."

Rule 26 provides that:

> "Every order obtained ex parte * * * must * * * be served by copy on the attorney of the adverse party within one day after it has been obtained, or it may be treated as void."

This order was not served upon the plaintiff in that action but it was filed September 27, 1923. Over petitioner's objection the court also admitted in evidence Yarbrough's answer to the second amended complaint in that action filed September 29, 1923, but after the entry of defendants' default therein.

[4, 5] The order extending Yarbrough's time to answer is not a part of the judgment roll. Code Civ. Proc. § 670. For that reason it was error to admit it in evidence. Respondent contends that it may be treated as an amendment of the order overruling the demurrer and as such a part of the judgment roll. Such an order is not subject to amendment on an ex parte application. Neither does the order extending the time in which to answer purport to amend the order overruling the demurrer. The filing of the answer after the entry of the default was ineffective for any purpose. Irvine v. Davy, 88 Cal. 495, 497, 26 P. 506; Christerson v. French, 180 Cal. 523, 525, 182 P. 27. The judgment recites that the default of the defendant was "duly entered according to law." This recital is conclusive on collateral attack. Catanich v. Hayes, 52 Cal. 338, 339; Sacramento Bank v. Montgomery, 146 Cal. 745, 751, 81 P. 138; Crouch v. H. L. Miller & Co., 169 Cal. 341, 345, 146 P. 880; Sheehan v. All Persons (Cal. App.) 252 P. 337, 339.

[6] Respondent contends that the clerk was without authority to enter the default because Yarbrough's answer to the original complaint was on file; that, after the first judgment was reversed, the "plaintiff filed an amended complaint * * * practically identical with his original complaint * * * except for the addition of certain allegations to avoid the statute of limitations"; that such answer "is a complete answer to all the allegations of the amended complaint with the exception of the allegations in reference to the time of the discovery of the alleged fraud, an admission of which, all other material facts being denied, did not entitle plaintiff to judgment." Respondent offered the original complaint in evidence, but petitioner's objection thereto was sustained. The contents of that complaint therefore cannot be considered. Even if the pleadings in Gray v. Yarbrough, which were not admitted in evidence, but are set forth in the transcript, might be considered, they would not help the respondent. After the second amended complaint was served and filed Yarbrough demurred thereto on general and many special grounds, and, after his default was entered, he filed an answer to that complaint. It appears therefore that he did not rely upon his answer to the original complaint as an answer to the second amended complaint, and neither party treated it as such. The second amended complaint superseded the original complaint, and, after the filing of the former, neither the latter nor the answer thereto served any purpose as a pleading. Schlake v. MacConnell, 69 Cal. App. 207, 209, 230 P. 974; Morris v. Hartley, 26 Cal. App. 61, 69, 146 P. 73. The case of Lincoln County Bank v. Fetterman, 170 Cal.

357, 149 P. 811, relied on by respondent, is not in point. That case involved a slight trial amendment which "raised no new issue and presented no new proposition which the defendant was called upon to meet." The court said:

> "The original answer was not only not eliminated by virtue of the amendment to the complaint, but was the answer joining the issues upon which the action was tried. It was an essential part of the judgment roll."

The contention in that case was that the defendant was entitled to a continuance on the ground that he was not then prepared to plead and meet the new issue raised by the amendment. Redington v. Cornwell, 90 Cal. 49, 27 P. 40, cited by respondent, merely holds that, after the filing of an amended complaint, the original complaint may be considered as a part of the record for the purpose of showing when the action was commenced and whether a new or different cause of action was introduced by the amended complaint.

The judgment is reversed.

Application by James Frank Lasley for reinstatement as an attorney at law. Petition denied.

Percy V. Hammon and James E. Mahon, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

WORKS, P. J. This is an application for reinstatement as an attorney at law.

The petition shows that an order was made admitting petitioner to the bar, but that it was later set aside because of the fraud of petitioner in procuring it. It is under these circumstances that he asks for a reinstatement. In legal effect petitioner has never been an attorney at law in this state. He therefore cannot be "reinstated" as such. In re Mash, 39 Cal. App. 548, 551, 179 P. 897; In re Stevens, 197 Cal. 408, 241 P. 88. It is true that in the first of these cases the Supreme Court recognized an application for reinstatement as an application for admission to the bar. This, however, was after the District Court of Appeal had granted the application and when the matter was before the higher tribunal upon an application for a transfer. The present proceeding is at quite a different stage. Moreover, while petitioner, in his points and authorities, appears possibly to exhibit a willingness that his petition may be considered as an application for admission, he nevertheless contends that he is entitled to a reinstatement. We are in doubt whether he intends his petition as one for admission, for the reason that he refers in his brief to readmission and not to admission. For instance, at the beginning of the brief he alludes to his petition "for reinstatement, or readmission, or restoration, or whatever the court deems advisable to call it."

We have no desire to be unduly technical in such matters, but under all the circumstances attending the application we think it were better, if petitioner be so advised, if he will file an application for admission to the bar in the form which is usual and which is understood and acted upon by the board of bar examiners in the performance of its labors under the law.

Petition denied.

BLODGETT v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SANTA BARBARA COUNTY et al.

(Civ. 5630.)

Mandamus ⚷154(7)—Unless petition shows arbitrary refusal to try case, mandate will be denied on assumption case will be set for trial on request.

Where petition for writ of mandate to require court to try case does not show that court's refusal to try case was arbitrary or without sufficient cause, appellate court will assume that, on request, case will be set for trial without unnecessary delay and deny writ.

Application by D. T. Blodgett for writ of mandate to be directed to the Superior Court of the County of Santa Barbara and John L. Hudner, Judge presiding, requiring respondents to proceed with the trial of a certain cause. Writ denied.

D. T. Blodgett, in pro. per.

PER CURIAM. The gist of the case is shown by the following alleged facts: In respondent court an action is pending, wherein the petitioner, as plaintiff, sues one Greenfield to recover damages for libel. By order made on February 14, 1927, the case was set for trial for March 9, 1927, and it was further ordered that a jury be summoned for trial of the cause at that time. Said order was never vacated or modified. On March 9, 1927, petitioner "appeared in open court and demanded that said superior court proceed to try said cause as provided by the foregoing order, but said court refused and still refuses to try said cause."

When the original petition herein was presented this court gave leave to petitioner to file an amendment to the petition, for the purpose of showing the facts relating to the grounds or purported grounds and reasons of the court's refusal to proceed with the trial, or showing in any way that the court's refusal was without sufficient cause. The amendment, however, fails to show that the alleged refusal was arbitrary or without sufficient cause. Therefore we assume that, on further request, duly made, respondent court will reset the cause for trial without any unnecessary delay. It is a just criticism, however, if such be the fact, that the court below allowed the cause to go over beyond March 9th, without entering any order relating to the case.

The petition for writ of mandate is denied.

1. Frauds, statute of 🔑23(3)—Person present at sale, who promised to pay for tires furnished another and against whom charge was made, held principal debtor (Civ. Code, § 2794, subd. 2).

Person present at sale who instructed seller to furnish another with tires, and promised to pay cost, held liable on obligation as principal debtor, not mere surety or guarantor, under Civ. Code, § 2794, subd. 2, where seller entered charge against him.

2. Sales 🔑52(3)—Sales slip and ledger sheet, showing charge against defendant, held admissible in action for price of tires delivered to third party to show defendant was principal debtor.

In action to recover price of tires, sales slip and ledger sheet held admissible to show price was charged to defendant in order to prove that defendant was principal debtor; tires having been delivered to third party.

3. Trial 🔑46(2)—Sustaining objection to question whether buyer had other transactions with seller held not error, absent showing of materiality.

In action to recover price of tires, sustaining objection to question whether defendant had any other transactions with plaintiff held not error, where there was nothing in question or in counsel's statement to indicate facts sought to be proved were material.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; Eugene P. McDaniel, Judge.

Action by Charles Merz against James D. Poole. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. E. Davies, of Marysville, for appellant.
W. P. Rich, of Marysville, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendant from the judgment herein in favor of the plaintiff. The facts are summarized in appellant's opening brief as follows:

"Plaintiff is engaged in the sale of automobile tires in the city of Marysville, and the defendant is by occupation a jeweler. It appears that on December 12, 1925, one Dave Johnson, the owner of a motor truck, called upon plaintiff at his place of business about 10 o'clock in the morning, and sought to purchase two tires for his truck, on credit. Johnson had a hauling contract with the Yuba River Lumber Company, a corporation, of which the defendant, Poole, was the secretary-treasurer. Credit was refused to Johnson, and later, in the afternoon of the same day, Johnson returned to the store of plaintiff, accompanied by the defendant. The testimony as to what actually occurred at that time is conflicting. Plaintiff says that the defendant requested him to furnish Johnson with the tires, and charge them to defendant; that he (the defendant) would pay half of the bill on October 1st, and the balance every two weeks. The other witness on behalf of plaintiff is one of plaintiff's employees, and he testified that the defendant stated to plaintiff: 'Go ahead; put the tires on, Charlie; and I will pay for them all right; put them on.'

"The defendant denies making either of the statements testified to by plaintiff, and his employee, and his version of the conversation is that, in response to the questions by plaintiff, defendant informed him that Johnson was working for the Yuba River Lumber Company and would continue to do so until the end of the season; that at no time did the defendant request plaintiff to furnish the tires to Johnson, nor did he offer to pay for any tires, nor did he purchase any tires from plaintiff. Subsequently, and one day after this conversation, Johnson appeared at the store of the plaintiff, and two tires of the value of $336.70 were delivered to him and placed upon his truck. The defendant was not present. At that time Johnson affixed his signature to Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 1, which exhibit purports to be a sales tag showing that defendant here was charged with two tires of the value of $336.70."

Plaintiff testified:

"On September 12th in the morning about 10 o'clock a young fellow came into my place, Mr. Johnson there, and asked if he could buy a couple of tires on time. I told him no, I didn't know him, in a nice way, told him I didn't do business that way. Along in the afternoon about 1 or 2 o'clock Jim Poole and Johnson came into the store, looked at the tires, and Jimmy says, 'Well, I owe this fellow some money. * * * You give him the tires and charge them to me. * * * I would like a little time on this. I will pay half of it on October 1st, and I will pay you every two weeks, one quarter. * * * The next day Johnson brought the two wheels in, put the tires on. I charged them to Jim Poole, wrote the terms out on a slip which I have here, and Johnson signed it received by him. * * * That was the market price at that time."

Another witness, one of the plaintiff's clerks, testified that, at the time referred to in the plaintiff's testimony, the defendant said to the plaintiff:

"Go ahead, put the tires on, Charlie, and I will pay for them."

The sales slip referred to in the plaintiff's testimony was introduced in evidence, as was also the ledger sheet upon which the plaintiff charged the price of the tires to defendant.

[1-3] The evidence is clearly sufficient to justify the finding that the defendant's promise was an original obligation on his part to pay for the tires, and made him the principal debtor, and not a mere surety or guarantor. Civ. Code, § 2794, subd. 2; Scribner v. Schenkel, 128 Cal. 250, 253, 60 P. 860; Jan Wai v. Smith-Riddell Co., 55 Cal. App. 59, 65, 202 P. 952; Cole v. Bux, 49 Cal. App. 718, 719, 194 P. 71; Meyers v. McKillop, 37 Cal. App. 144, 145, 173 P. 773. The sales slip and ledger sheet were admissible in evidence for the purpose of showing that the price of the tires was charged to the defendant, because, if Johnson had been charged therewith, that fact would have tended to show that he was the principal debtor. McClenahan v. Keyes, 188 Cal. 574, 582, 206 P. 454. The defendant testified in his own behalf. During his direct examination the following occurred:

"Mr. Davies: I will ask you did you have any other transactions with reference to tires after the 12th day of September with Mr. Marz? A. Yes, sir. Mr. Rich: If it concerns these tires, well and good, otherwise it is immaterial and incompetent and I object to it. Mr. Davies: I want to find out any transaction of any kind. The Court: Objection sustained."

[4] Appellant contends that this ruling was error. There is nothing in the question or in the statement made by counsel for defendant to indicate that the facts sought to be proved were in any respect material. Counsel for appellant states in the opening brief that he intended to follow up the question asked with proof of facts which he claims would have been material. His explanation of his purpose comes too late. It should have been made to the trial court to enable that court to determine whether such facts were material.

The judgment is affirmed.

FELTON WATER CO. v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR SANTA CRUZ COUNTY et al. (Civ. 5778.)

1. Prohibition 🔑29—In prohibition to arrest contempt proceeding for violating judgment, directed to defendants and their agents, court will assume that respondent was defendants' agent.

Where facts leading to issuance of order to show cause why petitioner for writ of prohibition should not be adjudged in contempt for failure to comply with judgment, directed to defendants and their agents, are not disclosed by record, court will assume that order was based on acts alleged to have been committed by petitioner while acting as agent of parties bound by decree.

2. Appeal and error 🔑447—Prohibitive injunction against diversion of water was not suspended by appeal.

Where injunction prohibited diverting of water of certain brook, in absence of contrary showing, appeal did not suspend power of trial court to enforce it not only against parties to action, but against agents of parties having knowledge of it, or persons acting in collusion with them.

3. Prohibition 🔑28—Whether one violating injunction against diversion of water acted as agent of parties enjoined, or in exercise of paramount right to divert it, held for trial court.

Where defendant in contempt proceeding violated injunction against diversion of water, whether it acted as agent of parties enjoined or in collusion with them, or in exercise of paramount right to divert waters of stream, are questions for trial court.

4. Prohibition 🔑11—Prohibition does not lie to prevent subordinate court from deciding erroneously.

Writ of prohibition does not lie to prevent subordinate court from deciding erroneously, but party aggrieved will be left to pursue ordinary remedies.

5. Prohibition 🔑3(2)—Prohibition will not ordinarily issue where certiorari will lie to review judgment.

Writ of prohibition will not ordinarily issue where certiorari will lie to review judgment, unless it appears that applicant for writ will necessarily be injured if tribunal is permitted to proceed.

Application for a writ of prohibition by the Felton Water Company, prayed to be directed to the Superior Court in and for the County of Santa Cruz, Harry C. Lucas, Judge, to arrest further proceedings in contempt. Writ denied.

Peck, Bunker & Peck, of Oakland, Ralph Smith, of Santa Cruz, and R. T. Harding, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Geo. W. Smith, of Santa Cruz, for respondents.

CASHIN, J. An application for a writ of prohibition to arrest further proceedings by the respondent court on an order to show cause why petitioner should not be adjudged in contempt of court for failure to comply with a judgment entered therein.

Petitioner is a corporation organized for the purpose of supplying water to the inhabitants of the town of Felton and its vicinity. It alleges the right to divert for that purpose the waters of Limestone brook, in Santa Cruz county, to the extent of 86,000 gallons per day; that, in the exercise of its right, the waters of the stream to the extent claimed have been continuously diverted since the month of June, 1925, and have been dedicated to and impressed with a public use. These averments were denied by respondents, and no evidence in support of the right claimed or of the facts alleged was adduced. It is further averred that petitioner in August, 1926, commenced an action in respondent court against the Forest Lakes Mutual Water Company, Seminary Avenue Land Company, corporations, George Fetherston, and others to condemn as against the lands of defendants the right to divert from this stream 150,000 gallons of water daily, including the 86,000 gallons mentioned above, and that the action is now pending; that in an action in the same court, entitled "Forest Lakes Mutual Water Company and Seminary Avenue Land Company, corporations, plaintiffs, v. Santa Cruz Land Title Company, a corporation, George Fetherston et al., defendants," numbered 9954, in which action petitioner herein was not joined as a party, a judgment was entered enjoining the defendants and their agents from diverting the waters of Limestone brook; that subsequently in the same action an order to show cause was issued by respondents and served on petitioner, requiring it to show cause why it should not be punished for contempt of court for failing to comply with the injunction. Petitioner contends that, not having been joined as a party, it was not bound by the judgment, and that respondents are without jurisdiction to adjudge petitioner guilty of contempt.

It appears that plaintiffs in the action last mentioned, which was filed on June 8, 1925, sought to quiet their title to the waters of the stream and to restrain the defendants from diverting them. The defendants answered, and upon the issues the court found that plaintiffs were the owners as against defendants and entitled to the use and benefit of all the waters naturally flowing therein within the limits of the lands owned by plaintiff Seminary Avenue Land Company, and that, contrary to the claim of defendants, no diversion thereof had been made by them or their agents prior to June, 1925; that defendant Fetherston was the owner of substantially the whole of the issued capital stock of Felton Water Company, which was an agent employed by him in supplying water to certain lands described in the pleadings; that it was not true, as alleged by defendants, that the inhabitants of the town of Felton were supplied by water diverted from the stream, or that the waters therefrom had been dedicated to a public use to be supplied through the Felton Water Company. A judgment was entered on September 8, 1926, enjoining the defendants and their agents, particularly the Felton Water Company, from obstructing the flow of the stream or diverting the waters above the lands of the Seminary Avenue Land Company or within the limits of the land owned by defendant Fetherston as described in the pleadings, it being further provided therein that the injunction should not be stayed or suspended by an appeal from the judgment. An appeal was taken therefrom and is now pending.

[1] The facts which led to the issuance of the order to show cause are not disclosed by the record. It appearing, however, that the injunction was directed to the defendants and their agents, we must assume that the order was based upon acts alleged to have been committed by petitioner while acting as the agent for one or more of the parties bound by the decree.

[2] The injunction was prohibitive, and the appeal did not suspend the power of the trial court to enforce it not only against the parties to the action, but against those having knowledge of it, provided they are servants or agents of the parties enjoined or are acting in collusion with them. United Railroads, etc., v. Sup. Ct., 172 Cal. 80, 155 P. 463; Wolf v. Gall, 174 Cal. 140, 162 P. 115; Berger v. Sup. Ct., 175 Cal. 719, 167 P. 143, 15 A. L. R. 373.

[3-5] Assuming that acts alleged to be violative of the injunction were committed by petitioner, whether it acted as the agent or servant of the parties enjoined or in collusion with them, or, as claimed, in the exercise of a paramount right to divert and distribute the waters of the stream, are questions which the trial court is empowered to determine. A writ of prohibition does not lie to prevent a subordinate court from deciding erroneously, but the party aggrieved will be left to pursue the ordinary remedies for the correction of error (Van Hoosear v. Railroad Commission, 189 Cal. 228, 207 P. 903), nor will it ordinarily issue where, as here, certiorari will lie to review the judgment, unless it appears that the applicant for the writ will necessarily be injured if the tribunal sought to be prohibited is permitted to proceed (Commerial Bank, etc. v. Sup. Ct., 192 Cal. 395, 220 P. 422; Town of Santa Monica v. Eckert, 4 Cal. Unrep. Cas. 92, 33 P. 880; Hayes v. Board of Trustees, 6 Cal. App. 520, 92 P. 492; Hill v. Sup. Ct., 21 Cal. App. 425, 131 P. 1061).

In the instant case, as said in Hill v. Sup. Ct., supra:

> "If the decision of the trial court should be favorable to petitioners, they would have no cause for complaint. If, on the other hand, it should be adverse and the adjudication void for want of jurisdiction, the enforcement of the judgment may be prevented and the judgment declared void under a writ of review."

The writ is denied.

(Civ. 4158.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2. California. March 28, 1927.)

1. Railroads ⟹411(10)—One occupying land not abutting railroad right of way could not recover under statute for injuries to animals (Civ. Code, § 485, prior to amendment by St. 1915, p. 1281).

Owner of mules, occupying land which did not adjoin railroad right of way, cannot recover from railroad for death of mules under Civ. Code, § 485, prior to amendment by St. 1915, p. 1281, since such statute applied only to proprietor occupying land abutting right of way.

2. Appeal and error ⟹931(1)—Appellate court will make all possible assumptions to support judgment, in absence of finding.

Appellate court must make all possible assumptions which will uphold trial court's decision, as to matters as to which there was no finding.

3. Railroads ⟹411(10)—Railroad's breach of covenant to fence did not entitle occupant of nonadjoining land to recover for injuries to animals.

Owner of mules, occupying land which did not adjoin railroad right of way, cannot recover from railroad for death of mules, who entered onto right of way from a public highway, because of railroad's breach of covenant with grantor of land to maintain fence, since such covenant was obviously to prevent ingress of stock from adjoining land.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Albert Lee Stephens, Judge.

Action by E. L. Brenot against the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Louis P. Boardman and Philip C. Boardman, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

W. I. Gilbert, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WORKS, P. J. This is an action for damages occasioned by the alleged negligence of the defendants. Plaintiff was the owner of six mules, five of which were killed and one of which was rendered worthless by being run down by one of defendant's trains. Defendants had judgment, and plaintiff appeals.

Points arising on the appeal are presented upon the findings of the trial court. It was found, among other things, that defendants, at the time the mules were run down, were engaged in operating a railroad over a certain strip of land, which strip had been conveyed by deed to one of defendants as a right of way by two men of the name of Porter; that by the terms of the grant the grantee was required "to construct and maintain a good and substantial fence on each side of said strip of land and right of way; that said defendant did thereafter," and before the accident to appellant's mules, "construct and maintain such fence * * * as required by said grant"; that at the time of the accident appellant, "as successor in interest by leasehold" of one of the Porters, "was in the possession and useful occupation of certain lands lying close to, but not bordering upon, the said right of way * * * and which lands belonged to" Porter "at the date of said conveyance by him * * * of said right of way and constituted a portion of the lands through which said right of way had been granted"; that at the time of the accident to the mules the city of Los Angeles, having acquired the right to construct a certain aqueduct across the right of way of respondents, while "in the course of the work of constructing said aqueduct * * * by and with the knowledge and consent of" respondents, "and with their aid and co-operation, * * * did remove a large portion of said fence from the southerly line of said right of way, and did also remove a cattle guard from said right of way, leaving the northerly line * * * entirely fenced, and leaving the southerly line of said right of way and the railroad tracks thereon unfenced and open and without guards * * * and without any protection against the entry of stock thereon; that the aid and co-operation of" respondents " * * * in constructing said aqueduct consisted particularly of the work of removing said cattle guard and shifting said railroad tracks and maintaining the same * * * for the passage of trains during the course of said work"; that appellant was at the time the owner of the six mules, of the aggregate value of $1,800, "which were on his said premises," confined in a corral in which "they had been impounded for the night by" appellant; that they broke therefrom "and wandered out and along for a mile or more upon" a certain road "to the point where said road formerly crossed said right of way and railroad tracks, at which point they had often been driven across said right of way and railroad tracks to a pasture beyond, and entered upon said right of way and railroad tracks * * * through the opening made and left unguarded, * * * in the fence so previously constructed and maintained along the southerly line of said * * * right of way"; that the mules then proceeded "along the railroad tracks to a point where the right of way was fenced on both sides and where there was a precipitous rise in the ground on one side of said railroad tracks and a sharp decline on the other"; and that at that point they were struck by the locomotive of a freight train of respondents, "rounding a curve just beyond in said railroad tracks," with the result already stated.

[1] The present action is an old one; the complaint having been filed practically a year before the amendment to section 485 of the Civil Code (St. 1915, p. 1281), which is now in effect. Before the amendment, the section read, in part:

> "Railroad corporations must make and maintain a good and sufficient fence on either or both sides of their track and property. In case they do not make and maintain such fence, if their engine or cars shall kill or maim any cattle or other domestic animals upon their line of road which passes through or along the property of the owner thereof, they must pay to the owner of such cattle or other domestic animals a fair market price for the same, unless it occurred through the neglect or fault of the owner of the animals so killed or maimed."

Because of the finding of the trial court that the land of which appellant was lessee lay close to, but did not border upon, the right of way of respondents, appellant may not recover under this section as it formerly stood. It has been directly decided (Barbee v. Southern Pac. Co., 9 Cal. App. 457, 99 P. 541) that the relief afforded by the enactment may be resorted to only by a proprietor occupying lands abutting upon a right of way.

There are many cases in other states holding, under the general law of negligence, that a recovery may be had from a railroad company under such circumstances as existed here. Respondents, after having constructed their fence along both sides of their tracks, it will be observed, removed a portion of the structure on one side, thus providing a means of ingress to the tracks, there being no means of egress therefrom except through the break which they had made. It seems that in this state, before section 485 was amended and under the opinion in the case above cited and other adjudications referred to in it, one whose animals crossed intervening lands on the way from his property to a railroad right of way and were there injured or killed, under the circumstances above stated, might not have recovered for the loss suffered. The remedy allowed by the section seems to have been exclusive.

[2, 3] Appellant contends, however, that he is entitled to recover because of the breach by respondents of their covenant, in the deed by which they acquired the right of way, to erect and maintain a fence along the strip acquired. Granting for the sake of argument, without deciding, that the covenant was one running with the land, and that there is no legal objection against appellant, as a lessee and not a holder of title, availing himself of the covenant, we think relief must be denied him on other grounds. It is obvious that the covenant was made for the purpose of preventing ingress of livestock to the right of way from the property of the Porters from which it had been segregated or set apart by the grant. The contiguity of location which must have been contemplated by this purpose has been destroyed. This is evident from the finding of the trial court that the leasehold of appellant did not border upon the right of way but lay close to it. There was no finding as to the ownership of the land lying between the leasehold and the right of way, or as to the nature of the use to which it was being put, and as to those matters, under familiar rules of law, we are bound to make all possible assumptions which will uphold the decision of the trial court. Let us assume, then, that the intervening strip had been condemned as a right of way for a public highway which extended along the railroad right of way and across the entire body of land formerly owned by the Porters, thus entirely segregating the latter right of way from the entire tract on that side, and that at the time of the accident to the mules the public road had been built and was being used by the general public. Would not appellant be in the same situation with others of the general public if his mules emerged from the leasehold, got upon the public road, and thence upon the railroad right of way through the breach in the fence? We think he would. The covenant having been made for the purpose of insuring that livestock of the Porters or of their assignees should not emerge from their lands and thus enter, immediately, upon the right of way, we think it cannot be held to protect appellant from a loss occasioned by the entry of his mules upon the railroad right of way from a public highway. No authority is presented to us upon this question, and we know of none.

Judgment affirmed.

2. Assignments ⚷58—Assignee of contract for exchange of advertising space may recover for breach prior to assignment, despite objection that contract was not assignable without defendant's consent.

Assignee could recover for breach of contract for exchange of advertising space, where breach occurred before assignment, notwithstanding claim that service was of such nature that it could not be assigned without defendant's consent.

Albert I. Loeb, of San Francisco, for appellant.

KOFORD, P. J. This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment in favor of plaintiff for damages for breach of contract.

Defendant and the assignor or assignors of the plaintiff entered into a contract for the exchange of advertising space. The judgment is based upon the finding that plaintiff's assignor performed its part of the contract but defendant did not.

Two points are raised by the appellant as reasons for reversal. First, he claims the service agreed to be performed by plaintiff's assignor was of such a nature that it could not be assigned without consent of defendant, and that the evidence shows the assignment was made before and not after the breach by defendant giving rise to the cause of action. The findings of fact made by the court show that the breach occurred before the date of the assignment claimed by appellant. Second, he claims the trial court did not give proper weight to the evidence of custom and usage in respect to the time within which the contract should have been performed by the defendant.

[1] Both of these questions involve a consideration of the evidence introduced at the trial. Respondent raises the point that the appellant has failed to comply with section 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the numerous decisions of this court requiring him to print in his brief, or in a supplement appended thereto, such portions of the record to which he wishes to direct attention. The point is well taken. McLaren v. Hards, 39 Cal. App. 104, 178 P. 332; Pasadena Realty Co. v. Clune, 34 Cal. App. 33, 166 P. 1025.

[2, 3] The appellant did not appear to argue nor has he replied to respondent's brief. Furthermore, enough of the evidence is printed in respondent's brief to show, at least prima facie, that the evidence supports the court's finding that the contract was breached before the assignment was made. There is no evidence shown either in appellant's or respondent's brief concerning the alleged custom or usage as to the time within which the contract should have been performed. The evidence printed in respondent's brief, however, shows defendant's persistent neglect to perform the contract extended over a period of several years. The point seems to be wholly without merit.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

District Court of Appeal is concluded by decision on former appeal, construing provisions of charter and ordinance which are involved in case before it.

2. Municipal corporations ⚷220(6)—Suspending civil service employee more than 30 days in removal proceeding did not entitle him to salary (Fresno City Charter, art. 3, § 22).

Suspending civil service employee for more than 30 days in removal proceeding under Fresno City Charter, art. 3, § 22, held not to entitle him to salary, where postponement of hearing before civil service commission was delayed at employee's request.

3. Municipal corporations ⚷218(8)—Civil service board's failure to act on dismissal order before expiration of suspension period would not nullify order of dismissal.

Failure of civil service board to act on order dismissing employee before expiration of period of suspension under city ordinance would not operate, in and of itself, to nullify order of dismissal and restore officer or employee to former position.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Denver S. Church, Judge.

Mandamus by Miles R. Linkous against A. E. Sunderland, Commissioner of Public Safety and Welfare of the City of Fresno, to compel restoration of petitioner to the police department. Judgment for petitioner, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Loren A. Butts, of Fresno, for appellant.

Lindsay & Gearhart and B. W. Gearhart, all of Fresno, for respondent.

KNIGHT, J. Plaintiff instituted this proceeding in mandamus against defendant, as commissioner of public safety and welfare of the city of Fresno, seeking to be restored to the position formerly held by him in the police department of said city. Judgment was entered in plaintiff's favor, and defendant has appealed.

The record discloses the following facts: On November 9, 1925, appellant, as the head of the police department of said city, served written notices on respondent and other police officers of said city, including one Nichols, advising them that they were dismissed from said department upon the ground that they had been indicted by the federal grand jury for "felony, to wit, conspiracy to violate the National Prohibition Enforcement Act." Availing themselves of the benefits of certain civil service provisions of the city charter, the officers mentioned answered the charges contained in the orders of dismissal and demanded a hearing before the civil service commission. The latter appointed November 27, 1925, as the time for said hearing, but prior thereto respondent and Nichols, being represented by the same counsel, joined in a written request to said board, asking that the hearing of the charges against them be continued "until some date subsequent to the trial" on the federal indictment, which request was granted. The trial in the federal court began on November 30, 1925, and ended in the acquittal of respondent and Nichols on January 28, 1926. On the day following they demanded reinstatement in said department. Thereafter, and on February 1, 1926, they were served with amended notices of dismissal, which contained the additional charge of having received money from persons known to be engaged in the unlawful sale of liquor. They answered the amended charge, and the hearing was set for February 17, 1926, on which day and before said charges were heard respondent commenced the instant proceeding in the superior court, and thereupon the board continued the hearing of said charges pending the determination of this proceeding, the trial of which was had in the superior court on February 25, 1926, and judgment entered on March 11, 1926, in favor of respondent, directing that he be forthwith restored to his former position in said department and that appellant issue to him salary warrants covering the period of time from November 9, 1925, to the date of judgment.

Section 22 of article 3 of the charter, relating to the removal and suspension of officers and employees of said city, provides in part that, if the charges made against the officer or employee are answered and demand is made for a hearing before the civil service commission, "the civil service board shall then fix a time and place for, and, according to such rules and regulations as it may adopt, shall conduct a hearing upon the charges and answers, * * * and upon said hearing * * * may order the charges dismissed, in which case the officer or employee shall be restored to duty without prejudice; but if the charges are sustained, the officer or employee shall by virtue of said findings be removed unless the finding in either case is set aside by the city commission. * * * Pending the hearing of any charges, whether before the civil service board or the city commission, the officer seeking to make the removal may suspend the officer or employee whose removal is sought, such suspension to be without pay, unless the charges are dismissed." These charter provisions are supplemented by a code of rules, established by a city ordinance (No. 972), which govern the civil service commission in the exercise of its powers, and rule 11 thereof deals with "removals, reductions, resignations, suspensions, and procedure," being divided into four sections, and section 1 containing three subdivisions. Section 3 thereof reads as follows:

> "Pending action for removal or for disciplinary reasons an employee may be suspended for a period not to exceed 30 days. * * *"

In support of the judgment respondent contends that the limitation of suspension fixed by the section just quoted applies to cases of dismissal, and that since his suspension continued beyond the time allowed thereby it became illegal and, irrespective of the notice of dismissal, operated to restore him to his former position.

Answering this contention, appellant relies upon the case of Nichols v. Sunderland, Commissioner of Public Safety, etc., et al., 247 P. 614, claiming that the precise point urged by respondent here was raised and fully decided there. With reference to that case, it appears that pending the appeal herein, Nichols, who as before stated was represented by the counsel now appearing for respondent Linkous, made original application to Division 2 of this court for, and was granted, an alternative writ of mandate requiring this appellant to show cause why Nichols should not be restored to the position formerly occupied by him in said department. As indicating that counsel for respondent herein at that time believed that the issues of law and fact involved in the Nichols Case were the same as those involved here, appellant calls attention to that part of the petition in the Nichols Case wherein it was alleged that the instant proceeding had been commenced and tried in the superior court; that judgment had been rendered directing the reinstatement of the officer, and that an appeal had been taken and was then pending; and as grounds for making the application for the writ to the appellate court in the first instance stated in the petition as follows:

> "* * * all the questions involved in that action (referring to the instant one) and all questions that are involved in any of the numerous other similar actions can be determined promptly by the appellate court in this proceeding and inasmuch as the decision of the appellate court will be accepted as final by all parties to this proceeding, and other similar proceedings, it is, the petitioners submit, a proper and salutary case for the exercise of the original jurisdiction fixed in the appellate court."

On April 29, 1926, after a hearing on the merits, judgment in that proceeding was rendered in favor of the appellant herein, holding in effect with reference to the point at issue here that the provisions of said section 3 were not available to the petitioner therein, and that therefore he was not entitled to be reinstated. Subsequently a petition for a hearing in the Supreme Court was denied. After quoting rule 11 in full in the fore part of the opinion, the District Court of Appeal construed the same as follows:

> "Turning to rule XI, it will be observed that in subdivision (a) a permanent removal is provided for after hearing or opportunity for hearing; in subdivision (b) a suspension is provided, for provided the civil service board may investigate and approve or disapprove; in subdivision (c) a suspension or dismissal is provided for and the language used clearly indicates that the subordinate may, at the time the proceeding is initiated, be separated from his office, but that thereafter he is to be given a hearing if he demands it, and, if the charges are sustained, then he will be permanently removed—that is, dismissed. As against improper removals, the charter and the rules both enjoin on the civil service board the duty of protecting the subordinate. The charter enjoins on the superior office the duty of promoting 'the efficiency of the public service.' From all of these provisions it is clear that the charter and the rules enacted thereunder authorize (1) a permanent removal; (2) a suspension for disciplinary purposes; and (3) a suspension which will promote the efficiency of the service."

And further on in the opinion, in determining the point urged herein by respondent, the court said:

> "Finally, the petitioner asserts that he has been suspended more than thirty (30) days, and that a suspension for more than thirty (30) days is prohibited by the provisions of Ordinance No. 972. This contention rests on a confusion or intermingling of two separate provisions of the ordinance. It is provided that a subordinate may be disciplined by suspension. It is also provided that the superior may initiate removal proceedings, and, pending the hearing thereof before the civil service board, that the subordinate officer may be suspended. As a disciplinary measure, the ordinance provides that a suspension may not be for a period exceeding thirty (30) days. As an ancillary measure in removal proceedings no limit is placed on the period of suspension. Whether the suspension is of the first class or the second class, the ordinance provides that the subordinate may, on demand, be given a speedy hearing and that the period of thirty (30) days will not necessarily be consumed in either case. Moreover, the facts above recited show that any delays which have occurred in the instant case were the delays caused or requested by the petitioner and not by his superior officers. Under very similar provisions contained in the New York charter the Supreme Court of that state made the same ruling. Halpin v. City of New York, 54 Misc. Rep. 128, 105 N. Y. S. 520."

[1] It would appear from the foregoing that the same provisions of the charter and of Ordinance No. 972 of said city upon which respondent endeavors to support the judgment herein were there considered and were construed adversely to respondent's contentions herein. We are therefore of the opinion that we are concluded by such construction. With due propriety it may be added, however, in answer to the argument made herein by respondent as to the possible consequences of excluding cases of suspension where dismissal is ordered from the operation of the 30-day limitation provision embodied in said section 3 of rule 11, that the courts may always be resorted to for an appropriate remedy to prevent prolonged or unwarranted delay on the part of a civil service board in bringing cases of dismissal to trial; and in this connection it may be stated that it appears from the briefs herein that the amended charges against respondent were in fact heard and sustained on May 12, 1926.

[2, 3] We find no material difference in the facts of the two cases relating to the cause for the delay in bringing the charges to a hearing which would justify a different conclusion in the determination of this appeal. In each case the postponement from November 27, 1925, until January 29, 1926, was granted at the request of the accused, and the second postponement, to February 17, 1926, was necessarily caused by the filing of the amended charges; but on that day respondent commenced this proceeding, not for the purpose of obtaining a trial before the civil service board, but to compel the commissioner who had ordered his removal to reinstate him upon the ground that as a result of said postponement his suspension had expired by operation of law. Even assuming that by any possible construction the provisions of said section 3 could be held to apply to cases of removal, there is nothing contained in the law of the municipality which would justify the establishment of a rule that failure of the civil service board to act upon an order of dismissal before the expiration of the period of suspension would operate in and of itself to nullify the order of dismissal and restore the officer or employee to his former position. Such a rule must necessarily become a part of the municipal law by legislative act, and cannot be judicially supplied.

In view of the decision in Nichols v. Sunderland etc., supra, and mainly upon the grounds stated therein, the judgment appealed from is reversed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

PALO VERDE LAND & WATER CO. v. EDWARDS et ux. (Civ. 5308.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 25, 1927.)

Waters and water courses 🔑234—Stock of water company held personal property, subject to pledge, and not appurtenant to land (Civ. Code, § 324).

Where water company did not by law provide that water should be sold only to owners of capital stock nor that stock should be appurtenant to the land nor require evidence of title to land in making transfers, shares of stock therein, in view of Civ. Code, § 324, held to be personal property, subject to pledge, and not appurtenant to the land, despite articles of corporation providing stock should be located on the land owned by persons desiring to purchase stock.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; William H. Ellis, Judge.

Action by the Palo Verde Land & Water Company against William B. Edwards and wife. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Lee R. Taylor, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Durley & Downes, of Oxnard, for respondent.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of respondent, quieting its title to 80 shares of the capital stock of Palo Verde Mutual Water Company, a corporation, and from an order overruling defendant's demurrer.

Plaintiff pleaded and proved that in December, 1913, it sold to P. H. Bodkin, who was at the time possessed of and claimed title to the west half of the northeast quarter of section 11, township 7 south, range 22 east, S. B. B. & M., in Riverside, Cal., the 80 shares of stock, the title to which is in question, and that such stock was at the same time located on said land. It further appears that, coincident with the sale of the shares of stock to P. H. Bodkin, the same were by him pledged to plaintiff for a balance of the purchase price thereof, and in addition thereto and at the same time P. H. Bodkin and Bella E. Bodkin, his wife, executed a mortgage of the described premises and delivered it to respondent to secure respondent against loss of the purchase price of the stock; that on July 28, 1921, there remained unpaid and due $1,000 of such purchase price, together with interest; that, Bodkin and his wife being in default, respondent proceeded to sell the stock under its pledge agreement with the Bodkins; that at the sale respondent purchased the 80 shares of stock and claims title thereto. It is the title to this stock thus acquired by respondent that it asked the court to quiet against any claim or claims of the appellants.

The appellants pleaded and proved that at the time of the sale of the stock by respondent, under its pledge agreement with the Bodkins, and at the time of the commencement of the action, appellant William B. Edwards was the owner of the land upon which the 80 shares of stock had been located.

Appellants urge four points on appeal: First, that the court erred when it overruled the demurrer of defendants to plaintiff's complaint; second, that the court erred in rendering judgment in favor of plaintiff based upon the findings of fact and conclusions of law in this matter; third, that the court erred in finding and deciding that the 80 shares of stock in question were never made appurtenant to the land; and, fourth, that the court erred in deciding that plaintiff, by the purchase of said stock at the pledgee's sale thereof, became and remained after the pledgee's sale the owner of the same.

If the 80 shares of the capital stock of the Palo Verde Mutual Water Company, represented by its certificate No. 570, became appurtenant to the land described in the certificate, then under section 2986 et seq. of the Civil Code, a pledge of the stock, together with the rights, privileges, and benefits incident thereto bestowed upon the land, is ineffective, as a sale of the real property or an appurtenant thereto under a purported pledge agreement would be void and pass no title to the property involved. The decision of this question—that is, are the 80 shares of stock appurtenant to the land or are they personal property—is determinative of all the questions raised by appellant on this appeal. If the shares of stock are appurtenant to the land, the judgment must be reversed, but, if not, no reversible error appears in the record, and the judgment must be affirmed.

The articles of incorporation and the by-laws of Palo Verde Mutual Water Company, in so far as they pertain to the issue here presented, are as follows:

> "That the purposes for which it is formed are to acquire by appropriation, purchase, or otherwise, water and water rights, * * * to distribute and sell said water at the cost thereof to the stockholders of the corporation only, for use upon the lands within the district and territory hereinafter described, * * * that such stock shall be located only upon land owned by, or the ownership of which is claimed by, the person desiring to purchase said stock; and provided, also, that when stock of the corporation is located upon a tract of land one share shall be issued and so located for each acre thereof," etc.

Article XV of the by-laws provides:

> "Certificates of stock shall be in such form and device as the board of directors shall direct * * * and each certificate * * * express on its face its number, date of issuance, and number of shares for which, and the person to whom it is issued, and the particular description of the land on which the shares are located. The certificate book shall contain a margin on which shall be entered the number, date, number of shares, and the name of the person expressed in the corresponding certificate, and a particular description of the land on which the shares are located."

Article XVI of the by-laws provides:

> "No transfer of stock shall be valid until the surrender of the old certificate and the acknowledgment of such surrender on the books of the corporation."

The certificate of stock pledged to respondent certifies:

> "That Palo Verde Land & Water Company, as pledgee for P. H. Bodkin, is entitled to 80 shares of the capital stock of Palo Verde Mutual Water Company, transferable on the books of the company by indorsement hereon and surrender of this certificate and on purchase by the transferee of the land covered by this certificate. The land covered by this certificate and upon which said stock is located is described as follows:" (description of land).
> "Each holder of this certificate must own or claim the ownership of the above described land."

P. H. Bodkin had not paid for this stock and assigned it as security for the purchase price, and the defendants had paid nothing for the stock.

On December 31, 1913, P. H. Bodkin was in possession of the land, claiming to own it, and defendants out of possession claimed ownership, and were subsequently adjudged to be the owners and were put into possession of the lands.

At the time of the purchase of the 80 shares of stock on installments, P. H. Bodkin and Bella E. Bodkin, his wife, executed a written pledge as follows:

> "And I hereby pledge to and deposit with said Palo Verde Land & Water Company 80 shares of the capital stock of Palo Verde Mutual Water Company, a corporation, evidenced by certificate No. 570, as collateral security for the payment of this or any other liability or liabilities of the undersigned to said Palo Verde Land & Water Company, due or to become due, or that may be hereafter contracted.
> "In the event of the nonpayment of any of said installments of principal or interest when due, the holder of this note may, at his or its option, declare all of said installments immediately due and payable, and may sell said stock (or so much thereof as may be necessary to raise the amount unpaid hereunder and the expenses of sale), at the principal place of business of said Palo Verde Mutual Water Company, provided that notice of such sale shall be given by publication in a daily newspaper published in Riverside county, Cal., for at least ten consecutive publications before said sale, * * * and it is agreed that the holder of this note may become the purchaser of said stock, or any portion thereof, at such sale. This note is also secured by mortgage of even date herewith."

The expression contained in the articles of incorporation, "that such stock shall be located only upon land owned by, or the ownership of which is claimed by, the person desiring to purchase said stock," forms the basis for the claim by appellant that the shares of stock in question are appurtenant to the land and are therefore real and not personal property.

Section 324 of the Civil Code provides that shares of the capital stock of a corporation are personal property, but contains a proviso that a corporation organized for, or engaged in the business of selling, distributing, or supplying water for irrigation purposes or for domestic use, may in its by-laws provide that water shall only be sold, etc., to the owners of its capital stock, and that such stock shall be appurtenant to certain lands when they are described in the certificates issed therefor; and, when such certificates shall be so issued and a certified copy of such by-laws recorded in the office of the county recorder in the county where such lands are situated, the shares of stock so located on any land shall only be transferred with said land, and shall pass as an appurtenance thereto.

Section 324 of the Civil Code predicates the attributes of personal property to shares of stock in a water company, and that such shares remain personal property unless the corporation shall adopt and record in the office of the county recorder a by-law that the stock shall be appurtenant to the land. It would seem, therefore, that, unless such a by-law be adopted, the stock must remain personal property and not become appurtenant to the land. In Security Commercial Savings Bank of El Centro v. Imperial Water Co., 183 Cal. 488, 192 P. 22, the court intimates that stock might become appurtenant to the land without recording the by-law, but did not expressly so hold. It did not, however, intimate that stock might become appurtenant to the land without the adoption of a by-law to that effect. There is no provision in the by-laws to the effect that the water stock shall be appurtenant to the land, and, of course, there being no by-law to that effect, none was or can be recorded. Nor is there any evidence in the record showing that the water company by its acts or practices held the water stock to be appurtenant to the land upon which it is located. On the contrary, it is the uncontradicted evidence of Mr. P. R. Asmussen, auditor and assistant secretary of the company, that the company did not require evidence of title to the land in making a transfer of the stock. The company transferred the stock upon surrender of properly indorsed certificates of stock, and in making transfers of stock it was not the policy or practice of the company to require evidences of transfers of the lands to the parties to whom the certificates were to be transferred. When a deed has been presented showing a transfer of the land, the company would not transfer the stock to the grantee in the deed but only upon surrender of the original stock certificate properly indorsed, and quite frequently stock has been moved from one location to another, with the consent of the board of directors, when the certificate of stock has been surrendered properly indorsed.

The question here presented is not unlike the one presented in Spurgeon v. Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Co., 120 Cal. 71, 52 P. 140, 39 L. R. A. 701, in which case the court makes a distinction between the issuing of stock and of delivering water. In construing the following provision in the articles of incorporation of the water company:

> "It will deliver water to no one who has not purchased one share of the stock of the company for each acre or fractional part thereof of irrigable land owned by him along the canal of the company, and agreed with the company that said stock shall be transferable only with the land for which it is issued, and that the water delivered shall be used only on the land for which it is issued"

—the court says:

> "The charter does not say that certificates of stock will not be issued until the subscriber or purchaser has agreed that it shall be transferable only with the land for which it is issued, etc. What it does say is that the company will deliver no water except upon the conditions named."

The provision of the articles of incorporation of Palo Verde Mutual Water Company in this case is very similar—"and said water shall be distributed and sold upon and to only such of said lands upon which stock of the corporation shall have been located."

In the Spurgeon Case the court further says that the purchaser of shares of stock at a sale of delinquent stock for nonpayment of assessment might have the certificates for such shares issued to him without the special indorsement that the certificates should be "transferable on the books of the company * * * on purchase by the transferee of the land covered by this certificate," followed by a description of the land described in the original certificate for the stock sold at the sale, the court, using this language:

> "If shares are issued to him without the special indorsement insisted upon in this case by the defendant, he is put upon the same footing with other shareholders, and that without any injury to the company or infringement of its by-laws. He is not by virtue of the mere issuance of the shares entitled to receive any water, and the company is not compelled to deliver any water at any time or place or in any manner inconsistent with its charter or rules. Like an original subscriber, he must become the owner of land within the district designated in the charter and in other respects conforming to its conditions. When he has acquired such land, he may then, with the consent of the company—which it would have no right unreasonably to withhold—have his shares ascribed to such land by endorsement on the certificate, or in any other convenient method.
> "The company by its act in selling the delinquent stock, and the original holder by violation of the condition upon which he held it, have effectually severed the connection between the stock in question here and the land to which it was originally ascribed, and there is nothing in the charter or by-laws to prevent its assignment to other lands of like character within the proper district as may be done in the analogous case expressly provided for in the charter. Until this is done it is no disadvantage to the corporation or its other stockholders that these shares should be held in a form that will enable the plaintiff to use them or transfer them. As they do not now and never can oblige the company to deliver water to the plaintiff or any assignee until they are ascribed to land of the requisite character, there is no reason why they should not be issued in a form admitting of their free assignment."

In the Spurgeon Case there was a provision of the articles of incorporation that "the company will act only as an agency for delivering said water to said owners whose right to use the same is appurtenant to their said lands," and a provision of the by-laws that "shares of stock in this company shall not be transferable except with the land for which it is issued, and a conveyance of the land shall legalize a transfer of the stock to the purchaser."

There are no such provisions in the articles of incorporation or by-laws in the instant case. The only provisions to be considered here are in effect: That water shall be distributed only to lands upon which stock has been located, that stock shall be located only upon lands owned or claimed by the purchaser, and that the certificate shall contain a description of the land on which the shares are located.

There is certainly nothing in any of these provisions which would prevent the transfer of the water stock to other lands or which would give to the words "location" or "located" the meaning of "appurtenant," or which would give to the shares of stock the fixed character of real property, contrary to the general provision of the law defining the character of shares of stock of a corporation as personal property.

Appellants cite several cases as sustaining their position. The case of Riverside Land Co. v. Jarvis, 174 Cal. 316, 163 P. 54, is a case where the owner of certain shares of stock had them located upon the land owned by him and the by-laws of the company contained a provision that certificates of stock should be "transferable only with the land to which they are attached," and that the party asking a transfer of the stock should present to the secretary his conveyance of the land before the issuance of a new certificate. Furthermore, the water company had been organized by the persons who were at the time receiving and using water of the system on their lands. In that case the court held that the articles of incorporation, by-laws, and certificate taken together formed an agreement between the stockholders and the company that the stock should be transferable only with the land and conversely that a transfer of the land should pass to the grantee thereof the right to the stock.

The Estate of Thomas, 147 Cal. 236, 81 P. 539, holds that shares of stock of Trabuca Water Company passed by devise with 6 acres of land without specially mentioning the stock; that it was appurtenant to the land for the reason that the water right had been appurtenant to the land before the water company was formed, and that the company was formed for convenience only in distributing water; that section 324 of the Civil Code did not apply, because the amendment to the act adopted in 1895 (St. 1895, p. 118) was not made until some three years after the water right had become appurtenant to the land. In a concurring opinion Mr. Justice McFarland uses this language:

> "Of course, ordinarily, a grant of land does not carry, as appurtenant to the land, certificates of stock in a corporation; but there is nothing in the leading opinion which disturbs that general principle."

In Woodstone Marble & Tile Co. v. Dunsmore Canyon Water Co., 47 Cal. App. 72, 190 P. 213, the facts are very similar to Riverside Land Co. v. Jarvis, supra. There it was conceded and held that the water rights had been appurtenant to the land before the water company was formed and the appurtenancy had not been changed by the organization of the company. In Security, etc., Bank v. Water Co., supra, cited, the by-laws provided that water should be sold and distributed only to stockholders, and that the stock shall be appurtenant to the land and that a certified copy of the by-laws had been recorded, as provided by section 324 of the Civil Code. In Bent v. Second Extension Co., 51 Cal. App. 648, 197 P. 657, it was admitted that the stock was appurtenant to the land and that the provisions of section 324 of the Civil Code had been complied with.

The facts in the cases cited by appellant do not parallel the instant case. Here the articles of incorporation provide that the stock "shall be located only upon lands owned by, or the ownership of which is claimed by the person desiring to purchase said stock." By this very language of the articles of incorporation it is specially provided that it is not necessary for the purchaser of the stock to own the land, but it is sufficient if he shall claim the ownership. These words show the intention on the part of the corporation and the stockholders to be that the stock might be located upon land not owned by the purchaser and therefore not appurtenant to the land and not to pass with a conveyance of it by virtue of a deed, and especially so when the stock was not originally paid for by the party claiming ownership nor by the party subsequently adjudged to be the owner. The evidence shows also that a considerable part of the land within the water district when organized was government land, upon which settlers had made homestead or desert filings and to whom stock was issued upon their claim to the land. Upon their failure to secure patents to the land and the land reverting to the government, under the contention urged by appellant, the government would succeed to the stock as an appurtenance to the land.

Section 324 of the Civil Code, as amended, was in force at the time of the incorporation of the respondent company, it being incorporated in 1908, and it would seem that, if it were the intention of the incorporators that the stock should be appurtenant to the land, they would have so provided in their by-laws and complied with the section relative to recording and thus made the stock appurtenant to the land, which the trial court found not to be appurtenant, and which we think is the correct view.

ZOLKOVER v. PACIFIC ELECTRIC RY. CO. et al. (Civ. 3117.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 18, 1927.)

1. Street railroads 🔑103(2)—Where motorman did not see pedestrian, last clear chance doctrine is inapplicable.

In pedestrian's personal injury action against electric railways, last clear chance doctrine is inapplicable, if motorman did not see plaintiff, since such doctrine is based on fact that defendant, actually knowing of plaintiff's danger, had opportunity to avoid accident.

2. Street railroads 🔑114(13)—Evidence held to support finding pedestrian was guilty of contributory negligence in standing between electric railway tracks.

In action by pedestrian against electric railways for injuries sustained while standing between tracks on which cars were passing, evidence held to support verdict that plaintiff was guilty of negligence proximately leading to injury by assuming such position.

3. Evidence 🔑568(6)—In determining speed of electric train in personal injury action, jury may consider that noise of train accentuates idea of speed entertained by many people.

In determining speed of electric train in personal injury action, jury could consider fact that noise and rumble of three-car train would accentuate idea of speed entertained by many people, and that their testimony might not be so reliable as that of motorman, notwithstanding that latter might be classed as interested witness.

4. Street railroads 🔑98(6)—Pedestrians should pay attention to gongs warning change of traffic at street intersection.

Pedestrians, irrespective of any street ordinances regulating crossing of street, are not taking reasonable precautions to insure their own safety when they do not pay attention to preliminary gongs warning all users of streets that course of traffic is about to be changed by semaphores at intersection.

5. Street railroads 🔑85(1)—Motorman's duty and pedestrian's duty are reciprocal.

Duty of motorman of electric train to protect pedestrian, and duty of pedestrian to protect himself, are reciprocal.

6. Appeal and error 🔑977(5)—Refusal to set aside verdict on affidavit based on information and belief will not be disturbed.

Discretion of trial court refusing to set aside verdict of jury on affidavit based on information and belief will not be disturbed on appeal.

7. Jury 🔑131(3)—Examination of prospective jurors to determine merely whether party will desire to exercise peremptory challenge is not permissible.

Examination of prospective jurors for purpose of enabling party to determine whether he will desire to exercise peremptory challenge is not permissible.

8. Appeal and error 🔑703—Refusal of requested instructions cannot be reviewed, where instructions are not set out in transcript.

Court's action in refusing instructions requested by appellant cannot be reviewed, where such instructions are not set out in transcript.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John Perry Wood, Judge.

Action by Jacob Zolkover against the Pacific Electric Railway Company and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Bertrand J. Wellman and John C. Miles and Samuel Marks, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Frank Karr, E. E. Morris, C. W. Cornell, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, and N. S. Sterry, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. Some time between the hours of 5 and 6 o'clock on the evening of November 20, 1922, in the city of Los Angeles, the plaintiff was injured by being run over by one of the trucks of a car of a three-car train, then and there belonging to, and being operated by, the respondent Pacific Electric Railway Company, and brought this action against both-named defendants to recover damages. Judgment went for the defendants, and the plaintiff appeals.

Appellant has not furnished us with any general statement of the facts in this case, but counsel for the respondent Los Angeles Railway Corporation has taken pains to set forth a full account of all the incidents and occurrences connected with the injury of the plaintiff, which, by comparing with the testimony, we find to be so accurate as to justify our adopting the same as correctly presenting all the issues involved herein. We will not attempt direct quotation, but will follow the recital of facts therein set forth.

The injury to the plaintiff occurred at the intersection of Main and Seventh streets in the city of Los Angeles, being one of the busiest intersections in said city. Main street runs northerly and southerly; Seventh street runs easterly and westerly. Both streets are approximately 50 feet in width; that is, from curb line to curb line. On both streets are the tracks of said railway companies. At the time of the injury the respondent Los Angeles Railway Corporation was operating an electric car running in a northerly direction, while the respondent Pacific Electric Railway Company was operating a car running in a southerly direction. Both cars were being operated upon Main street and at the intersection thereof with Seventh street. The plaintiff, for something over three years, had conducted a place of business at number 332 Main street, and was entirely familiar with the intersection referred to, and had crossed the same several times daily for a period of three or four years. The crossing of the intersection involved was, at the time of the injury, controlled by traffic signals. This control related, however, only to vehicular traffic, including street cars.

Semaphores were used for controlling the movement of traffic. When traffic was moving east and west on Seventh street, the semaphores on the northeast and southwest corners of the intersection displayed at right angles to the flow of traffic a white sign marked "Go," while the semaphores on the southeast and northwest corners displayed at right angles to the flow of traffic north and south a red sign marked "Stop." Prior to a change in the direction of traffic, a bell would ring, and the semaphore marked "Go" for east and west bound traffic would drop, and a "Stop" signal would rise in its place. After an interval of ten seconds, the semaphore marked "Stop" for north and south bound traffic on Main street would drop, and a "Go" signal would be raised, this being the signal for traffic to proceed north and south. The ringing of a bell about ten seconds before a change in the direction of the traffic was given for the purpose of permitting vehicles and persons thereon moving in the then direction of the traffic allowed time to clear the intersection and also as a warning not to enter upon the intersection in the direction of the traffic about to be stopped. At the time in question the plaintiff was in perfect health, possessed good eyesight and good hearing, was active in body, and able to move about freely. The plaintiff, when at the intersection of Main street and Seventh streets, prior to executing his purpose of crossing Main street by going over the same in an easterly direction parallel with the south line of Seventh street, observed that there was standing on the north side of Seventh street a three-car Pacific Electric train bound south and on the south line of the intersection of Seventh street standing on Main street a north-bound Los Angeles car, both waiting for a change in the traffic signals, enabling the former to move in a southerly direction and the latter to move in a northerly course. The plaintiff, accompanied by one Richard Barnes, started across the intersection in an easterly direction along the south line of Seventh street, with the conditions existing as just set forth. Our attention has not been called to anything in the record showing that the plaintiff heard the ringing of the bell preceding a change of the semaphore signals, nor have we found anything in the record, nor has anything been called to our attention, indicating that the plaintiff before starting to cross the intersection waited, paid any attention to, or endeavored to ascertain whether the preliminary warning bell had been sounded. Without any reference to the preliminary warning bell, the plaintiff, walking along the side of Mr. Barnes, proceeded to the center of the street, and upon reaching that location, observed that the semaphores had been changed, giving the "Stop" signal to traffic moving easterly and westerly on Seventh street and the "Go" signal to traffic moving northerly and southerly on Main street. At that instant of time, the Los Angeles car, standing on Main street immediately south of the south line of Seventh street, sounded its gong or bell, indicating that the car was about to be started northerly, and thereupon the plaintiff and Mr. Barnes stopped in the space between the two car lines, that is, between the tracks on which the Los Angeles car was bound north and the tracks on which the Pacific Electric car was bound south. This space was 2 feet in the clear of the overhang of the steps on the respective cars, and 2 feet 8 inches in the clear of all other portions of the overhang of the respective cars.

It appears from the testimony that, after the Los Angeles car had sounded its warning bell, it remained standing for some seconds, giving sufficient time for pedestrians to cross the tracks upon which it was standing, in the event they so elected. The plaintiff and Mr. Barnes stopped and remained at the place stated. The motorman of the Los Angeles car observed where the plaintiff was standing, and moved his car forward very slowly. The motorman of the Pacific Electric train, upon the signal being given to proceed, immediately started, and propelled his train in a southerly direction along Main street past where the plaintiff and Mr. Barnes were standing. As this train was passing the plaintiff, the plaintiff either stepped backwards, or, as stated by Mr. Barnes, swayed backward, and was struck by some part of one of the cars of the Pacific Electric train, and was thrown under one of the wheels of that train. One arm was injured so as to necessitate amputation. Other minor injuries were also sustained. The testimony of the plaintiff touching this particular time is as follows:

> "While I was standing there, I knew that the two cars would pass each other with myself between them. I thought I was perfectly safe. I was standing right in the middle. I had seen one other man standing in the same place. I was dressed in an overcoat and heavy suit. I was in the middle, maybe too far there, but I was in the middle. I thought I was safe."

After the Los Angeles car rang its bell, it did not start immediately, but stood still for two or three seconds.

The testimony of Richard Barnes is to the effect that he stood by the side of the plaintiff 10 or 15 seconds after the warning bell was sounded by the Los Angeles car. This, however, would appear to be too long an estimate of the time. The Los Angeles car had just started when the Pacific Electric train came by. A passenger on an open section of the first car in the Pacific Electric train, looking out of a window, saw the plaintiff standing between the cars. This witness testified that, just as he saw the plaintiff, he seemed to be stepping backward or falling back toward the Pacific Electric train, or, as this witness called it, "the red car," and that the red car struck the plaintiff; that the plaintiff stumbled for three or four steps, and then fell under the car.

The motorman of the Los Angeles car testified that when he arrived at the intersection the semaphores were set against him; that he took on a discharged passenger, and waited for several seconds before the first bell rang indicating a change in traffic, approximately ten seconds, and, when the semaphores changed, he rang his bell, and started slowly; that he noticed the plaintiff standing between the tracks, and was watching him to see that he did not make a movement; that he had his car under control so that he could stop within a foot or so; that, after passing the plaintiff, he paid no further attention to him.

Mr. Barnes, who was standing by the side of the plaintiff, testified that there was plenty of room between the two cars; that he had stood between the cars often, and had never been hurt. It also appears that there is sufficient space between the tracks to accommodate traffic policemen at the intersection of all the tracks on Seventh and Main streets for cars to pass by them safely.

The testimony of the motorman of the Pacific Electric train was that his train was being propelled at a rate of speed of about seven miles per hour. There is also some testimony in the record to the effect that the speed was in excess of that stated by the motorman. We find no ordinances set forth in the record, nor is our attention called to any testimony showing the fact, but it appears to be conceded, and the cause was tried upon the theory, that the ordinances of the city of Los Angeles limited the speed of said cars at the intersection named to 6 miles per hour.

After the entry of judgment, the plaintiff moved for a new trial supporting his motion by an affidavit. The motion for a new trial being denied, the plaintiff appeals and sets forth four grounds for reversal: (1) That the defendants were guilty of negligence as a matter of law; (2) that the verdict is unconscionable, and can only be sustained on the theory that there was an unfair jury, etc.; (3) that the court erred in striking out the whole of an affidavit instead of only the objectionable parts of the affidavit filed by the plaintiff in support of his motion for a new trial; (4) that the court erred in its instructions and in withdrawing the question of the last clear chance from the consideration of the jury, and in the refusal of certain instructions.

It appears to be conceded upon argument that, at the time in question, the ordinances of the city of Los Angeles contained nothing regulating the crossing of intersections by pedestrians; that the traffic signals did not apply to them. Under such circumstances, it is simply a question of whether the jury was justified in concluding that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in assuming the responsibility of crossing the intersection under the conditions which we have hereinbefore set forth, and then stopping at the place where he did stop, and thereafter in not maintaining a place of safety, which he might have maintained, and which is shown to be possible by the fact that the witness, Mr. Barnes, who accompanied him, remained in a position of safety, and was untouched by the passing cars, and this irrespective of whether one of the defendants was or was not guilty of negligence, unless such defendant had a last clear chance of avoiding injuring the plaintiff, and should have taken a course different from that which was pursued. Our attention has not been called to anything in the record tending to indicate that the motorman of the Los Angeles car had anything to do with the injury of the plaintiff, or that he would not have been injured had the Los Angeles car remained perfectly stationary until after the Pacific Electric train had passed by. It appears that all of the parties knew, and there is sufficient in the testimony to show that the jury were justified in concluding, that all of the parties knew that, if the plaintiff remained in the center between the two tracks, he would not be injured.

[1] The testimony of the motorman of the Pacific Electric train is to the effect that he did not see the plaintiff. Whether he saw the witness Barnes, who was standing between the tracks near the plaintiff, the record does not disclose. This fact, however, does eliminate from the cause of action against the Pacific Electric Company the doctrine of the last clear chance, and, as we have said, in so far as the Los Angeles Railway Corporation is concerned, the operation of its car does not appear to have had anything to do with the injury sustained by the plaintiff. There seems to be no departure from the doctrine that the principle of the last clear chance is based upon the fact that the defendant actually knew of the danger of the plaintiff; that the plaintiff would not probably be able to extricate himself from such danger; and that the defendant had an opportunity to avoid the accident, and therefore is responsible, if the available opportunity is not accepted and acted upon. Tucker v. United Railroads, 171 Cal. 702, 154 P. 835; Haber et al. v. Pac. Elec. R. R. Co. (Cal. App.) 248 P. 741, and cases there cited. It may be stated that physical possibility of escape is not essential for the application of the doctrine of the last clear chance, but the actual peril of the party injured must be observed, and the peril from which the injured party would not probably be able to escape by the exercise of ordinary care. As we have shown by the facts detailed, the doctrine of last clear chance is not applicable as against either of the defendants, and the case resolves itself into one where the jury was justified in concluding that the plaintiff's negligence contributed to his injury, even though it be admitted that the Pacific Electric Railway Company was guilty of negligence in propelling its train across the intersection at a speed in excess of 6 miles per hour.

[2] In addition to what has been said, the plaintiff testified that he had many times seen said cars passing each other at that intersection, with policemen standing between them, and also that he had many times, or as he used the expression, "lots of times," seen people standing in the space between the tracks as the cars would pass each other. If it be admitted that the motormen were negligent, one seeing him (the plaintiff) and the other one not seeing him, the conclusion cannot reasonably be escaped that the plaintiff was also negligent, as the circumstances show he voluntarily placed himself in the position which he assumed between the two tracks. We are presented with the argument that the plaintiff was hemmed in between the two passing cars. An analysis of the situation, however, demonstrates that this assumption is unfounded. The plaintiff was under as much obligation to safeguard his own welfare as were either of the defendants, and therefore, if the steps or measures reasonably to be taken by the plaintiff were at hand to avoid the peril, if peril there were, it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to avail himself of such means of escape. The testimony to which we have referred, and the maps introduced in evidence, show that the Los Angeles car, before the change in the position of the semaphores permitting progress, was stopped on Main street south of the south sidewalk line of Seventh street, and that the front of the Pacific Electric train was north of the north line of Seventh street. The clear distance between the two trains was between 80 and 90 feet; the Los Angeles car was 50 feet in length. The plaintiff was standing to the right of the witness Barnes. There was nothing between the plaintiff and the south end of the Los Angeles car. The testimony shows that the plaintiff was where he could observe the movements of both cars; that he saw the change in the semaphore signals, and, if he did not care to elect to remain in the space between the two tracks, he had but to go to the southward 50 feet to enable him to step to the rear of the Los Angeles car. His own testimony is that he remained there several seconds before the Los Angeles car started, long enough to have permitted him to have walked the 50 feet. Again, after the starting of both trains, the respective distances over which the Pacific Electric train had to move and the distance to be covered by the plaintiff show that the plaintiff might have escaped by walking southward and stepping behind the Los Angeles car, which was moving northward. In doing this, even though the Los Angeles car had been standing still, assuming that he moved only at the rate of 5 miles an hour, which any ordinary pedestrian can do without special effort for a few seconds, and which the testimony in this case as to the physical condition of the plaintiff, which we have hereinbefore set forth, leads to the conclusion that he was amply able to do, the plaintiff had an opportunity to remove himself from the space between the tracks before the arrival of the Pacific Electric train. The electric train to overtake him would have had to travel at least 130 feet while the plaintiff was covering a distance of 50 feet. Had the plaintiff moved at the rate of only 5 miles an hour, to overtake him, with the Los Angeles car standing still, the Pacific Electric train would necessarily have had to move at the rate of a trifle over 13 miles per hour.

[3, 4] The testimony of the motorman on the electric train was that he was running at 7 miles per hour. Other witnesses testified to a higher rate of speed. The jury had a right to accept the testimony of the motorman, and had a right also to take into consideration the various statements of the speed of the electric trains given by the different witnesses, and to conclude that the Pacific Electric train was not running at such a rate of speed as to preclude the reasonable opportunity to the plaintiff to walk to the south end of the Los Angeles car and to step further away from the moving Pacific Electric train, if he so desired. In estimating and determining the speed of the electric train, the jury had a right to take into consideration the fact that the noise and rumble of the moving of a three-car train does to a certain extent accentuate the idea of speed entertained by many people, and that the testimony of such witnesses may not be so reliable as the testimony of a motorman, who is accustomed to study speed in order to make the schedule upon which his train is being operated, and this notwithstanding the fact that the motorman may be classed as an interested witness. In view of all these matters, we think the jury was justified in coming to the conclusion at which it must have arrived in finding a verdict for the defendants; that, if negligence existed, the plaintiff himself was chargeable with contributory negligence, which proximately led to his injury, and also the jury was justified in coming to the conclusion from all the facts which we have narrated that the plaintiff was solely responsible for his injury. We do not need to cite authorities that one cannot venture across the street at an intersection carrying such a large volume of traffic as the one in question without taking reasonable precautions for his own safety, both as to the time of leaving the sidewalk line and during the entire period that he is upon the intersection. The coming of the automobile has added to the dangers incident to the use of city streets, and these dangers, coupled with the ordinary street car traffic, leads to the conclusion, irrespective of any street ordinances regulating the crossing of streets by pedestrians, that pedestrians are not taking the reasonable precautions to insure their own personal safety, when they do not pay attention to the preliminary gongs or bells warning all users of the streets that the course of the traffic is about to be changed, and that the semaphores permitting the change in the direction of the traffic are about to be reset. If all these precautions to safeguard intersections are not observed, especially by one in possession of all his normal faculties of sight, hearing, and locomotion, it cannot be said that the finding of the jury, which implies the negligence of such a one, is against the evidence.

[5] The duty of the motorman to protect the plaintiff, and the duty of the plaintiff to protect himself, are reciprocal; that is, it is as much the duty of the plaintiff to protect himself as it was the duty of either of the motormen involved in this case. Sheldon v. James, 175 Cal. 474, 166 P. 8, 2 A. L. R. 1493, and cases there cited. In the case of Bailey v. Market Street Railway Co., 110 Cal. 320, 42 P. 914, a case involving injuries by passing cars, the Supreme Court has practically decided the questions we are here considering, in a case involving injuries to a person who was standing in the space between two street car tracks, who stepped backward and was injured. The recital of the facts, so far as necessary to illustrate the point in that case, is as follows:

> "A west-bound Castro street cable car of defendant was approaching, and, as the seats thereof on the northerly side seemed occupied, while the front seat on the southerly side was vacant, they crossed over the north track upon which their car was approaching, and stood in the space between the two tracks, to do which there was sufficient room. Plaintiff's escort faced the east, and signaled the Castro street car to stop, which it did. Plaintiff, in the meantime, intent upon the approaching west-bound car, failed to see an east-bound car upon the other or southern track, and unconsciously, and without looking, stepped back upon that track, and was struck by an east-bound street cable car, knocked down, and severely injured."

It was held that the plaintiff was negligent and not entitled to recover, and the court comments upon the fact that plaintiff was standing between the two tracks where there was room for her so to do, and that her stepping backward was the cause of her injury. This case has been cited a number of times, and always with approval. What we have said demonstrates that consideration of plaintiff's second alleged ground for reversal is unnecessary.

[6] The affidavit, the striking out of which is alleged to be error, and constituting appellant's third ground alleging cause for reversal, appears to be based wholly upon information and belief. We find nothing therein set forth as facts founded upon the knowledge of the affiant. The affidavit used on motion for a new trial is too long to be set forth herein, and, as we read it, it does not state sufficient cause for granting a new trial, even though the trial court had allowed it to remain as a part of the record. Being all based upon information and belief, the discretion of the trial court in refusing to set aside the verdict of the jury upon such an affidavit would not be disturbed upon appeal. Gay v. Torrance, 145 Cal. 144, 78 P. 540; Lamberson v. Superior Court, 151 Cal. 458, 91 P. 100, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 619. Other cases might be cited, but these cases set forth the rule concerning affidavits setting forth only information and belief. It may be here stated that the appellant has presented neither argument nor any authorities in support of his allegation that the court erred in striking out the objectionable affidavit.

[7] Appellant also urges that the court erred in limiting his voir dire examination of jurors. The transcript, however, shows that the examinations and questions asked the prospective jurors, in sustaining objections to which it is alleged the court erred, reveals the fact that the questions were not propounded for the purpose of laying the foundation for a challenge for cause, but were asked simply for the purpose of enabling the plaintiff to determine whether he would or would not desire to exercise peremptory challenges. That such an examination is not permissible is definitely settled by the case of People v. Edwards, 163 Cal. 752, 127 P. 58. See, also, 15 Cal. Jur. p. 433.

[8] None of the instructions asked for by the appellant and refused by the court are set forth in the transcript, which fact, of course, eliminates this portion of appellant's fourth alleged reason for reversal. As to the instructions given, the appellant alleges the court instructed the jury that "pedestrians must yield right to street cars, and this regardless of plaintiff's inability to do so because of being hemmed in between two cars." We have read every word of the instructions given by the court, and there is absolutely nothing in the record justifying such assertion. If made through proper motives, we can only attribute the appearance of the statement in appellant's brief to a failure on the part of counsel to correctly read or interpret the instructions given by the trial court to the jury. If made from any other motives, we may here state that such a course is useless, as we are accustomed to read the instructions given to the jury by trial courts in order to ascertain for ourselves just what has been set forth as the law applicable in the case being considered.

At the request of one of the defendants, the court gave to the jury the following instruction:

> "If you find that the car of either defendant was managed by the motorman in charge of it in the same manner as an ordinarily prudent man, under the same circumstances as was the said motorman, would have managed said car, then I charge you that your verdict must be for that defendant."

And, at the request of the plaintiff, the following instruction was given:

> "If the plaintiff was standing in the space between the tracks in front of the street cars, the motorman in charge of each car was in duty bound to see him, if, in the exercise of ordinary care, he could see him, and, if he did not see him when in the exercise of ordinary care he could have seen him, then that motorman was guilty of negligence."

It is urged that the latter instruction is inconsistent with the former, and therefore that the jury necessarily was misled. No objection to the first instruction herein set forth is pointed out, and we do not perceive any. As to the latter instruction, we doubt its applicability under the facts as disclosed by the record. It is more favorable to the plaintiff than he was entitled to. It would convey to the jury the idea that the plaintiff was in front of the said cars in question, which is not the case. He was in the space between the tracks, and in a space over which neither car ran, and could not be said to be in front of either car, in the sense of being where he would be necessarily run over by a car running either north or south.

[9] Appellant cannot complain where the instructions are more favorable than the facts warrant. Wood v. Moulton, 146 Cal. 317, 80 P. 92; Byrne v. Western Pipe & Steel Co., etc. (Cal. App.) 253 P. 776. No other objections are specifically pointed out, but we may state that a study of the instructions reveals that the trial court gave a very clear and comprehensive statement of the law applicable to all the facts involved in this case.

[10] The jury in this case returned a sealed verdict, and then was allowed to separate. Upon the reconvening of court, and before the verdict was opened, the foreman of the jury asked permission for the jury to retire for five minutes before the verdict was rendered. This, however, the jury was not permitted to do. The verdict was then rendered by the jury in favor of both defendants. Upon the jury being polled, all of the jurors answered that such was their verdict. The foreman then handed to the court a letter signed by himself setting forth that the jury considered the accident unavoidable, and contained a request that the defendants should recognize a moral obligation to compensate the plaintiff. This letter, of course, signed by the foreman, and which he wished to present to the other jurors before the verdict was read, furnished nothing upon which the trial court could take any action further than to disregard the same, and does not constitute any basis for a reversal of the judgment entered in this case.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

The charge against the defendant Bucknall was dismissed by the court upon motion of the district attorney.

It has become the custom on New Year's day of each year to hold a festival of flowers in the city of Pasadena, known as the Tournament of Roses. It is viewed by thousands, many of whom are willing and anxious to pay for seats from which to watch the parade. In the early part of December, 1925, the appellant here secured from the building department of the city of Pasadena four permits to erect four grand stands for the accommodation of these spectators. All of them were constructed along similar lines. The one erected at Colorado and Madison avenues collapsed. Many people were injured; some were killed, including one Mrs. Bessie Borich, for whose death the jury held the appellant responsible. The type of construction used may be stated to have been of the stepladder type—the seats and seat stringers corresponding to the steps and their supports, and the underpinning or columns corresponding to the rear braces of the ladder—in other words, the columns consisting of 4 x 4 timbers ranging from a few feet in length to approximately 20 feet were inclined forward from the perpendicular at an angle of about 2 feet in 18. They were not all inclined at exactly the same angle, and this difference in inclination tended to throw unusual stresses upon some of them. It is not questioned but that sufficient uprights were used (they were set approximately 4 feet on center in each direction), had they been properly placed and braced. It is made to appear that the transverse bracing consisted of one 1 x 6 board nailed to the sides of the uprights and resting upon the mudsills, which mudsills were not continuous, but consisted of various lengths—some of them carrying one post only, some carrying 2 or 3 posts. The longitudinal bracing, principally upon the rear, consisted of 1 x 6 material nailed in the shape of an X from top to bottom, the X covering 4 or 5 posts. Sporadic longitudinal bracing was also used on some of the inside uprights. The uprights were beveled where they were toenailed to the bottom of the seat stringers, but were not beveled to rest upon the mudsills—the edge of the upright only bearing thereon. Much of the lumber had been used before, some of it in grand stands in previous years, some of it had been purchased from a contracting firm which had used it as form material to set concrete. The testimony established the fact that many of the nails were not driven home, but were left to protrude from one-eighth to more than one-quarter of an inch. Defendant contended that these were superfluous nails put in after sufficient had been driven home. The testimony also showed that many box nails or nails smaller in diameter than the common nails had been used even in places where strain would be applied. There was a mudsill in front of the stand upon which, without beveling, rested the seat stringers. In front of the seat stringers there was nailed to the mudsill a 1 x 3 strip—and then in front of the mudsill were driven 2 x 2, 2 x 3, and some 2 x 4 posts, placed about 3 or 4 feet apart and driven into the ground somewhere about 14 inches. The 1 x 3 strip on the mudsill and the stakes in front were, according to the defendant, intended to carry the forward thrust of the stand caused by the inclination forward of the upright posts. Some of the testimony shows that the forward thrust per seat stringer, if loaded with 1,000 people (and it was actually loaded to capacity with 975 at the time of the accident), would be about 800 pounds, and that the resistance of the stakes in soft ground such as this ground was testified to be, would be less than half that force. The ordinance of Pasadena respecting grand stands calls for construction capable of sustaining a live load of 125 pounds to the square foot, with a safety factor of 4, or a load of 500 pounds. Had the safety factor of 4 been used in computing the forward thrust per seat stringer, it would be in the neighborhood of 3,200 pounds per seat stringer. The test employed in this instance was to load one section (4 feet by 4 feet in area) of the stand with sacks of cement, which would place upon this particular section a load somewhere between 250 and 300 pounds per square foot. The stand collapsed with a load of approximately 50 pounds per square foot. This test was conducted under the supervision of the defendant Bucknall, against whom the charges were dismissed.

Many expert witnesses called by the plaintiff and several occupants of the stand testified that the stand slid forward, tearing out some of the stakes and ripping off the 1 x 3 strip on the mudsill, and after it had slid a distance of 8 or 10 feet, buckled or jacknifed, throwing the occupants to the bottom in the mass of broken timber. The defendant contended and he had one occupant testify that he heard a cracking and noticed that the stand sank down in one place until the ends of the seat stringers kicked over the 1 x 3 strip on the mudsill and slid forward. From this the defendant argues that there was a soft spot in the earth, made by filled ground in an old cellar which had been under a residence formerly upon the property, the recital of which causes us to add to the facts already recited the fact that defendant did not make an investigation into the character and firmness of the soil before building, nor make any excavations for the mudsills other than sufficient to permit them to rest flat upon the ground. Other facts will develop as we proceed, but the foregoing is sufficient for a proper understanding of the points raised by this appeal.

[1] The appellant first complains of the admission in evidence, over defendant's objection, of testimony showing injuries to persons other than the deceased, Mrs. Borich, and of the cries, shrieks, and groans of the people in the stand immediately after its collapse. This testimony was admitted by the trial court on the theory that it constituted a part of the res gestæ. The offense charged is what has generally been known as "involuntary manslaughter" or a case—

> "where death results unintentionally, so far as defendant is concerned, from an unlawful act on his part, not amounting to felony, or from a lawful act negligently performed." 1 Whart. Crim. Law (8th Ed.) § 305.

The principal questions in determining the guilt or innocence of the defendant were, first, Was the stand negligently constructed or was it constructed unlawfully or in violation of the ordinance? Second, Did death result from the unlawful or negligent act? It is important to have these main questions, which may be denominated the main transaction, in mind in determining whether the testimony admitted was part of the res gestæ because we find that declarations which would otherwise be hearsay, or evidence of another offense which would not otherwise be admissible under any other exception, would be competent, if constituting a part of the res gestæ. In order, however, that they may come within the rule, it is necessary that they possess the following characteristics:

> "First, they must have been uttered contemporaneously with and grow out of the act upon which they have a bearing so as to be spontaneous and not narrative; second, they must qualify, illustrate, explain, or unfold its character or significance, so as, third, to be connected with it in such a manner that the declaration and the act form a single and indivisible transaction." Underhill's Crim. Evidence (2d Ed.) § 93.

It will be observed, therefore, that the acts and declarations admissible as a part of the res gestæ depend largely upon the character of the crime, or, as said by the same author, section 95:

> "The main question is, Are they relevant to, and do they explain and illustrate the facts of the transaction in issue? In other words, can we learn from them something of the motives or intention present in a relevant act."

Tested by these questions it is apparent that injuries or the extent of injuries suffered by other parties who were present in the grand stand could throw no light either upon the character of the construction, or upon the question as to whether faulty construction was responsible for the death of Mrs. Borich. If the stand were negligently or unlawfully constructed, the defendant would have been guilty of the offense charged if such construction resulted in her death, regardless of injuries to other persons and regardless of their spontaneous utterances of pain. Undoubtedly, such testimony would have great effect upon the sentiments and would tend to arouse the indignation of the jury. We conclude therefore, that the testimony admitted was not to be considered a part of the res gestæ, and it was error to admit it as such.

[2] The remaining two points urged by appellant as reasons for the reversal of the judgment may properly be considered under one head. They consist of 23 utterances by the trial judge and numerous instances where he took to himself the task of examining witnesses, which, appellant says, conveyed to the mind of the jury the impression that the judge was convinced of the guilt of the defendant and that his sympathy was wholly with the prosecution. No assignments of error were made at the time of the occurrences by defendant's counsel, and no opportunity given to the court to right the wrong done, if such it was. We are not unmindful of the rule which requires some effort to be made in the trial court to prevent and to correct such errors when they occur. But there may be instances, and this is one of them, where such effort would be entirely fruitless; no retraction sufficient to undo the harm; and the effort made might result in further error. Further, it is evident from the attitude of the trial judge, as shown by the record, that any assignment of misconduct would have been disregarded. Counsel for the appellant, by making an assignment, would have brought upon himself further attack. People v. MacDonald, 167 Cal. 545, 140 P. 256; People v. Derwae, 155 Cal. 593, 102 P. 266; People v. Frank, 71 Cal. App. 575, 236 P. 189. It would extend this opinion beyond any reasonable bounds to treat each assignment separately, many of which, while perhaps not strictly in keeping with judicial language and discretion, were not of that irremediable nature except when considered as a part of the whole, and therefore we shall consider only a few instances. D. Z. Gardner, a member of bar, was permitted to testify on behalf of defendant as an expert on construction. During the examination of Mr. Gardner the following occurred:

"A. By the court: Let's put it this way, Mr. Gardner: From your experience as a builder and contractor of about 8 years, obtained 34 years ago, would you say that the stand in question was constructed in a safe and workmanlike manner? A. Absolutely so.

"Q. What happened to it, do you know? A. I know it fell down. But—

"Q. That is all. You have answered the question. A. Yes. I don't think it is hardly fair when the question has been—

"Q. Now, you are not here to say whether a question that is asked is fair or not, and—A. I understand, your honor.

"Q. * * * The fact that you are an attorney of the court and an officer of the court makes it all the more wrong for you to attempt to make such a statement as that, and if it occurs again I shall hold it a contempt of court, just as I would do with anybody else who is insulting or doesn't show the proper respect for the court. Now, you are here as a witness to answer questions. A. I understand. I want—

"Q. Never mind what you want. You are here to answer questions, and when you have answered the questions close your face after you have answered the question, and don't let me hear any more remarks of that kind. If you do, you will be up here in a structure that will bear a whole lot more weight than any grand stand is intended to bear."

Shortly after this occurrence and immediately preceding an afternoon recess of the court, the following statement was made by the trial judge:

"Well, I guess we had better take the afternoon recess, ladies and gentlemen; we don't want to tire our noted expert out."

After Mr. Gardner was permitted to testify as an expert, his testimony should have gone to the jury unimpaired by the comment of the court thereon. Realizing the eagerness with which juries grasp the suggestions of the trial judge, we can appreciate the fact that no weight would be attributed by them to his testimony after the remarks just quoted. On more than one occasion the trial judge asked the witness, in referring to the grand stand, "What happened to it?" as though the fact that it had fallen satisfied his mind tht it had fallen by reason of negligent construction, eliminating the possibility of a latent defect, which due care and circumspection may not always guard against. And to further accentuate his belief, when questioning one witness regarding the three stands which did not fall, asked the following question:

"You think the mercy of Providence might have had something to do with it?"

Under our present system, judges are not permitted to comment upon the evidence or its effect. They cannot be too careful or cautious lest they by word, look, or inflection of the voice bring to bear upon the jury an influence not compatible with an unbiased verdict of the jury. People v. Williams, 17 Cal. 142; People v. Matthai, 135 Cal. 442, 67 P.

694, and People v. Frank, supra. In addition to the foregoing misconduct of the trial judge, we deem it proper to instance the following: The counsel for one of the defendants had objected to a question. The witness on the stand had commenced an answer, when counsel for the other defendant interposed an objection also. The record then proceeds:

> "The Court: The witness had not finished her answer, so I could not very well rule on the objection, not knowing what the witness' answer is going to be until she finished. And I will instruct counsel not to interrupt the witness again when she is making an answer. Make your objection when the witness finishes the answer or move to strike it out when she has finished, but don't interrupt the witness. Show the witness the common courtesy of allowing her to finish her answer.
> "Mr. ——: Well, but, your honor—
> "The Court: Now, that is all I want to hear from you. I expect a witness in my court to be treated with ordinary gentlemanly courtesy, and it is going to be done.
> "Mr. ——: I will be very glad to do that, your honor, of course.
> "The Court: Very well; see that you do."

Upon a similar occasion, when another witness was on the stand, the judge said to defense counsel:

> "The witness had not finished his answer. He will be allowed to finish his answer, and if there are any more interruptions some one is going to suffer for it."

The record also shows the following, the questioner being the counsel for one of the defendants:

> "Q. * * * Mr. Kelly, as chief of police in Pasadena, are you an insurer against crime?
> "The Court: Oh, you don't need to answer that question, Captain. That is too utterly silly to require an answer.
> "Q. * * * As head of the department?
> "The Court: Now, that question * * * you know is not a proper question. I am willing to allow a lot for ignorance, but some questions pass the bounds, and that is one of them."

The same witness was examined by the counsel of defendant Bucknall as to the latter's reputation. The record shows:

> "Q. He is a man who bears a good reputation in Pasadena? A. Excellent. * * *
> "Q. For his truthfulness? A. Yes, sir.
> "Q. Honesty? A. Yes, sir.
> "Q. Integrity? A. Yes, sir.
> "Q. By the Court: And chastity? A. Yes, sir.
> "The Court: We might as well get them all in."

While the same witness was on the stand, the prosecution inquired whether the lumber formerly in the wrecked stand had been changed in its condition after removal from the place where it fell. Upon objection being made by both counsel to certain questions, the judge said to one of them:

> "You don't want the officer to testify he slept on it, do you?"

During the direct examination of a witness for the prosecution, one of defense counsel started to say something. Then:

> "The Court: Wait just a minute. I think Mr. —— is laboring with an objection."

A little later the same situation presented itself, when this occurred:

> "The Court: Just a moment. Mr. —— is a little bit slow in getting started, so we will have to give him a little chance to make his objection. Go ahead, Mr. ——, I can always tell from the motions you are making there is an objection about to come forth.
> "Mr. ——: Yes, your honor.
> "The Court: Now you have passed through the preliminary pain, give birth to it."

On another occasion the judge said of one of the counsel for the defense:

> "The Court: Well, Mr. —— has made that objection so many times that I think he ought to have it sustained at least once. * * * I don't want him to be utterly without hope of having that objection sustained some time during the trial."

One of defense counsel objected to the introduction in evidence of certain photographs. After a colloquy over the question whether it was necessary to call as a witness the photographer who took them, the following occurred:

> "The Court: Well, it seems to me it is an idiotic objection, to be frank about it. All right, bring the photographer here, since they seem to want to make you a little more trouble. Do you want them to bring the camera here?
> "Mr. ——: No.
> "The Court: You want him to bring the same shoes he had on when he took the picture? How about the gum he was chewing? Do you want him to pick that up again? Just about as sensible. I haven't much patience with an objection which is made just for the purpose of making objection, when there doesn't seem to be a scintilla of sense in making them. A proper objection I have absolute respect for, of course. If a witness testifies a picture absolutely delineates that which he is testifying to, that certainly ought to be sufficient without insisting that the man who did the actual act of pressing the bulb be brought in to testify he pressed the bulb to the camera to take the picture."

While a witness for the defense was being cross-examined by the district attorney, this took place:

> "Q. * * * Are you a carpenter or a laborer? A. Why, I am a carpenter.
> "Q. By the Court: Belong to the carpenter's union? A. No, sir.
> "Q. By a Deputy District Attorney: Well, I thought you said in answer to his question that you had been working either as a laborer or carpenter, or was I mistaken?

"The Court: You are not one of those scabs, then, some of the witnesses have referred to as connected with this work? A. Carpenter. I used to work at labor sometimes when I was a boy."

The owner of the property upon which the collapsed stand was constructed was a witness for the prosecution. After he testified to the consideration paid him for the use of the property and had said that he was on the stand at the time of the collapse:

"Q. By the Court: You had two broken legs of your own in addition to that, didn't you? A. I had two broken legs. Q. That was a premium outside of the other consideration you got?"

One of the counsel for the defense objected at one point:

"These questions are leading.

"The Court: Oh, I don't care if they are. That is an awful trivial objection, unless the question puts the answer directly in the mouth of the witness, but when you are questioning a man who is qualified as an expert I don't see any necessity of consuming about five times the time that is necessary by beating around the bush. You might as well go right at the point and ask about the fact we are interested in."

[3] We have presented sufficient to show a state of affairs which trial judges should not permit, and which may be pointed to as an example of what they should not do in the trial of lawsuits. If they will lend themselves to such methods, if they will so intemperately espouse the cause of the prosecution in criminal cases, no man charged with a penal offense is safe, whether he be guilty or innocent. Every defendant under such a charge is entitled to a fair trial on the facts, and not a trial on the temper or whimseys of the judge who sits in his case. Whatever the degree of guilt of appellant here, those who know the circumstances surrounding his conviction are likely to feel that the verdict resulted from the conduct of the judge and not from the evidence.

[4] We have next to determine whether or not the errors found to exist in the record are of such a character, under the entire evidence, as to demand or warrant a reversal of the judgment. It is with great unwillingness, considering the extreme nature of the misconduct of the trial judge, after a studious scrutiny of the entire transcript that we say that the defendant was undoubtedly guilty, and therefore no miscarriage of justice has resulted from the errors committed by the trial court. Section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution unquestionably relates to each particular case as it arises, and not to the harm done to the cause of administering justice. We therefore begrudgingly say that the construction of the grand stand was such that even to the nontechnical mind (the mind not trained in the strength and support of materials or the directions of applied force) it is established beyond doubt that, when the stand was filled to capacity, a tremendous load would be thrown in a forward direction by reason of the inclination of the upright supports; that, in order to overcome this forward thrust, it would be necessary to use more than an ordinary amount of transverse bracing in order to tie the parts together; and that this stand was insufficiently and negligently braced. Again, it would seem obvious that the test employed in this instance was no test at all for the reason that the load being applied only to one section would be distributed over the entire structure. There was no substantial evidence of any latent defect, therefore, when the stand fell with one-tenth of the load required by the safety factor of the ordinance, it is obvious that the stand was not completed as required by the ordinance, but in violation thereof. Assuming that it fell by reason of the filled ground testified to by defendant's witnesses, the mudsills were not of the character sufficient to distribute the weight beyond the soft earth, as is required by a circumspect and careful construction, and, furthermore, the defendant freely admitted that he had not made that cautious inspection of the supporting earth required where human beings are to be seated. He, further, freely admitted the fact that he had put up a large sign indicating that any one using the grand stand did so at their own risk. We can hardly imagine why this notice was given unless the defendant had reason to apprehend a catastrophe. The plaintiff called numerous witnesses, who had been technically trained in the stresses and strains involved in construction work and the strength and support of material, all of whom concurred in the opinion that the stand was insufficient to carry a load of 975 people. The witnesses called by the defense in this respect were carpenters who had not received a technical education so far as the record discloses, and the expert witness Gardner, the record discloses, had done some carpenter work about 34 years prior to testifying, therefore we conclude that without the error complained of the jury could have done nothing else than to bring in a verdict of guilty, and that there is no evidence of a miscarriage of justice, as required by section 4½ of article 6 of the California Constitution.

This opinion should not be completed without calling attention to the fact that the error complained of in the admission of testimony respecting the injuries and the extent of injuries of other persons in the stand is largely minimized by the fact that defendant's counsel (and counsel who prosecute this appeal did not represent defendant at the trial) brought out similar evidence in his direct examination of his own witnesses, and that one of his expert witnesses testified that the stand was insufficient to carry the load.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

BANKS v. PANN et al. (Civ. 5288.)★

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 23, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 19, 1927.)

1. Appeal and error 🔑1011(1)—Trial court's finding on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

Finding of trial court, sustained by substantial evidence, will not be disturbed on appeal, where evidence is sharply conflicting and would have sustained contrary finding.

2. Sales 🔑384(7)—Seller's damages on buyer's rejection of oranges held difference between contract price and market price at breach, notwithstanding seller received more than market price; "resale"; "value to seller" (Civ. Code, §§ 3049, 3311).

Where, on buyer's refusal to accept cars of oranges tendered, seller diverted oranges to fill a previous order at a price greatly in excess of the then market value held that seller's measure of damages was difference between contract price and market value at time of breach under Civ. Code, § 3311, and not, as contended by buyer, the difference between price actually received and contract price; there being no "resale" within section 3049, "value to seller" within section 3311 meaning market price or market value.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Resale; Selling Value.]

3. Sales 🔑382—Admitting testimony of president of corporate buyer of oranges rejected by buyer as to grades and brands held not error.

In seller's action for buyer's breach in rejecting cars of oranges, reception in evidence of deposition of president of corporation which bought one of cars and who showed familiarity with grades named, and handled the car in question as to grades and brands of oranges, held not error as against objections that no foundation was laid, and irrelevancy, incompetency, and immateriality.

4. Appeal and error 🔑1050(1)—Admitting testimony of office manager of wholesale dealer who bought oranges rejected by buyer over objection of lack of foundation held not reversible error.

In seller's action for buyer's breach in rejecting cars of oranges, admission in evidence of testimony, by deposition, of office manager of wholesale fruit dealer who bought several cars from seller, as to grade and quality of cars in dispute, over buyer's objections that no foundation was laid showing his qualifications to testify, held not reversible error, notwithstanding failure to clearly show nature of his duties as office manager, where he testified that he knew of particular cars involved.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Action by Llewellyn A. Banks, doing business under the firm name of the Citrus Growers' Cash Association, against W. P. Pann and the Angeles Brokerage Company. Judgment for plaintiff against defendant last named, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

G. P. Adams and W. W. Orme, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

L. M. Chapman and Ward Chapman, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PARKER, Justice pro tem. Defendant Angeles Brokerage Company, a corporation, appeals from a judgment against it, and brings here for review the judgment and the order of the lower court denying its motion for a new trial.

This is a suit by the seller in a contract of sale of citrus fruit against the buyer for damages growing out of the refusal on the part of the buyer to take and pay for the fruit. The trial court found in favor of plaintiff and against defendant corporation, and assessed damages in the sum of $1,945.05, and thereafter defendant corporation presented its motion for a new trial on all of the statutory grounds, and said motion was denied. It might be here noted that no judgment was given against defendant Pann.

It is admitted (and is indeed the basis of the action) that in March of 1919 plaintiff agreed to sell and defendant agreed to purchase 10 carloads of San Fernando Valencia oranges of specified grades and sizes. As a particular specification, the fruit sold on the contract was to be free from frost. It is further admitted that, in pursuance of the contract, plaintiff did tender to defendant certain cars of fruit, and that defendant refused to accept the same.

On the determination of breach of contract, but one question is presented; namely, was the fruit tendered of quality and grade sufficient to meet the requirements of the contract?

Passing questions that incidentally arise, both plaintiff and defendant agree that, if the fruit tendered was thus sufficient in grade and quality, the refusal of defendant to accept constituted an actionable breach of the contract.

Plaintiff presented evidence that the fruit tendered met in all respects the requirements of his obligation, and that it was delivered at a time and place conformable to the contract and to the orders of defendant. Defendant, on the other hand, offered evidence to the contrary, tending to show that in no manner, either as to grade or sizes or freedom from frost, did the fruit measure up to the contracted specifications. On this issue the trial court found in favor of the plaintiff.

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

Appellant argues, somewhat convincingly, that this finding is against the evidence, and lacks facts sufficient to sustain it.

[1] After a careful analysis of the evidence, we feel that the record presents a sharp conflict and that the findings of the trial court on the fact of breach of contract should not be disturbed. The conflict of evidence is indeed sharp, and it presents a case where, had the trial court determined the fact in favor of defendant, there would have been abundant foundation for the finding. This, however, does not justify any interference by this court, much less demand it. It would seriously disturb our entire judicial system if appellate courts were to become triers of fact and attempt to make nice distinctions as to credibility of witnesses and the weight of testimony. It needs no authority to support the rule that this court will not disturb a finding of fact by the trial court where there is substantial evidence to support it. A recent example is the case of Johnston et al. v. Field et al., 254 P. 269, decided by the Supreme Court in bank March 10, 1927.

[2] The next question, however, is not so easily disposed of. Appellant contends that, even if it did breach the contract, the trial court's finding as to damage is not supported by the facts, and that the method of assessing the damage to plaintiff was erroneous.

Here it becomes necessary to briefly outline the facts forming the basis of the trial court's conclusion. Plaintiff is engaged in the business of packing and shipping oranges. The record discloses that in March of 1919 he had secured orders for cars of fruit to be shipped to Eastern points, and the prices to be obtained therefor were as of the March market. From March or thereabouts the market began to weaken, which tendency continued until in August of the same year the market price of oranges had declined at least $1 a box. The plaintiff had procured fruit sufficient to fill all of his orders, including the order on the contract here involved. When the oranges were tendered to appellant and by it refused, without reason (as herein determined), the respondent diverted the fruit to fill one of these previous orders receiving therefor the contract price, which was greatly in excess of the then market value or market price. Appellant strenuously urges that the measure of his liability should be the difference between the price actually received on these shipments as made and the price which appellant had agreed to pay. Respondent, in turn, as strenuously argues that the measure of his damage is the difference between the contract price and the market value at the time of breach.

It is conceded, as indeed it must be, that, in ordinary cases when the buyer refuses to proceed with performance, and when the title has not passed and the property has not been resold pursuant to section 3049 of the Civil Code, the measure of damages is the excess of the amount due from buyer under the contract over the value to the seller, together with excess expense of marketing. Section 3311, Civ. Code. The term "value to seller" is construed as meaning market price or market value. Hill v. McKay, 94 Cal., at page 18, 29 P. 406, 409. It is further conceded in this case that title remained in the seller.

A mere reading of the facts as hereinbefore detailed will suffice to indicate that there was no resale of the goods pursuant to section 3049. Whatever may be contended with reference to the general rule that one is bound to use all reasonable means at hand to minimize his damage, it is rarely applied in cases of this sort where the measure of damages is provided by statute. Here the seller's damage was determined at the time of breach. The mere fact that he was able to exchange the fruit and ship the same in place and stead of other fruit at a price contracted for months before and at a then more advantageous market does not inure to the benefit of defendant. As far as defendant is concerned, what difference can it make to him whether the damages are predicated upon any particular car of oranges in the absence of a showing of a market affected by the difference? We are dealing here with goods of a perishable nature, and the record discloses that respondent had ample fruit other than that tendered appellant to fill all of its orders. To accept appellant's theory would be to hold that the respondent packing company should have taken the fruit offered, and at the risk of deterioration and loss sought a market and held back the other fruit belonging to it, and eventually end up with a surplus on hand undisposed of and a cause of action against no one for the loss occasioned by appellant's breach. We are of the opinion that the trial court properly accepted section 3311 as determining the measure of damage and properly applied said section to the facts before it. See, also, Gopcevic v. Cal. Packing Co., 64 Cal. App. 132, 220 P. 1078.

Appellant further presents as ground of appeal the alleged error of the trial court in denying its motion for a new trial.

[3] Aside from urging the grounds hereinbefore disposed of appellant cites certain errors in the admission of testimony.

Respondent, on the question of the quality of the fruit, presented, in the form of depositions, the testimony of two witnesses. The first witness, whose deposition was read, was one William C. Edwards, a resident of New Jersey. He testified:

> "I am president of W. T. Mullikin Company, a corporation, of Philadelphia. That I purchased oranges from respondent. I know of a car shipped said corporation in September, 1919. We handled that car. We bought the car."

He was then asked to state the brand and grade under which said oranges were packed; whereupon appellant objected on the ground that no foundation had been laid and on the grounds of irrelevancy, incompetency, and immateriality, which objection was overruled. Witness was then asked if the quality was up to the brand and grade. The same objection was interposed with the same ruling. However, before ruling, evidence was offered by another witness to show that the firm of Mullikin & Co. had purchased hundreds of cars of oranges from respondent in the 6 years preceding, almost always shipped under same brands.

Appellant urges the further objection that the testimony of the witness that he was president of the corporation at the time of deposition did not indicate that he had any connection with the company prior to the time of deposition.

We see no serious error in the ruling of the trial court. The witness showed a familiarity with the grades named and handled the car in question. The effect of his testimony was that the car in question measured up to the brands and that the brands indicated a certain quality. It was apparent from the record that the firm had been familiar for years with these brands and quality, and received and handled the car in question in the regular course of business.

[4] The next witness was one named F. F. Buckmaster. He was office manager of John Amecin Bros. Company of Columbus, Ohio. John Amecin Bros. Company bought several carloads of oranges from the respondent. This witness was called upon to testify as to the grade and quality of some of the cars in dispute. The appellant objected on the ground that no foundation was laid showing the qualifications of the witness, and particularly in view of no showing that he had ever seen the fruit. Here it was shown that Amecin Bros. Company had been customers of respondent for 12 years. The court permitted the witness to testify over the objections of appellant as to the grades and brand of the fruit, and also that the fruit was of a quality up to the grade indicated by the brand and was free from frost.

The witness testified with reference to each car that he knew of that particular car. Appellant claims that this indicated only that he might have heard of the car and never had any connection therewith. We are satisfied, however, that he was understood to mean that he knew the car referred to in the course of his business. Just what might have been his duties as office manager should have been more clearly set forth. It is probable that an office manager might be, and usually is, removed entirely from the actual handling of the fruit or other goods sold. However, it is easy of presumption that his duties involved the general business of his firm and that he would be intimate with their business affairs. He would presumptively know if fruit was handled by his firm under certain brands or grades and as of a certain quality and whether or not difficulty had been encountered.

However, conceding that the foundation for his opinion was not sufficiently laid, we do not deem the error in the instant case of such a serious nature as to compel a new trial even in the face of the sharp conflict in the evidence. Moreover, the witness did qualify to a certain extent by showing that his business was a wholesaler of fruits and produce. That naturally would give him some knowledge of the subject of his testimony. The case was tried without a jury, and the testimony objected to came in by deposition. The record does not disclose in what manner the depositions were taken, but in the briefs of counsel it seems to be conceded that they were taken upon interrogatories submitted to the adverse party. While it may be true that, as in this case, the adverse party is under no legal obligation to cross-interrogate to determine the competency of a witness or to cross-interrogate at all, nevertheless we come back to the main function of counsel, namely, to aid and enlighten the court. Incidentally, in reviewing an appellant's claim of wrong, we look at the wrong done him as well as a contended deviation from rule.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER P. J; CASHIN J.

ARCHER v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA, IN AND FOR CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (Civ. 5771.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. March 16, 1927.)

1. Mandamus ⚷172—In considering judicial order, appellate court is not bound by phraseology of order as written, but may consider all facts (Code Civ. Proc. § 1909).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1909, relating to effect of judicial orders in proceedings for writ of mandate to compel court to hear motion, in considering court's order denying hearing appellate court was not bound by phraseology of order as written, but could consider all the facts.

2. Divorce ⚷165(1)—Where petitioner moved to vacate interlocutory decree for divorce, if no legal objection existed, court's duty was to take and exercise jurisdiction.

Where petitioner presented motion to vacate and set aside interlocutory decree of divorce, if no legal objection existed, it became trial court's duty to take and exercise jurisdiction by hearing and determining.

3. Courts 🔑1—"Jurisdiction" of court is power to hear and determine.

"Jurisdiction" of a court is power to hear and determine.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Jurisdiction (of Courts).]

4. Mandamus 🔑4(1)—That order was appealable did not prevent petitioner from maintaining proceeding for writ of mandate, where remedy by appeal was inadequate (Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 2).

That order denying hearing on motion to vacate interlocutory divorce decree was made after petitioner could have appealed from decree, and as such the order was appealable, under Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 2, relating to orders which are appealable, did not prevent petitioner from maintaining writ of mandate to compel court to hear motion, where remedy by appeal was inadequate.

5. Divorce 🔑262—Court could not deny hearing on motion to vacate divorce decree because movant was in contempt.

Court could not decline to hear motion to vacate and set aside interlocutory divorce decree on ground that movant was in contempt for failure to pay maintenance theretofore ordered.

6. Mandamus 🔑31—Where court denied hearing on motion to vacate divorce decree because movant was in contempt, movant held entitled to writ of mandate compelling hearing.

Where court declined to hear motions to vacate and set aside interlocutory divorce decree because movant was in contempt for failure to pay maintenance theretofore ordered, movant held entitled to writ of mandate to compel court to hear motion.

Application by Clayton Archer for writ of mandate to be directed to the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the City and County of San Francisco, T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge, to require respondent to hear motion to modify interlocutory decree of divorce. Writ granted.

Willis C. White and Russell W. Cantrell, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Peter tum Suden and Richard tum Suden, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. This is an application for a writ of mandamus directed against the superior court requiring it to hear a motion modifying an interlocutory decree of divorce. The respondents were served with an alternative writ, and they appeared and filed a general demurrer. From the petition it appears that Adelphia Archer commenced an action against this petitioner, Clayton Archer, to obtain a divorce. The husband was served with summons and complaint, but did not appear and answer. Thereafter, on the 7th day of June, 1926, an interlocutory decree of divorce was granted to the plaintiff. By the terms of that decree it was held that the wife was entitled to a decree of divorce on the ground of the husband's intemperance; that the wife should have the custody of the minor children; that the wife is entitled to $200 per month maintenance; that she is also entitled to one-half of the household furniture and to an undivided one-half interest in certain real and personal property, and to $250 counsel fees and $25 for costs; that on the 10th day of September, 1926, on the application of plaintiff, an order to show cause was issued directing the husband to appear and show cause why he should not be punished for contempt; that the hearing on said order was continued from time to time until the 6th day of December, 1926; that on the 17th day of November, 1926, this petitioner served and filed papers to the effect that on the return day of the order to show cause the petitioner would move the trial court that the interlocutory decree of divorce should be vacated and set aside, because at the time the plaintiff filed her complaint in divorce she had not acquired a statutory residence in San Francisco of three months immediately preceding the commencement of the divorce action; that the hearings of petitioner's motion were regularly continued, and the hearing of said motions and of the order to show cause both came on for hearing on the 6th day of December, 1926; that, when the case of Archer v. Archer was called, the attorney of the petitioner arose and addressed the court regarding the motions which the petitioner had noticed for that day and hour; that the attorney for the plaintiff arose and interrupted his opponent, and proceeded to state the facts regarding the order to show cause which he was ready to present, and also interposed the objection that the defendant should not be heard, as he was in contempt; that the judge of the trial court and the respective attorneys carried on a short conversation regarding the facts; that in that conversation it transpired that all of the moneys had not been paid, and then the trial court, among other things, announced: "Until he (defendant) does show some evidence of good faith, I will not listen to his motions, and you may consider them as denied at this time. I will continue the hearing of the order to show cause until December 8, 1926, at 11:45 o'clock a. m., and, unless the defendant at that time is in a position to make a substantial payment, I will send him to jail"; that thereupon the courtroom clerk entered a minute order: "Motion to be relieved under section 473, C. C. P., denied; order to show cause continued to December 8, 11:45 a. m."; that on the 8th day of December, 1926, the order to show cause came on for hearing, and the defendant was adjudged guilty of contempt; that execution was stayed five days; that thereafter, on the 14th day of December, 1926, the petitioner appeared and paid the attorney for the plaintiff $200, and the trial court discharged the petitioner in the contempt proceedings; that thereupon the petitioner again moved the trial court to hear his motions; and that the trial court refused to hear the same, and continued the order to show cause until the 14th day of January, 1927; that thereafter the petitioner applied to this court for the writ of mandamus.

[1-3] The respondents quote passages from the petition to the effect that when the application of the petitioner was called for hearing that the trial court denied it. They then argue that there is nothing undone the performance of which could be directed by a writ of mandamus. As we are considering an order as distinguished from a judgment, we are entitled to take into consideration all the facts, and are not bound by the phraseology of the order as written. Code Civ. Proc. § 1909; Cahill v. Superior Court, 145 Cal. 42, 44, 78 P. 467; De La Beckwith v. Superior Court, 146 Cal. 496, 498, 80 P. 717; Herd v. Tuohy, 133 Cal. 55, 63, 65 P. 139. Having done so, it is clear that the trial court refused to act on the motions of the petitioner. When the petitioner offered to present his motions, if no legal objection existed, it became the duty of the trial court to take and exercise its jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of a court is power to hear and determine. In this case the utmost that can be said is that the trial court determined. The uncontradicted facts are that it did not hear.

[4] In the next place, the respondents argue that the order complained of was made after the defendant could have appealed from an interlocutory judgment, and as such the order was an appealable order, and that, as long as the petitioner had a remedy by appeal he was not entitled to maintain this proceeding. Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 2; Lindley v. Superior Court, 141 Cal. 220, 74 P. 765. If the point is good, it would apply with equal force in an application for a writ of review, or an application for a writ of prohibition, as well as an application for a writ of mandamus. Compare sections 1068, 1086 and 1103, Code Civ. Proc. In this connection it should be noted that, although the point was not raised that the petitioner's remedy was an appeal, a petition was entertained by the Supreme Court in an application for a writ of review (Suttman v. Superior Court, 174 Cal. 243, 162 P. 1032), and in a prohibition proceeding (McGuinness v. Superior Court, 196 Cal. 222, 237 P. 42, 40 A. L. R. 1110). Moreover, in Dell v. Superior Court, 53 Cal. App. 436, 200 P. 85, the identical point was presented to the court, and on page 439 (200 P. 86) the court said that the remedy by appeal was inadequate, and then added:

"While petitioner would upon an appeal be entitled to a reversal of the order, he could, by order of court, be compelled to supply his wife with the necessary means to enable her to resist the appeal, and likewise, under an order of court, compelled to pay his wife suit money and costs asked for in a futile prosecution of the second action instituted by her for divorce, as to all of which the law makes no provision for reimbursement."

See, also, Ophir Silver Min. Co. v. Superior Court, 147 Cal. 467, 479, 82 P. 70, 3 Ann. Cas. 340. The reasoning in the case of Dell v. Superior Court is directly applicable to the facts before us.

[5, 6] The respondents also contended that, when the trial court declined to hear the application of this petitioner because the petitioner stood in contempt, the ruling of the trial court and the reason assigned is supported by authority. 13 C. J. 91, § 139. The authority so relied on does not include any ruling by the Supreme Court of this state. The exact point has not been decided by that court.

However, questions similar to the one presented in the instant case have heretofore been presented to the Supreme Court. Its decisions thereon are of no help to the respondents, but are of help to the petitioner. Galland v. Galland, 44 Cal. 475; Johnson v. Superior Court, 63 Cal. 578; Winter v. Superior Court, 70 Cal. 295, 11 P. 633; Foley v. Foley, 120 Cal. 33, 39, 52 P. 122, 65 Am. St. Rep. 147; Manriquez v. Superior Court (Cal. Sup.) 251 P. 1118. The case last cited grew out of an action for divorce. The wife commenced the action and was awarded an interlocutory decree. The defendant attempted to move for a new trial. At that time he was in default in not having paid certain moneys due to his wife under and pursuant to an order theretofore made by the trial court. When the motion for a new trial was called for hearing, the trial court recited the fact that the husband was in contempt for having failed to pay the maintenance theretofore ordered, and thereupon the trial court ordered the motion for a new trial to be dismissed. The husband applied for, and was granted, a writ of mandamus requiring the trial court to restore the motion for a new trial to its calendar and to proceed to dispose of the same on its merits. See, also, State v. Clancy, 24 Mont. 359, 61 P. 987, 990.

The respondents cite and rely on Monterey Coal Co. v. Superior Court, 11 Cal. App. 207, 104 P. 585. We have carefully examined the citation and the authorities therein referred to. Comparing it with the cases cited above, and especially with the reasoning in Foley v. Foley, we do not find Monterey Coal Co. v. Superior Court to be controlling in the instant case.

For the reasons herein stated, we think that the writ should issue. It is so ordered.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

OTTEN v. RIESENER CHOCOLATE CO.★

(Civ. 5713.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 26, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 23, 1927.)

1. Contracts ⚷107—Contract founded on an act penalized by statute is void, whether statute so provides or not.

Where statute imposes a penalty for doing of an act, contract founded on such act is void, whether the statute expressly so provides or not.

2. Licenses ⚷39—Sale of corporate stock, violating conditions of corporation commissioner's permit, is void, and buyer may recover price (Corporate Securities Act, §§ 4, 14).

Where corporate stock was sold in violation of conditions of permit issued by commissioner of corporations, such sale being public offense, under Corporate Securities Act, §§ 4, 14 (St. 1917, pp. 676, 680), and impliedly prohibited, sale held illegal and void, and buyer may recover price on tendering return of stock.

3. Licenses ⚷39—Evidence held to warrant rescission of stock sale for violating condition of corporation commissioner's permit.

In action for rescission of sale of corporate stock and to recover price, evidence held sufficient to support finding that copy of sale permit issued by corporation commissioner was not exhibited to buyer as required by condition in permit.

4. Appeal and error ⚷994(3)—Acceptance by trial court of testimony not inherently impossible of belief held controlling on appeal.

Matters going to credibility of witness or apparent inconsistencies in his testimony are for trial court, and, where testimony is not inherently impossible of belief, its acceptance by trial court is controlling on appeal.

5. Licenses ⚷39—Notice of rescission of void stock sale held sufficient.

In an action for rescission of sale of corporate stock, void because of noncompliance with condition in commissioner's permit, notice of rescission, based on fraud and failure of consideration, held sufficient.

6. Licenses ⚷25—Corporation commissioner may require, as condition in stock sale permit, exhibition and delivery of copy of permit to each prospective subscriber (Corporate Securities Act, § 4).

Under Corporate Securities Act, § 4 (St. 1917, p. 676), authorizing issuance of permits for sale of corporate stock, corporation commissioner held to have power to impose, as condition of permit, that copy thereof be exhibited and delivered to each prospective subscriber.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by G. J. Otten against the Riesener Chocolate Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hankins & Hankins and O. F. Nuckolls, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Frederick Olds and Werner Olds, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

KNIGHT, J. The defendant corporation has appealed from an adverse judgment in an action for the rescission of a sale of corporate stock and for the recovery of the purchase price paid therefor. The complaint contained two causes of action, the first based upon alleged fraud and the second upon a void sale; it being alleged with reference to the latter that the sale was not made in conformity with the terms of the permit issued by the commissioner of corporations. The action was tried without a jury, the trial court finding that the sale was free from fraud, but was made contrary to the terms of the corporation commissioner's permit and was therefore illegal. Judgment in plaintiff's favor was thereupon entered for the repayment to him of the amount of purchase price, with interest.

The record discloses the following facts: Appellant was incorporated under the laws of this state in January, 1919, with a capital stock of 5,000 shares of the par value of $100 each, and on February 17, 1919, was granted a permit by the commissioner of corporations to sell 4,000 shares of its stock at par for cash, upon certain conditions specified in said permit and hereinafter referred to. About April 5, 1920, respondent, G. J. Otten, purchased 15 shares of said stock, paying therefor $1,500. At that time he was employed by appellant at its plant as temporary night watchman and continued in that employment for approximately six weeks. On November 18, 1920, he served notice of rescission of the sale and offered to return the stock upon the grounds of fraud and misrepresentation, and failure of consideration, and made demand for the return of the purchase price paid. Appellant refused to accept the return of the stock or to refund the purchase price, and as a result respondent, on April 5, 1921, commenced this action.

Among the other facts found by the trial court were the following: That the permit for the sale of said stock "had incorporated therein the following condition: 'This permit is issued upon the condition that a true copy thereof be exhibited and delivered to each prospective subscriber for, or purchaser of, said securities, before his subscription therefor shall be taken or any sale thereof made to him'—and that, at the time of the sale of said stock by the defendant and its officers and agents to the plaintiff, the said condition was not observed; * * * that a copy of this permit was never shown nor exhibited to the plaintiff by the defendant or its officers or agents, or any one else, nor a copy thereof given to plaintiff, either before or at the time of purchase of said stock or at any time thereafter."

[1, 2] Section 4 of the Corporate Securities Act of this state provides, in part, that if an application for the sale of stock is granted "the commissioner shall issue to the applicant a permit authorizing it to issue and dispose of securities, as therein provided, in this state, in such amounts and for such considerations and upon such terms and conditions as the commissioner may in said permit provide * * *"; and section 14 of said act declares that "every officer, agent, or employee of any company, and every other person, who knowingly authorizes, directs, or aids in the issue or sale of, or issues or executes, or sells, or causes or assists in causing to be issued, executed, or sold, any security, in nonconformity with a permit of the commissioner then in effect authorizing such issue, or contrary to the provisions of this act, or of the Constitution of this state, * * * is guilty of a public offense and shall be punished by imprisonment" or by a fine, or by both such fine and imprisonment. Stats. 1917, pp. 676, 680.

In the case of Smith v. Bach, 183 Cal. 259, 191 P. 14, it is held:

> "That where a statute prohibits or attaches a penalty to the doing of an act, the act is void, and this, notwithstanding that the statute does not expressly pronounce it so, and it is immaterial whether the thing forbidden is malum in se or merely malum prohibitum. A statute of this character prohibiting the making of contracts, except in a certain manner, ipso facto makes them void if made in any other way. 13 Cyc. 351; 13 Corpus Juris, p. 410. The imposition by statute of a penalty implies a prohibition of the act to which the penalty is attached, and a contract founded upon such act is void. This general rule finds support in the decisions of this state. Berka v. Woodward, 125 Cal. 127, 57 P. 777, 45 L. R. A. 420, 73 Am. St. Rep. 31, and cases cited; Bentley v. Hurlburt [153 Cal. 796, 96 P. 890] supra."

In the instant case, the trial court having found that the sale of said stock to respondent was made in violation of the terms of said permit, the act of selling constituted a public offense, as such offense is defined by section 14 of said act; and it follows under the authorities above cited that the sale was illegal and void, which entitled respondent to recover the purchase price paid upon tendering the return of the stock.

Appellant has presented considerable argument in its brief and cited a number of authorities in support of the contention it makes that under the provisions of the Corporate Securities Act "a failure to exhibit the permit (in violation of the terms thereof) does not make the issuance of the stock void." We think that question is not involved, it being the illegality of the sale of the stock and not the illegality of the issuance of the stock which justifies the judgment in respondent's favor for the return of the purchase price paid.

[3, 4] It is also urged that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding that a copy of said permit was not exhibited or delivered to respondent. With respect thereto the record shows that the finding mentioned is based upon respondent's testimony alone, the treasurer of said corporation, who negotiated the sale, having died about two years prior to the trial of the action; and appellant claims that respondent's testimony is "so contradictory, uncertain, evasive, and hazy to be unworthy of belief," and is therefore insufficient to overcome the presumptions of law that a person is innocent of a crime or wrong, and that the law has been obeyed. Subdivisions 1 and 33, § 1963, Code Civ. Proc. Matters going to the credibility of a witness, however, and to apparent inconsistencies in his testimony, are for the consideration and determination of the trial court, and, since the testimony of respondent cannot be said to be inherently improbable or impossible of belief, the acceptance thereof by the trial court is controlling on appeal.

[5] We find no merit in appellant's point relating to the asserted insufficiency of the notice of rescission, for, assuming that under the circumstances of a void sale the service of a notice of rescission is essential, the form and substance of the one served by respondent met all legal requirements, the rescission being placed upon the two distinct grounds of fraud and total failure of consideration.

[6] Nor can we sustain appellant's contention that it was beyond the right of the corporation commissioner to impose as a condition for the sale of the stock that a copy of the permit should be exhibited and delivered to each prospective subscriber, for there is no express limitation in the statute placed upon his power relating to the conditions he may impose; and he may in fact, under section 4 of said act, even deny the issuance of a permit in any form, if in his judgment the plan of business disclosed by the application does not meet the demands of the statute.

For the reason above stated, the judgment is affirmed.

McKEON v. SUPERIOR COURT, CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al.

(Civ. 5766.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 14, 1927.)

Divorce ⚷79—Jurisdiction held not obtained of defendant in divorce by publication of summons, in absence of order therefor.

No order for publication of summons in divorce action having been made, and no personal service having been made on defendant, and he not having appeared, though summons was published, jurisdiction of him was not acquired, and the judgments for plaintiff were void.

Certiorari by Michael T. McKeon against the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, and Thomas F. Graham, Judge thereof, to review judgment rendered in divorce action against petitioner. Judgments ordered annulled and set aside.

Herbert C. Kaufman and James A. Ballentine, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Gavin McNab, Nat Schmulowitz, and A. D. Duncan, all of San Francisco, amici curiæ.

E. B. Taugher, of Oakland, for respondents.

TYLER, P. J. Certiorari to review certain judgments of the superior court for lack of jurisdiction. It appears from the record that petitioner was a defendant in an action brought against him by his wife for divorce; that said action was filed on the 23d day of August, 1923; that an affidavit for publication of summons was made by plaintiff and that such summons was published; that the cause came on for hearing in July, 1924, in the absence of defendant, and that he was not represented by counsel; that on the 18th day of August, 1924, the superior court rendered an interlocutory decree of divorce severing the marital bonds uniting plaintiff and defendant, and awarded plaintiff the sum of $50 per month as alimony and certain real property situated in the county of Alameda. It further appears that on the 5th day of December, 1925, the superior court rendered a final decree embodying the same terms and provisions of the interlocutory decree, and this notwithstanding that no order for publication of summons was ever made by such superior court; that no personal service was made upon the defendant nor did he ever appear in the suit; that defendant was at the time of the commencement of the action a nonresident of the state of California; that the real property mentioned was never brought under the control of said court by any process; that petitioner first learned of the existence of the action on November 10, 1926.

Under these facts it is here claimed that the superior court never acquired jurisdiction of petitioner in the action of McKeown v. McKeown, and that it acted without and in excess of its jurisdiction in rendering the interlocutory and final decrees, and that the provisions of said decrees awarding plaintiff $50 per month alimony and the real property mentioned were void and without effect. It appears from the judgment roll in the action of McKeown v. McKeown that, while a summons was published, no order was ever made by the court directing such publication. It is true that a form of order appears in the judgment roll, but it was never signed by the judge. At the first hearing of this petition it was claimed by the attorney for respondent that the order for publication had in fact been signed. Time was given to respondent to correct the record in this respect, but he has failed to do so, probably due to the fact that the order was never signed.

Under the record, therefore, as it appears before us, it is manifest that respondent court had no jurisdiction to render the judgments here in question. As no order for the publication of summons was ever made, defendant in the action had never been served with process, constructive or otherwise. This being so, the judgments were rendered without jurisdiction, and they are therefore mere nullities, and they should be annulled and set aside.

It is so ordered.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Summerfield, Judge.

Suit by Eddie Van der Vliet against Georgia Van der Vliet for divorce. From an order modifying a final decree of divorce to give defendant part time custody of the minor children, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Milton K. Young, Lyndol L. Young, and William K. Young, Young & Young, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

James M. Gammon, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from an order of the superior court of the county of Los Angeles modifying a final decree of divorce. It appears that the parties hereto entered into an agreement on January 23, 1922, at which time they were living separate and apart, wherein and whereby it was agreed that the custody of their two minor children should be relinquished to and vested exclusively in the mother of the appellant herein. Subsequently, and on May 23, 1922, the appellant instituted this action for a divorce, and respondent suffered her default to be taken. The interlocutory decree entered in favor of the appellant was silent as to the custody of said children, the complaint not having requested relief in this respect. On October 31, 1923, a final decree of divorce was granted to the appellant, and thereafter, and on January 29, 1924, the respondent filed an affidavit looking to a modification of said final decree of divorce. After hearing, the trial court made an order modifying said final decree of divorce so as to give to the respondent herein the custody of said minor children on alternate week-ends and during one-half of the regular school vacation. This appeal was thereupon prosecuted and thereafter placed upon a special calendar of this court upon an order to the respondent to show cause why said order modifying the final decree of divorce should not be reversed, or that such order be made as might be meet in the premises. At the time of the placing of said cause upon said calendar, and the entry of said order, it appeared that the appellant's brief had been filed herein, but that no brief on behalf of the respondent had been filed, although the time for the filing of such brief under the rules of this court had long since expired. Upon the calling of said special calendar the order to show cause issued herein was submitted.

[1-3] The order of the lower court modifying the final decree of divorce so as to give the custody of the two minor children to the respondent at specified intervals of time finds support in the provisions of section 138 of the Civil Code. Applications for such modication of custody are addressed to the sound discretion of the lower court, and the conclusion it reaches will not be disturbed unless the record presents a clear abuse of that discretion. Black v. Black, 149 Cal. 224, 225, 86 P. 505; Crater v. Crater, 135 Cal. 633, 634, 67 P. 1049; Dickerson v. Dickerson, 108 Cal. 351, 353, 41 P. 475. The power of the trial court to vary or modify its decree in divorce proceedings as to the custody, care, and education of the minor children whenever it may seem to it necessary or proper is provided for by section 138 of the Civil Code, and the court is not required to award the custody of the children in conformity with an agreement of the parties as to the disposition to be made of said children. Black v. Black, supra; Anderson v. Anderson, 56 Cal. App. 87, 89, 206 P. 426. The children are not parties to the action for divorce, and the jurisdiction which the statute confers on the court to be exercised from time to time as changed conditions or circumstances may require, in protecting their interests, cannot be limited or abridged by the contract of the parties. Moreover, in her affidavit filed in the court below the respondent herein asserts that she did not understand the nature and effect of the agreement placing the custody of the children in their paternal grandmother. We are unable to say that the trial court abused its discretion in awarding the custody of the minor children of the parties to the respondent on alternate week-ends and during one-half of the regular school vacation.

The case of Sargent v. Sargent, 106 Cal. 541, 39 P. 931, cited by the appellant, is not in point. That case is properly distinguished in Black v. Black, supra, where it is said that—

> "The contract there under consideration was one relative to the custody of the minor child provided for in the articles of separation executed by the parents pursuant to section 159 of the Civil Code, which contract the court held binding and obligatory until avoided by the mutual resumption of marital duties, or the divorce of the parties, the court further declaring, however, that 'in the event of a divorce being granted * * * the question of the custody of the minor would be left at large for the disposition of the court, the same as if the contract had not existed.'"

For the foregoing reasons the order appealed from is affirmed.

1. Brokers 🔑54—Provision for commission on loan when consummated does not make consummation condition precedent to recovery of commission if lender able and willing was procured.

Agreement to pay commission for obtaining loan when loan is consummated does not make consummation of loan condition precedent to recovery of commission, but commission is earned when lender able and willing to loan money is produced.

2. Statutes 🔑114(1)—Provision of Usury Law relating to charges and expenses of loan brokers held invalid as not embraced within title (Usury Law, § 3; Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 112, and St. 1925, p. 600; Const. art. 4, § 24).

Provision of Usury Law (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii, § 3) that one charging commission of over 5 per cent. on secured loans of $1,000 or less, or over 3 per cent. on loans over $1,000, shall be guilty of misdemeanor, held invalid as violating Const. art. 4, § 24, requiring act to embrace but one subject to be expressed in title, where title was "act * * * relating to the rate of interest which may be charged" for loans, since such provision of statute relates to charges and expenses of loan brokers not included in title, especially in view of Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 112 and St. 1925, p. 600.

3. Usury 🔑111(2)—Court must sua sponte deny all relief to plaintiff suing under usurious contract (Usury Law).

Where it appeared that plaintiff's contract was illegal under Usury Law (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii), it is duty of court sua sponte to deny all relief, though such defense was not presented by answer or other pleading.

4. Statutes 🔑106(1)—Usury Law adopted by initiative method must embrace but one subject, which must be expressed in title (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii; Const. art. 1, § 22, and art. 4, §§ 1, 24).

Const. art. 4, § 24, requiring act to embrace but one subject to be expressed in title, is applicable to Usury Law (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii), notwithstanding that such statutes were adopted by initiative method under Const. art. 4, § 1, in view of article 1, § 22, providing that constitutional provisions are mandatory and prohibitory unless expressly declared to be otherwise.

5. Evidence 🔑5(2)—It is common knowledge that large number rely solely on title of initiative measure as guide to intelligent voting thereon.

It is common knowledge that initiative measure is originated by small group who circulate petition requiring signatures of only 8 per cent. of voters, that measure is then placed on ballot, and large number of population rely solely on title as guide to intelligent voting thereon.

6. Constitutional law 🔑5—Initiative measure is not in effect constitutional amendment.

Initiative measure is not in effect constitutional amendment and has no greater strength or dignity than attaches to any other legislation.

7. Constitutional law 🔑242—Usury 🔑5—Provision of Usury Law held invalid as discriminating between brokers' charges for secured and unsecured loans and discriminating with reference to loan for less than six months (Usury Law, § 3; Const. Cal. art. 1, §§ 11, 21; Const. U. S. Amend. 14).

Provision of Usury Law (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii, § 3) held invalid under Const. Cal. art. 1, §§ 11, 21, and Const. U. S. Amend. 14, as discriminating between charges of broker negotiating secured loans and same character of charges in negotiating unsecured loans, and as discriminating with reference to loans for less than six months.

8. Usury 🔑55—Transaction is usurious if lender secures greater than legal benefit, though such benefit be cloaked under guise of commission, bonus, or other name.

Where usury is pleaded, court will look to substance of transaction, and, if lender by any kind of device is securing greater benefit than that provided in law, contract will be held usurious, even though payment be cloaked under guise of commission, bonus or any other name.

9. Statutes 🔑64(2)—Invalid provision of Usury Law relating to charges and expenses of loan brokers held clearly severable (Usury Law, § 3).

Invalid provision of Usury Law (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii, § 3), providing that one charging commission of over 5 per cent. on secured loans of $1,000 or less, or over 3 per cent. on loans over $1,000, shall be guilty of misdemeanor, held clearly severable from the other portions of the act.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Edmund P. Mogan, Judge.

Action by R. Arthur Wallace against Oscar Zinman and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Leo H. Shapiro, George F. Snyder and Homer Lingenfelter, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

George L. Sanders, of Los Angeles, A. Ohanneson, of Fresno, and James M. Jefferson, amici curiæ.

Russell P. Tyler, of San Francisco, for respondent.

James S. Bennett and Emmet H. Wilson, both of Los Angeles, amici curiæ.

PRESTON, J. Plaintiff and defendants entered into the following written contract:

> "In consideration of you securing a loan for $7,500 subject to a bank loan of $13,000, interest 6%, on property situated on the northwest corner 5th Ave. and Fulton Sts., interest on $7,500 to be 10% per annum, loan to be paid on or before two years from date. Said loan to be flat ($7,500).
> "I agree to give you the sum of five hundred and sixty ($560) dollars and authorize Title Ins. Co. to pay said sum to you on deposit of said money on July 23, 1924, with the said Title Ins. Co., when said transaction is consummated on or before July 27, 1924.
> "Oscar Zinman,
> "S. A. Herzberg."

Plaintiff secured the loan and had the money deposited with the title company within the required time. He sued to recover for his services, and judgment in his favor was rendered by the lower court, from which judgment defendants have appealed.

The last clause of the contract, "when said transaction is consummated on or before July 27, 1924," was considered ambiguous by the trial court, and inquiry was made into the surrounding circumstances and understanding of the parties. It was agreed that this clause was added at the request of defendants when the paper was presented to them for their signatures.

Defendants testified its purpose was to negative any liability on their part in the event they should not consummate purchase of the property upon which the loan was to be a lien. Plaintiff testified that there was no such understanding, but that its purpose was merely to delay payment of his fee until consummation of the sale and not to make payment contingent upon that event. The sale was not consummated.

[1] In this conflict the trial court accepted plaintiff's testimony, relying upon the authority of Purcell v. Firth, 175 Cal. 746, 167 P. 379. In that case it was held that an agreement to pay a commission on a sale "when the sale is consummated" did not make consummation of the sale a condition precedent to recovery of the commission, but that the commission was earned when a purchaser able and willing to buy was produced regardless of whether or not the sale was ever consummated. We hold that the facts in the present case bring it within the rule announced in Purcell v. Firth, supra.

[2] Appellants, however, unyielding, have sought refuge in the initiative measure, commonly known as the "Usury Law," approved at the general election November 5, 1918 (Stats. 1919, p. lxxxiii); the provision thereof relied upon being as follows:

> "* * * Any person, company, association or corporation, who shall * * * ask, demand, receive, take, accept or charge more than an amount equal to 5% so actually loaned and secured in all sums of $1,000 or less, and 3% on all sums over $1,000 in full for all examinations, views, fees, appraisals, commissions, renewals made within one year from date of loan and charges of any kind or description whatsoever, except abstracts or certificates of title charges made under the Torrens Land Law or otherwise, in the procuring, making and transacting of the business connected with such loans, * * * shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be punished," etc. Section 3.

It must be admitted that the provision, if valid, was directly violated by the respondent's commission contract, in that it exceeded the maximum commission allowed on a loan of that character, and in such case the contract would be unenforceable and void. See Berka v. Woodward, 125 Cal. 119, 127, 57 P. 777, 45 L. R. A. 420, 73 Am. St. Rep. 31; Levinson v. Boas, 150 Cal. 185, 193, 88 P. 825, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 575, 11 Ann. Cas. 661; Smith v. Bach, 183 Cal. 259, 262, 191 P. 14; Firpo v. Murphy, 72 Cal. App. 249, 236 P. 968.

[3] And likewise in such case it would not be necessary to present such defense by answer or other pleading, but when the illegality of plaintiff's contract appeared, it would be the duty of the court sua sponte to deny all relief. Pacific Wharf, etc., Co. v. Dredging Co., 184 Cal. 21, 192 P. 847; Morey v. Paladini, 187 Cal. 727, 203 P. 760; Wise v. Radis (Cal. App.) 242 P. 90.

But respondent meets this claim of illegality by the countercontention that the said provision of the so-called Usury Law is unconstitutional and void in this:

That it is in direct violation of section 24 of article 4 of the Constitution, which provides:

> "Every act shall embrace but one subject, which subject shall be expressed in its title. But if any subject shall be embraced in an act which shall not be expressed in its title, such act shall be void only as to so much thereof as shall not be expressed in its title. * * *"

Also, that it violates section 11 of article 1, which provides:

> "All laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation."

Likewise section 21 of article 1, which provides:

> "* * * Nor shall any citizen, or class of citizens, be granted privileges or immunities which, upon the same terms, shall not be granted to all citizens."

And likewise is a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in that it denies to certain citizens the equal protection of the law.

We shall now discuss these various contentions. The title of the act is as follows:

> "An act, to be known as the usury law, relating to the rate of interest which may be charged for the loan or forbearance of money, goods or things in action, or on accounts after demand, or on judgments, providing penalties for the violation of the provisions hereof, and repealing sections one thousand nine hundred seventeen, one thousand nine hundred eighteen, one thousand nine hundred nineteen, and one thousand nine hundred twenty of the Civil Code and all acts and parts of acts in conflict with this act."

We are convinced that the intent of the act is not to limit the charge for "examinations, views, fees, appraisals, commissions, * * *" etc., made by the lender himself, but on the contrary the lender is to be denied all compensation or emoluments of every kind which will enlarge his return or profit on the loan beyond the maximum amount allowed by the act. The provision is intended to regulate the charges as to examinations, views, fees, appraisals, and commissions when made by a third person or persons as part of the expense in connection with a loan. In practically every loan there will be legal expenses for some one or more of the above enumerated items and, if reasonable, they, of course, will be allowed without tainting the transaction as usurious. But the plain intent of the act is to forbid to the lender any sum or sums whatsoever which might reach his pocket and thereby exceed the interest rate allowed by the act. In other words, it was intended by this act to deal solely with this class of charges when made by persons acting independent of the lender. In short, it is a provision to curtail the charges and expenses of loan brokers. This intent is made clearer by an examination of section 1691 of the Wisconsin Statutes of 1917, from which doubtless the draftsman of this provision gained his inspiration. The Wisconsin section contains language dealing exclusively with personal property loan brokers, which language is identical in many respects with the language employed in the act under consideration except that the draftsman of the act here before us omitted the very language necessary to make the provision applicable to the lender himself. In other words, the Wisconsin law provides:

> "Any person who, * * * shall ask, * * * in addition to the interest aforesaid * * * shall be guilty. * * *" Section 1691, subd. 3.

The omission of this language clearly evinces the intention to exclude the lender from any benefits whatsoever in connection with the loan, save and alone the maximum rate of interest allowed. Ornstine v. Cary, 126 Wis. 135, 105 N. W. 792, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 174, cited by counsel, upholds the validity of the Wisconsin act as it there reads, but, as we have noted above, our statute does not adhere to the language of the Wisconsin act.

When thus interpreted it is too clear for controversy that the subject-matter of the provision of the act here under consideration is nowhere referred to directly or indirectly in the title to said statute. The subject covered by the title is exclusively "usury." The subject covered by the provisions under consideration is charges and expenses of loan brokers. It will be noted that the regulation of the business of real estate brokers, which also covers loan brokerage contracts where real estate is given as security, is controlled by an act approved June 1, 1917, and amended May 27, 1919, and May 23, 1925 (Deering's Gen. Laws, 1923, part 1, p. 25; St. 1925, p. 600), which act has been declared constitutional and valid. Riley v. Chambers, 181 Cal. 589, 185 P. 855, 8 A. L. R. 418. In short, the subject referred to in this provision is so widely separated in meaning from the provision referred to in the title of this act that it has already become the subject of existing independent legislation.

[4] It may, however, be contended that inasmuch as this is a statute which was adopted by the initiative method provided for in section 1 of article 4 of the Constitution, said article 4, section 24, of the Constitution, relating to titles of statutes, is for that reason inapplicable thereto. We cannot, however, concede the efficacy of any such contention. Section 22 of article 1 of the Constitution reads:

> "The provisions of this Constitution are mandatory and prohibitory, unless by express words they are declared to be otherwise."

The purpose of this provision was before this court in Ex parte Liddell, 93 Cal. 633, 636, 29 P. 251. In that case, after giving a brief outline of the history of this character of legislation, the court said:

> "At the present time, however, the Constitutions of many states contain provisions similar to that quoted above. The object of the provision is to prevent legislative abuse—to prevent the passage of acts bearing deceitful and misleading titles. It is intended to protect the members of the Legislature, as well as the public, against fraud; to guard against the passage of bills the titles of which give no intimation to the members of the Legislature or to the people of the matters contained therein. Cooley's Constitutional Limitations (6th Ed.) 169."

The holding of this court as thus stated has not been departed from to any extent. Estate of Elliott, 165 Cal. 339, 344, 132 P.

439. See, also, People v. Y. Wong, 61 Cal. App. 497, 503, 215 P. 409; Watson v. Greely, 67 Cal. App. 328, 342, 227 P. 664.

[5] There can be no just reason assigned for holding that this provision is mandatory when applied to statutes passed regularly by the Legislature and at the same time inapplicable to statutes initiated by petition and passed by direct vote of the people. Every reason going to protect the public from imposition by undesignated matter in the title of an act of the Legislature obtains with like if not greater force to a measure that is to be voted upon by the people. It is common knowledge that an initiative measure is originated by some organization or a small group of people and they circulate a petition requiring the signatures of only 8 per cent. of the voters; that the measure is then placed upon the ballot and a large number of the population, not knowing what the context of the act is, rely solely upon its title as a guide to intelligent voting thereon. Speaking of the identical question before us, the Supreme Court of Oregon, in State v. Richardson, 48 Or. 309, 319, 85 P. 225, 229 (8 L. R. A. [N. S.] 362), said:

> "The validity of laws adopted at the polls must be determined like enactments by the legislative assembly, by the test of the Constitution as modified by the amendment thereto. Though the argument that a proposed measure must depend upon its own merits may not apply to acts initiated by petitions, a valid reason for requiring that the subject-matter of laws to be adopted or rejected at the polls should be stated in the title nevertheless exists. The majority of qualified electors are so much interested in managing their own affairs that they have no time carefully to consider measures affecting the general public. A great number of voters undoubtedly have a superficial knowledge of proposed laws to be voted upon, which is derived from newspaper comments or from conversation with their associates. We think the assertion may safely be ventured that it is only the few persons who earnestly favor or zealously oppose the passage of a proposed law, initiated by petition, who have attentively studied its contents and know how it will probably affect their private interests. The greater number of voters do not possess this information and usually derive their knowledge of the contents of a proposed law from an inspection of the title thereof, which is sometimes secured only from the very meager details afforded by a ballot which is examined in an election booth preparatory to exercising the right of suffrage. It is important, therefore, that the title to laws proposed in the manner indicated should strictly comply with the constitutional requirement."

[6] It has been urged, however, that an initiative measure in its effect is a constitutional amendment, and as constitutional amendments need not conform to the provision of the Constitution quoted above, this statute need not so conform to it. We are unable to accord any weight whatsoever to this contention. We do not recognize an initiative measure as having any greater strength or dignity than attaches to any other legislation. Throughout section 1 of article 4 of the Constitution a distinct line of demarcation is kept between a law or an act and a constitutional amendment. It is only another system added to our plan of state government by a permissive amendment to the Constitution, but it was at no time intended that such permissive legislation by direct vote should override the other safeguards of the Constitution. If an amendment of the Constitution were intended, the provision requires steps to be taken that will apprise the voters thereof so that they may intelligently judge of the fitness of such measure as a constituent part of the organic law. We have a state government with three departments, each to check upon the others, and it would be subversive of the very foundation purposes of our government to permit an initiative act of any type to throw out of gear our entire legal mechanism. Our common sense makes us rebel at the suggestion. This question has been before the courts of other states and the holding we here announce has been the holding there without exception.

People v. Prevost, 55 Colo. 199, 134 P. 129, was an action for mandamus, relator claiming that an initiative statute adopted by the people at the same election at which they adopted a constitutional amendment must itself be considered as a constitutional amendment and as such modify the amendment adopted by the people. In answer to this contention the Supreme Court of the state said:

> "In order to arrive at that conclusion, he contends that a statute relating to the publication of initiated laws, which was itself initiated and voted upon at the election in November, 1912, was a constitutional amendment, tho in form a statute. This measure was initiated as a statute, and submitted and voted upon as such. There was nothing in or about it that in any manner indicated that those who had initiated it, or the people who voted upon it, had a thought or a suspicion that it was a constitutional amendment or intended for one. * * * After claiming that the statute would have been unconstitutional if adopted, he contends that the measure, tho to all other appearances and indications a statute, was in fact a constitutional amendment. Reduced to its last analysis, the argument is this: If an initiated measure contravenes the Constitution, tho it is in form a statute, professedly intended as such, with nothing about it to indicate that it was intended for a constitutional amendment, nevertheless it is a constitutional amendment. Such a position cannot be maintained in reason or logic. To say that the people could thus, without intending to do so, and unwittingly, amend their Constitution is a proposition that carries with itself its own refutation. The only reasonable thing that can be said of a measure that in form and to all indicated intents and purposes is a statute which contravenes the Constitution is, not that it is a constitutional amendment, but that it is itself unconstitutional."

To the same effect, see State v. Becker, 290 Mo. 560, 235 S. W. 1017, 1021.

And in Galvin v. Board of Supervisors, 195 Cal. 686, 692, 693, 235 P. 450, our own court in principle disposes of this question, holding as follows:

> "The initiative amendment to the Constitution itself must be interpreted in harmony with the other provisions of the organic law of this state of which it has become a part. To construe it otherwise would be to break down and destroy the barriers and limitations which the Constitution, read as a whole, has cast about legislation, both state and local. For example, the Constitution provides in section 11 of article 11 thereof, that 'Any county, city, town, or township may make and enforce within its limits all such local, police, sanitary and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws.' This provision of the Constitution constitutes an inhibition against the adoption by counties, whether acting by means of the initiative or otherwise, of local laws and ordinances which are in conflict with general laws; and it was clearly not the intendment of the framers of the initiative amendment or of the people who adopted it to wipe out this salutary provision of the Constitution. Again, the Constitution, in sections 4 and 5 of article 11 thereof, provides as follows: * * * This grant of power to the Legislature to enact general and uniform laws relating to the matters referred to in the foregoing clauses of the Constitution constitutes in itself a limitation upon the power of counties, whether acting thru their regularly constituted legislative bodies or attempting to act directly thru initiative legislation, to adopt ordinances or regulations which would have the effect of destroying the uniformity in regard to such matters which the state Legislature by the enactment of general and uniform laws was required to create and maintain."

See, also, State v. Richardson, supra.

It may be said in passing that section 1197a of the Political Code throws no light upon the question before us, as this act could not have been intended to dispense with this requirement as to title.

We must therefore hold that the statute in question is subject to section 24 of article 4 of the Constitution, hereinbefore quoted, and that inasmuch as the provision here under consideration is an independent subject not referred to in the title to said act, so much of said act as comprises this provision is void.

[7] Moreover, this provision contains within itself destructive elements which also compel the conclusion that it is void. It purports to fix a maximum limitation on fees, commissions, and charges with respect to loans negotiated by the broker where such loans are secured within the meaning of that act, with no limitation fixed upon such fees, charges, and commissions when applied to brokers who aid in the negotiation and consummation of unsecured loans except the inhibition against any kind of charges when the loan is not secured by real estate and is to run for a shorter period than six months. In other words, it is plain there is discrimination between charges of brokers negotiating unsecured loans and the same character of charges in negotiating secured loans. There is likewise a discrimination with reference to loans where the period of the loan is less than six months, it being made a criminal offense to charge a commission of any kind on a loan running for a shorter period than six months unless the loan is secured by a mortgage upon real estate. It was for this very reason that the act of March 20, 1905 (Stats. 1905, p. 422), "an act fixing the rates of interest and charges on loans on chattel mortgages," was declared invalid, in that there was a discrimination between individuals in the same business by allowing a certain rate of interest to some and denying it to others. The court, considering said act, in Ex parte Sohncke, 148 Cal. 262, 268, 82 P. 956, 959, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 813, 113 Am. St. Rep. 236, 7 Ann. Cas. 475, said:

> "The business of loaning money is as much a part of domestic trade and commerce as any other legitimate business. There is no substantial reason why those who lend money in sums not exceeding three hundred dollars on chattel mortgages of upholstery, pictures, or works of art, pianos, organs, sewing-machines, safes, professional libraries, or office furniture or fixtures, instruments of surveyors, physicians, or dentists, printing presses, or printing material, should be limited in their charges and the business they do in that respect made less profitable than it otherwise would be, while they or others who lend on chattel mortgages upon instruments of a photographer, livestock, agricultural implements, equipments of livery stables, or other property allowed to be mortgaged by section 2955 of the Civil Code (Stats. 1905, p. 36, c. 40), and not enumerated in the act under consideration, or who lend upon pledges of any kind of personal property, or who lend in sums exceeding three hundred dollars upon any kind of security, should be allowed to exact any rate of interest or other charge which they can obtain from the borrower. It is a part of the same kind of business, and there is no distinction between the particular classes of persons or things affected by the act and those exempted from its provisions that will justify special legislation. It may be that such exorbitant charges should be absolutely prohibited, but, if so, the prohibition should be made general, and should extend to all who engage in the business as lenders on the one hand, and should protect all who are made the victims thereof on the other hand, without discrimination in favor of any."

There is no essential difference between a broker engaged in negotiating secured loans and one engaged in negotiating unsecured loans, and certainly no essential difference between a broker engaged in negotiating loans on real property and one negotiating loans on other classes of security. It may also well be contended that said provision discriminates without intrinsic or constitutional distinction between contenders in other departments of the brokerage business.

These discriminations are so plain that it requires but their statement to demonstrate that said provision is in violation of both sections 11 and 21 of article 1 of the Constitution of California, and also the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

These views render it unnecessary to give consideration to the further contention of respondent that the provision is invalid because of the previous decisions of this court in the line of cases known as employment agency cases, to wit: Ex parte Dickey, 144 Cal. 234, 77 P. 924, 66 L. R. A. 928, 103 Am. St. Rep. 82, 1 Ann. Cas. 428; In re Smith, 193 Cal. 337, 223 P. 971, and In re Boynton, 193 Cal. 782, 223 P. 972.

[8] In holding this provision to be a violation of the Constitution, we are by no means intending to indorse any subterfuge or plan by which the lender could or would secure to himself a greater amount of interest than that provided for by law. We recognize that in every transaction the court will look to the substance thereof and not merely to the form, and if, by any kind of device, the lender is securing a greater benefit than that provided in the law, the contract will be held usurious even though it be cloaked under the guise of a commission, bonus or other name. This has been made clear by our own court in the case of Blodgett v. Rheinschild, 56 Cal. App. 728, 733, 206 P. 674, 676, where the court quotes approvingly this language:

> " 'As a general rule, any benefit or advantage exacted by the lender from the borrower, whatever be its name or form, which, added to the interest taken or reserved, would yield to the lender a greater profit upon his loan than is allowed by law is deemed usury.' (39 Cyc. 971)."

See, also, to the same effect, Niles v. Kavanagh, 179 Cal. 98, 175 P. 462, 1 A. L. R. 831.

In other words, in holding that a legitimate third party broker in a loan transaction is not covered by this statute, we are not intending to in any wise aid or assist or countenance the lender in taking from the borrower any greater interest charge than that provided by law, whatsoever may be his method of so doing.

We concede no weight to the claim urged that this provision of the act was intended exclusively to allow a commission or bonus to the lender and to have no application to the third party, the broker. The views announced above compel a conclusion which is the reverse of this contention, and we hold that the provision was not intended to apply in any wise to increase the profit to the lender beyond the maximum rate of interest specified in the act.

[9] It may be said also in conclusion that the provision of the statute which has been successfully assaulted in this proceeding is clearly severable from the other portions of the act, and whether or not there may be other invalid provisions therein can be of no concern to the parties to this action.

Judgment affirmed.

6. Statutes 🔑225—Statutes in pari materia should be construed together.

Statutes should be construed in light of other existing legislation touching same subject-matter, and statutes in pari materia are to be construed together.

7. Licenses 🔑8(2)—Existing laws relating to issuance, sale, or negotiation of securities held not repealed by Usury Act (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii; Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Acts 652, 3814, 6386; Const. art. 12, § 23).

No existing laws relating to issuance, sale, or negotiation of securities now authorized or supervised by Corporate Securities Act, as amended (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 3814), Const. art. 12, § 23, Public Utilities Act, as amended (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6386), and Bank Act, as amended (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 652), was repealed, modified, or impaired by Usury Act (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii), which provided for express repeal only of Civ. Code, §§ 1917, 1918, 1919, 1920.

8. Usury 🔑83, 84—Corporation, municipal, and other public bonds may be sold at discount greater than legal interest without being usurious.

Corporation bonds and municipal or other public bonds have valid existence and transferable quality in hands of issuing corporation, and are subject to sale at market value, which may be at discount greater than legal interest without making them subject to taint of usury in hands of immediate purchaser.

9. Statutes 🔑64(2)—Invalidity of part of Usury Act as discriminating between loans on ordinary security and those on corporate or municipal bonds held not to invalidate remainder (Usury Law, § 3).

Invalidity of part of Usury Law (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii) § 3, as discriminating between loans on ordinary security and those on corporate or municipal bonds, held not to invalidate remainder of statute, since objectionable section is severable.

10. Usury 🔑35—Loan secured by corporate bonds is usurious if interest exceeds legal rate (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii).

Loan on corporate bonds as security calling for interest in excess of legal rate is just as usurious as loan on any other class of security, since provision relative thereto in Usury Act (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii) is unconstitutional.

In Bank.

Application of W. Washer for a writ of habeas corpus prayed to be directed to the Chief of Police of the City of Los Angeles to secure the release of petitioner from custody after conviction of violating the Usury Act. Writ discharged. Petitioner remanded.

Henry Haves, Chas. Greenberg, and Schweitzer & Hutton, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

J. M. Friedlander, City Prosecutor, and Vernon S. Gray, Deputy City Prosecutor, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

Laurance W. Beilenson, and Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, all of Los Angeles, amici curiæ.

PRESTON, J. Petitioner was convicted and imprisoned for violation of the statute known as the "Usury Act," the complaint alleging that he "did willfully and unlawfully ask, demand, receive, take, accept and charge of and from" certain individuals more than 12 per cent. per annum on a $7,000 loan "for the forbearance, use and loan of said sum of money; payment * * * being secured by an evidence of debt, to wit, a trust deed upon real property * * * and by a promissory note" executed in favor of petitioner.

The District Court of Appeal rendered a decision discharging the writ of habeas corpus and remanding petitioner to custody (In re Washer, 248 P. 1068), whereupon he again petitioned for his release from durance upon the ground, as hereinafter set forth, that the said Usury Law is unconstitutional and void.

[1] This contention requires a consideration of the statute approved by popular vote November 5, 1918 (Stats. 1919, p. lxxxiii), known as the "Usury Law" and particularly that portion of section 3 thereof which reads as follows:

> "And any person, company, association or corporation, who shall ask, demand, receive, take, accept or charge more than twelve per centum per annum upon the sum of money actually loaned for the forbearance, use or loan thereof, when the repayment of the money loaned shall be secured by a mortgage, trust deed, bill of sale, assignment, pledge, receipt or other evidence of debt, except corporation bonds, and municipal and other public bonds, upon property, real or personal * * * shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be punished for the first offense by a fine of not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than three hundred dollars, or by imprisonment not more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, and for each subsequent offense and conviction shall be punished by a fine not less than one hundred dollars nor more than five hundred dollars and by imprisonment not less than six months nor more than one year."

The storm center of attack is the portion thereof which, when paraphrased, reads:

> "And any person * * * who shall * * * charge more than twelve per centum per annum upon the sum * * * loaned * * * when the repayment * * * shall be secured by a mortgage, * * * or other evidence of debt, except corporation bonds, and municipal and other public bonds, * * * shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. * * *"

Petitioner contends that this provision of the statute violates article 1, section 11, of the Constitution of California, also article 1, section 21, thereof, and also the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in that it provides that a criminal penalty shall attach to any person, company, association, or corporation who shall exact more than 12 per cent. per annum upon a sum of money loaned and secured by any other class of security than corporation bonds, municipal or other public bonds, but as to the lender upon such last-mentioned securities no criminal or other penalty attaches for what amounts to the same act. In other words, the contention of petitioner is that there is no economic, intrinsic, constitutional difference between loans secured by corporate bonds or municipal or other public bonds and loans secured by other forms of security or collateral.

Respondent, however, urges that the clause should not be construed to mean that a lender on corporate or other bonds is in any different class from a lender on other security, but that it should be construed to mean that the corporate entities mentioned may negotiate and sell the bonds of their own issuance at any discount or rate of interest they may deem fit without incurring the penalty of the law. In other words, respondent would have us hold that the clause referred to means "evidenced by" and not "secured by" corporation bonds, etc. To be more specific, his contention is that the phrase should be construed as though it read:

> "Except a loan by a borrower upon corporation bonds, municipal bonds and other public bonds."

A careful research of the authorities and the statutes of the various states on usury convinces us that the draftsman of this measure had before him almost exclusively in his work the Wisconsin Usury Act (Wis. Stats. 1917, p. 1346), for we find section 1 of our Usury Act to be almost a perfect reproduction of section 1688 of the Wisconsin statute; also section 2 of our statute is practically a duplicate of section 1689 of the Wisconsin law. Indeed, the first paragraph of section 3 of our law finds its duplicate in the first paragraph of section 1691 of the Wisconsin law, and undoubtedly paragraph 3 of said section 1691 of the Wisconsin law was the inspiration of the draftsman when he produced the provision now under consideration. The Wisconsin law in this behalf provides as follows:

> "Sec. 1691, par. 3. And when the payment of the money loaned shall be secured, or purport to be secured, or claimed by the payee of said loan to be secured, by chattel mortgage, bill of sale, pledge, receipt or other evidence of debt upon chattel goods or property, or by assignment of wages, or by power of attorney to execute any such instrument on behalf of the borrower, whether any such instrument or the power given to execute the same, shall be valid or not, or whether any such instrument or power shall be fully executed or executed partly in blank, any person who, as principal or as agent for another, shall ask, demand, or receive, take, accept or charge, in addition to the interest aforesaid, more than an amount equal to seven per centum per annum of the original sum actually loaned for the time of such loan, on sums of a hundred dollars or less, nor more than four per cent. per annum of the original sum actually loaned for time of such loan, on sums over one hundred dollars, disregarding part payments and the dates thereof, but not to be computed for a period exceeding one year in any event, in full for all examinations, views, fees, appraisals, commissions, renewals and charges of any kind or description whatsoever in the procuring, making and transacting of the business connected with such loan, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. * * *"

A consideration of this provision shows that it refers to personal property loans and allows the lender on personal property not only the rate of interest provided with respect to other loans but also a further charge by way of commissions, examinations, fees, appraisals, renewals, etc. In other words, this provision of the statute was intended to control loans upon chattels and was not intended to make any distinction between secured and unsecured loans in any other respect. It is an appeal to the police power of the state for the regulation of pawnbrokers and other personal property brokers, a subject to which an appeal to the police power has been made in practically every state of the Union. Indeed, similar legislation is on the statute books in California and has been declared a proper subject for the operation of police power, and therefore valid. See Eaker v. Bryant, 24 Cal. App. 87, 140 P. 310; Levinson v. Boas, 150 Cal. 185, 88 P. 825, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 575, 11 Ann. Cas. 661; Ex parte Lichtenstein, 67 Cal. 359, 7 P. 728, 56 Am. Rep. 713.

It would appear, therefore, that the draftsman of the Usury Law statute in California undertook to broaden the provision respecting personal property loans so as to include secured obligations of all kinds on real and personal property except corporate bonds, municipal and other public bonds, without realizing that the preceding sections of the act fully covered secured loans. It should also be noted that the draftsman of our statute did not desire that the lender have any commission or other emolument that would enhance his interest charge and so created an independent provision respecting loan brokers which undertook also to limit their charges. This latter effort was held to have been invalid and abortive in Wallace v. Zinman, 199 Cal. —, 254 P. 946, this day decided. So the language of this exception and the connection in which it is found convinces us that the draftsman of the Usury Law of California, after grappling with his many problems, lost himself and with drawn sword was stabbing at imaginary enemies in the darkness when he inserted the clause now under consideration in the act.

[2-4] However this may be, we cannot escape the conclusion that by use of the phrase "* * * secured by a mortgage * * * or other evidence of debt, except corporation bonds, and municipal and other public bonds, * * *" is meant that no offense could be committed by a loan at any rate of interest, however large, upon such property as security. We find no difficulty in construing the preceding words, such as mortgage, trust deed, bill of sale, assignment, pledge, or receipt, to be in and of themselves evidences of debt in the broader sense of that term. We are mindful of the rules of construction which must bind us, which said rules are as follows:

> "Absurd or unjust results will never be ascribed to the Legislature and it will not be presumed to have used inconsistent provisions as to the same subject in the immediate context. The courts will be astute to avoid such results (Wells Fargo & Co. v. Mayor, etc., of Jersey City [D. C.] 207 F. 871). In the interpretation of statutes courts are not bound by grammatical rules, and may ascertain the meaning of words by the context. Cavender v. Hewitt, 145 Tenn. 471, 239 S. W. 767, 22 A. L. R. 755.
> " 'The mere literal construction of a section in a statute ought not to prevail if it is opposed to the intention of the Legislature apparent by the statute; and if the words are sufficiently flexible to admit of some other construction it is to be adopted to effectuate that intention. The intent prevails over the letter, and the letter will, if possible, be so read as to conform to the spirit of the act. "While the intention of the Legislature must be ascertained from the words used to express it, the manifest reason and the obvious purpose of the law should not be sacrificed to a literal interpretation of such words." Words or clauses may be enlarged or restricted to effectuate the intention or to harmonize them with other expressed provisions. Where general language construed in a broad sense would lead to absurdity it may be restrained. The particular inquiry is not what is the abstract force of the words or what they may comprehend, but in what sense they were intended to be used as they are found in the act.' Lewis' Sutherland on Statutory Construction (2d Ed.) § 376, p. 721." In re Haines, 195 Cal. 605, 613, 234 P. 883, 886.

But notwithstanding the liberality and flexibility of these rules, we are unable to put any different construction on this clause than the plain meaning afforded by the ordinary import of the words. To give the construction contended for by respondent, it is necessary for the borrower to make a loan to the lender and thus to twist the words out of joint to such length that the borrower while going on must meet himself coming back. We do not feel able to indulge the verbal gymnastics necessary to make the meaning out of this phrase contended for by respondent and therefore conclude that petitioner has properly construed its meaning. It is conceded that no intrinsic, economic, constitutional, or other reason exists for a discrimination between loans on ordinary security and loans upon corporate, municipal or other public bonds, and the provision must therefore be adjudged void as being in contravention of the above specified plain mandates of the Constitution.

[5] But, notwithstanding our view to the effect that the provision is discriminatory and void, we nevertheless would reach the same result for all practical purposes, if we adopted the construction contended for by respondent. In other words, we hold that sections 1 and 2 of the act are intended to cover secured as well as unsecured loans. The clauses are all-comprehensive in their meaning and no reason whatsoever exists for making a special provision respecting unsecured loans; therefore, if the clause in question were given the full meaning contended for by respondent, it would be at most nothing more than surplusage for it would have been previously covered by the provisions of sections 1 and 2. This provision would in that case be surplusage because the sale at a discount by corporate borrowers, such as corporations, municipal and other public corporations, of bonds of their own issue, is not, in our opinion, a loan within the meaning of the Usury Law and was never intended to be subject to the operation of any of the provisions of this statute. The sale of certain classes of corporate bonds is controlled by what is known as the Corporate Securities Act, approved May 18, 1917, together with its amendatory and supplementary provisions since that time (Deering's Gen. Laws, 1923, part 1, p. 1407, Act. 3814).

Municipal bonds and bonds of other public corporations are authorized by special provisions of the statute or Constitution, are first voted by the people, residents of the territory included, and are then placed upon the market by competent boards of directors or trustees elected or appointed for the purpose. Indeed, in the operation of many city governments, they are, by reason of section 6 of article 11 of the Constitution, free from the operation of general laws at all. Civic Center v. R. R. Commission, 175 Cal. 441, 166 P. 351; Morgan v. City of L. A., 182 Cal. 301, 305, 187 P. 1050.

Then, too, we have section 23 of article 12 of the Constitution conferring broad powers upon the railroad commission of the state of California, which amendment has been followed by a comprehensive statute known as the Public Utilities Act (Deering's Gen. Laws, 1923, part 2, Act 6386, p. 2683), which act empowers the railroad commission to supervise the issuance, sale, and disposition of bonds of all public utilities. Likewise certain powers of a similar nature are conferred by what is known as the Bank Act of the State of California (Deering's Gen. Laws, 1923, part 1, Act 652, p. 153).

These, and perhaps many other statutes, are the result of the best wisdom of our state and involve some of its most important and most cherished functions, and it is not for a moment to be held that this system of beneficent laws was to be set awry by a poorly drafted act meant only to protect the individual necessitous borrower from the rapacity of the more fortunate lender.

[6, 7] A statute should be construed in the light of other existing legislation touching the same subject-matter and statutes in pari materia are to be construed together. McGrath v. Kaeline, 66 Cal. App. 41, 44, 225 P. 34. So construing them, we hold that it was not the intent of the act to repeal or modify or impair the integrity of any existing laws relating to the issuance, sale or negotiation of securities now authorized or supervised by any such laws. This act provides for the express repeal of only sections 1917, 1918, 1919, and 1920 of the Civil Code, and the full operation of statutes respecting the control of corporate securities, public or private, will not be deemed hampered in any way by the act in question. We are not here deciding what may be the effect of the act upon existing statutes regulating the business of pawnbrokers and other personal property brokers.

[8] Many states, such as Illinois, Virginia, Wisconsin, New York, Maryland, Delaware, North Carolina, and South Carolina, have met the question by expressly denying to corporations the right to plead usury. But the weight of authority is that, independent of existing regulatory enactments, the sale and negotiation of bonds by corporations, public and private, are not loans within the meaning of the usury laws. 39 Cyc. p. 936, states the rule as follows:

> "But by the weight of authority such bonds are regarded as having a valid existence and transferable quality in the hands of the issuing corporation and thus subject to sale at their market value, which may be at a discount much greater than legal interest, without making them subject to the taint of usury in the hands of an immediate purchaser."

See, also, Griffith v. Burden, 35 Iowa, 138, 143; Kornegay v. City of Goldsboro, 180 N. C. 441, 105 S. E. 187, 193, and cases there cited; Memphis v. Bethel (Tenn.) 17 S. W. 191; Orchard v. School District, 14 Neb. 378, 15 N. W. 730, 731; Armstrong v. Freeman, 9 Neb. 11, 2 N. W. 353; New River Lumber Co. v. Tennessee Ry. Co., 136 Tenn. 661, 191 S. W. 334, 340, and White Water Valley Canal Co. v. Vallette et al., 21 How. [62 U. S.] 414, 425, 16 L. Ed. 154.

Corporations, public and private, are, as we have pointed out, protected and supervised by specific laws applicable alone to them and no reason exists for further regulation. On the contrary, such a law, if applied to them, would have a mistaken effect, for instead of helping them as the design of the usury law implies, the practical effect would be to discourage and hamper the free commerce among our people in this popular class of securities to the detriment of the public welfare. A loss of confidence in these securities would work a positive and widespread injury to our otherwise strong and healthy business fabric.

[9] The inevitable conclusion from these views is that sections 1 and 2 of the act known as the Usury Law are, in all respects, valid and cover both secured and unsecured obligations, and that section 3 of said statute, taken in connection with the decision in Wallace v. Zinman, 199 Cal. —, 254 P. 946, should be construed as though it read as follows:

> "Sec. 3. Every person, company, association or corporation, who for any loan or forbearance of money, goods or things in action shall have paid or delivered any greater sum or value than is allowed to be received under the preceding sections, one and two, may either in person or his or its personal representative, recover in an action at law against the person, company, association or corporation who shall have taken or received the same, or his or its personal representative, treble the amount of the money so paid or value delivered in violation of said sections, providing such action shall be brought within one year after such payment or delivery. And any person, company, association or corporation who shall violate the provisions of sections one and two of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be punished for the first offense by a fine of not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than three hundred dollars, or by imprisonment not more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, and for each subsequent offense and conviction shall be punished by a fine not less than one hundred dollars nor more than five hundred dollars and by imprisonment not less than six months nor more than one year. The penalties herein provided for the violation of this section and said sections one and two shall apply to and be imposed upon each member of any unincorporated company, association, or of any copartnership and upon each officer and director of a corporation who shall violate either of said sections."

[10] A loan, therefore, upon corporate bonds as security in excess of the legal rate would be just as usurious as a loan on any other class of security.

The above conclusion disposes of the contention of amici curiæ that violence would be done to the legislative intent by striking down the provisions of the second portion of section 3, involved herein, and leaving in operation sections 1 and 2 and the remaining paragraphs of section 3 of said act. The provision is either void or surplusage and, being clearly severable, no violence has been done the legislative intent.

It follows that with this exception the statute as a whole is valid and free from constitutional objection and that specific objections to all provisions thereof affecting petitioner are without merit. The petitioner being charged with a violation of valid provisions of said act, his conviction and imprisonment were proper.

Writ discharged and petitioner remanded to custody.

HAINES et al. v. COMMERCIAL MORTGAGE CO. et al. (L. A. 9134.) ★

(Supreme Court of California. March 4, 1927. Rehearing Denied March 31, 1927.)

1. Usury 🔑53—Lender may reimburse himself from fund to be loaned for specific services and expenses incidental to loan, but may not exact excessive interest.

Though lender may perform service or incur expenses in connection with loan which would entitle him to reimburse himself from fund about to be loaned, such items must be confined to specific services or expenses incurred in such way as to preclude its being mere device through which additional interest may be exacted.

2. Usury 🔑55—Broker's fee exacted by lender on loan already carrying maximum interest charge held usurious (Usury Law).

Broker's fee of 3 per cent., exacted by lender on loan already loaded with maximum interest charge, held additional charge for interest constituting usury, causing lender to forfeit all claim to interest and allowing borrower to recover treble amount of interest paid under Usury Law (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii).

3. Usury 🔑137—Borrower cannot recover treble amount of usurious charge which had not been paid.

Borrower may not recover treble amount of usurious broker's fee, where such charge was not actually paid.

4. Usury 🔑100(1)—In applying Usury Law, court will adopt agreement of parties as to portion of borrower's payments applicable to payment of interest.

Where parties have by special and specific agreement agreed as to what portion of borrower's payments shall be referred to principal and what shall be referred to interest, court will adopt such understanding in applying provisions of Usury Law (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii).

5. Usury 🔑100(1)—Court held to have duty to state account between lender making expenditure to protect security and borrower pleading usury who breached agreement to make monthly payments partially applicable to payment of principal.

Where borrower, having breached agreement to make monthly payment, part of which was to be applied to payment of principal, asked equitable relief pleading usury, and lender had made expenditure to protect security, court had duty to assume full and complete jurisdiction and make and state account between parties.

6. Usury 🔑139—Borrower's action for treble amount of usurious interest paid is subject to defendant's offsets and counterclaims.

Borrower's action for treble the amount of usurious interest paid is subject to offsets and counterclaims by defendants.

7. Usury 🔑142(1)—Borrower, before suing for treble amount of usurious interest paid, need not tender principal and other items due under obligation.

Borrower, before bringing action for treble amount of usurious interest paid, is not required to do equity by tendering principal and such other items, excluding interest, as may be due under obligation.

8. Usury 🔑146—Where lender could declare debt due for nonpayment of installment on either principal or interest, forfeiture of right as to usurious interest will not affect right of acceleration of maturity as to principal (Usury Law).

Where note required borrower to make monthly payments on principal as well as usurious interest, and gave lender right to declare debt due for nonpayment of either principal or interest, forfeiture of right as to interest under Usury Law (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii) will not affect right of acceleration of maturity date as to principal.

Each payment shall be credited first, on interest then due; and the remainder on the principal sum, and interest shall thereupon cease upon the amount so credited as the said principal sum. Should default be made in payment of any installment when due, then the whole sum of principal and interest shall become immediately due and payable at the option of the holder of this note. "I. R. Stamps $6.80 affixed and canceled.

"Francis S. Haines,
"Mary Orr Haines,
"H. C. Ketchum,
"Marie C. Ketchum."

A trust deed to secure payment was, as a part of the same transaction, executed to the other defendant and appellant, Title Insurance & Trust Company, as trustee. Eight monthly payments of $800 each were made on the said note at the times called for therein, of which said eight payments $2,953.11 in the aggregate was, by special agreement of the parties, referred to interest, and the remainder, aggregating $3,446.89, referred to payment on the principal. Default then occurred in said payments, and the record discloses no payments thereon since said time. The legal steps necessary to declare the whole principal debt due were taken and foreclosure and sale of the property covered by the trust deed was about to be made when the present action was commenced.

The complaint filed on January 13, 1925, and as later amended, alleges that said transaction was usurious in that the defendant mortgage company exacted a commission of 3 per cent. upon the loan, or $1,020, in addition to the 12 per cent. per annum provided for in the said note. It also alleges the payment of an additional sum of $5 as an appraiser's fee. The prayer was that the loan be declared a transaction in violation of the Usury Act (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii); that the right to future interest be declared forfeited; that no part of the principal be declared payable until the completion of the full period of time contemplated by the note; that plaintiffs recover treble the amount of all interest paid, including treble the amount of said commission of 3 per cent., or $1,020; that a sale of the premises be enjoined and forbidden until the fullness of the period covered by said loan should have elapsed; for costs of suit and for general relief.

The answer admits the execution of the note and trust deed; admits that a charge of 3 per cent. on said principal amount, or $1,020, was charged and made a part of said note, but alleges that said amount was for examinations, views, fees, appraisals, commissions and all charges in transacting the business of the loan as provided for in the so-called Usury Act. It denies specifically that any taint of usury inheres in said transaction and further pleads that defendants had ordered a sale under the trust deed; that the trustee had recorded the declaration of default not only for the whole of the principal and interest and trustee's charges, but also for advances made on account of principal and interest on a prior incumbrance on the property covered by the trust deed.

The court sustained the contentions of plaintiffs and found that although the face of the note was $34,000, plaintiffs received but $32.980, the $1,020, or 3 per cent. of the principal amount, being included in the note; that the plaintiff H. E. Ketchum called at the joint office of the defendant Commercial Mortgage Company, and Commercial Loan Company, and there met in the office of Eugene Webb, Jr., an officer and director of both above-named loan companies, a man by the name of Ellsworth Pexton, who claimed to be acting for said Eugene Webb, Jr.; that said H. E. Ketchum there made and filed an application in writing for a loan of $34,000, agreeing to pay said Webb a 3 per cent. commission on said amount, and to give a note and trust deed by himself and coplaintiffs to secure payment. The court further found that the transaction was carried out in other respects as alleged in the complaint, and in addition thereto found a prior incumbrance of $82,000 existed on the property and that defendant mortgage company, to prevent a foreclosure thereof, had paid on account of principal and interest thereon the sum of $7,974. The further findings material to this decision are found in the opening paragraphs hereof.

The court adjudged the transaction usurious and provided that plaintiffs have judgment for $11,919.33, being treble the item of $1,020 plus treble the aggregate amount of said items of interest, to wit, $2,953.11. The judgment further provided:

> "That defendants are, and each is, hereby restrained and enjoined from foreclosing said trust deed and selling said security for any default in payment of any interest demand on said loan."

Counsel for appellants and also several amici curiæ make spirited and vigorous attacks not only upon the validity of the Usury Act, but, assuming it to be valid, upon the manner in which the court below administered the act in this case. Fortunately for the length of this opinion, all of the points made against the validity of the Usury Act as a whole have been considered in the cases of Wallace v. Zinman (Cal. Sup.) 254 P. 946, this day decided, and In re Washer (Cal. Sup.) 254 P. 951, also this day decided. In the former we held the statute as a whole to be valid and without violence to any provision of the Constitution, except that a certain clause thereof not involved in the case now before us was declared invalid. In the latter we also held abortive the effort found in the act to fix limitations upon the charges of loan brokers and agents. In both cases we held it to be the manifest intent of the act to forbid absolutely to the lender any profit whatever by way of commission, bonus or other kind of charge, if in so doing the maximum rate declared in the act was exceeded.

A further consideration of the question leaves us entirely satisfied with these conclusions. If there is anything that is made clear and plain by the act, it is that the maximum rate of 12 per cent. per annum on the amount loaned is the full measure of all profit to the lender in connection therewith and this, too, without even the right in such case to compound the interest in any computation thereon. Of course, it is competent for the parties to contract in writing for compound interest where in so doing the said maximum rate of 12 per cent. without such compounding would not be exceeded. Language in the act as follows, to wit:

> "No person, company, association or corporation shall directly or indirectly take or receive in money, goods, or things in action, or in any other manner whatsoever, any greater sum or any greater value for the loan or forbearance of money, goods or things in action than at the rate of twelve dollars upon one hundred dollars for one year; and in the computation of interest upon any bond, note, or other instrument or agreement, interest shall not be compounded, nor shall the interest thereon be construed to bear interest unless an agreement to that effect is clearly expressed in writing and signed by the party to be charged therewith. * * *" Section 2.

—makes these conclusions unavoidable.

[1] Of course, we are by no means intending to hold that the lender may not perform services or incur expenses in connection with a loan which would entitle him to reimburse himself from the fund about to be loaned to the borrower, but we do mean to state that these items must be confined to specific service or expense incidental to the loan incurred in such a way as to absolutely preclude its being merely a device through which additional interest or profit on the loan may be exacted, and in this connection the court will carefully scrutinize the whole transaction and declare its substance regardless of its form.

> "It is true that in determining whether or not the transaction is usurious the court 'will disregard its form and look to the substance, and will condemn it if all of the requisites of usury are found to be present, despite any disguise it may wear.' First National Bank v. Phares, 70 Okl. 255, 174 P. 519, 21 A. L. R. 793. See, also, a great number of cases cited in 21 A. L. R. 808 and 809. * * *" Friedman v. Wisconsin Acceptance Corporation (Wis.) 210 N. W. 831.

Blodgett v. Rheinschild, 56 Cal. App. 728, 732, 206 P. 674, 676, is in point as follows:

> "The $400 actually loaned to defendant was the property of plaintiff; the latter himself negotiated the loan directly with defendant—that is, there was no agent or intermediary in the transaction; there was, therefore, no occasion for the payment of a 'commission' by either the borrower or the lender. Designating the $20 as a 'commission' did not make it such. This word 'commission' was but a euphemism, employed in an attempt to justify the exaction of a greater sum for the loan than at the rate of $12 upon $100 for one year—the maximum amount that a lender is entitled to ask or receive since the present usury law was adopted at the general election held November 5, 1918. The device of a 'commission' has, therefore, the characteristics of a shift to circumvent and avoid the usury law. 'As a general rule, any benefit or advantage exacted by the lender from the borrower, whatever be its name or form, which, added to the interest taken or reserved, would yield to the lender a greater profit upon his loan than is allowed by law is deemed usury.' (39 Cyc. 971)."

[2] The charge of 3 per cent. in this case cannot be allocated to any item of expense or service for which the lender could legitimately make a charge or urge a claim. The court was fully warranted by the evidence in making the finding that it was a fee or bonus exacted in a manner so as to stamp it as an additional charge for interest on the loan. The loan, already loaded with the maximum interest charge, was supplemented by this item of $1,020, which said item was clearly a distinct usurious exaction from the borrower. We have no hesitancy in also holding that in such case the lender forfeits all claim to interest, and the borrower may recover not only treble the excess but treble the entire amount of interest actually paid upon the loan, for the unmistakable declaration of the statute is to this effect. Besides similar statutes have been construed and practically without exception such has been the holding of the several courts. Tayloe v. Parker, 137 N. C. 418, 49 S. E. 921; Sloan v. Piedmont Fire Ins. Co., 189 N. C. 692, 128 S. E. 2; Ardmore St. Bk. v. Thompson, 57 Okl. 521, 164 P. 977; Waldner v. Bowden St. Bk., 13 N. D. 604, 102 N. W. 169, 3 Ann. Cas. 847; First Nat. Bk. of Benton v. Watt, 184 U. S. 151, 22 S. Ct. 457, 46 L. Ed. 475; 27 R. C. L. pp. 274, 275, § 77.

[3] In this connection, however, it should be observed that the 3 per cent. charge, totaling $1,020, was not actually paid, and is therefore not a proper item of said judgment for trebling the amount thereof. The court gave judgment for $11,919.33, which is treble the item of $3,973.11, which latter item is composed of an interest charge of $2,953.11 on the eight installments paid on the notes, plus the commission or bonus charge of $1,020. The only item appearing in the record that should have been trebled is the item of $2,953.11. The item of $1,020 simply becomes surplusage and not only cannot be collected but cannot be the basis of apportionment for either principal or interest, and the payments on account of principal will serve to reduce the net principal and will not be construed as a payment of said charge of $1,020, either in whole or in part. To authorize the infliction of the penalty the interest must, of course, be paid. Coulter v. Collins, 71 Cal. App. 381, 235 P. 465; 27 R. C. L. p. 275, § 78.

[4] In this connection it is also true that where the parties have by special and specific agreement, as in the case at bar, agreed as to what portion of a given payment shall be referred to principal and what shall be referred to interest, the court will adopt this understanding in applying the provisions of the usury law. 27 R. C. L. p. 275, § 79. The holding, therefore, that plaintiff was entitled to $11,919.33 is not supported by the evidence, and was therefore erroneous.

In this behalf it is contended by appellant that the court precluded it from showing that the 3 per cent. charge was for actual services rendered to the borrower by the lender. There is no substance in this claim. The facts surrounding the charge of 3 per cent. were fully exploited. The only ruling in any way curtailing the defendants was disallowing evidence as to future services that defendants might be called upon to perform in checking the status of the building operations on the property. While it is conceivable that a charge of some kind might be proper under certain circumstances, there is nothing to show nor is it claimed that the $1,020 was exacted to cover this possible future service.

[5] However, as we have noted above, the judgment pronounced by the court in this case restrains and enjoins the defendants from selling said security for any default in payment of interest on said loan. And the court found said promissory note provided for monthly installments of $800 or more each, payable on the first day of each month, and that should default be made in the payment of any installment when due, the whole sum of principal and interest should become immediately due and payable at the option of the holder of the note; also, that appellant mortgage company had paid the sum of $7,974 in partial discharge of principal and interest upon a prior mortgage lien existing upon the property involved herein; also, that steps had been taken by the trustee to foreclose the deed of trust and expose the security to sale thereunder.

[6] Notwithstanding these several facts, the court, sitting as a court of equity at the instigation of plaintiffs, did not dispose of the issue tendered by the above-mentioned facts, but, as we have noted above, rendered only a partial decision in the matter. These several facts above noted, in our opinion, made it incumbent upon the court below, as such court of equity, to assume full and complete jurisdiction in the premises and make and state the account between the parties and make plenary disposition of all the issues involved in the action. 25 Cal. Jur. § 53, pp. 69, 70. While the provision for a special right of action in plaintiff for treble the amount of interest paid is in the nature of a penalty, the context of the act gives it more of the rating of an action for debt and therefore subject to offsets and counterclaims by defendants. Besides, were this not true, the plaintiffs waived the right to object to offsets and counterclaims by coming into a court of equity and praying for additional relief instead of the mere pronouncement of a judgment in forfeiture against the defendant mortgage company. Equity, having once acquired jurisdiction, as we have noted above, will administer the whole issue.

[7] We accord no merit to the contention of appellants, also of amici curiæ, that plaintiffs must first do equity by tendering the principal and such other items, excluding interest, as may be due under the obligation, before suit may be maintained for treble the interest paid. This contention is the general rule (27 R. C. L. p. 264, § 67, and cases cited), but this rule has no application to the special remedy allowed the borrower under this act when the action is commenced within one year after payment (27 R. C. L. pp. 274, 275, § 77; Second Nat. Bk. v. Fitzpatrick, 111 Ky. 228, 63 S. W. 459, 62 L. R. A. 599). This construction is plain from the language of the act itself.

[8] But we are yet met with another question in this case. The act further provides:

> "Any agreement or contract of any nature in conflict with the provisions of this section shall be null and void as to any agreement or stipulation therein contained to pay interest and no action at law to recover interest in any sum shall be maintained and the debt cannot be declared due until the full period of time it was contracted for has elapsed." Section 2.

Does this provision affect the maturity date of the promissory note before us? A careful consideration of the provision convinces us that the intent is that the maturity date of the obligation cannot be accelerated, if the option to declare the whole of the principal debt due is dependent solely upon nonpayment of usurious interest. In other words, if the note provides for installment payments on the principal as well as the payment of interest and gives the right to the holder to declare the whole debt due for nonpayment of either principal or interest, the forfeiture of the right as to interest could not destroy or affect the remaining right as to principal. From a consideration of the note involved in this action it will be seen that it is an installment note without a definite date of maturity. It specifically provides for payments of $800 or more monthly. How soon such an obligation would be finally matured and paid cannot be definitely foretold, unless interest be excluded and the payments are confined to $800 per month and all applied on the principal.

Respondents seem to contend that such date of maturity should be determined as though the situation were the creation of a sinking fund by these monthly payments which would gradually and finally amortize the principal debt with interest, and that the point of time at which such debt would be finally absorbed should be considered the maturity date of the whole of such obligation. In other words, respondents seem to declare that the court must forbid the collection of any principal or the declaring of any portion of the principal due until by a process similar to the one above described, the debt would be finally paid in full with interest, were such partial payments provided for made. We can see no reason for any such holding. One thing is true and that is that the note provides that each month a payment to some extent must be made on account of the principal as distinguished from the interest and that such payments on account of principal will increase from month to month. Is it true that, on account of the usury in connection with this item of interest, this obligation to pay part of the principal is also voided? Our answer is, "No." A man guilty of usury does not forfeit his goods like a felon at common law. The usury law is to be used as a shield and not as a sword.

We have no hesitancy in holding that in an obligation such as we have before us the full payments called for in the promissory note must be paid in order to prevent default, as well as to prevent acceleration of the maturity date of the the remainder of the principal; that, inasmuch as the claim for interest is void, all payments will be referred to the principal and the obligation thus finally extinguished. If default has been or is hereafter made in the payment in full of these installments, the whole of the obligation (without interest) may, at the option of the holder of the note, be declared due and payable. Any other construction would be tantamount to the infliction of a further penalty upon defendants not provided for in the act.

So, also, in this case if the principal obligation is found to be due and on this account, when taken in connection with other charges, it exceeds the amount of the interest paid when trebled, it would be the duty of the court, as above noted, to state the account between the parties and to credit the offsets of the interest trebled and generally to dispose of the whole issue presented by the cause.

Judgment is reversed, with direction to the court below for such further proceedings herein as it may be advised not inconsistent with this opinion.

(Supreme Court of California. March 16, 1927, as Modified on Rehearing April 15, 1927.)

1. Mechanics' liens 🔑315—Materialman may waive right to lien against building without impairing right to proceed against sureties on bond (Code Civ. Proc. § 1183).

Materialman may waive right to lien against building, for construction of which he furnished the material, without impairing his right to proceed against sureties on undertaking given, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1183.

2. Mechanics' liens 🔑315—Agreement by materialman to wait for payment, "waiving our lien rights," held not waiver of right to sue sureties on bond (Code Civ. Proc. § 1183).

Letter from materialman to sureties agreeing to furnish glass and to await payment till completion of building, "waiving our lien rights," held to waive only right to lien, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, leaving its right of action on surety bond in full force.

3. Appeal and error 🔑907(4)—Rule raising presumption that evidence sustains facts found held inapplicable, where unambiguous writing showed intention of parties.

Rule that, in absence of transcript or bill of exceptions containing all evidence, presumption is that evidence was competent, and supported facts found, has no application, where court found writing was executed, and intention of parties could be ascertained therefrom.

4. Evidence 🔑385—Writing, unless uncertain or ambiguous, is conclusively presumed to speak for itself.

A writing is conclusively presumed to speak for itself unless it is uncertain or ambiguous, and testimony is inadmissible to vary its express terms.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Elliot Craig, Judge.

Action to foreclose materialmen's and mechanics' liens by the Fraters Glass & Paint Company and others against the Southwestern Construction Company and others. From a judgment in favor of defendants Patten against the named plaintiff, it appeals. Reversed.

G. C. De Garmo and H. B. Cornell, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Jones & Weller, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CURTIS, J. This action was instituted for the purpose of foreclosing certain materialmen's and mechanics' liens. The only cause of action with which we are concerned on this appeal is that on behalf of Fraters Glass & Paint Company, a corporation, the appellant herein. This company sought a judgment against the sureties on the bond given by the contractor to the owner in compliance with the provisions of section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure. E. B. Rivers, as the owner of the real property on which the building was constructed, entered into a contract with the Southwestern Construction Company, a corporation, for the construction of said building at an agreed price of $91,000. The contractor gave a bond as required by section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure, with the defendants Henry S. Patten and F. W. Patten as sureties, in the sum of $45,500, being 50 per cent. of the contract price of said building. There is no claim but that this bond met all the requirements of said section 1183. Under the contract for the construction of said building, the appellant, Fraters Glass & Paint Company, furnished glass which was actually used in the construction of said building, the reasonable market value of which was the sum of $5,135.34, no part of which has been paid. Appellant's complaint herein set forth the foregoing facts, and asked for judgment against respondents, the said sureties, for the sum of $5,135.34. The respondents in their answer make no denial of the allegations of the complaint, but, as a special defense, alleged that, as a part of the consideration for executing said undertaking, and as an inducement to them to execute the same, the appellant, prior to the signing of said bond by the sureties, executed and delivered to the sureties the following writing:

> "April 26, 1921, Mr. Henry Patten, Patten & Davies Lumber Co., Los Angeles, Cal.—Dear Sir: In connection with the contract between the Southwestern Construction Company and E. B. Rivers, for a building at Seventh and Central, we agree to furnish glass as arranged with Harry E. Martin, to cost approximately $4,000.00, and to wait thirty-five days after completion of said building for payment of same, waiving our lien rights. We are doing this, of course, to help Mr. Martin in this deal and are confident that it will be carried to a successful completion. Very truly yours, Fraters Glass & Paint Co., by J. A. Fraters, Pres."

Mr. Martin was the president of said construction company.

Respondents further allege in their answer that it was the intent and purpose of said plaintiff, the appellant herein, by the execution of said writing, to relieve said respondents of the burden of said undertaking to the extent of $4,000, and that, had it not been for the execution of said writing by the appellant, respondents would not have become sureties upon said undertaking. The trial court found the allegations of respondents' special defense to be true, and rendered judgment accordingly.

On this appeal the appellant attacks these findings as unsupported by any evidence. Appellant contends that by this writing it did nothing more than waive its right to a lien against the building for which it furnished said material, and that this waiver did not extend to, nor include, its right to proceed against said sureties on said bond for the amount unpaid on its claim. In this connection appellant contends that, as a materialman furnishing materials to be used, and which were actually used in the construction of said building, it was given under the statute the right to a lien against said building and the land upon which it was constructed, together with a convenient space about the same, and also a right in case of the nonpayment of its claim to proceed against the sureties on said bond for the amount unpaid on its claim; that these two rights are separate, distinct, and independent of each other; and that, by waiving its right to a lien against the real property, it in no manner impaired its right of action against the sureties on the bond to recover the amount remaining unpaid upon its claim. In support of this contention, appellant relies upon the case of General Elec. Co. v. American Bonding Co., 180 Cal. 675, 182 P. 444. That action was instituted by the plaintiff therein against the surety upon a bond given in compliance with section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure to recover for the value of materials furnished, and which were actually used in the construction of the building referred to in said bond. As a defense to said action, the surety set up in its answer the failure of plaintiff therein to file any claim of lien under the provisions of section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that, during the time within which such a claim of lien might have been filed, a large sum of money was due from the owner to the contractor, and which should and would have been applied to plaintiff's claim if the lien had been formally asserted. To this defense the trial court sustained a demurrer, and granted a motion to strike it out. Upon appeal this court sustained the action of the trial court, and held:

> "Section 1197 of the same chapter clearly contemplates suits which may be maintained without the previous filing of liens, for it provides that: 'Nothing contained in this chapter shall be construed to impair or affect the right of any person to whom any debt may be due for work done or materials furnished to maintain a personal action to recover said debt against the person liable therefor; * * * but the judgment, if any, obtained by the plaintiff in such personal action shall not be construed to impair or merge any lien held by said plaintiff under this chapter; provided, only, that any money collected on said judgment shall be credited on the amount of such lien in any action brought to enforce the same, in accordance with the provisions of this chapter.' The bond by its terms creates a direct obligation on the part of the surety to pay for materials used in the construction of the building and the right of action on such bond is preserved by said section 1197 as well as by section 1183.
> "It can no doubt be persuasively argued that the bond which must 'be also conditioned for the payment in full of the claims of all persons performing labor upon or furnishing materials to be used in the work' relates to claims of lien filed within time. But it seems to us that this is a strained interpretation. The mere use of the word 'claim,' which is as apt a description of the demand of the individual who has filed no claim of lien as it is of one who has filed such claim, is not persuasive.
> "It is to be noted also that the portion of the section (and of the bond which follows its terms), by which the rights of materialmen are safeguarded, does not use the word 'claims' but the bond is made to 'inure to the benefit of any and all persons who * * * furnish materials to be used in the work described' in the contract.
> "But there is another and a very strong reason for rejecting the theory that section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure restricts the terms of section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and makes them applicable only to those persons who have filed liens, and that reason is found in the history of the two sections and in the decisions of this court relating thereto."

The court then proceeds to review the history of the legislation affecting these two Code sections as well as the decisions of this court relating to such legislation, and concludes by reasserting its conclusion that:

"The phrase 'claiming the benefits of this chapter' [found in said section 1187] was thus given a meaning which confined its operation to the benefits of asserting a lien upon the property and did not extend it to include the benefits of any other remedy afforded by the chapter against the owner."

This court accordingly held in that case that the waiver of the plaintiff therein of its lien by its failure to file its claim of lien, as required by section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure, did not deprive it of its right of action against the surety on the bond given under the provisions of section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure. There can be little, if any, difference between a waiver of lien by a failure to file the claim of lien as required by section 1187 and a waiver by express agreement in so far as such waiver may affect the claimant's right to proceed against the sureties on the bond given under section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In either case the materialmen or laborers, as the case may be, simply forfeit their right to a lien against the property of the owner without in any way impairing their further and additional right given them under section 1183 to proceed against the sureties upon the bond. This conclusion is in perfect accord with the terms of said section 1183 and with the provisions of the bond in the present proceeding. In said section it is expressly provided that said bond "shall also by its terms be made to inure to the benefit of any and all persons who perform labor upon or furnish materials to be used in the work described in said contract so as to give such persons a right of action to recover upon said bond in any suit brought to foreclose the liens provided for in this chapter or in a separate suit brought on said bond. * * *" (Italics ours.) The bond in suit herein provides that:

"And the same is hereby expressly made to inure to the benefit of any and all persons who perform labor upon or furnish materials to be used in the work described in said contract, or in any modification thereof, and any and all such persons shall have and are given a right of action to recover upon this bond against the said principal and sureties, or either of them, in any suit brought to foreclose mechanic's liens, which may be filed by such persons, or any of them, upon the property mentioned in said contract, or in a separate suit brought upon this bond, and may recover in such action or actions the value of such labor done or materials furnished, or both, not exceeding, however, in the aggregate of said recoveries, the amount of this bond, as above specified." (Italics ours.)

[1] It is apparent, therefore, that a materialman may waive, by agreement or otherwise, his right to a lien against the building, for the construction of which he has furnished material, without in any way impairing his right to proceed against the sureties upon the undertaking given in compliance with section 1183, Code of Civil Procedure.

[2] Referring now to the writing signed by the appellant, and which it is claimed by respondents is a waiver of appellant's right to recover in this action on said bond, we find that by its terms it is confined to an agreement to wait 35 days after the completion of the building for the payment of its claim and to a waiver of "our lien rights." No reference is made therein as to any waiver of the rights of appellant under said bond. It must be apparent, therefore, of the two rights which the statute gives appellant that by this writing it waived only its right to a lien against the property, leaving its right of action upon the bond in full force and effect, and capable of being enforced in a proper proceeding.

[3, 4] It is further insisted, however, that, even if it be conceded as true all that has been said herein, yet under the record before us the judgment must be affirmed. This record does not contain any evidence, but consists merely of a "Stipulation of Facts," with a further stipulation "that the foregoing may be settled as a bill of exceptions." To this was attached the certificate of the trial judge in the following form:

"The foregoing stipulation of facts is hereby settled and allowed as a bill of exceptions, and the clerk is hereby instructed to file the same, provided, however, that it is to be noted that the foregoing are not all of the material facts or evidence in the case."

Respondents claim that, as the certificate of the trial judge shows that the bill of exceptions does not contain all the evidence before the trial court, and as the attack on the foregoing findings is based upon the insufficiency of the evidence to support them, such attack must fail. Undoubtedly it is the rule that, in the absence of a transcript or bill of exceptions containing all the evidence, it will be presumed that the evidence adduced at the trial was competent and material, and was sufficient to sustain the facts found. But this rule can have no application in the present action, where the court found that the writing was duly executed by the appellant, and where the intention of the appellant in signing and delivering the writing can be ascertained from the clear and unambiguous language of the writing. Under what possible theory of the law could any evidence, aside from the writing itself, be received by the court for the purpose of determining the intent of the appellant in the execution and delivery thereof? The writing is conclusively presumed to speak for itself without it is uncertain or ambiguous. In what respect can it be said that there is any uncertainty or ambiguity in this writing? There is nothing uncertain about that part thereof whereby the appellant agrees to wait 35 days after the completion of the building for payment of its claim; neither is there any ambiguity in the further statement that appellant by so doing waived "our lien rights." The writing, therefore, upon its face is perfectly clear and plain. It is free from any uncertainty or ambiguity. In apt language it expresses the intention of the appellant, and any attempt to show by parol testimony a contrary intention would be to vary its express terms, and such testimony would be inadmissible and incompetent. To attempt to show by a writing whereby the appellant in express terms waived its right to a lien that it thereby intended to, and did, waive its right of action upon the bond, when no mention, either directly or indirectly, is made in the writing to the bond, would be to vary its plain and unambiguous terms by parol testimony. The rule against such a procedure is so well established that no citation of authority is necessary in support of it.

[5] It is true, under section 1860 of the Code of Civil Procedure and section 1647 of the Civil Code, for the purpose of construing an instrument, the circumstances under which it is made may be shown, but these sections apply only in aid of construction in the real sense. They have no application where it is sought, as here, to add to the language an additional term which is not contained therein. This court, in the case of Payne v. Commercial Nat. Bank, 177 Cal. 68, 71, 169 P. 1007, 1008 (L. R. A. 1918C, 328), has expressed the rule in apt and convincing language as follows:

> "The principal claim of appellant bank is that the trial court erred in refusing to receive parol evidence of the transaction between the plaintiff and the payee named in the check, culminating in the giving of the check, for the purpose of showing the intention of plaintiff to give a check for five hundred dollars to the payee. It seems to be the theory of learned counsel for defendant that under various sections of our Civil Code (1635, 1636, 1637, 1640, 1641, 1643, 1647, 1654), which simply lay down well-settled rules for the construction of the language used in a contract, the ambiguity may be removed and the check treated as one for five hundred dollars. This theory is without any support in the authorities. Rules provided for the construction of contracts are simply for the purpose of ascertaining the true intent and meaning of the language used therein. Under these rules parol evidence is admissible where it tends to show the correct interpretation of the language used, the purpose being to enable the court or jury to understand, in the light of the circumstances shown, what the words employed really mean, and to interpret those words, in so far as this can reasonably be done, in accord with the intention of the parties as the same may be shown by such circumstances. But no authority sustains the proposition that under the guise of construction or explanation a meaning can be given to the instrument which is not to be found in the instrument itself, but is based entirely upon direct evidence of intention independent of the instrument. It has been well said that in the admission of extrinsic evidence the line which separates evidence which aids the interpretation of what is in the instrument from direct evidence of intention independent of the instrument must be kept steadily in view, the duty of the court being to declare the meaning of what is written in the instrument, and not what was intended to be written."

From the foregoing we conclude that the writing executed by appellant and given to the respondents was no more than a waiver by appellant of its right to file a lien; that it was not a waiver of its right of action upon the bond given by the contractor to the owner, on which respondents were sureties: that appellant's right to proceed against said sureties was not waived nor in any manner affected by its waiver of a lien; that said writing, in so far as it expresses the intention of the appellant in executing and delivering it to respondents, is clear and unambiguous, and any testimony offered or admitted for the purpose of showing that appellant's intention was different from that expressed in the writing would be inadmissible and incompetent as an attempt to vary the plain and explicit terms of a writing by parol evidence. It follows, therefore, that the finding of the court that appellant intended by said writing to relieve respondents from any of the burdens of said undertaking is unsupported by the evidence. For this reason the judgment must be reversed, and it is so ordered.

DOWNS et al. v. KROEGER. (L. A. 8471.)★

(Supreme Court of California. March 30, 1927. Rehearing Denied April 28, 1927.)

1. Covenants 🔑72—Where property in neighborhood is no longer residence property, restrictions in deed will not be given effect, where change has resulted from causes other than their breach.

Where there has been a change in uses to which property in neighborhood is being put, so that such property is no longer residence property, covenants prohibiting construction of any structures but residences in restricted area will not be given effect, where such change has resulted from causes other than breach of restrictive covenants.

2. Injunction 🔑128—Evidence held to show change in character of locality to warrant refusal to enjoin violation of covenants restricting building to residences.

In suit to enjoin construction of store building contrary to covenants prohibiting construction of any structures but residences in restricted area, evidence held to show such change in character of locality as to warrant an equity court in refusing to enjoin violation of restrictive covenants.

3. Injunction 🔑62(3)—That property has become more valuable for business purposes is defense to action to enjoin construction of store building where property is useless for residence purposes.

That property has become more desirable or valuable for business than for residence purposes is defense to action to enjoin construction of store building in violation of restrictive covenants, where property is useless for residence purposes, and defendant will be irreparably damaged, if not allowed to construct business building.

4. Judgment 🔑526—In determining scope and effect of judgment, entire judgment roll may be looked to.

Entire judgment roll may be looked to for purpose of its interpretation in determining scope and effect of judgment.

Richards, J., Waste, C. J., and Curtis, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ralph H. Clock, Judge.

Action by Luella E. Downs and others against J. L. Kroeger to enjoin construction of store building contrary to restrictive covenants. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Rehearing denied; WASTE, C. J., and RICHARDS and CURTIS, JJ., dissenting.

Jas. W. Bell and C. W. Hall, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Jones & Weller, Dana R. Weller, and Hunsaker, Britt & Cosgrove, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. Plaintiffs instituted this action for a permanent injunction to restrain defendant from completing a store building upon lot 27, block 9, in tract 2072, commonly known as Wellington square, situate in the city of Los Angeles, said tract consisting of approximately eight contiguous blocks, forming a rectangular shaped area containing 397 lots. In the year 1912 it was subdivided and laid out for residential purposes, restrictive covenants running with the land being inserted in all deeds by which parts of said tract were conveyed, prohibiting until the year 1960 the construction of any structures but residences in the restricted area. Said lot 27 is a border lot which abuts West Adams street, and faces an unrestricted area. It was purchased by defendant in 1920, and he concedes the validity of the restrictive covenants, and that he took said lot subject thereto.

Plaintiffs, owners of certain lots in the tract, allege that the erection of a store building on said lot by defendant would be in violation of said restrictive covenants; would depreciate the value of plaintiffs' property; and lower the class of the neighborhood, all to their damage.

Defendant contends that the character of the surrounding neighborhood has so changed that the property was and is essentially business property, and, as a result, the covenants and restrictions relied upon by plaintiffs have become ineffective, and their enforcement would be inequitable, unjust, and oppressive.

The trial court, after hearing the evidence and inspecting the locality, denied the relief prayed for, and plaintiffs have taken this appeal from the judgment, urging that said restrictions are for the benefit of all owners in said tract and of substantial value to the dominating lots therein; that changed conditions in the neighborhood, or even the fact that defendant's property may have become more valuable for business purposes, are immaterial, and not a defense to an action for injunction; and, furthermore, that no such changed conditions are in fact shown by the evidence.

Respondent contends that the equitable remedy by injunction will not be granted where the condition of the property is so altered as to render it unfit for the purposes for which it was originally designed, and that the enforcement of the restrictions would result in slight, if any, benefit to plaintiffs, but would work great and irreparable hardship upon respondent.

The court, among other things, found: That, although the permitting of said structure for the purpose stated was contrary to said restrictions, it would not greatly or at all depreciate the value of plaintiffs' property or lower the general class and character of the neighborhood, nor would plaintiffs suffer damage of any character thereby. That in 1920, when said lot was purchased by defendant, no improvements of any character existed on Adams street for a distance of several blocks, but within the past three years that section of Adams street had become a business section, and many stores and business structures had been built, including three buildings occupied by building contractors and real estate brokers; a building for business occupied by a real estate broker, a shoemaker, and a restaurant; and other structures occupied by a grocery store, a meat market, and a hardware store. That by reason of the construction of business buildings defendants' lot is no longer suitable or desirable for residential purposes, and is essentially business property, and located in a section devoted exclusively to business purposes. That the construction and use of a business building on the lot of defendant will not injure or damage the property of plaintiffs or the owner of any other lot in said tract 2072, but, if defendant is restrained from using his property for the only purpose for which it is now suitable and available, he will be irreparably damaged and deprived of any use whatsoever of said property. That by reason of the changed conditions in the neighborhood occurring since said restrictions were imposed, it would be inequitable to enforce them against the use of said property as contemplated by defendant.

A careful review of the evidence, and an inspection of the several exhibits introduced at the trial, clearly indicate, in our opinion, that it is amply sufficient to support the findings, and the further fact may be noted that the trial court had previously inspected the locality for a better understanding of the testimony.

Respondent testified that at the time he purchased the lot there was a big Chinese vegetable garden on the south side of the street, and the whole tract did not have a building on it; that during the year preceding the trial some business buildings had been constructed in the unrestricted area; that it would not pay to put a residence on his lot; and that the lot would be better adapted for business.

Nathan Levin, a resident of the northeast corner of Adams and Buckingham streets, testified that three store buildings had been erected across the street, occupied by a laundry, silk store, cleaning and pressing place, real estate office, and church; also as to grocery and drug store in the adjoining blocks.

On cross-examination he testified that he paid $10,200 for his place, and on redirect that as business property, without restrictions, the lot alone would be worth $12,000; that on account of the street car line on Adams street and the traffic and rubbish it is unfit for residences, and no place to keep children.

E. S. Butterworth testified that the property was more adaptable and valuable for business purposes, and not reasonably fit for residential purposes; that he did not think lifting the restrictions on this block would depreciate the value of the rest of the tract.

Frank D. Tatum, a real estate broker, testified that Adams street had changed into a business street and that the remaining vacant property was only fit for business purposes, and absolutely useless for residences.

The only witnesses called in rebuttal by appellants, Charles E. Ott, the real estate broker who assisted in subdividing Wellington square, and John H. Albright, a builder and contractor residing therein, merely testified that in their opinion the lifting of the restrictions would depreciate the value of the property in the tract.

[1] The authorities unquestionably support the conclusion of the trial court in holding that, where there has been a change in the uses to which the property in the neighborhood is being put, so that such property is no longer residence property, it would be unjust, oppressive, and inequitable to give effect to the restrictions, if such change has resulted from causes other than their breach.

"It is evident that the purpose of the restrictions as a whole was to make the locality a suitable one for residences; and that, owing to the general growth of the city, and the present use of the whole neighborhood for business, this purpose can no longer be accomplished. If all the restrictions imposed in the deeds should be rigidly enforced, it would not restore to the locality its residential character, but would merely lessen the value of every lot for business purposes. It would be oppressive and inequitable to give effect to the restrictions; and, since the changed condition of the locality has resulted from other causes than their breach, to enforce them in this instance could have no other effect than to harass and injure the defendant, without effecting the purpose for which the restrictions were originally made [citing cases]." Jackson v. Stevenson, 156 Mass. 496, 502, 31 N. E. 691, 693, 32 Am. St. Rep. 476.

"It certainly is not the doctrine of courts of equity, to enforce, by its peculiar mandate, every contract, in all cases, even where specific execution is found to be its legal intention and effect. It gives or withholds such decree according to its discretion, in view of the circumstances of the case, and the plaintiff's prayer for relief is not answered, where, under those circumstances, the relief he seeks would be inequitable. Peters v. Delaplaine, 49 N. Y. 362; Margraf v. Muir, 57 N. Y. 155; Mathews v. Terwilliger, 3 Barb. [N. Y.] 51; Radcliffe v. Warrington, 12 Ves. 331. If for any reason, therefore, not referable to the defendant, an enforcement of the covenant would defeat either of the ends contemplated by the parties, a court of equity might well refuse to interfere, or if in fact the condition of the property by which the premises are surrounded has been so altered 'that the terms and restrictions' of the covenant are no longer applicable to the existing state of things. 1 Story's Eq. Jur. (10th Ed.) § 750. And so though the contract was fair and just when made, the interference of the court should be denied, if subsequent events have made performance by the defendant so onerous, that its enforcement would impose great hardship upon him, and cause little or no benefit to the plaintiff." Trustees of Columbia College v. Thacher, 87 N. Y. 311, 317, 41 Am. Rep. 365, 367.

> "Under the circumstances now existing the covenant is no longer effective for the purpose in view by the parties when they made it, and the enforcement thereof cannot restore the neighborhood to its former condition by making it desirable for private residences. If the building restriction were of substantial value to the dominant estate, a court of equity might enforce it even if the result would be a serious injury to the servient estate, but it will not extend its strong arm to harm one party without helping the other, for that would be unjust. An injunction that bears heavily on the defendant without benefiting the plaintiff will always be withheld as oppressive." McClure v. Leaycraft, 183 N. Y. 36, 44, 75 N. E. 961, 963 (5 Ann. Cas. 45).

[2] The evidence, in our opinion, is sufficient, within the rule as announced by the above authorities, to show such a change in the character of the locality as to warrant an equity court in refusing to enjoin a violation of the restrictive covenants, and supports the findings and judgment.

[3] There remains the further contention of appellants that the fact that defendant's property has become more desirable or valuable for business than for residence purposes is not a defense to an action for injunction, and that its value for business purposes is immaterial, in support of which they rely largely upon the case of Miles v. Clark, 44 Cal. App. 539, 549, 187 P. 167. That case is not in point as the evidence here shows, and the court found that defendant's property is essentially business property, and, if he is restrained from using it for the only purpose for which it is now suitable and available, he will be irreparably damaged and deprived of any use whatsoever thereof; in other words, that defendant's property is "absolutely useless for residence purposes." Testimony of Mr. Tatum.

It is stated in the case of Miles v. Clark, supra, that:

> "Where there has been a change in the uses to which property in the neighborhood is being put, so that such property is no longer residence property, it would be oppressive and inequitable to give effect to restrictions where the changed condition of the locality has resulted from other causes than their breach. Los Angeles Terminal Land Co. v. [Muir] Southern Pacific R. R., 136 Cal. 36, 68 P. 308; Trustees of Columbia College v. Thatcher, 87 N. Y. 311 [41 Am. Rep. 365]; Jackson v. Stevenson, 156 Mass. 496 [31 N. E. 691, 32 Am. St. Rep. 476]."

The evidence and the findings in that case, however, showed no unfavorable change in the tract or its vicinity, and the above doctrine was held inapplicable there.

The question of damage to appellants is disposed of by the cases above cited and in the finding, supported by the evidence, that appellants will not suffer any damage whatsoever from completion of defendant's building.

It is proper to note in disposing of the appeal in this case that we are by no means intending to establish a precedent in cases of this general character, where the facts and circumstances distinguish them from the case before us. Nor does it by any means follow that the integrity and validity of the restrictions obtaining as to other property in this subdivision will necessarily be affected in any manner or at all by the conclusion herein announced. The findings of the court below under the evidence are binding upon us, and we have simply adhered to the well-known rule of law governing us in such a situation.

[4] Appellants also make some objection to the form of the judgment, claiming that it exceeds the findings. It appears to be supported by the findings when examined and considered with the record as a whole, and it can only be construed to harmonize with them. "In determining the scope and effect of the judgment the entire judgment roll may be looked to for the purpose of its interpretation." Freeman v. Donohoe, 188 Cal. 172, 204 P. 593, 594.

Judgment affirmed.

RICHARDS, J. I dissent. The tract known as "Wellington square," lying along the Wellington road about five miles from the heart of the city of Los Angeles, was laid out, subdivided, and sold about fourteen years ago as a restricted residence district, to be used for residence purposes only, as expressed in the deeds to purchasers of residence lots therein. These deeds contained the covenant "that no apartment house, flat, lodging house, store, hotel or any other than a first-class private residence, with or without the customary outbuildings, including a private stable or garage, shall be erected, placed or permitted on said land or any part thereof." There were further specific restrictions touching the minimum cost of residences to be erected therein, their distance from the front line of the premises, regulating the location of outbuildings, and the height of hedges, fences, copings, or walls, and prohibiting signboards, advertising boards, or banners within said restricted area. The lots and tracts of land therein were sold to many purchasers, subject to the foregoing restrictions in the deeds of each, including the defendant herein, and these purchasers or their transferees have during the intervening years proceeded to build their residences and homes thereon and therein until practically the entire area thereof has been built up residentially, and until, as a matter of common knowledge, and as the exhibits and photographs appended to the transcript herein disclose, Wellington square has become, and now is, one of the most beautiful and attractive exclusively residence areas within the city of Los Angeles. Heretofore and until this defendant conceived the idea that it would be more profitable to him to violate than to continue to comply with the covenants, conditions, and restrictions upon which he was permitted to purchase his lot within said area, no other attempted breach thereof has occurred. His sole excuse for his breach of the express conditions, covenants, and restrictions of his grant is that the lands and lots of an adjoining tract across the street from one side of this restricted area, and which constitutes an unrestricted area, are being devoted in part to business purposes. There is no evidence in the case showing that the other three sides of this restricted subdivision have been invaded by business or are other than residential in character, nor is there any evidence that the unrestricted tract on Adams street opposite the defendant's lot has been wholly devoted to business establishments. In fact, the evidence is to the contrary. We have the condition as shown by the practically undisputed evidence wherein the defendant, because some places of business have been erected in an unrestricted area across the street from him, claims the right to put a store upon his lot within the restricted area, in violation of the covenants and restrictions of his deed, the effect of which, if permitted, will inevitably be to open the way to such an invasion of Wellington square by stores, garages, service stations, apartment and lodging houses, and other forbidden structures and uses as would ere long entirely destroy the restrictive covenants upon which residential owners of property within this area purchased and have improved and enjoyed their restrictive holdings therein. No case that has been cited in the main opinion, and none that I have seen, has gone to this extent before in permitting a single owner within a restricted area to not only violate his own covenants, but to destroy the essential covenants, prohibitions, and securities of his co-owners simply because other persons have put stores and shops in an unrestricted area across the street from his lot, and thus made it more profitable to himself to put his lot to like uses in violation of the terms, covenants, and restrictions of his deed. It is just this to which the main opinion herein gives its sanction. The case of Jackson v. Stevenson, 156 Mass. 496, 31 N. E. 691, 32 Am. St. Rep. 476, from which the main opinion quotes as sustaining its doctrine, does not support it. It refers to the "present use of the whole neighborhood for business" and to the loss by the "locality of its residential character." The term "locality" as employed in the quoted portion of said case evidently means "the restricted locality." This case has no semblance as to its facts to the case at bar. The case of Trustees, etc., v. Thacher is equally inapplicable to the instant situation, since the court found, not only that "the general current of business affairs had reached and covered the entire premises," but also found the construction and operation of an elevated railway alongside the restricted district, which had the effect of producing a large depreciation in rents and frequent vacancies. The case of Miles v. Clark, 44 Cal. App. 539, 549, 187 P. 167, 172, states, in my opinion, the correct rule as to the effect to be given to changes in the use of property in the neighborhood where no radical change in the restricted tract is shown. In that case, as in this, the tract in question had been subdivided and sold under similar restrictions contained in the conveyances to purchasers who had built upon and occupied their respective holdings as strictly residential properties. In that case, as in this, the defendants were found to be holding their property subject to such restrictions. In that case, as in this, the defendants were seeking to avoid the binding force of such restrictions, and to put their property to business uses, upon the claim that the character of other property in the vicinity of the tract had so changed through the erection of apartment houses and business establishments that it would be inequitable to enforce such restrictions against a like use of the defendants' property. The appellate court, dealing with that situation, said:

> "The fact that apart from and surrounding the tract some business has grown up, and that the land has become more valuable in consequence, in no manner entitles the defendants to be relieved from the restrictions they have created. This condition is but the natural result of the improvement of the various tracts, and the fact that the property may have become more valuable thereby for business purposes is immaterial. * * * [Citing cases.] Courts in such cases are not controlled exclusively by money value, but may protect a home."

The fundamental error of the trial court as to the rule applicable to cases of this character lies in its holding that, when the property of the individual owner has been so far affected by conditions existing in contiguous unrestricted territory as to be less valuable to him for residential than for business purposes, he is no longer bound by the conditions and restrictions of his deed. Such is not the rule under the practically unanimous current of authority which holds that it is only when the character of the restricted region as a whole so far changes as to render it no longer adaptable to restricted residential uses that the right to be relieved from such restrictions can arise. There is no finding in this case that such a condition exists within the restricted area as a whole, but only as to the eight lots therein fronting on Adams street. As to all the rest of the tract the finding is that "said eight lots are the only lots in said tract which are affected by the changed conditions on said Adams street." It follows that the remaining 389 lots in the Wellington square tract still retain their residential character, but have lost the restrictive protection. Such is the inevitable result of the decision of the trial court, to which the majority opinion herein lends its approval. The principles laid down in Martin v. Holm, 197 Cal. 733, 242 P. 718, touching the sacredness of the reciprocal covenants of owners in restricted areas, should be given application to the case at bar, and, so applied, would operate to prevent the single owner of a lot in this restricted area from doing that with his property which will eventuate in the destruction of the restrictive benefits and protection of all of his co-owners therein. That such will be the result if this judgment is to stand was aptly indicated by Mr. Justice Lennon, in the case of Miller v. Board of Public Works, 234 P. 381, wherein he points out that, once the restrictive covenants of the home owner are broken down, his only recourse is to move to another location, and by so doing be compelled to abandon the benefits emanating from a permanent home site. Such, in my opinion, would be the effect of the affirmance of the judgment herein.

The trial court fell into another fundamental error which the main opinion herein would perpetuate. It is the error that the plaintiffs, seeking to enforce a building restriction against the defendant equally bound to conform to its covenant, but refusing to do so, must allege and prove damage before they can obtain an injunctive remedy. The rule is just the contrary. The damage resulting to the plaintiffs and their co-owners in the restricted area from an unjustified breach of covenants such as these is of necessity both irremediable and impossible of ascertainment, since they relate to the comfortable enjoyment of homes secluded from business in the restricted region. The trial court was therefore in error in denying the plaintiffs injunctive relief upon the ground that no damage had been shown. Such a conclusion was contrary to its own finding upon the undisputed evidence herein that the residential character of this restricted area as a whole had not undergone a change. It follows necessarily that for the foregoing fundamental errors the judgment herein should be reversed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; CURTIS, J.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; Fred A. Treat, Judge.

Action by Albert De La Torre against W. P. Johnson and George Smith. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. On plaintiff's motion, after death of defendant first named pending appeal, to substitute his executor and to continue the appeal against him, and on motion of the executor to dismiss the appeal as to the defendant W. P. Johnson. Motion to continue appeal denied, and motion to dismiss appeal as to defendant Johnson granted.

E. B. Mering and W. H. Metson, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

★Rehearing denied.

Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, of San Francisco (Edwin V. McKenzie, of San Francisco, of counsel), for executor of will of respondent Johnson.

Hudson, Martin & Jorgensen, of Monterey, for respondent Smith.

SEAWELL, J. The question presented by this motion to substitute in the place of defendant Johnson the executor of his estate, and to continue the action against said executor as a defendant, and the counter motion to dismiss the appeal herein, is whether or not a person who suffers a personal injury in the course of his employment at the hands of a tort-feasor who is not his employer may, after a judgment rendered against him in the court below, continue to prosecute an appeal pending in this court after the death of said tort-feasor in the absence of express statutory provisions authorizing the continuance of the proceeding.

[1] Both at common law and under the general provisions of the statutes of this state such an action abates, and unless there can be found some statute altering the rule in this particular case this appeal must be dismissed. It is the claim of appellant that authority to continue the appeal inheres in the power conferred by the constitutional amendment authorizing the enactment of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act, and if the right to continue the prosecution is not expressly given it is, nevertheless, conferred by the provisions of the act adopted in obedience to the constitutional mandate.

The facts are that the plaintiff and appellant, Albert De La Torre, on the 27th day of October, 1926, filed a notice of a motion for an order substituting in the place and stead of defendant and respondent W. P. Johnson, who died subsequent to the entry of judgment in the court below, his executor, and allowing the action to be continued against said executor as a codefendant. The executor thereupon filed notice of a motion to dismiss the appeal as to said defendant Johnson upon the ground that the cause of action set forth in the complaint against said defendant abated upon his death. It appears from the affidavits filed by the parties in support of their respective motions that the action is one to recover damages in the sum of $75,000 for personal injuries sustained through the alleged negligent operation of an automobile; and that respondent Johnson was the owner and respondent Smith was his chauffeur and the driver in charge of the automobile at the time said injuries were inflicted upon appellant. The defendants filed separate answers. Defendant Johnson denied that the accident took place while defendant Smith was acting in the course of his employment, and alleged that Smith was engaged in an errand of his own at the time. Defendant Smith denied all allegations of negligence. At the close of the evidence defendant Johnson moved for a directed verdict on the ground that the evidence showed as a matter of law that Smith was not acting within the course of his employment when the accident occurred. The motion was granted. The issues in the case as to the defendant Smith were submitted to the jury, which returned a verdict in his favor. Judgment was accordingly entered on June 10, 1926. Plaintiff's motion for a new trial was denied. On July 19, 1926, he filed a notice of appeal to this court. Defendant Johnson died on August 24, 1926.

[2, 3] Plaintiff recognizes the general rule that a cause of action for personal injuries, in the absence of a statute expressly providing to the contrary, abates upon the death of either the person injured or the tort-feasor (1 Cal. Jur. 71; 1 C. J. 174 and 197; 3 Street, Foundations of Legal Liability, p. 60; Clark v. Goodwin, 170 Cal. 527, 150 P. 357, L. R. A. 1916A, 1142), and it is not contended that there is any statute of general application in California that keeps alive a cause of action for personal injuries after the death of the tort-feasor except in those certain classes of cases in which the statute creates a sort of privity or quasi contractual relation. The instant case does not come within any of said classes. It is the contention of appellant, however, that this case is taken out of the general rule by the circumstance that the injury occurred in the course of and arose out of the employment in which appellant was engaged, and that section 26, Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act (Stats. 1917, p. 831, as amended St. 1919, p. 920), authorizes the continuance of an action to recover damages for personal injuries which are made compensable under the provisions of said act after the death of the negligent third party by the substitution of his personal representatives. We cannot accede to this contention.

The opening sentences of section 26 of said act are as follows:

> "The term 'employee,' as used in this section, shall include the person injured and any other person in whom a claim may arise by reason of the injury or death of such injured person. The death of the employee, or of any other person, shall not abate any right of action established by this section. The claim of an employee for compensation shall not affect his right of action for damages arising out of injury or death against any person other than the employer; and any employer having paid, or having become obligated to pay compensation, may likewise bring an action against such other person to recover said damages."

Subsequent portions of the section provide that if either the employee or employer brings an action for damages against such third person the other must be notified, and may join as a party plaintiff at any time before trial on the facts, and must consolidate his action if brought independently; that if suit be prosecuted by the employer alone evidence of expenditures which he has paid or become obligated to pay by reason of the injury or death is admissible and such expenditures are part of the damages; that the amount of the recovery by the employer over and above what he has paid or become obligated to pay as compensation shall be paid to the employee; that if the employee joins in or prosecutes the suit evidence of the amount of disability indemnity or death benefit paid by the employer shall not be admissible, but proof of all other expenditures on account of the injury shall be admissible and shall be deemed part of the damages; and that the court shall, on application, allow as a first lien against any judgment recovered by the employee the amount of the employer's expenditures for compensation.

The Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act does not attempt or purport to grant any right against a tort-feasor to the person who, at the time of the injury, was an employee of a third person that is not accorded to every other member of society similarly situated with respect to casualties which have no relation to the status of employer and employee. In this respect, in the absence of statutory language conferring greater rights upon a class than are conferred upon citizens at large, keeping within constitutional limits, all members of society are placed upon equal terms. The primary purpose of the Workmen's Compensation Act is to afford protection to the employee against the hazards of employment by making the employer responsible.

[4] Appellant relies strongly upon that portion of section 26 of the act which reads:

> "The death of the employee, or any other person, shall not abate any right of action established by this section."

The section above cited must be construed in connection with and with reference to the subject-matter of the act and its manifest object. Its sole and primary object is to fasten a liability on "all employers to compensate their employees for any injury incurred by said employees in the course of their employment, irrespective of the fault of either party." Article 20, § 21, Const. The compensation provided for in said act is not damages in the sense that the latter term is used in ordinary tort actions. The right to recover damages for personal injury is not a right of action established by the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act, but a common right established long before the adoption of the Workmen's Compensation Act. The clause providing that the "death of the employee, or of any other person, shall not abate any right of action established by this section," read in the light of the purpose of the act, must be construed to apply to those persons whose right or liability is established by the act. It was the new rights and liabilities created by the Compensation Act which before were nonexistent that were the concern of the lawmakers in framing the act. The rights of the employee, when he steps outside of the Compensation Act and elects to sue a tort-feasor who is not his employer, are not enlarged beyond those given to citizens generally.

[5] The right of the employer to prosecute a suit against the tort-feasor to recover any compensation which he has paid or has become obligated to pay is a new right created by the act. The extent of this right is not a question directly involved in this proceeding. In no way is the common-law rule as to the particular question presented changed or affected by the new right conferred upon the employer by the Workmen's Compensation Act. In addition to the common-law right of action to recover for personal injuries wrongfully inflicted, an employee, as such, is entitled to the protection provided by the act, and, while he has a twofold remedy, his common-law right is not enlarged by the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act. Appellant complains that it is illogical to hold that the employer may maintain an action against a tort-feasor's representative to recover compensation paid by him on account of the employee's injuries and to deny to the employee the right to maintain an action for damages against said representative. The maintenance of the action by the employer has the support of statutory authority, which does not exist as to the employee. The right of an injured person to maintain an action after the death of the tort-feasor has not the sanction of the common law and stands unsupported by any act or statute of this state. The justification for following appellant in so wide a departure from the long-approved rules of law should rest upon express statutory language or upon inferences arising out of the language of the act under construction which are so convincing as to leave no doubt as to legislative intent.

The cause of action against defendant Johnson having abated by reason of his death, the motion to continue the appeal is denied, and the motion to dismiss the appeal as to him is granted. It is so ordered.

RICHARDS, J. This is an application for a writ of prohibition to be directed against respondents herein, the superior court of the state of California in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the Hon. Thomas F. Graham, one of the judges of said court, prohibiting said court and the judge thereof from further proceeding upon a certain judgment made and entered by said court and from taking any further steps for the enforcement thereof and of an order made by said court appointing one Louis S. Beedy general receiver of the real and personal property belonging to that certain trust estate to which said judgment relates, and further directing that said judgment and all proceedings had or taken thereunder, including said order appointing said receiver, be vacated and annulled, and that said superior court and the judge thereof be directed to permit the petitioners herein to file their respective complaints in intervention in said action and to be heard upon the merits thereon.

The action in which the foregoing proceedings were had and taken by said court was one wherein James Clay Dunphy, Mary Dunphy Flood, and Viola C. C. P. Burnett are plaintiffs, and one William Wesley Burnett, Jr., is the sole defendant, and which action was commenced in said court for the purpose of having the said plaintiffs therein appointed trustees of certain real and personal properties lying and being within the state of California and Nevada, and which properties were subject to a certain trust created and existing under the terms of the last will and testament of one William Dunphy, deceased; the trusteeships over said trust having become vacant by the death of those persons who had been originally appointed the trustees thereof under the terms of said will.

The undisputed facts upon which the merits of this proceeding are to be considered and determined may be summarized as follows:

On September 17, 1892, William Dunphy died testate in San Francisco, Cal., being at the time of his death a resident therein, and leaving a large estate, both real and personal, in the states of California and Nevada. A considerable portion of his said holdings consisted of the so-called Dunphy ranch in the state of Nevada, containing approximately 160,000 acres of land, together with a large amount of personal property located thereon, consisting of cattle, horses, farming implements and utensils of great value. At the time of his death said decedent left surviving him as his sole heirs at law his wife, Carmen U. Dunphy, his three children, James Clay Dunphy, Mary Dunphy Flood, and Jennie C. Dunphy, and also a grandchild, daughter of a deceased daughter, Viola C. C. P. Burnett. By his will, the decedent, after making certain specific bequests, devised and bequeathed the entire residue of his estate to his wife, Carmen U. Dunphy, and his daughter, Jennie C. Dunphy, in trust for the following purposes, and with the following powers: The said trustees were to take full control and possession of all of the properties, real and personal, of said decedent and were to manage and conduct the same. They were to sell and convert into cash the personal property of said decedent in the county of Monterey, Cal., and also the real and personal property in the state of Nevada as soon as practicable, and for the best price obtainable, and were to invest the proceeds of such sales in real estate in the city and county of San Francisco, Cal., improved and unimproved; and, if unimproved, sufficient money was to be retained to improve such investments so that the property would be made to produce a steady and reasonable income. The net income of the decedent's entire estate, in whatever form the latter was or continued to be or take, was to be divided into five equal shares. One-fifth of said income was to be paid quarterly to the decedent's said widow during her life, and upon her death one-fifth of the said principal of his estate was to be transferred and distributed as his said widow should by will direct, or, in case she should make no such direction, said one-fifth thereof was to go to the decedent's heirs at law. One-fifth of said income was to be paid quarterly to his daughter Mary Dunphy Flood during her life. Upon her death one-fifth of the said principal of his estate was to go to her children, or, if she should leave no child, said one-fifth was to go to the decedent's heirs at law. One-fifth of said income was to be paid quarterly to his son James C. Dunphy during his life, and at his death one-fifth of the said principal of his estate was to be paid as his said son might by will direct, and, if he should make no such direction, the same was to go to his children, and, if he should leave no child, said one-fifth was to go to the decedent's heirs at law. One-fifth of said income was to be paid quarterly during her life to his daughter Jennie C. Dunphy and at her death one-fifth of said principal of his said estate was to be transferred and distributed as she might by will direct, and if she should make no such direction it was to go to her children, or if she should leave no children then to the decedent's heirs at law. The remaining fifth of said income was to be paid to his said daughter Jennie C. Dunphy, to be by her applied to the support and maintenance of his said granddaughter, Viola, while she should remain in the custody of the Dunphy family during her minority, and thereafter one-fifth of said income, less certain deductions, were to be paid to her quarterly during her life, and upon her death one-fifth of the principal of decedent's estate was to go to her children, or, if she should leave no children, then to the decedent's heirs at law. The will further provided that, in case the widow of said decedent should elect not to take under said will, but to claim her share of the community property of said estate, then and in that event the balance of the decedent's said estate should go to the trustees and be divided into four equal parts among his said children and grandchild upon the same terms, conditions, provisions, and limitations as are above set forth.

By the terms of said will his trustees were given full power and authority to make any and all sales, investments, and outlays in respect to said trust property, without applying to any court or judge for leave so to do, and without being required to offer or produce in any court vouchers for said outlays or for any acts and deeds performed or expenditures made by them, and that such outlays, acts, deeds, and expenditures were to be deemed proper and necessary, and the propriety and necessity thereof were never to be questioned. In the event of the death, absence, or inability of either of said trustees to act, the other of them was to act and serve alone with all the powers given to both. The trustees were also by the terms of said will made the executrices thereof without bonds. Said will was admitted to probate, shortly after decedent's death, in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco. The widow elected not to take under the will, but to take one-half of the residue of said estate, all of which was community property. The principal administration of said estate was conducted in the state of California, but ancillary administration thereon was also had in the state of Nevada, covering the property, both real and personal, situate therein. At the conclusion of the administration in Nevada a final distribution was therein made and entered, distributing one-half of the residue of the decedent's estate therein located to Carmen U. Dunphy, surviving widow of said deceased, and the remaining one-half to Carmen U. Dunphy and Jennie C. Dunphy as trustees, in accordance with the trust provisions contained in said will. Thereafter Carmen U. Dunphy died, leaving her property to be succeeded to by her said three children and grandchild in equal shares. An administration of her estate was had in the state of California and an ancillary administration thereon in the state of Nevada, as a result of which the distribution of her estate was made to her surviving children and grandchild as above stated. Final distribution in the estate of William Dunphy, deceased, in California was not decreed until after the death of Carmen U. Dunphy, and in consequence thereof the decree of distribution therein made distributed the remaining undivided one-half of the estate to Jennie C. Dunphy as surviving trustee thereof in accordance with the terms of the trust created by the will of William Dunphy, deceased.

After the death of Carmen U. Dunphy partition proceedings were instituted in the state of Nevada affecting the aforesaid properties located in said state, and these resulted in the partition of said properties, by the terms of the decree in which proceedings one-half of the said Dunphy ranch, consisting approximately of 80,000 acres, was set apart in severalty to said Jennie C. Dunphy as the surviving trustee of said trust, and the remaining one-half of said ranch property was divided into four parcels, each containing 20,000 acres, each of said children and grandchild receiving one of said parcels. The personal property upon said real estate was also partitioned, as a result of which Mary Dunphy Flood and Viola C. C. Piercy, who had by marriage become Viola C. C. P. Burnett, each received their proportionate share of said personal property. As to James Clay Dunphy, his interest in said personal property had theretofore been acquired by the trustees, and, in consequence thereof, the trust estate was awarded an undivided five-sixths interest in said personal property. The individual interest of Jennie C. Dunphy therein was not partitioned, although she was declared entitled to an undivided one-sixth interest therein. In the meantime Jennie C. Dunphy had married X. Rodwell Meyer, who is one of the petitioners herein, and under said name continued to conduct the operations of said trust, in the course of which, through leases of the portions of the said ranch which had been set off in severalty as above set forth, she succeeded in keeping intact the said ranch properties in the state of Nevada, and in operating and conducting the same, involving the employment of many persons and the expenditure of large sums of money, to the extent that during the administration of her said trust it became necessary to borrow the sum of $200,000. Accordingly, in proceedings instituted in the courts of Nevada by her acting as such trustee, she was given permission as such to make said loans and to execute a mortgage or mortgages upon the Dunphy ranch properties belonging to said trust; whereupon the said sum of $200,000 was borrowed from the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society of San Francisco in two loans of $100,000 each, and mortgages upon said properties as security therefor were duly executed and delivered to said mortgagee by said surviving trustee.

Jennie C. Dunphy Meyer died on January 25, 1926, having up to the time of her death continued to act and serve as the surviving trustee of said trust. She left a last will and testament, by the terms of which, having left no issue, she devised and bequeathed the entire residue of her estate, after making certain specific bequests, both real and personal, to her surviving husband, X. Rodwell Meyer, who was also made the sole executor of her said will, and who, after due proceedings had in the matter of the probate thereof, was by the superior court of California in and for the city and county of San Francisco duly appointed such executor and duly qualified and continued thereafter to act as such. After the death of Jennie C. D. Meyer and the creation thereby of a vacancy in the trusteeship created by the will of William Dunphy, deceased, and after the appointment and qualification of X. Rodwell Meyer as executor of the will of Jennie C. D. Meyer, deceased, X. Rodwell Meyer commenced an action in the superior court of the state of California in and for the city and county of San Francisco, on March 12, 1926, wherein he named himself as the plaintiff, both individually and as executor of the last will of his said wife, and wherein he named as the defendants James Clay Dunphy, Mary Dunphy Flood, Viola C. C. Piercy Burnett, William Wesley Burnett, Jr., and the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society, for the purpose of procuring a judgment of said court appointing a trustee of said trust to fill the vacancy therein caused by the death of Jennie C. D. Meyer. The defendants in said action, after due service of process therein, with the exception of the defendant corporation, appeared in said action and filed their demurrer to said complaint. The complaint was thereupon amended, and it was thereupon agreed and stipulated by the aforesaid parties to said action, other than said defendant corporation, that the demurrer of said defendants presented to the original complaint should stand as their demurrer to the amended complaint.

In the meantime and on April 15, 1926, James Clay Dunphy, Mary Dunphy Flood, and Viola C. C. P. Burnett, as plaintiffs, commenced an action in the same superior court, naming as the sole defendant therein William Wesley Burnett, Jr., in which action said plaintiffs also sought to have entered a judgment of said court appointing a trustee or trustees of said trust estate in the place and stead of Jennie C. D. Meyer, deceased, each of said plaintiffs nominating and appointing each of their said coplaintiffs to be and act as such trustee or trustees. Neither the said X. Rodwell Meyer nor the said Hibernia Savings & Loan Society was made a party to said action or was served with any process therein. Thereafter and on or about May 6, 1926, X. Rodwell Meyer, individually and as executor of the will of Jennie C. Meyer, deceased, gave notice to the plaintiffs in said action, both as plaintiffs therein and as defendants in the action theretofore instituted by him, of a motion for an order to be made therein consolidating said last-named action with that theretofore commenced by him, which said motion came on regularly for hearing before said superior court in department No. 10 thereof, Hon. Thomas F. Graham, judge therein, presiding, which said motion was argued and submitted for decision, and on September 1, 1926, denied. On said 6th day of May, 1926, the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society also served upon the attorneys for the plaintiffs in said last-named action a notice of motion for leave to become and be made a party to said action, to wit, a defendant therein, and to be permitted to appear in whatever proceedings were thereafter to be taken therein for the appointment of a trustee or trustees and for such other purposes as were embraced in said action; said motion being made upon the ground that said corporation was the owner and holder of the aforesaid promissory notes and mortgages upon said trust estate, and was for that reason interested in the matter of the appointment of a trustee or trustees therein. Said motion came on for hearing in due course in said court before Hon. Thomas F. Graham, judge thereof, and having been argued and submitted was on the 1st day of September, 1926, denied by said court.

On May 17, 1926, X. Rodwell Meyer, individually and as executor of the last will of Jennie C. D. Meyer, deceased, served upon the plaintiffs in said last-named action a notice of motion for leave to intervene in said action, and filed therein a complaint in intervention, a copy of which accompanied said notice of motion. A hearing thereon was regularly had before said court upon said motion, which was on September 1, 1926, denied. On August 27, 1926, the said superior court in the first above-named action instituted by the petitioner herein X. Rodwell Meyer, individually and as executor of the will of Jennie C. D. Meyer, deceased, entered its order sustaining the demurrer interposed by the defendants therein to the amended complaint, with leave to the plaintiff within ten days thereafter to further amend the complaint. The plaintiff, however, neglected and declined to further amend the complaint. On September 1, 1926, by consent of the plaintiffs and defendant in the action of James C. Dunphy et al. v. William Wesley Burnett, Jr., the trial of said action was brought on for hearing before said court over the protest of X. Rodwell Meyer and of the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society, each of which parties had theretofore vainly sought to become parties to said action, and who attempted to appear therein for the purpose of objecting to the jurisdiction of said court to further proceed therein or to appoint a trustee or trustees therein until the said protesting parties should be permitted to appear therein and afforded the opportunity to examine the applicants for appointment as such trustees. The trial court overruled their objections and protests upon the ground that they were not interested parties in said action, and, having done so, proceeded with the trial thereof, as a result of which a judgment was made and entered therein appointing James C. Dunphy, Mary Dunphy Flood, and Viola C. C. P. Burnett trustees of said trust, and conferring upon them and each of them full authority and power to manage and control said trust properties in conformity with the terms and provisions of said will of William C. Dunphy, deceased, creating said trust. The trial court also in said action and upon the application and consent of the plaintiffs and defendants therein, and over the protest of the petitioners herein, proceeded to appoint one Louis S. Beedy as a receiver of the trust properties involved in said action. Said Louis S. Beedy, having qualified as such receiver under said appointment, is proceeding to exercise the powers and functions of such receiver over the properties of said trust both in the state of California and in the state of Nevada.

In the meantime and on September 2, 1926, X. Rodwell Meyer, individually and as executor of the will of his deceased wife, commenced an action in the district court of the Fourth judicial district of the state of Nevada, having jurisdiction over the properties involved in said trust, in which action Mary Dunphy Flood, James Clay Dunphy, Viola C. C. P. Burnett, William Wesley Burnett, Jr., and the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society are named as defendants, which action has for its purpose the appointment of a trustee of said trust and of the trust property thereof located in the state of Nevada, and has procured an order of said court appointing one George Russell, Jr., temporary trustee of said trust, with power to take possession and administer said trust property in said state, and who has qualified as such trustee and is undertaking to exercise said trust. Proceedings have been commenced by the trustees appointed by the respondent court herein in the Supreme Court of the state of Nevada, whereby they are seeking to avoid, vacate, and have set aside the appointment of said Russell as such temporary trustee, and they have secured in such proceeding a temporary restraining order preventing said Russell from further exercising the powers and functions of a trustee with respect to said trust property in said state.

The present proceeding was instituted in this court on October 18, 1926, by the filing of the application for a writ of prohibition herein and in which application the foregoing facts and proceedings are fully set forth. The respondents herein have filed both a demurrer and an answer, but as to the latter it presents no issues essential to the determination of the questions of law presented by the demurrer or necessary to the determination of this entire proceeding upon the merits thereof.

The primary inquiry herein, in so far as the right of the petitioner Meyer, both in his personal and representative capacity, exists, relates to the nature of the several rights and interests which his deceased wife, Jennie C. Dunphy Meyer, had in the properties which were owned by her father, William Dunphy, and which were referred to and sought to be disposed of by his last will. The rights and interests of Jennie C. Dunphy therein which she held or occupied after the death of her said father were of a fourfold character: First, there was her right and interest therein as a cestui que trust under the terms of said will, and which under the terms thereof she was entitled to dispose of by will; second, there was her right and interest therein, or in so much thereof as became subject to the trusts created by said will in her capacity of trustee of such trusts under the terms of said will; third, there was her right and interest in so much of the community property of her deceased father as became the property of his widow, her mother, under the latter's election not to take under her husband's will, but to claim her undivided one-half of her said community property as his wife and surviving widow, and which property so claimed and taken she left upon her death in equal shares to her said children, of whom Jennie C. Dunphy was one; fourth, the right and interest which Jennie C. Dunphy, as one of the heirs of William Dunphy, would succeed to in the event that certain of her coheirs should die without issue or without direction by will as to the disposition of their respective shares in the properties of the Dunphy estate on the part of those of their number who were entitled to make such testamentary disposition under the terms of their father's will. It is conceded that the petitioner herein, X. Rodwell Meyer, either personally or in his representative capacity, has no other right in the remaining properties of William Dunphy, deceased, than those which he has derived from his deceased wife, Jennie C. Dunphy Meyer, as the sole devisee under her last will and as the executor of said will, and that whatever right he may have or assert to participate in any proceedings having for their purpose the selection of a trustee or trustees to fill the vacant trusteeships over the still existing trust, and the properties covered thereby, created by the will of William Dunphy, deceased, must have been derived from the foregoing source or sources alone, viz. those rights and interests to which he has succeeded as the sole devisee of his said wife under her last will or as the executor thereof. This being so, let us proceed to consider each in turn the nature, extent, and determination of the foregoing fourfold interests which Jennie C. Dunphy had during her lifetime in the properties of her father's estate.

[1] First, as to her right and interest as one of the cestui que trustents under her father's will, it may here be said that, whatever the nature and extent of those rights, interests, and estates may have been while she was living, these have been changed by her death into rights, interests, and estates of an entirely different character. This change has been effected by and under the express terms of her father's will, which provided in substance that she was to receive as a cestui que trust under the provisions of said will her allotted share of the income to be derived from the operation of such of his properties as came within the terms and control of said trusteeship, but that upon her death her allotted share of the principal of his estate "should be transferred and distributed as she may by will direct." There would seem to be no room for doubt that the above provision in the will of William Dunphy, deceased, would upon the death of his said daughter become effectual to terminate her relation as a cestui que trust under the aforesaid trust provisions of his said will and to work an immediate elimination of her allotted share in the principal of his estate from the control of said trust and to transfer the same and all right, title, and interest theretofore held, owned, and exercised by the trustees of said trust to those who were to be the beneficiaries under her will. It follows necessarily that, as to the undivided one-fourth interest which Jennie C. Dunphy had as a cestui que trust in the income arising from the operations of said trust, her right and relation thereto ended with her death, and in place and stead thereof there arose and existed in her devisee the right to and ownership of an undivided one-fourth interest in the properties of said estate which had theretofore been subject to said trust, but which were released therefrom by the demise of the former cestui que trust of the income thereof. Her devisee thus became, not a cestui que trust under said will, but a tenant in common with said trust and with the trustees thereof to the extent of an undivided one-fourth interest in the properties, real and personal, which prior to the death of his testatrix, had been controlled by and subject to said trust.

[2] Second, as to the rights and interests which Jennie C. Dunphy owned, held, and controlled in her capacity as one of the trustees, and later as a sole trustee under the will of her deceased father and under the terms of the trust created thereby, it must be conceded that these have fully ceased and come to an end by her demise and that none of her aforesaid rights and interests as trustee under said will have in any degree descended to or been succeeded to by her said devisee.

[3] Third, as to those rights and interests in the properties and estate of William Dunphy, deceased, to which his widow claimed and had been allowed an undivided one-half as her community share thereof, and to an undivided one-fourth of which Jennie C. Dunphy succeeded as one of the heirs of her mother upon the latter's decease, Jennie C. Dunphy became to the extent of her inherited interest therein, as her mother before her had been, a tenant in common with the trustees in their ownership of that remaining portion of the properties of William Dunphy, deceased, which had come within the provisions of their trust; and she remained such tenant in common to the extent of her said undivided interest until her death, whereupon her said sole devisee succeeded to her said interest in the same capacity and not otherwise.

[4, 5] Fourth, as to those rights and interests to which Jennie C. Dunphy as one of the heirs of William Dunphy, deceased, would succeed in the event of one or more of her coheirs dying without issue or without such testamentary disposition as certain of them were entitled to make under the terms of their father's will, there would seem to be no doubt that these were remainders, existing in Jennie C. Dunphy at the time of her death, and to which her sole devisee would become entitled by the terms of her will; but, though remainders, these and each of them were and are at most merely contingent remainders, and as such subject to be defeated by the death of certain of the coheirs leaving issue and by the making of testamentary dispositions by others of them entitled to so dispose of their interest in their father's estate. With respect to contingent remainders somewhat similar to these, this court has held that a devise of a contingent estate to come into being only in the event of the devisee of the fee dying without leaving heirs, while termed a contingent remainder under our Code, was rather in the nature of an executory devise at common law which did not require any precedent estate to support it, but which could not of necessity arise at the death of the testator, but only at the termination of the precedent interest, and when the contingency ceased to exist. Jewell v. Pierce, 120 Cal. 79, 52 P. 132. In the later case of Estate of Wilson, 184 Cal. 63, 193 P. 581, wherein a like devise of an estate contingent upon a prior devisee dying without heirs was interpreted, it was held that such estate and who were the owners thereof were to be determined as of the date of the death of the life tenant and termination thereby of the precedent estate. The rule laid down in these cases applies with even stronger force to the peculiar facts of the instant case, since the precedent interest of each of the children of William Dunphy, as we have seen, was not, during the lifetime of each, a direct interest in the corpus of the ancestor's estate but only in the income thereof, and with respect to which corpus of the estate the remainder to which said Jennie C. Dunphy could only contingently succeed was one which for the first time would come into being when her coheir died without leaving issue, or, if entitled so to do, making a testamentary disposition of the share in the corpus of the estate, to the income of which only such coheir was entitled during his or her lifetime in the capacity of a cestui que trust of the trust estate. In the event that any one or more of these contingent interests had ripened during the lifetime of Jennie C. Dunphy through the death of any one or more of her coheirs, under circumstances which would have called such contingent remainder or remainders into being, she would not have, as to these, become a cestui que trust under the trust estate according to the terms of her father's will, but only a tenant in common as to such remainder with the trust estate. Her devisee could not in the nature of things become more than this, even though (which is not the case) such estate or estates in remainder had become vested through the termination of the precedent interest under circumstances which would have called them into being.

It follows of necessity that the only interest which the petitioner herein, X. Rodwell Meyer, has either individually as sole devisee, or officially as executor under the last will of his deceased wife, is at best none other than that of a tenant in common with the trust estate of those properties of William Dunphy and of his wife and widow Carmen Dunphy, with relation to which Jennie C. Dunphy Meyer was during her own lifetime such tenant in common or with relation to such portion of which as said Jennie C. Dunphy Meyer, by her will, made in conformity with her father's bequest, created her husband a tenant in common therein. X. Rodwell Meyer in his portion of the petition herein expressly alleges that he has succeeded to "an undivided one-fourth interest in and to the 80,000 acres of said ranch owned and operated by said trust at the time of the death of said Jennie Carmen Dunphy Meyer." It is true that he also alleges that he is the owner of the contingent interests above referred to, but, as to these, as we have seen, they have not yet ripened and may never ripen into a present estate, and when, if ever, they do so ripen, such estate or interest as would then arise would amount to no more than merely the interest of a tenant in common with such trust in the corpus of the remaining properties subjected to such trust. We are not therefore called upon to pass upon the respondents' contention that the said petitioner is seeking remedies in this proceeding upon a statement of other matters than those considered by the superior court in making its several rulings which said petitioner is herein assailing, since at most said petitioner is none other than a tenant in common with said trust in the properties which are subject to its provisions.

[6-8] We are thus brought to the inquiry as to whether a tenant in common of property, the remaining undivided interest in which is held in a trust estate, the trusteeship of which has become vacant, is either entitled of right to participate in proceedings in the superior court having jurisdiction over such trust instituted for the purpose of filling such vacancy, or is entitled to notice of such proceedings before such court or the judge thereof can acquire jurisdiction to proceed to fill such vacant trusteeships. We are satisfied that both upon reason and authority these questions must both be answered in the negative. A tenant in common has as such no interest in the title of his cotenant to property held by them and each of them in that relation. It is hornbook law that the only unity of tenants in common in the property held by them as such by several and distinct titles is that of possession. 2 Blackstone Com. 191. We are cited by the petitioners herein to no authority which goes to the extent of holding that a tenant in common in property, the other undivided interest wherein is held and owned in trust for the benefit of other persons than said tenant in common, has such an interest therein as would entitle him as a matter of right to dominate, dictate, or participate in proceedings for the appointment of trustees to be charged with the administration of such trust. On the other hand, we are cited by the respondents herein to cases arising in jurisdictions having laws relating to the creation and administration of trusts similar to our own, which hold that a tenant in common with a trust in the ownership of property has no right as such to participate in or even to have notice of proceedings in a proper court for the appointment of trustees to fill existing vacancies in the trusteeship of such trust.

The leading case upon this subject is that of Greene v. Borland, 4 Metc. (45 Mass.) 330. In that case a testatrix created a trust over an undivided one-half of her property and estate, naming certain trustees thereof in her will. The other one-half of her said property and estate she devised in fee to her son, whom she also named as the executor of her estate. The trustees named in the will declined to act, whereupon the court appointed one Quincy as succeeding trustee and the latter brought suit against the son as tenant in common in possession of the whole property for an accounting. The son undertook to defend said suit upon the ground that the court had no jurisdiction to appoint such trustee without notice to him as such tenant in common. Under the public statutes of the state of Massachusetts the court having jurisdiction over trusts "shall after notice to all persons interested appoint a new trustee" (Pub. St. Mass. 1882, C. 141, § 5). The court with this provision in mind held that the appointment of the trustee was valid as having been made with the consent of all parties interested in the trust, and that the defendant, either as a tenant in common in the property or as executor of the estate, was not a person in interest legally entitled to notice in order to give validity to the appointment of the trustee.

In the case of Dexter v. Cotting, 149 Mass. 92–95, 21 N. E. 230, the Supreme Court of that state held that the phrase, "persons beneficially interested in the trust," referred only to such parties as had a present vested interest in the trust fund, and was not intended to include contingent remaindermen who might possibly become interested in the future. In the case of Matter of Earnshaw, 196 N. Y. 330, 89 N. E. 825, the court of appeal of that state held that, under a statute empowering the court to appoint trustees of a vacant trust upon such notice to the beneficiaries of the trust as the court may direct, only those persons who were entitled to the income of the trust during their lives were entitled to such notice, and that remaindermen were not entitled to notice of the appointment of trustees.

In the case of Offutt v. Jones, 110 Md. 233, 73 A. 629, it was held by the Court of Appeals of that state that, under a statute providing for the appointment of trustees of a trust estate upon the petition of any person interested in the trust property the court had jurisdiction upon the petition of a cestui que trust to appoint a trustee, but that the executor of the will or the remaindermen were not such necessary parties that their absence from the proceedings rendered the appointment void. In each of the jurisdictions from which the foregoing cases are cited there are express statutory provisions requiring notice to persons interested in the trust.

Section 1702 of the Code of Civil Procedure of this state contains a like provision relating to the filling of vacancies in a trust created by will during the period when administration of an estate is pending; the provision therein being that such appointment may be made by the probate judge "upon the written application of any person interested in the trust filed in the probate proceedings and shall only be made after notice to all persons interested in the trust." It is to be noted, however, that the statutes of this state contain no similar express requirement as to notice in other cases and that the only language therein out of which an implication would arise that notice of some sort would be requisite in order to entitle the court having jurisdiction over a trust in an estate, wherein administration is not pending, to appoint trustees to a vacant trusteeship therein is that provision in section 2287 of the Civil Code permitting cestuis que trustent over the age of 14 years to make nominations to the court having statutory jurisdiction to appoint such trustees. We do not feel called upon herein to interpret such implication since we are of the opinion that even if notice is required in this as in other states having express statutes to that effect, such notice would only be necessary to be given to the cestuis que trustent under the interpretation given to such statutes in the foregoing cases.

[9-12] We therefore reach the conclusion in this case, in disposing of the petition of X. Rodwell Meyer herein, that he occupies no such relation to the trust or to the trust property involved in this proceeding as would have entitled him as a matter of right to maintain the action or proceeding instituted by him as plaintiff and against the cestuis que trustent of said trust for the appointment of a successor to the vacant trusteeship therein, and that as to whether or not the superior court should have sustained the demurrer of the defendants to his amended complaint in that proceeding is not a matter of jurisdiction which is reviewable in the instant proceeding, and that, as to the right of said X. Rodwell Meyer, either individually or as the executor of his deceased wife's estate, to receive notice of the proceedings instituted by the cestuis que trustent themselves and among themselves for the appointment of a trustee to such vacant trusteeship, he had no right to such notice as a prerequisite to the jurisdiction of the superior court, the respondent herein, to make such appointment, and hence has no right in either his individual or representative capacity to maintain this proceeding. With respect to the right of the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society, a corporation, and the corporation herein to be made a party to the proceedings for the appointment of a trustee over the trust estate upon the properties of which it holds several mortgages for the security of certain indebtedness to it incurred under the sanction of the court procedure by the former trustee, it would seem that but little remains to be said. The sole question presented in the instant proceeding is one of jurisdiction, and however advisable it might be for the court having jurisdiction over a trust estate to consider the interests of a large creditor of such estate in the matter of the appointment of a successor to a vacant trusteeship therein, we are cited to no authority which renders it incumbent upon such court as a matter of jurisdiction to either notify such a creditor of or admit it to its counsels in making such appointment. We are cited to no authority, either statutory or otherwise, which confers upon a mere creditor or lienholder of a trust estate the right to call into question the jurisdiction of the court having power so to do to appoint trustees or to fill vacancies in the trusteeship of a trust or over the properties wherein the only interest of the party objecting to such jurisdiction is that above stated. As before stated, the questions involved in this proceeding are those of jurisdiction only and not of policy, and, with the wisdom or prudence of the action of the respondents herein in the matter of the selection of trustees who are under its direction to administer this trust, this court in the instant proceeding has nothing to do.

[13] The only remaining question involved in this proceeding is as to the jurisdiction of the respondent court to appoint a receiver over the properties of the trust estate in a proceeding before it wherein all of the necessary and proper parties to such proceeding concur in the request for the appointment of such receiver. We are advised of no provision in the statute relating to the appointment of receivers which imposes a jurisdictional requirement that other parties than the necessary and proper parties to the action or proceeding in question must be brought in as parties thereto or must receive notice of the consent application for the appointment of the receiver therein. If the receiver thus appointed is given larger powers than he should possess in his capacity as such, or is attempting to exercise powers beyond the proper scope of his appointment, parties who are injuriously affected thereby have ample remedies in the ordinary course of law. We find no merit, therefore, in the petitioners' contention that this court in this limited proceeding should interfere to restrain any threatened act in excess of his authority on the part of such receiver.

AMBASSADOR HOTEL CORPORATION v. LEE. (Civ. 4161.)

1. Landlord and tenant 🔑231(8)—Finding that lessee did not rely on lessor's representations as to use of premises held sustained by evidence, in action for rent.

In lessor's action to recover rent, evidence held to sustain finding that lessee did not rely upon alleged false representations of lessor regarding use of premises, thereby precluding cancellation of lease and return of rent paid.

2. Fraud 🔑20—Reliance on representations is essential.

In order that action may lie on account of fraudulent misrepresentation, such misrepresentation must be relied on by persons to whom it is made.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. H. Valentine, Judge.

Action by the Ambassador Hotel Corporation against Don Lee, in which defendant counterclaimed and interposed a cross-complaint. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Clark, Law & Clay, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

O'Melveny, Millikin, Tuller & Macniel and Walter K. Tuller, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WORKS, P. J. The complaint in this action was for the recovery of unpaid rent. Defendant interposed an answer and counterclaim, in which it was alleged that, at the time the lease mentioned in the complaint was entered into, "the plaintiff represented to defendant and agreed as part of the consideration for the defendant entering into" the lease "the plaintiff would not lease any of the premises" in which the demised quarters were located "to any other person * * * in the business of exhibiting or selling automobiles, but would at all times during the life of said lease give unto the defendant the exclusive right and privilege of exhibiting and selling automobiles on said * * * premises"; that defendant believed the representations and relied upon them, and would not have entered into the lease but for them; that when plaintiff made the representations it had no intention of performing them and made them solely to induce defendant to enter into the lease and to deceive and defraud him; that soon after the lease was entered into plaintiff leased a part of its premises to another person engaged in the automobile business; that thereupon defendant, in writing, notified plaintiff that he rescinded the lease; and that defendant had expended certain specified sums in preparing for his occupancy of the demised quarters. Defendant demanded in his prayer in the answer and counterclaim that the lease be canceled, and that he have judgment for the sums of money alleged to have been expended by him. He also filed a cross-complaint averring that the matters alleged in the answer and counterclaim as representations were agreed to by him and plaintiff; that by mutual mistake they were omitted from the lease as executed, although intended to be inserted therein; that plaintiff breached the promise not to lease to another, and that defendant then gave notice of rescission, all as alleged in the answer and counterclaim; and praying that the lease be reformed to express the true intent of the parties, and that it then be canceled and rescinded. After answer to the cross-complaint, the action was tried and judgment went for plaintiff. Defendant appeals.

Appellant asks for a reversal of the judgment upon the ground that four certain findings of the trial court were not supported by the evidence.

It will be observed that in his pleadings appellant took two inconsistent positions concerning the matters of fact, which, in the answer and counterclaim, are termed representations. First, from that pleading the representations appear to be representations pure and simple, for it is there alleged that they were made solely for the purpose of inducing appellant to enter into the lease, without an intention to perform them, and for the purpose of deceiving and defrauding appellant. Second, in the cross-complaint the "representations" cease to be such, but become matters agreed to between the parties and omitted from the lease by a mutual mistake. While one of the findings, stated in appellant's brief to be unsupported by the evidence, relates to the question of mutual mistake, the entire argument in the brief proceeds upon the theory that the representations were made merely for the purpose of inducing appellant to enter into the lease. Indeed, some of the points advanced are utterly inconsistent with a view that appellant relies upon the alleged mutual mistake. As an instance of the truth of this statement, appellant contends that the representations were collateral to the engagements inserted in the lease, that they need not have been incorporated in the instrument, and, in truth, that they need not have been in writing at all. Under these circumstances, we shall pay no further attention to the claim that the representations were omitted from the lease through the inadvertence of the parties, except to say that the finding of the trial court that there was no mutual mistake is amply supported by the evidence. This is so plain that we shall not pause to state the evidence that furnishes the support.

[1] The trial court found that appellant did not rely upon the representations, and this is one of the findings that is said to be without support. There was some conflict in the evidence upon the question, it is true, but it was shown without dispute that after the representations were made a lease was prepared by respondent which contained no reference to the matters represented; that the instrument was then delivered to appellant for approval as to form; that appellant then delivered it to his counsel for inspection and approval; that several changes in the instrument were then suggested to respondent, the paper being returned to it for the purpose of making them; that the changes were then made and the lease was returned to appellant for further inspection, and that it was afterward executed as changed. Appellant made no suggestion that the represented matters be covered in the lease. It was stipulated at the trial that the projected lease was in the hands of appellant's counsel, at the time when the changes in its form were suggested, for a period of three or four days. This evidence was ample to support the finding that appellant did not rely upon the representations. Nounnan v. Sutter County Land Co., 81 Cal. 1, 22 P. 515, 6 L. R. A. 219.

[2] The view that we entertain upon this question disposes of the appeal and renders it unnecessary to consider the many other questions argued by both parties.

"In order that an action may lie, at law or in equity, on account of fraudulent misrepresentation, such misrepresentation must be relied upon by the party to whom it is made." 12 Cal. Jur. 750.

Judgment affirmed.

MEMORANDUM DECISIONS

201 Cal. 15

Ida May SMITH, Plaintiff and Respondent, v. Milton SMITH, Defendant and Appellant. (S. F. 11129.)★ (Supreme Court of California. April 5, 1927. Rehearing Denied May 2, 1927.) In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Thomas F. Graham, Judge. Jos. L. Taaffe, of San Francisco, for appellant. Sawyer & Sawyer and F. W. Sawyer, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment of the superior court of the state of California in and for the county of San Francisco, made and entered in favor of the plaintiff herein. The action was one to quiet title to real property, consisting of two parcels of land situate in the city of San Francisco, the asserted claim of the plaintiff to have her title so quieted being predicated upon an unrecorded deed of gift alleged to have been made, executed, and delivered to her by her husband, James J. Smith, shortly before his death. The claim of the defendant in resisting this assertion was based upon the alleged nondelivery of said deed. The sole issue upon this appeal relates to the sufficiency of the evidence presented to the trial court with respect to the delivery of said deed of gift. The appellant's brief herein is devoted almost wholly to a discussion of the evidence in the case, with some occasional citation of authority with respect to what in point of law constitutes a sufficient delivery of such instruments. The brief of the respondent sets forth that the case upon its merits depends upon the weight and verity of the evidence presented to the trial court. We are satisfied, from an inspection of such briefs and from an examination of the record before us, that the evidence in the case was sufficient to justify the action of the trial court in denying defendant's motion for a nonsuit and in rendering and entering its judgment in the plaintiff's favor. It would serve no useful purpose to review the evidence herein in detail, since we are satisfied that, if the trial court believed, as it evidently did, the statements of the plaintiff's witnesses herein, such evidence would suffice as a matter of law to uphold its conclusion as to the delivery and sufficiency of said conveyance, and hence to sustain its judgment in her favor herein. The judgment is therefore affirmed.

PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent, v. G. D. JOHNSON, Defendant and Appellant. (Cr. 962.) (District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 5, 1927.) Appeal by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court of San Joaquin County, C. W. Miller, Judge, of conviction of practicing medicine without a license and from an order denying motion for new trial. Appeal dismissed. Eicke & Warren and Berry & Watson, all of Stockton, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. The defendant was convicted of the offense of practicing medicine without a license. He duly gave notice of appeal from the judgment of conviction and the order denying a new trial. He failed, however, within five days, or at all, to file with the clerk or present to the trial court an application for a transcript of any part of the phonographic reporter's notes or to state the grounds of the appeal or the points upon which he relies. By reason of such failure, under the express provisions of section 1247 of the Penal Code, "the appeal is wholly ineffectual and shall be deemed dismissed." The appeal is dismissed.
